South Carolina; removed with his father at the age of twelve years to Greenville, Ala.; was educated at the Universities of Alabama and Virginia; studied law and was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of Alabama. During the Civil War he served in the Confederate army as Captain and Colonel, and was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, May 1864. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Greenville till 1872, and since then at Montgomery, which is now his home. From 1877 to 1893 he was a representative in Congress. On the accession of Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency for the second time (March 1893), Mr. Herbert became Secretary of the Navy, a position which he retained until the close of Mr. Cleveland's term.

HERBERT, Hon. Michael Henry, C.B., Secretary to H.M. Embassy at Paris, was born June 25, 1857, and is the fourth son of the Right Hon. Sydney Herbert, and is brother of the Earl of Pembroke. He entered the Diplomatic Service in June 1877, and was appointed to Paris in 1879 as Attaché. In 1883 he became a Second Secretary, and was transferred to Washington in 1888, where he acted as Chargé d'Affaires from October 1888 to February 1889. He was promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Washington in 1892, and in the next year was transferred to the Hague. In 1894 he was promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Constantinople, and in August of that year he was acting as Chargé d'Affaires during Sir Philip Currie's absence at the time of the Armenian massacres. In acknowledgment of his energy and judgment he was created a C.B. In 1897 he was appointed Secretary at Rome, and transferred to his present post in August 1898, when he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary in the Diplomatic Service, this promotion being merely one in rank.

HERBETTE, Jules Gabriel, French diplomatist, was born in Paris, Aug. 5, 1839, and, having studied law, entered the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 1860. In 1867 he became Consul at Naples, and two years after at Stettin. During the war he aided the Government of National Defence in its foreign relations. He was secretary to Jules Favre in March 1871, during the preliminaries of peace with Germany. Remaining at the Foreign Office, he was a delegate to the European Commission on the Danube in 1876, and to the Treaty of Berlin in 1878. He was the chief adviser of M. de Freycinet (q.v.) at the Foreign Office in 1880 and 1882. In 1886 he was appointed to the most difficult of all posts, that of Ambassador to Berlin, which he held under three Emperors, William I., Frederick III., and William II., and in which he succeeded beyond all expectations in keeping the peace under very delicate circumstances, such as the Schnaebele affair. He held his post until 1896, when he was succeeded by the Marquis de Noailles. He is a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, and one of the 40. His Paris address is 2 Rue Pigalle.

HERDMAN, William Abbott, D.Sc., F.R.S., eldest son of the late Robert Herdman, Scotch historical and portrait painter, was born on Sept. 8, 1858, at Edinburgh. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, and at the University of that city, where he took the degree of B.Sc. in 1879, and that of D.Sc. at a later time. In 1879 he was appointed Secretary to the Challenger Expedition Commission, and assisted the late Sir Wyville Thomson in bringing out the reports on the scientific results of the Expedition. After occupying the post of Demonstrator of Zoology in the University of Edinburgh, from 1880 to 1882, he was in the latter year elected Professor of Natural History in University College, Liverpool, a post which he still holds. He has published a "Report upon the Tunicata collected during the voyage of the Challenger," 3 vols., 1882-89, and in 1884 he received the Neill Gold Medal from the Royal Society of Edinburgh for his researches in connection with these marine animals. Since going to Liverpool he has occupied himself with marine biology, and latterly with sea fishery questions. The Liverpool Biological Society, started some nine years ago, owes its origin mainly to Prof. Herdman, and he has also founded the Marine Biological Station at Port Erin, in the Isle of Man, of which he is the Hon. Director. For some years he was engaged, together with friends and assistants, in a dredging exploration of the Irish Sea, and the different volumes of reports on this subject were produced under his editorship. In the years 1886 to 1895. Prof. Herdman was in 1892 elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, has published many papers on zoological subjects, and has established, conjointly with the County Council, a Sea Fisheries Laboratory in Liverpool. In 1895 he was President of the Zoological Section of the British Association. Address: Croxteth Lodge, Liverpool.

HÉRÉDIA, José-Maria de, French poet, was born in the island of Cuba, at La Fortune-Lafoyère, near Santiago, on Nov. 22, 1842. He was sent to France, and studied history in the École des Chartes, and subsequently wrote for the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Temps, and other leading French periodicals and papers, being one of the group of "Parnassiens." His fame as a poet chiefly based on his volume of 1870 which attracted great attention at the time of their publication, their popularity being particularly admired in literary circles. On Feb. 22, 1894, M. Hérédia was elected a member of the Academy, in succession to the late Mazade. His first collection of poems was issued in 1893 under the title "Trophées": it was at once crowned the Academy, and was the chief reason of his election. In the same year was created an officer of the Legion of Honour. He has translated "L'Épique de la Conquête de la Nouvelle Espagne" from the Spanish of Diaz del Castillo. His eldest daughter, Marie, is married to the poet Henri Regnier. His Paris address is: 11 Rue Balzac.

HEREFORD, Bishop of. See CIVAL, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN.

HERKOMER, Hubert, R.A., Hon. Fellow of All Souls, &c., born in 1849, at Waal, in Bavaria, father, Lorenz Herkomer, who was a wood-carver, emigrated with his son in 1851, to the United States, but sought to improve his fortunes in England and settled in Southampton. As Hubert was hindered much in his education by ill-health and poverty: thirteen he entered the Art School in Southampton. In 1865 he went to London with his father (who had been apprenticed to carve copies of figures in wood), and while there the young man was aided in his studies by J. E. Echter. In 1866 he entered the School of Art in South Kensington, but after five years was obliged to return to Southampton where he was instrumental in establishing a drawing-school for the study of the human figure in clay and wax, and model; and at Christmas in that year and the young artists associated with him held an exhibition of their works. He sold his first picture. In 1867 he went to South Kensington for six months, and in the following year established himself in the village of Putney, and there painted two pictures, exhibited at the Dudley Gallery. He then came to London, and himself successfully with water-colours and painting and designing for the gravestone industry. In 1871 Mr. Herkomer was invited to join the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours; and to the Royal Society, and subsequently to the Society of Artists, he contributed many

ly of Bavarian subjects. The oil picture "After the Toil of the Day," in the Tenth Exhibition of 1873, extended his reputation and prepared the way for the Last Muster," 1875, the memorable work of Chelsea pensioners, which, after hanging in the Lecture Room at Burlington House in 1875, figured at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and was there awarded one of the two Grand Medals of Honour set off by the English school. Subsequently the artist turned his attention to painting and pure mezzotint engraving, and was chiefly instrumental in causing the revival of the latter art in this country. His earlier pictures exhibited by him at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions in London were: "At Death's Door," "God's Shrine," a large Bavarian landscape; "Wind-swept," 1880; "Home-coming," 1882; "Castle Gardens," and "Fighting Enemies," 1883. Since 1880 he has painted a very large number of portraits, including many of notable persons. In 1885, and again in 1885, he paid visits of several months' duration to America, where he also painted many portraits. One of his most notable successes in portraiture was that of Miss Catharine Grant, "The Lady in White"—which gained him a gold medal at Berlin, Vienna, and elsewhere. This portrait was followed by "The Companion," in a black scheme of colour, titled "Entranced," painted during his second visit to America, which had also great success. In 1885 his landscape "The Welsh Mountain," purchased under the terms of the National Gallery Bequest, and in 1889, a second work—"The Chapel of the Charterhouse"—was purchased in the same manner. Besides these two pictures, his other important works have been "Our Age," "The Foster-Mother," "The German Meister and Town Council of Landsberg, Bavaria," a large picture which he presented to that town; "Hard Times," purchased by the Manchester Art Gallery; "The Strike," 1891, his diploma work to the Royal Academy; "Back to Life," 1892; and "The Guards' Cheer," 1894, representing Crimean veterans of the Guards singing her Majesty the Queen during the Queen's Procession in 1897. Besides these, he has produced a large number of smaller subject pictures, both in oil and water-colours. In the Academy of 1899 he exhibited as many as eight subjects, six of which were portraits, including one of the Duke of Cornwall, and another of Prince Luitpold of Bavaria. He founded and superintended an important art school at Bushey, in connection with which a theatre was opened in 1888, where a romantic fragment, "The Perseus," by Prof. Herkomer himself, was first performed, followed in 1889 by a musical and pictorial play, entitled "An Idyl." Since this date several less important plays have been produced. Mr. Herkomer's house at Bushey, which has been in progress for many years, contains much wood-carving, weaving, and other art-work, designed by the artist, and carried out principally by his father and his two brothers, whose portraits as "The Makers of my House" hang in one of the rooms. At Landsberg-am-Lech, where his mother died, stands the "Mutterthurm," a habitable tower built by him to her memory. Mr. Herkomer was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1879, and a full Member in 1890. Having for some years resigned his position as Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, he was in 1893 elected an Associate of the Old Water-Colour Society, and in 1894 a full Member. In 1896-97 he acted as Deputy-President of the Society. For nine years, 1885-95, Mr. Herkomer held the position of Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford, where he also received the degree of M.A., and an Honorary Fellowship of All Souls' College. He holds the Maximilian Order pour le Mérite, and a Life Professorship at Munich. He had the honour of being elected a Member of the Institute of France in place of Lord Leighton; and is also an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He is a Member of the Academy at Berlin, Vienna, Antwerp, and Stockholm, and is an Honorary Member of many Art Societies, both in the United Kingdom and abroad. His interest in Celtic tradition was manifested in 1896, when he presented to the Arch-Druid of Wales, Hwfa Môn, a complete official Druidic costume, with jewelled insignia, designed in accordance with ancient tradition. Permanent addresses: Lululaund, Bushey, Herts; and Athenæum.

HERMITE, Professor Charles, was born on Dec. 25, 1822, at Dieuze, Lorraine, and studied first at Nancy, and then at Paris. He is a distinguished mathematician, Professor of Higher Algebra at the Sorbonne, and Honorary Professor at the École Polytechnique. His publications are chiefly in the scientific and mathematical journals of France and other countries; and deal with the theory of numbers, the theory of algebraical forms, elliptic functions, &c. He has edited, in conjunction with Gerret, the Elementary Treatise of Lacroix on the Differential and Integral Calculi (1867). Prof. Hermite is Foreign Member of the Royal Society, and of the Mathematical Society of London; of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; the Royal Irish Academy; and of the Academies of Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Munich, Naples, and Stockholm.

of the Society of Apothecaries in 1857. M.D. of the University of St. Andrews in 1878, and practised medicine at St. Andrews from 1862 to 1871. During that time he commenced his geological researches amongst the older rocks of that neighbourhood. His first paper was read at the Liverpool Geological Society in 1863. In the following years, in conjunction with the late Mr. Salter, Paleontologist to the Geological Survey, he contributed several papers to the Association, Geological Society, &c. In 1871 he removed to Hendon, Middlesex, and since that time has carried out searches in North Wales and Scotland, the results being communicated in numerous papers to the Geological Society, British Association, London Geological Association, Geological Magazine, &c. His investigations have been confined to the oldest (Pre-Cambrian) rocks of Great Britain, and he has shown that they are exposed in many places which their presence had been unsuspected. Dr. Hicks has also discovered many new fossils in the Cambrian, Ordovician, and Silurian rocks, and has written several papers on the classification of those rocks. He has published results of exploration on by him in ossiferous caverns in North Wales, in which he has given to show that man occupied the caverns during a part of the period. In 1891 he described the deposits at Hendon and Finchley. In 1892 he published an account of the discovery of mammoth and other deposits at Hendon and Finchley. He has also written several papers on the rocks of North Devon, and has shown a rich fauna in the "Morte slate" until then were considered to be unfossiliferous. In 1896-97 he has worked from his pen on the "Geological map of North Devon and West Somerset," prepared by him for the International Geological Congress which was held in 1888. Dr. Hicks was awarded the Bigsby Gold Medal of the Geological Society in 1883, and has been its Secretary, and afterwards President, in the years 1896 and 1897, of that Society. HICKSON, Professor Sydney John,
M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., is the son of the late George Hickson, and was born in London on June 25, 1859. He was educated at University College School and at Downing College, Cambridge, becoming eventually a Fellow of his College. He took the degree of D.Sc. at the University of London, and was awarded the hon. degree of M.A.
by the University of Oxford. Becoming an assistant to Professor Mosley, the Lin-acre Professor of Comparative Anatomy at Oxford, in 1882, he subsequently spent a year, from 1885 to 1886, in the Malay Archipelago, for the purpose of scientific investigation. He acted as Deputy Professor of Comparative Anatomy at Oxford from 1888 to 1890, and in the latter year became Lecturer in Advanced Morphology at Cambridge. Dr. Hickson has been, since 1894, Professor of Zoology at the Owens College, Manchester. He is the author of: "A Naturalist in North Celebes"; "The Fauna of the Deep Sea."
Address: Ellesmere House, Withington, Manchester.

HIGGINSON, Mary (Thacher), was born at Machias, Me., Nov. 27, 1843, and is the daughter of Peter and Margaret Potter Thacher. She is the niece, by his first marriage, of Henry W. Longfellow, who induced her to publish her first book, "Seashore and Prairies," 1876. She has since published "Room for One More" (a tale), 1879; and, with her husband (T. W. Higginson), a volume of poems, "Such as They Are," 1893.

HIGGINSON, Thomas Wentworth, was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dec. 22, 1823. He graduated at Harvard College in 1841, studied divinity, and was a minister of the Theodore Parker school until 1858, when, having entered actively into literature and also into political affairs, notably in the anti-slavery conflict in Kansas, he abandoned the pulpit. In 1862 he became captain in a Massachusetts regiment of volunteers, and afterwards colonel of a coloured regiment in South Carolina, this being the first regiment of freed slaves in the United States service. He was severely wounded in August 1863, and left the service in the following year. From the close of the war to 1878 he resided at Newport, Rhode Island, but since 1878 has lived at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is an earnest advocate of woman suffrage, and in 1880 and in 1881 was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature. From 1881 to 1884 he was a member of the State Board of Education. He has published: "Outdoor Papers," 1863; "Malbone, an Oldport Romance," 1869; and "Oldport Days," 1873, both depicting life at the watering-place of Newport; "Army Life in a Black Regiment," which was translated into French, 1870; "The Sympathy of Religions," 1871 (reprinted 1883); "Harvard Memorial Biographies," 1866; "Atlantic Essays," 1871; "Brief Biographies of European Statesmen," 1875; a "Young Folk's History of the United States," 1875, which has been translated into French, Italian, and German; "Young Folk's Book of American Explorers," 1877; "Short Studies of American Authors," 1879; "Common Sense about Women," 1881; "Margaret Fuller Ossoli," 1884; "A Larger History of the United States," 1885; "The Monarch of Dreams," 1886; "Hints on Writing and Speech-making," 1887; "Women and Men," 1888; "Travellers and Outlaws," and "The Afternoon Landscape," poems, 1889; "The New World and the New Book," 1892; "Concerning All of Us," 1892; "English History for American Readers" (with Professor Edward Channing of Harvard University); and "Such as they Are," poems (with his wife, Mary Thacher Higginson), 1893; "Massachusetts in the Army and Navy," 1895-96; "Book and Heart," "The Procession of the Flowers," 1897; "Cheerful Yesterdays," and "Tales of the End Islands," 1898. He also translated "complete works" of Epictetus (revised edit., 2 vols., 1890). In addition to these he is a frequent contributor to the magazines and papers, particularly the Atlantic Monthly, the Nation, Harper's Bazaar.

HILES, Henry, Mus. Doc. & Shrewsbury, Dec. 31, 1826, was educated privately in his native town. Dr. Hiles held several organ appointments in London and Manchester, and was appointed Lecturer on Harmony and Musical Composition at the Owens College, Manchester, in 1880, which appointment he still holds. He is also Professor of Harmony, Musical Composition and History in the Manchester College of Music, and conductor of several important musical societies in and near Manchester. He graduated Mus. B. at Oxford in 1851, Mus. Doc. in 1867. Dr. Hiles has won prizes for the best organ composition offered by the College of Organists, 1864, 1865, and 1868; also the best anthem in 1865; and was elected to the Council specially elected as a member of the College. In 1868 Dr. Hiles' for six voices was returned as "unquestionably superior to all the other compositions submitted." In 1878 the prize offered by the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club for the best serious glee was awarded to him for his four-voiced glee "The Death," which, with two other works, was returned at the head of the compositions sent in. Dr. Hiles is known as the author of several theoretical works—especially "The Elements of Music; a Treatise on Counterpoint, and Form," "Past and Present Counterpoint," and "A Treatise on all styles of parallel motion, invertible or otherwise; and a poser of a large quantity of exercises," also as the author of an "Oratorio of the Patriarchs," several cantatas—"Fayre Pastorel," "The Crusades," "War in the Household," and "The Operatic Works," of several operas, and of many songs and oratorios of classical form. In 1882 Dr. Hiles took a leading part in the establishment of "The National Society of Professional Musicians," now called "The Incorporated Society of Musicians," an association of musical artists and teachers, which has developed throughout the kingdom an organisation of earnest followers. Address: Owens College, Manchester.

HILL, Alex, M.A., M.D., Chancellor of Cambridge University, Master of Downing College, w

ghton in 1856, and is the son of John Hill, of the London Stock Exchange. He was educated at University College School, at Downing College, Cambridge, also the medical profession at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He was appointed Fellow of Downing in 1880, and in 1888 Master. He is said to have been the youngest man, only medical man, appointed to a university headship since William Harvey made Warden of Merton in 1644. He was appointed Hunterian Professor of Royal College of Surgeons (Eng.) in 1895, and gave two series of lectures on Brain, was at one time President of Neurological Society of London, and been the energetic Chairman of Executive Committee of the National Home-ding Union since its foundation. He has written some important works on Neurology, which include "The Plan of the Central Nervous System," 1885; and a translation of Obersteiner's "Central Nervous Organs." Other works of his are "Notes to Browning's Poems," and, in 1897, "A Run round the Empire." He married, in 1878, a daughter of the late Benjamin Woodward, of Liverpool. Address: Downing Lodge, Cambridge.

HILL, The Right Hon. Alexander Staveley, Q.C., M.P., D.C.L., J.P., D.L., was born at Dunstall Hall, Staffordshire, in 1825, and was educated at Birmingham Grammar School, in the house of Dr. Lee, the future first Bishop of Manchester, and in company with Rendal, Westcott, Evans, Lightfoot, Benson, and other celebrities. From there he went to Exeter College, Oxford, and in due course, having taken his degree, was elected to a Staffordshire Fellowship at St. John's. He subsequently took his D.C.L. degree, and was appointed one of the Examiners in Law and Modern History, in which capacity he participated in the award of a "first class" to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. He was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1852, and joined the Oxford Circuit, being elected the same night as Mr. Henry Matthews, Mr. Ward Hunt, and Sir Henry James; and he soon obtained a large practice, eventually becoming leader of the circuit. His practice was very varied, ranging from criminal business, probate and divorce, to Parliamentary; and in addition to all this he found time to devote himself energetically to the Volunteer movement. He was, in fact, one of the first to join the Victoria Rifles in 1859. It was not till 1865 that he was tempted to take any part in politics, and by that time his Parliamentary practice had become exceedingly lucrative. The death of his wife in 1868, and the increasing calls of his profession had, however, decided Mr. Staveley Hill to give up all thought of politics when the offer made by Mr. Disraeli led him to reconsider his decision. He sat for Coventry from 1868 to 1874, for West Staffordshire from 1874 to 1885, and has represented the King'swinford Division since that date. Perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Staveley Hill's career is his connection with Canada. He first went out there in 1881 to ascertain, on behalf of his constituents, what sort of place it was for emigration; and speedily becoming alive to the advantages of the New World, he not only established a large cattle ranche in the Far West, but returned there himself in successive autumns, and eventually published his book, "From Home to Home," which sets out the wild charm of life among the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains. This book is dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Princess Louise. It is illustrated with sketches by the present Mrs. Staveley Hill, whom he married in 1876, and who has regularly accompanied him in his Canadian tours. Mr. Staveley Hill is a staunch advocate of a duty on foreign manufactured goods, and has for many years worked in the cause of Imperial federation, having seen enough of our Empire to realise how entirely self-supporting it could become. Mr. Staveley Hill was Treasurer of the Inner Temple in 1886, and is Judge-Advocate of the Fleet and Counsel to the Admiralty, and Deputy High Steward to Oxford University. He is also Deputy Lieutenant and J.P. for Staffordshire. He married (1) in 1864 Katharine, daughter of M. Ponsonby, and (2) in 1876 Mary, daughter of the late F. Baird. Addresses: 13 King's Bench Walk, E.C.; 4 Queen's Gate, S.W.; and Oxley Manor, Wolverhampton.

HILL, The Right Hon. Lord Arthur William, M.P., D.L., J.P., youngest son of the 4th Marquis of Downshire, was born in 1846. He entered the 2nd Life Guards as Lieutenant in 1865, and retired in 1868. In 1880 he was returned as Conservative member for co. Down, and in 1885 was returned for co. Down West, which he continues to represent. From 1885 to 1892 he was Comptroller of the Royal Household and Conservative Whip, and was reappointed Comptroller of the Household in 1895. He was Lieutenant-Colonel in the 2nd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers from 1885 to 1887, and is Deputy-Lieutenant for co. Down, and J.P. for Sussex, Berks, and co. Down. He married (2), in 1877, Annie, daughter of J. F. Harrison. Address: 74 Eaton Place, S.W., &c.

HILL, Sir Clement Lloyd, K.C.M.G., C.B., head of the African Department of the Foreign Office, was born on May 5, 1845, and is the third son of the late

Rev. John Hill. He was educated at Marlborough College; entered the Foreign Office in 1867; was secretary to Sir Bartle Frere's mission to Zanzibar in 1872-73; was appointed Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Munich in 1876; and was Commissioner to Hayti in 1886 and 1887. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1887, and C.B. in June 1898, for services in connection with the then recent West African negotiations. He married in 1889 the widow of Charles Waring, daughter of Sir G. Denys. Address: 9 Grosvenor Place, S.W.

HILL, Hon. David Bennett, American statesman, was born at Havana, New York, Aug. 29, 1843. He received an academic education, studied law and was admitted to the Bar at Elmira, New York, in 1864. In the same year he was appointed City Attorney. Since 1868 he has been a delegate to many Democratic State Conventions, serving as President of those held in 1877 and 1881. He was also a delegate to the National Conventions of the same party in 1876 and 1884. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1870 and again in 1871; was chosen Mayor of Elmira in 1882; and in January 1883 became Lieut.-Governor of the State. On the resignation of Governor Cleveland in 1884 after his election to the Presidency, Mr. Hill became Governor of New York, a position which by subsequent elections he continued to hold till 1891, when he entered the U.S. Senate for the term ending March 1897, at which time he was succeeded by Thomas C. Platt.

HILL, Sir Edward Stock, K.C.B., J.P., M.P. for Bristol (South) from 1886 to 1898, is the son of the late Mr. C. Hill, of Bristol, and was born at Bristol in 1834. He was educated at Bishop's College, Bristol, and on the Continent. He was elected President of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom in 1881, and was President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce from 1888 to 1891. He is partner in the Bristol shipowning and mercantile firm of Charles Hill and Sons, is J.P. for Glamorgan and Cardiff, and was High Sheriff of Glamorgan in 1888, has been Colonel-Commandant (since 1864) of the Glamorganshire Artillery Volunteers, and is K.C. of the Swedish Order of Wasa. He was made K.C.B. in 1892. He married a daughter of General Tickell, C.B., in 1866. Addresses: 1 St. James's Street, S.W., and Rookwood, Llandaff, &c.

HILL, George Birkbeck Norman, D.C.L., LL.D., was born at Tottenham on June 7, 1837, and is the second son of Arthur Hill, Head-master of Bruce Castle School. He is of the family of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B. He was educated at his father's school, and at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he took a fourth class in Lit. Hum. From 1859 to 1876 he was Head-master of Bruce Castle School, since that date has devoted himself to letters. As he becomes an old man, he is the first living author of Johnsoniana, and has become famous as the editor of the definitive Bartholomew and of Johnson's "Letters." He is B.C.L. in 1866; D.C.L. in 1871; Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford; Hon. LL.D. of Williams College. His works include: "Dr. Johnson's Friends and his Critics," 1870; Steps of Dr. Johnson in Scotland, 1871; an edition of Boswell's Correspondence, 1879, and one of the Life, 1880; edition of "Rasselas," "Wit and Wisdom of Dr. Johnson," 1888; editions of Smith's "Traveller," 1888; "Let David Hume to W. Strahan," 1889; Essays of Dr. Johnson, 1889; Life of Johnson, 1892; "Johnsonian Libraries," 1897, &c., &c. Address: Wilderness, Holy Hill, Hampstead.

HILL, Joanna M. Margate, born at Hampstead. She is the daughter of the late Mr. Mathew Hill, Recorder of Birmingham, M.P. for Hull, and niece of land Hill, of penny-postage fame; the greater portion of a century's family have been associated with useful and philanthropic, and from childhood the influences surrounding Joanna Hill were calculated to lead to a life of intelligent devotion to the welfare of creatures. She was the god-daughter of the well-known writer Joanna Baillie, a pupil of Mary Carpenter, who left its mark on the character of the girl. At an early age Miss Hill became a friend and collaborator of her father's labours for the amelioration of the condition of criminal and neglected children. In 1860 she and her elder sister, "Our Exemplars," being an account of the lives of persons of all classes who have benefited mankind to a remarkable degree. It was published with a preface by Lord Brougham. Circumstances led to Miss Hill's notice, in 1859, the condition of girls in workhouses. She became a member of the Visiting Association, and for many years was a constant visitor in the workhouses of Bristol, where her father resided. After her father's death, she was of the Recordership of Birmingham, with the consent of the guardians of the poor of that town, revived a visiting young workhouse girls' school, which had fallen into disuse.

falling health of its originator, Mrs. as Talbot. While studying the condition of pauper children, Miss Hill heard a system then being tried in some parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland to give the pauper child to the privileges of family life under the careful supervision of prudent ladies. To this scheme Miss Hill devoted her best energies, and, on becoming secretary to the King's Norton Sanitary Committee, she has accomplished a good work. Miss Hill's evidence before the Select Committee for the Life Protection Bill, will be found in the Blue-Book published in August 1890; a paper in the appendix of the same. Miss Hill, which contains information concerning her plan for the inspection of pauper children by lady visitors.

In 1883 he took the degree of M.A. in the University of Cambridge, was elected a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and a member of the London Mathematical Society. In 1884 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at University College, London, acting as Dean of the Faculty of Arts from 1888 to 1890, and Member of the Council of the College from 1888 to 1892. From 1877 to 1882 he acted as Assistant-Examiner, and from 1885 to 1890 as Chief Examiner in Mathematics at the University of London. In 1890 he received the degree of Doctor of Science from the University of Cambridge for original work. In 1891 he was elected a Member of the Council of the London Mathematical Society, and in 1894 a Fellow of the Royal Society. His chief writings on mathematical subjects are a paper on the "Discriminants of Ordinary Integrable Differential Equations" in the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, a paper on the "Fifth Book of Euclid's Elements" in the Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and the following papers in the Proceedings and Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society: "On the Motion of Fluid, part of which is moving rotationally and part irrotationally" (Proceedings, No. 229, Transactions, Part II., 1884); "On the Locus of Singular Points and Lines which occur in connection with the Theory of the Locus of Ultimate Intersections of a System of Surfaces" (Proceedings, vol. 50, Transactions, vol. 183, 1892); "On a Spherical Vortex" (Proceedings, vol. 55, Transactions, A., 1894). He was married on Dec. 21, 1892, to Minna Grace, elder daughter of the late Marriott Ogle Tarbotton, Consulting Engineer to the Corporation of Nottingham. Address: Lakeview, Northwood, near Rickmansworth.

HILL, Micaiah John Muller, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics, University College, London, eldest son of late Rev. Samuel John Hill, was born Dec. 22, 1856, at Berhampore, Bengal. In 1864 to 1872 he was educated at the School for Sons of Missionaries, Blackpath. From this school he obtained, in June 1872, the fourth place and first prize in the Matriculation Examination of the University of London, and in the following September, an Andrews Entrance Prize at University College, London. There he devoted his attention chiefly to the study of Mathematics under Professors Henrici and Clifford. In June 1873 he obtained the Exhibition in Mathematics at the first—or, as it is now called, the Intermediate—B.A. Examination. In June 1874 he obtained a second year Andrews prize at University College, and in the following November the Scholarship in Mathematics at the B.A. Examination of the University of London. In April 1875 he competed for the Civil Service of India, and obtained the first place in the open competition, but did not proceed to the further examinations. In October 1875 he entered as an undergraduate at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he had been elected to an open scholarship, and whilst studying there he was elected, in February 1876, a Fellow of University College, London, and in June of that year he obtained the Gold Medal for Mathematics at the M.A. Examination at the University of London. In January 1879 he was bracketed equal Fourth Wrangler, and immediately afterwards was bracketed equal Smith's Prizeman. From April 1879 to June 1880 he acted as Assistant-Professor of Mathematics at University College, London. In February 1880 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the Mason Science College, Birmingham, commencing work there in

HILL, Octavia. social reformer, has laboured principally among the poor, whom she seeks to benefit morally and physically. The record of her work is given in "Homes of the London Poor," and from it we learn that in 1864, partly at the suggestion and under the guidance of Mr. Ruskin, who advanced the necessary funds for the beginning of the scheme, Miss Octavia Hill purchased three cottages in one of the poorest courts in Marylebone, and became her own rent-collector and manager, and without any commercial loss, succeeded by kindness and conciliation in effecting the gradual reformation of the tenants. By degrees the whole of the court became hers; and the Countess of Ducie and others entrusted their property in Marylebone and Drury Lane to her management, with the same excellent results. Miss Octavia Hill's work in managing houses has of late years largely extended, and she has also devoted much time to securing and preserving open spaces both in London and in the country. Address: 190 Marylebone Road, N.W.

HILLIER, Frederick James, late editor of the Morning, is the second son of Alfred George Hillier, and was born at Southampton in 1868. He was privately educated, and joined the staff of the New York Herald, becoming successively assistant London correspondent, news editor, in 1890, of the London edition, and then night editor in Paris. He was subsequently offered the chief sub-editorship of the Morning, when it was started, and was promoted to be news editor and editor. In November 1898 he resigned this last post, which he had filled with great ability. He married, in 1890, Anne, daughter of William Henry, of St. Heliers. HOBART, Garret A., Vice-President of the United States, was born in Monmouth County, New Jersey, June 3, 1844. He graduated from Rutgers College in 1863; taught school a short time, and then studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1869, commencing practice in Paterson, N. J. He was a Member of the State Legislature in 1873 and 1874, and was elected Speaker of the lower house in 1876; was elected to the Senate of the State in 1879, and in 1881 was President of that body, and re-elected in 1882. He was elected Vice-President of the United States in 1896, and took the oath of office March 4, 1897.

HOBBS, John Oliver (Mrs. Craigie), née Pearl Mary Teresa Richards, is the eldest daughter of John Morgan Richards, and was born at Boston, Mass., on Nov. 3, 1867. She was privately educated, and afterwards studied music at the Royal Academy under Macfarren, and in Paris. She also studied Greek and Latin at University College, London, under that brilliant scholar, the late Professor A. Goodwin. Thus equipped, she early learned the value of literary style, and now shares with Mrs. Meynell the distinction of being a master of epigram and pure English. Her first novel, "Some Emotions and a Moral," appeared in 1891, and at once put her in the first rank of contemporary novelists. This was followed by "The Sinner's Comedy," 1892; "A Study in Temptations," 1893; "A Bundle of Life," 1894; "The Gods, some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham," 1895;

"The Herb-Moon." 1898: "School for Sins." 1897. As a playwright John Overton Hobbes has been no less successful than as a writer of novels. Her first piece was written for Miss Ellen Terry, and is entitled "Journeys' End in Lovers' Meeting: Proverb in one Act." 1894. Her play, "The Ambassador," still running with undiminished success at the St. James's Theatre, was first produced in 1893. She has also written "Repentance," a drama in one act. 1899. Address: 36 Lancaster Gate, W.

HOBHOUSE, Lord, The Right Hon. Sir Arthur, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., fourth son of the late Right Hon. Henry Hobhouse, of Hadspen House, Somersetshire, by Harriet, sixth daughter of John Turtin, Esq., of Segrill Hall, Staffordshire, was born at Hadspen, Nov. 10, 1819. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained a first class in classics in 1841. In 1845 he became a Member of the Chancery Bar, and practised as a conveyancer and equity draughtsman, and subsequently as a Queen's Counsel, in the Rolls Court. He was appointed one of her Majesty's Counsel in 1865; but in the following year he quitted the Bar in consequence of ill-health, and was appointed a Charity Commissioner, and in 1869 an Endowed Schools Commissioner. In 1872 he was nominated Law Member of the Governor-General's Council in India, and on his retirement in 1877, was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Star of India. In 1879 he was appointed arbitrator under the Epping Forest Act; and in 1881 he was made a Privy Councillor and a Member of the Judicial Committee. In 1882-84 he was a Member of the London School Board, and from 1889-92 was an Alderman of the London County Council. In 1885 he was created Baron Hobhouse, of Hadspen, in the county of Somerset. Lord Hobhouse has taken a keen interest in many social topics, especially in those connected with women's property, with endowments, and with settlements and transfer of land. He has delivered many addresses on these subjects, some of which were collected and printed under the title of "The Dead Hand," 1880. He stood for Westminster in the Liberal interest at the general election of 1880, but was unsuccessful. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Farrer, in 1868. Addresses: 15 Bruton Street, W.; and Athenaeum.

HOBSON, Lieutenant Richmond Pearson, United States naval officer, was born at Greensboro', Alabama, Aug. 17, 1870; was educated at the Southern University and at the Naval Academy, where he graduated in 1892. His constructive genius was so marked that he was sent for a three years' period of study to Paris. On his return he organised and conducted the graduate course of construction at the United States Naval Academy. When war with Spain was declared in April he applied for active service and was assigned to the flag-ship New York, then of Lieutenant, and distinguished in June following by taking a Spanish collier, with the aid of a few men, in under the guns of the fleet, and there sinking his vessel, thus with a view to preventing the Spanish fleet from leaving the harbour. He and his men were taken prisoners, but were a month later, with the reality of the Spaniards, and returned safely on his own ships.

HOCKING, Joseph, minister and novelist, born in 1811 in Brannel, Cornwall, on Nov. 1, the son of James Hocking, an innkeeper and farmer, and Elizabeth Hock, who died in 1818. He was educated at a school afterwards at Owsen, Manchester, and Crescent Road, Victoria Park, Manchester. He exhibited an exceptional power of reading, and would walk a mile a day, seven miles away, when he was only seven years old, in order to spend a day on a cheap reprint of some volume. He had read nearly all Sir Walter Scott's books at twelve years of age, and had read nearly all the stories from early childhood. At the age of thirteen he had completed a volume novel. He became a compositor at the age of sixteen, and surveying to the age of twenty, entered Owens College, Manchester, and left it when twenty, after pursuing theological studies at Rangoon College, where he took the Robertson Prize, and stood first in the Free Church. He entered the Free Church at twenty-three in a Yorkshire village, where he remained for two years, and afterwards went to London. In 1887 he spent several months in Eastern travel; went to Egypt (up the Nile), Port Suez, Jerusalem, &c., and spent several months in the Holy Land. He visited Smyrna, Rhodes, Ephesus, Athens, &c. On his return from the East he wrote his first novel, "Jabberbrook," a religious novel, and a song. The book has sold by

by "Her Benny," a story of Liverpool street life, which has been translated into a number of languages, and has had a sale of over 100,000 copies. In 1879 "His Father" and "Reedyford" were published. These were followed in successive years by "Ivy," "Sea-waif," "Dick's Fairy," "Real Grit," "Caleb Carthew," "Crook-leigh," "For Abigail," "Rex Raynor," "For Light and Liberty," "Doctor Dick," "Where Duty Lies," "One in Charity," "The Heart of Man," "For Such is Life," "In Spite of Fate," and "God's Outcast." The last-named has been lately issued. The total sale of these volumes has reached 1,200,000 copies. In 1894 he was appointed editor of the Family Circle, which post he relinquished in 1896, when along with Mr. F. A. Atkins he established the Temple Magazine, a sixpenny illustrated monthly for Sunday and general reading, which has taken a prominent position among the illustrated magazines of the day. In addition to his literary work Mr. Hocking has lectured on various subjects in nearly all the principal towns and cities of England, drawing large audiences wherever he has appeared. His more recent volumes have been translated into French, German, and Danish. Mr. Hocking is a frequent contributor to periodical literature, and also writes a weekly column of chat for the National Press Agency, in which he deals with current topics from an ethical standpoint. This is syndicated throughout the country under the title of "For a Quiet Hour." He married in 1876 the youngest daughter of Mr. R. Lloyd, of Liverpool, by whom he has two sons and two daughters. Address: 18 Avenue Road, Highgate, N.

HODGE, Harold, editor of the Saturday Review, was born in 1862. His parents are both Cornish, his father being a member of the firm of Gotheby's. He is the youngest of three sons, the eldest being Rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, the second a partner with his father in Gotheby's. Mr. Hodge was educated at St. Paul's School, under Mr. Frederick Walker, where he was captain of football and president of the debating society, and at Pembroke College, Oxford, of which he was an Open Exhibitioner. He took his degree in Classics (2nd Mods., 3rd Greats). On leaving Oxford in 1885, he devoted himself for some years to the study of social and political problems in East London. He is still actively connected with the Oxford House in Bethnal Green and with the Mansion House Council on the Dwellings of the Poor. He was called to the Bar (Middle Temple) in 1893, devoting himself to Common Law and Parliamentary practice. He was one of the counsel in the famous Colonial Judge Case (Anderson v. Gorrie), the last case Lord Coleridge ever tried. During this time he was a contributor to the Saturday Review. He has also written in the Fortnightly Review and in the Athenæum. But it was as a politician and social worker rather than as a journalist that Mr. Hodge came to take the editorship of the Saturday Review. He has always taken the deepest interest in Church matters and in problems affecting the welfare of the working classes, particularly questions of housing and public health and elementary education. He inherits a strong turn for natural history. Address: 6 Crown Office Row, Temple, E.C.

HODGSON, Frederic Mitchell, C.M.G., Governor of Gold Coast Colony, was born in 1850, and entered the Post Office in 1869. In 1882 he became Postmaster-General of British Guiana, a post which he exchanged for the Colonial Secretaryship of the Gold Coast in 1888. In 1892 he raised a force of Gold Coast Volunteers, of which he is the Major commanding. Having administered the Colony in the absence of the Governor on several occasions, he was appointed to succeed Sir W. E. Maxwell, K.C.M.G., on March 22, 1898.

He edits the Volkstem. For year the ally of Cecil Rhodes; he broke with him after the Jameson raid and in the elections of 1898 was his opponent, not as a candidate, but as a puller of the Bond Caucus. In his days he was a man who advised separation from England, but after the Transvaal War of 1882 he acted as mediator between the Boers and the Government, especially over the Swaziland question, when a peaceful solution arrived at through his influence.

HOGAN, James Francis M.P. born at Nenagh, Tipperary, on Dec. 18, 1855, but while still an infant was sent by his parents to Australia. He was educated in St. Patrick's College, Melbourne, and was for some years in the staff of the Education Department of Victoria. In 1881 he joined the staff of the Melbourne Argus, being also a regular contributor to the Melbourne Punch, Sydney Daily Telegraph, &c. Articles of his pen have appeared in the Review, the Victorian Review, and other colonial periodicals. He was then elected the first President of the Catholic Young Men's Society, and the heroic bronze statue of Daniel O'Connell by Mr. Thos. Brock, R.A., now in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Melbourne, was erected by a committee of which Mr. Hogan was secretary. He is the author of the following books: Australian Christmas Collection, 1887; "History of the Irish in Australia," 1888; "The Australian in London," 1889; "The Lost Explorer," 1890; "The King," 1891; "Robert Lowe, 1800-1893," 1893; "The Sisters," 1895; and "The Gladstone of 1898." He organised the Party, and at its first meeting in 1893 was unanimously appointed secretary. To the Contemporary in November 1893 he contributed an explanatory of the constitution, objects of the Colonial Party, and of membership now numbers from all quarters of the House.

by a common interest in colonial and the adequate representation of Greater Britain in the Parliament. Mr. Hogan was unopposed for the Mid of Tipperary at the general election. Address: Montague Mansion, 55, Gower Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Quintin, is the youngest son of Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., of the Old East India Company, also brother of the late Lord Forster. He was born in London on May 14, 1845, and was educated at Eton. On leaving school Mr. Hogg at an active and personal interest in the boys. Eventually he took a house in the neighbourhood of Euston, which he fitted up as dormitories for about fifty working boys. playground, &c., attached. All was devoted to their welfare, and he lived amongst them, sleeping in a special corner of the boys' dormitories. He initiated the movement which was continued by the Committee for Working-Boys. In time, a library and a Sunday School were connected with the home by Mr. Hogg, assisted by his old school friend (now Lord) Kinnaird, and T. H. W. Pelham. In 1873 he moved to a room in Endell Street, the title of "The Youth's Christian Institute" an association for those of his age, were above sixteen years of age. The Institute was of so acceptably attractive a character to youths, that the number of members generally, that the membership rose to 1000, and when the members of the old Polytechnic in 1877 first came into the market in London, Quintin Hogg purchased them, and led them for the work of his Institute.

From that time the members went up by leaps and bounds, and now, in 1898, the members exceed 16,000. The work of the Institute is of a threefold character, moral, educational, and religious, and dance at any of the religious classes is perfectly optional. The purchase of the lease, and the extension and enlargement of premises for maintenance, Mr. Hogg has spent some £200,000. For years, from morning until closing time at night, he was seen on the spot, making the use of members, and in many ways of the Polytechnic boys the use of his experience and advice. All this, however, but one aspect of Quintin's very active business life. At Eton, Mr. Hogg entered the service of the West Indian house of Bosanquet, Curtis & Co., as a junior, and is now the head of the firm, its present title being Hogg, Curtis, Campbell & Co. At one time he was much pressed to enter Parliament, and was in 1886 invited by the electors of Westminster to stand as their candidate. Indifferent health, however, and a feeling that public life would interfere with his work at the Polytechnic, caused him to decline the invitation. A few years later, however, upon the constitution of the London County Council, he was spontaneously elected Alderman. In February 1899, after eight months' absence in the East Indies, Mr. Quintin Hogg was welcomed home at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, by an audience of from 3000 to 4000 members of the Polytechnic, representing all the social interests of that institution. In 1871 he married the daughter of Mr. William Graham, the late M.P. for Glasgow, a lady warmly interested in her husband's work. Addresses: 309 Regent Street, W.; 5 Cavendish Square, W.; and Athenæum.

HOLE, The Very Rev. Samuel Reynolds, D.D., Dean of Rochester, was born on Dec. 5, 1819, is the son of Samuel Hole, Esq., whose family has resided at Caunton, Nottinghamshire, since Hugh Hole was Vicar in 1567, and was educated at the Grammar School, Newark-on-Trent, and at Brasenose College, Oxford. He was ordained Deacon, 1844; Priest, 1845; and became Curate of Caunton, 1844; Vicar, 1850; Rural Dean of Southwell, 1865; Prebendary of Lincoln, 1875; Proctor in Convocation, 1875; Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1885; Select Preacher to the University of Oxford, 1885-86; Dean of Rochester, 1887; Almoner of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1895; and Grand Chaplain of Freemasons in 1897. Dean Hole is the author of "A Little Tour in Ireland," illustrated by John Leech, 1858; "A Book about Roses," 1859 (this has run through many editions, and has been translated into several languages); "Six of Spades," 1860; "Nice and her Neighbours," 1881; "Hints to Preachers," 1881; and of numerous pamphlets, sermons, and speeches. Among his later works we may mention his "Book about the Garden," 1892; "Memories of Dean Hole," 1892; "More Memories," 1894; and "A Little Tour in America," and "Addresses to Working Men." Addresses: The Deanery, Rochester; and Caunton Manor, Notts.

HOLE, William, R.S.A., only child of Richard Hole, M.D., of Hole, in Exbourne, Devon, and Anne, his wife, the daughter of Dr. Fergusson, Governor of Sierra Leone, was born in Salisbury on

Nov. 7, 1846. On the death of his father from cholera in 1849, his mother returned to her family, then residing in Edinburgh, and her son was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University. In 1874 he was apprenticed to a firm of civil engineers. After four years he took a trip to Italy, and developed latent artistic instincts in the congenial studio atmosphere of Rome. On his return he could find no employment as an engineer, and definitely abandoned that profession for art. He was trained, in a sort of way, at the Edinburgh School of Art, and then learned his business under Cameron and Chalmers at the School of the Royal Scottish Academy. He was elected Associate of that body in 1878, and full Academician in 1889. He is also a member of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society, and of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. Mr. Hole's claim to distinction is perhaps chiefly due to his power as an etcher, in which art he certainly has taken a foremost place. His principal pictures are: "The End of the '45," 1879; "The Evening of Culloden," 1880; "Prince Charlie's Parliament," 1881; "The Fill of the Boats," 1883; "If Thou hadst known," 1884; "News of Flodden," 1886; "Gethsemane," 1887; and many portraits. His principal original etchings are: "Quasi Cursus," portraits of the Professors of the Edinburgh University in its Tercentenary Year, 1884; and "Canterbury Pilgrims," 1888 (36-inch plate). His other etchings are: "Mill on the Yare," after Crome, 1888; "He is Coming," after Mattys Maris, 1889; "The Sawyers," after J. F. Millet, 1890; "Six plates after Thomson of Duddingston," 1889; and many others. A large plate after Constable's "Jumping Horse," was published in the autumn of 1890, and was followed by two others after Velasquez—viz., "Don Gaspar de Guzman" and "Admiral Pulido Pareja." More recently Mr. Hole issued an important etching after Sir John Millais' "Idyll of the '45." At the Chicago Exhibition Mr. Hole was granted an Award of Merit for his etchings. For the future his name will probably be associated with works of mural decoration. His "Te Deum" in the Church of St. James, Edinburgh, has already attracted considerable attention, and he is at present engaged on the decoration of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, a commission entrusted to him in 1897, and probably the most important work of the kind in point of magnitude which has been given to one man since the recent revival of mural art in these islands. In 1876 Mr. Hole married Elizabeth, daughter of James Lindsay, Esq., W.S. Address: 27 Inverleith Row, Edinburgh.

HOLLAND, Canon Henry son of George Henry and Elizabeth D. Holland, of Garton, Wimbeldon, was born at Lodingfordshire, in 1847, and educated at and at Balliol College, Oxford. He took a first class in the Final School, 1870, and in the same year was elected a senior studentship at Christ Church. He was ordained at Cuddesdon, and was afterwards Theological Lecturer at Christ Church. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1882, and again in 1883. He was Canon of Truro and Examining Officer to the Bishop, and in 1884 was Canon, afterwards Precentor of Exeter. He has published several volumes of sermons, "Logic and Life," in 1882; "Friday at St. Paul's"; "Creed and Character," 1886; "Christ or Ecclesiasticalism," 1887; "On Behalf of Belief," articles on "Justin Martyr"; "Doctor Liddon" in the Diet of Christian Biography; an Essay on the Mundi, "Pleas and Claims of God's City"; and, in collaboration with Mr. W. HOLMAN-HUNT, William, painter, one of the most prominent of the three working members of the Pre-Raphaelite movement, was born in London in 1827, and exhibited his first picture at the Academy in 1844, a portrait of a child, entitled "Hark!" The earlier works were adapted from poetry and fiction, such as "Dr. Rochecliffe performing Divine Service in the Cottage of Joceline Joliffe at Woodstock," in 1847; "The Flight of Madeline and Porphyro," from Keats's "St. Agnes," in 1848; and "Rienzi vow- ing to obtain Justice for the Death of his young brother," in 1849. He began that series of religious and mystical subjects, whereby he has since made himself best known, with "A Converted British Family Sheltering a Christian Missionary from the Persecution of the Druids," in 1850; followed by the symbolical "Hireling Shepherd," in 1852. His picture in 1851 was in a different class of sentiment—"Valentine receiving Sylvia from Proteus"; that of 1853, "Claudio and Isabella," and "Our English Coasts," a study of the Downs at Hastings. Three of these pictures were awarded £50 and £60 prizes at Liverpool and Birmingham. The occult meaning of his "Light of the World," and of the "Awakening Conscience," of 1854, was explained by Mr. Ruskin in some letters to the Times. "The Scapegoat," of which the scene was painted upon the margin of the salt-incrusted shallows of the Dead Sea, was exhibited in 1856. The "Finding of the Saviour in the Temple" was exhibited in 1860; and "Isabella and the Pot of Basil," in 1866. His more recent pictures are "London Bridge on the Night of the Marriage of the Prince of Wales"; "The Afterglow"; and "The Festival of St. Swithin." The last-mentioned was in the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1868. The largest of his works, which exclusively occupied his time during a residence of four years in Palestine, was finished in 1873. It is styled "The Shadow of Death," and represents a prevision of the Crucifixion. "Plains of Esdraelon," an Oriental landscape with shepherd and sheep, taken at Nazareth, was exhibited in 1877. "The Ship," an illustration of lines from "In Memoriam," represents the deck of a ship by night, exhibited in 1878. A "Portrait of Sir Richard Owen, C.B.," was exhibited in Bond Street in 1880, &c. "The Triumph of the Innocents" was exhibited in Bond Street in 1885. It represents a company of the spirits of the Children of Bethlehem accompanying the Holy Family on their flight into Egypt. "Christ amongst the Doctors," designed for a mosaic placed in Clifton College Chapel, was exhibited in 1890. In the year 1880 he delivered a lecture at the Society of Arts upon the need of greater knowledge and care on the part of artists in the preparation of the materials upon the perfection of which they have to rely for the permanence of their works. This at the time awakened much attention to the matter, and still encourages research for better methods of obtaining superior preparations. A nearly complete collection of Mr. Holman-Hunt's works was exhibited at the Fine Arts Society's rooms in 1886. He has written in the Contemporary Review two articles of reminiscences of the Pre-Raphaelite movement. In the columns of the Times he subsequently led the attack upon the Royal Academy, in which, of course, he no longer exhibits. In May 1898 the Queen purchased one of his pictures, "The Beloved," exhibited in the New Gallery. Addresses: Draycott Lodge, Fulham; and Athenæum.

LYOAKE, George Jacob, born Birmingham, April 13, 1817, was educated at the Mechanics' Institution in that city. He was appointed Superintendent of the first Exhibition of Manufactures held in Birmingham, 1839; Teacher of Mathematics to the Mechanics' Institution, and one of the first to explain the Social System to Owen, 1841. In 1846 he was awarded the five prizes offered by the Ancient Order of Oddfellows for seven Degree Lectures upon Knowledge, Charity, Justice, Science, and Progress. He was Acting Secretary to the Legion sent out to Garibaldi; and a member of the Hyde Park Demonstration Committee against Lord Palmerston's Treachery Bill. Mr. Holyoake is the author of "Secularism," a system which, according to him, "bases duty on conditions purely human, relies on material progress of improvement, justifying its best to the conscience, irrespective of dogma, Theism, or Revelation." He is the author of numerous works on work-class education, theological criticism, co-operation; "Uses of Co-operation"; "Reasoning from Facts"; "Public Opinion and Debate"; "Trial of Theism"; "History of Middleborough-on-Tees"; "Lectures to Lord John Russell on an English Franchise"; "The Political Condition"; a letter to Joseph Cowen, 1885. J. S. Mill declared, 1865, to be the best of Mr. Holyoake's political works; "The History of Co-operation in England," which caused upwards of 100 co-operative societies to be founded in 1845, and has been translated into French, German, and Indian languages; "History of Co-operation in England," 1845; and "A New Defence of the Secularist," which Mr. Bright described as his original argument for it he had written. He was the editor of thirty volumes of Reasoner. Mr. Holyoake was the first person imprisoned in England for Atheism. The cause was first given in debate after a lecture on Home Colonies (1841). Mr. Justice Coleridge admitted that Mr. Holyoake did not introduce theology into the address, but merely gave an honest answer to a question, but sentenced him to six months' imprisonment to encourage him in his course. Mr. Holyoake was also the last person against whom an indictment was issued by the Court of Exchequer for publishing unstamped papers in support of the Society for Repealing the Taxes upon Knowledge. Mr. Holyoake having in-curved upwards of £600,000 of fines, Mr. Gladstone said to a deputation upon the subject that "he recognised that Mr. Holyoake's object was not to break the law, but to try the law." The Repeal of the Newspaper Stamp Act, however, caused the prosecution to be abandoned. He was chiefly instrumental in causing the Evidence Amendment Bill to be passed, which legalised purely secular affirmations. He suggested and furnished the scheme of the series of Blue-Books issued by Lord Clarendon, prepared by the Foreign Office on the "Condition of the Industrial Classes in Foreign Countries." It was on his suggestion, made when Lord John Manners was Commissioner of Works, that the limelight was placed over the Clock Tower at Westminster, to denote at night when Parliament was sitting. A later work is the "Life of Joseph Rayner Stephens, Preacher and Orator." In 1882 he a second time visited Canada and the United States to propose to the Governments of both countries the issue of a Settlers' Guide Book, to be prepared and published on their authority, Mr. Gladstone making Mr. Holyoake two grants from the Public Service Fund in aid of this object. Mr. Holyoake edited the first three volumes of the Present Day, a journal discussing "Agitated Questions without Agitation." His recent works are: "Among the Americans," "A Hundred Days Abroad in New Mexico and Canada," and "Hostile and Generous Toleration." He has been a member of the Central Board since its first establishment in 1869. He has also published "Self-Help One Hundred Years Ago," 1890; "The Co-operative Movement of To-day," 1891; "Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life," 1892; "Public Speaking and Debate," 1894; "Origin and Nature of Secularism," showing that where Free Thought commonly ends Secularism begins, 1896; "Jubilee History of the Leeds Co-operative Society," 1897. Address: Eastern Lodge, Brighton. Clubs: National Liberal (Hon. Member), and of the Institute of Journalists, of the Cobden Club, and the Musée Social, Paris.

HOOK, James Clarke, R.A. was born in London, Nov. 21, 1819. His father, Mr. James Hook, was the Judge Arbitrator in the Mixed Commission Courts, Sierra Leone, and his mother was the second daughter of Dr. Adam Clarke, the biblical commentator. The future artist was entered as a student of the Royal Academy in 1836, and his progress from the outset was marked and encouraging. He took the first Medals in the life and painting schools in 1852. He obtained the Gold Medal for historical painting in 1845, the subject being "The Finding of the Body of Harold." Up to this time Mr. Hook had chiefly confined himself to subjects from English history, and occasional portraits. In 1846 he obtained the travelling pension of the Royal Academy for three years, and in the same year married the third daughter of Mr. James Burton, solicitor, and went to Italy. After eighteen months' absence he gave up half his pension, and returned to England. He now began painting subjects from Italian and French history and poetry, and occasionally from Scripture. Of this class may be mentioned the following, all exhibited at the Royal Academy: "Pamphilus relating his Story," a subject from Boccaccio, 1844; "The Song of Olden Time," 1845; "The Controversy between the Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham," 1846; "Bassanio commenting on the Caskets," a scene in the "Merchant of Venice," 1847; "The Emperor Otho IV. and the Maid Gualdrada," 1848; "The Chevalier Bayard wounded at Brescia," also, "Othello's First Suspicion," and "Bianca Capello," 1849; "Escape of Francesco Novello di Carrara and the Lady Taddea," and "A Dream of Venice," 1850. Mr. Hook was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1850, and attained the full honours of the Academy in 1860. He exhibited "The Rescue of the Brides of Venice," and "The Defeat of Shylock," 1851; "The Story of Torello," from Boccaccio, and "Othello's Description of Desdemona," 1852; "The Chevalier Bayard knighting the Son of the Duke of Bourbon," and "Isabella of Castille and the Idle Nuns," 1853; "Incidents in the Persecution of the Protestants in Paris," 1854; and "Gratitude of the Mother of Moses for the Safety of her Child," 1855. About this period Mr. Hook returned to his first inclination, and devoted chiefly to pastoral and modern subjects. Of examples in his later style instance the following: "The Boat of the Streamlet," "The Mariner," and "The Shepherd's Boy," 1855; "The Fisherman's Good-Night," 1856; "A Boat on the Horizon," and "The Sea Letter," 1857; "A Pastoral," with inscription from Spenser, and "The Boy Gathering Eggs," 1858. Other subjects, "Luff, Boy," "A Cornish and "The Skipper Ashore," 1859; "Cornwall for the Whitley Fish," 1861; "The Trawlers," 1862; "The Doggerbank," 1870; "Saints, Norway," "Norwegian Hymn," "Market Girls on a Fjord," 1871; "Jolly as a Sand-Boy," 1872; "The Oak," and "The Sapphire Gull," 1875; "Crabbers," 1876; "A Catcher," "The Coral Fish," 1878; "Little to Earn and Much to Keep," "Mushroom Gatherers," "Tanning Nets: Witches and Cakes from the Macbeth Country," 1879; "Baby: The White Sands of Iona," "with the Tide," "Sea-pools," and "The Gardens," 1880; "Diamond Mine, Cornwall," and "Past Work," "Caller Herrin," and "Devon Cart: the Last Handful Home," "Catching a Mermaid," "Love and Toil," "The Willy Angler," "Cart 'Farmer Pengelly,'" 1883; "The Oar," 1886; "The Sea-weed Raker," "Last Night's Disaster," and "A the New Smack," 1890. More recent has exhibited "Good Liquor, Dec. 1893; and "Before Sundown," "Packers," "Practising without T and "Seed-time," 1894; "Finnan Hey, Ho, Seely Sheepe!" "A the West Country," 1895; "A Prawns," and "Breadwinners North," 1896; "From the Shoal Field," Portrait of Allan J. HOOKER, Sir Joseph G.C.S.I., C.B., P.P.R.S., M.D. F.G.S., D.C.L. Oxon., LL.D. Cant. Edin., and Glas., is the second surviving son of the late Sir Jackson Hooker, Regius Professor of Botany in Glasgow University, subsequently Director of the Royal Kew, by Maria, eldest daughter turner, F.R.S., banker, of Great Britain, Norfolk. He was born at Norwich, Suffolk, June 30, 1817, and educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, where he took his M.D. in 1839. At the age of twenty-one he accompanied, officially as assistant-surgeon, but in reality as the famous expedition of Sir James Clark Ross, fitted out by the Government for the purpose of investigating phenomena of terrestrial magnetism in the Circumpolar Seas. The result of his marches during this voyage was a series of superb volumes on the botany of the northern regions, embracing the Arctic Islands, Fuegia, Greenland, and Tasmania. By a comparison of the plants of these regions with other parts of the world, he was instrumental in advancing our knowledge of which govern the distribution of plants on the surface of the earth. He returned to this country after an absence of five years. In 1846 he accepted the post of botanist to the Geological Survey of Great Britain under Sir H. de la Beche. He contributed a valuable paper and volume of the "Records" of information on the vegetation of the previous period as compared with the present day; and another on the occurrence of coal-fossils. In 1847 Dr. Hooker undertook a journey to India for the purpose of investigating the plants of that country, and the flora of a hitherto unexplored region of the Himalayas. The course of his travels in those districts he was for some time a prisoner by the Rajah of Sikkim. He returned in 1851, and published two striking volumes of "Himalayan Botany," and a number of scientific papers on the botany of India. In 1850, in India, he published some beautiful illustrations of rhododendrons from the Himalayas, several of which have since been introduced into England. His expeditions, though partly at his private expense, were conducted under the sanction of Government, which supplied him with funds. He was appointed assistant-Director of Kew Gardens; on his father's death in 1865, succeeded to the Directorship, which he held until 1885. He was some time a member of the Natural Science of candidates for appointments in the Royal Botanic Gardens in the late East India Company, and Examiner in Botany on University and Apothecaries' Examinations. In the autumn of 1860 he accompanied the late Admiral Washington to Syria, during which he paid much attention to the oaks of that country. Dr. Hooker presided over the meeting of the British Association held at Norwich in 1868. The main subject of his address, which gave rise to much controversy, was the consideration of the views put forward from time to time by Mr. Darwin on the doctrine of the continuous evolution of life, and in connection with this, on what is termed "natural selection," together with his theory of the "origin of species." To Darwin's notions, expressed in their fullest extent, Dr. Hooker gave his entire adhesion. He was appointed a Companion of the Bath (Civil Division) in 1869. In April 1871 Dr. Hooker left England for Morocco, in company with Mr. John Ball, F.R.S., and Mr. G. Maw, F.L.S., his purpose being to collect the plants of that comparatively unexplored country. On the 16th of May he and his companions made the ascent of the Great Atlas, the heights of which mountain had never before been trodden by any European; and at the close of June returned to Kew, bringing a large collection of plants. In 1873 Dr. Hooker was elected President of the Royal Society, but resigned in 1878, when the late Mr. W. Spottiswoode was chosen as his successor. In 1877 he was created Knight Commander of the Star of India, for his services to the Government of India, and in 1897, on the completion of "The Flora of British India," was raised to G.C.S.I. In 1877 he paid a visit of three months' duration to the United States, where he was most cordially received by the leading scientific men. On his return he presented to Kew a large collection of seeds and museum specimens, and a herbarium of about a thousand species, together with notes on the distribution of the North American trees in particular. He was awarded by the Royal Society a Royal medal in 1854, the Copley in 1887, and the Darwin in 1892. In 1884 the Founders' medal of the Royal Geographical Society was awarded to him "for his eminent services in scientific geography"; and in 1883 the Society of Arts presented to him their Albert medal for the services he has rendered to the arts, manufactures, and commerce by promoting an accurate knowledge of the floras and economic vegetable products of the several colonies and dependencies of the Empire. In 1888 he received the medal of the Linnean Society, and in 1898 that of the Manchester Philosophical Society. Sir Joseph is a member of various learned societies, and a corresponding member of the Institute of France. His works are: "Botany of the Antarctic Voyage," 6 vols., 4to, 1847-60; "Handbook of the New Zealand Flora," 1867; "Rhododendrons of the Sikkim-Himalaya," 1849-51; "Himalayan Journals," 2 vols., 8vo, 1854; "Genera Plantarum," 1862, et seq.; "The Student's Flora of the British Islands," 1870; "The Flora of British India," 1872-97; "Journal of a Tour in Morocco and the Great Atlas," 1878. Addresses: The Camp, near Sunningdale; and Athenæum.

HOPE, Anthony. See HAWKINS, ANTHONY HOPE.

HOPE, Sir Theodore Cracraft, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born in 1831, and is the only son of the late James Hope, M.D., F.R.S. He was educated at Rugby and at the East India Company's College at Haileybury, and entered the Bombay Civil Service in 1853. He was an Educational Inspector in India, 1855-60; member of the Governor-General's Legislative Council, 1875-80; provisional member of Council, Bombay, in 1880; Secretary to the Government of India for Finance and Commerce, 1881-82; Finance Minister (officiating), in 1882; Public Works Member of the Governor-General's Councils, 1882-87. He has retired from the Civil Service, and was created a K.C.S.I. in 1886. In 1893 he published "Church and State in India." He married in 1866 Josephine, only daughter of the late John Williamson Fritton, of Braidtjle House, co. Down. Addresses: 21 Elvaston Place, S.W.; Bel Ritiro, San Remo; and Athenæum.

HOPETOUN, Earl of, The Right Hon. John Adrian Louis Hope, G.C.M.G., D.L., Lord Chamberlain, was born at Hopetoun House, N.B., Sept. 25, 1860, and is the son of the 6th Earl and Etheldred Anne, daughter of C. T. S. Birch-Rernardson, Esq., and was educated at Eton College. He succeeded his father in 1873. He passed at Sandhurst in 1879, but did not enter the army. He was appointed Lieutenant, Lanarkshire Yeomanry, 1880; is a Deputy-Lieut. for Linlithgow, Lanark, and Dumfries; and Justice of the Peace for Linlithgow. Earl Hopetoun was Junior Whip in the House of Lords from 1883 to 1886; was Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1885 to 1889; and was Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland 1887-88-89. He is the Hon. Colonel of the Forth Submarine Mining Volunteer Corps; and was made Governor of the Colony of Victoria in 1889 in succession to Sir Henry Loch, and in the same year was made G.C.M.G. He resigned this position in 1895, since which year he has been President of the Institution of Naval Architects. In December 1898 he was appointed Lord Chamberlain in the room of the late Earl of Lathom. He married in 1886 the Hon. Hersey Alice Eveleigh-de-Moleyns, daughter of the 4th

Baron Ventry. Address: Hopetoun South Queensferry, Linlithgowshire.

HOPKINS, Edward J., M.A. Organist at the Temple Church, Westminster, June 30, 1818, was at the age of eight, as a chorister in Chapel Royal, St. James's, where he remained till his voice broke in 1833. He became a pupil of Thomas Forbes Waley, organist of the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. About a twelvemonth afterwards, Sept. 17, 1834, Mr. Hopkins played for and obtained his first appointment, that of organist to Mitcham, Surrey, at the early age of sixteen. After post he exchanged for that of organist to St. Peter's, Islington, in 1838. The same year he obtained the Great Medal for his anthem, "Out of the Depths," and in the year 1840 he obtained the prize for his anthem, "God is great," the umpires being Dr. Crotch, Mr. Horsley, and Sir John Goss. He accepted the position of organist at Luke's Church, Berwick Street, which remained until 1843. During that time he executed a task calling for diligence and patience, viz., that of transcribing two sets of old madrigals from the original and unbarred part-books for the Antiquarian Society—Thomas Wale's first set of madrigals, 1597; and Bennet's first set of madrigals, 1611, the former of which was published in the early part of 1843, and the other about two years later. About that time he published a series of arrangements for the organ, the first three numbers of which he had been trained in the remainder of the series were laid down by the CC organ, to which, in 1843, with Dr. Gauntlett and Henry Hopkins became an early addition. On May 7, 1843, Mr. Hopkins played probationary service at the Temple Church, and in the following October he was formally appointed "Organist to our noble Society of the Temple Church Benchers." He retained his position until 1898. In 1849 the octave and F pedals were removed from the organ, and a proper set, of the two octaves and a half, from which were laid down in their stead, opening of the organ with this improvement, the service known as "Hopkins in F" was written, and followed by the second service. Previous to this, however, he had published the series of organ arrangements for the CC organ, introduced the Continental oblong form for the pedals, and he had also issued his "Ludial Pieces." In September

ered a course of four lectures at the Institution, Liverpool, on "The Organ and its Capabilities," illustrated with Diagrams, &c., receiving the request that they should be developed into a treatise entitled "The Organ : its Construction," by Dr. Rimmer. J. Hopkins. In 1880 Dr. Rimmer's history of the organ appeared in George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," in 1883, at the request of the two hon. societies, Dr. Rimmer took the rather heavy task of editing a new book of the words of the psalter and a pointed psalter with a view to express use of the Temple Church. Hopkins has composed anthems, services, and voluntaries, and received many honours in recognition of his services.

Address: 36 Royal Crescent, W.

HOPPS, John Page, was born in London, Nov. 6, 1834, and was educated in London and at the Baptist College, Leicester. He entered the Baptist ministry at Hugglescote and Ibstock, Leicestershire, in 1855, and became assistant to George Dawson at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham, in 1858. In 1860 he accepted an invitation from a Unitarian church at Sheffield; and afterwards was Unitarian minister at Dukinfield and Glasgow. At Glasgow he was elected a member of the first School Board, being the only representative there of the principle of secular education only in public schools. In 1876 he became minister of the Great Meeting, Leicester. For thirty years, in addition to the ordinary gatherings of his congregation, he has held meetings of working people on Sunday afternoons in public halls, at Birmingham, Sheffield, Manchester, Glasgow, and Leicester, for worship and "the uplifting of the life." During part of this time in Leicester, for several winters, he closed his chapel on Sunday evenings, and gathered together immense audiences of working people in the Floral Hall. He was proprietor and editor of the Truthseeker for twenty-five years, from 1863 to 1887, and is the author of a great number of works on theological and religious subjects, including a "Revised Old Testament" for young people, a "Life of Jesus" for the young, and several volumes of non-controversial sermons, also of various hymns and poems. He is the writer of the most widely circulated statement of the Unitarian Faith, of which four hundred thousand copies have been issued. The following are some of the titles of Mr. Hopps's sermons:—"Fear of Evil Mastered by Faith in God," "Self-possession through Endurance," "The Goodness of God in a World of Struggle," "Love for God a Power working with us for Good." Mr. Hopps has always been a social reformer, an advocate of co-operation, and a politician. In 1885 he contested South Paddington against Lord Randolph Churchill, and in 1889 was invited to be the Liberal candidate for St. George's-in-the-East. He has written a series of papers on the Irish question, which have had a combined circulation of over a quarter of a million. He has been a frequent contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette, the Daily News, the Daily Chronicle, the Star, and the Echo. He is the editor of the Coming Day, the first number of which was published Jan. 1, 1891. In 1892 he founded "Our Father's Church," a purely spiritual community, whose members, in various parts of the world, unite on the basis of "The Fatherhood of God (who is the inmost uplifting Life of all things), and the brotherhood of man for sympathy and service." The members of the Church have no officials and no rules, and never meet. "The Ideal," the accepted testimony of the Church, simply sets forth the leading principles of an ideal life in society. It has been translated into Welsh, French, German, Italian, Hungarian, and Japanese, and published all over the world in English. In 1892 he accepted the pastorate of "The Free Christian Church," Croydon. Address: Oak Tree House, South Norwood Hill, S.E.

HOPWOOD, Charles Henry, Q.C., appointed Recorder of Liverpool in 1886, fifth son of J. S. S. Hopwood, of Chancery Lane, solicitor, was born July 20, 1829, and educated at a private school, and afterwards at King's College School and at King's College, London. He became Barrister of the Middle Temple in 1853, practised on the Northern Circuit and in London, and was made Queen's Counsel in 1874. He was elected M.P. for Stockport, 1874, and was returned again in 1880, but rejected in 1885. In 1892 he was elected for the Middleton Division of Lancashire, and sat till 1895. He was elected Barrister of the Middle Temple, 1874, and was appointed Recorder of Liverpool in February 1886; attained a high reputation in legal practice, and was joint author of "Cases," Hopwood and Phillips. She was the first white woman to reach Lake Tanganyika, and she was there for four years on Kavala Island, where she and her children the first rudiments of civilisation. Mrs. Hore is the author of "To Lake Tanganyika in a Canoe." Mrs. Hore accompanied her husband to Polynesia (1894).

HORE, Edward Coode, born in Islington on July 18, 1844, was educated at King's College, London, and was called to the Bar in 1864. He was elected M.P. for Islington in 1880, and was returned again in 1885, but rejected in 1890. In 1892 he was elected for the Islington Division of Middlesex, and sat of two old Cornish families, educated chiefly in a private school, and was apprenticed, at the age of 14, to the owner of a London ship, and took nearly every part of the voyage on more than twenty different ships, from the small coasting sloop to the first-class mail steamer, through all the grades of shipboard life: seaman, boatswain, third, second, and chief officer, and master. In 1874 Captain Hore was appointed a Missionary Society's pioneer in Central Africa. He lived on the shore of Lake Tanganyika for about 12 years, first at Ujiji, then at Niumkorlo, and subsequently on Kavala. He surveyed the 1000 mile coast of Tanganyika in a little log canoe, and discovered the Lukuga to be the outlet of the lake. In 1884 he returned to England to report on his work. In 1882 he took the steel lifeboat, on trucks, from Ujiji, a distance of 836 miles, in 100 days. In 1888 he finished the voyage of the steam yacht the Thetis on Lake Tanganyika. He received a gold chronometer from the Government of the French Republic, and assistance to the expedition; and in 1890 received the Peek grant from the Royal Geographical Society. Captain Hore is the author of "Tanganyika; eleven years in Africa"; as well as of contrivances and journals descriptive and explanatory of the condition and rights of the natives of Central Africa, for whom he has shown sympathy. In pursuit of the truth he also during three years gave many lectures throughout England, Australia, New Zealand, and elsewhere, and exhibited in London a series of models (made by himself) illustrating Central African life. These are known as the "Brightest of the Dark Continent." Early in 1894 Captain Hore called a call to further work in the field, and has been appointed commander of the fine new steamship Thetis for the London Missionary Society's work in Polynesia.

F, The Rev. James John, D.D., D.C.L., the late Admiral Sir Phipps, Bart., of Little Green, Sussex, son of the Right Hon. George, was born at Winwick, Lancashire, and educated at Eton under the Rev. J. W. Hawtrey, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where, in 1849, he took a B.A. He rowed twice in the University Eight, viz., in 1849 and 1850, and was known at College and

HORSLEY, John Callcott, R.A., son of the late William Horsley, the well-known musician, and grand-nephew of the late Sir Augustus Callcott, the eminent painter, was born in London, Jan. 29, 1817. His first exhibited picture, painted while he was a youth—"Rent-Day at Haddon Hall in the Sixteenth Century"—was spoken of in high terms by Wilkie. "The Chess-Players," "The Rival Musicians," "Waiting for an Answer," were first seen in the British Institution; and he exhibited, for the first time at the Academy, the "Pride of the Village" (now in the Vernon Gallery). This was followed by "The Contrast: Youth and Age," in 1840; "Leaving the Ball," another "Contrast," gay pleasure seekers on the one hand, the homeless outcast on the other; and "The Pedlar," both in 1841; "Winning Gloves," in 1842; and "The Father's Grave," in 1843. In the latter year Mr. Horsley's cartoon of "St. Augustine Preaching," gained at Westminster Hall one of the three prizes in the second rank of £200; and in the trial of skill of 1844 he obtained, by his two small frescoes, a place among the six painters commissioned to execute further samples for the Palace at Westminster. That of 1845, for "Religion," was approved, and the subject executed at large in the House of Lords. In 1847 his colossal oil painting, "Henry V., believing the King dead, assumes the Crown," secured a premium of the third class. Another fresco which he was employed to execute, "Satan Surprised at the Ear of Eve," is to be seen in a portion of the New Palace, called Poets' Hall. Amongst his later works are: "Malvolio in the Sun practising behaviour to his own Shadow," "Hospitality," "The Madrigal—"Keep your Time," "The Pet of the Common,"

"L'Allegro and Il Penseroso" (painted for the late Prince Consort); "Lady Jane Grey and Roger Ascham," "A Scene from Don Quixote," "Flower Girls—Town and Country," "The Holy Communion," "The Lost Found," "A Jealous Eye," "The Duenna's Return," "The New Dress," and "Under the Mistletoe," "The Bashful Swain," "The Duenna and Her Cares," "Attack and Defence," "Detected," "The Gaiety's Daughter," "Caught Napping," "The Banker's Private Room—Negotiating a Loan," "Old Folk and Young Folk," "Pay for Peeping," "In with You," "Stolen Glances," "The other Name," "The Poet's Theme," "Sunny Moments," and a large religious subject with figures of a colossal size, entitled "The Healing Mercies of Christ," painted as an altar-piece for the chapel of St. Thomas's Hospital; portrait of Thomas Woolcombe, Esq., painted for the South Devon Railway Company: "Under Lock and Key," "Coming Down to Dinner," "The World Forgetting," "Critics on Costume—Fashions Change," "Le Jour des Morts," "Life in the Château Gardens at Fontainebleau," 1881; "A Merry Chase in Haddon Hall," 1882; and "Wedding Rings," 1883, &c. In 1893 he exhibited a portrait of Alderman Treloar at the Royal Academy. In 1882 Mr. Horsley was elected Treasurer of the Royal Academy. He has been very active in bringing together the magnificent collections of "Old Masters" displayed every winter since 1870 at Burlington House. On attaining eighty years of age Mr. Horsley, having held the office of Treasurer to the Royal Academy for fifteen years, resigned that post in 1897 and joined the list of "Retired Academicians." Addresses: 1 High Row, Kensington, W.; and Willesley, Cranbrook.

HORSLEY, Victor Alexander Haden, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.S., B.Sc., son of J. C. Horsley, R.A., was born on April 14, 1857, in Kensington, and educated at Cranbrook School and University College Hospital with the view of entering on a medical career. After taking the Gold Medal in Anatomy and in Surgery, obtaining the Surgical Scholarship at the University of London, and holding the usual preliminary posts, including the Surgical Registrarship, he was appointed on the surgical staff of the Hospital, having previously taken the F.R.C.S. and London degrees in medicine and surgery. From 1884 to 1890 he held the post of Professor-Superintendent of the Brown Institution, in the laboratory of which he carried out investigations into the localisation of functions of the brain and into the functions of the thyroid gland, by which latter he proved that the disease

known as myxœdema was caused by loss of this organ. In 1884 was appointed Secretary to the Royal Institution on Hydrophobia, in which he personally sought out and set up the cases operated on, and he was thoroughly convinced of the value of their treatment. In 1886 became a Fellow of the Royal Society, and his actions and Proceedings of which in conjunction with others, has come many papers bearing principally on physiology and localisation. Having been elected Surgeon to the National Hospital for Paralysis and Epilepsy, he performed a successful operation for removal of a tumour in the brain of a patient suffering from those diseases, followed up by many others of the same nature, and in 1887 he performed a successful operation for the removal of a tumour of the spinal cord. The paper in question formed the subject of a paper on Brain Surgery in 1886 in the Medical Journal, and again in 1890. In 1890 he suggested that the thyroid gland in the treatment of myxœdema, the method proposed that of grafting the gland into the neck of patients suffering from the disease. In 1891 he contributed a critical and historical view of the subject to the Festschrift. In the same year in conjunction with Professor Goltz, appointed to give the Croonian Lecture of the Royal Society, the subject "The Mammalian Nervous System and their Localisation determined by an electrical method." In 1891 to 1893 he held the post of Professor at the Royal Institution delivered three sets of lectures the first has appeared in book form Brain and Spinal Cord. He was President of the Section of Pathology of the British Medical Association and in 1893 opened the discussion of the Surgical Section of that Association a paper on the treatment of Tumours. As one of the lecturers of the British Association for the study of the Functions of the Nervous System showing how largely our knowledge of the subject is the result of experimental research. In the same year he received the Cameron Prize for Therapeutics from the University of Edinburgh. He was Professor of Pathology at University College (1893-96), and in the Laboratory of that Institution at the Brown, has carried out research on intra-cranial pressure with Dr. Semper on the larynx with Dr. Semper on the Du Buisson hot-air triad on hydrophobia, on the motor ial nerves with Dr. Beevor, hot wounds of the brain with Mr. Horsley is also the several papers in the British Medical Journal, especially on the surgical treatment of neuralgia, and an operation, the method of Lannelongue, for the hydrocephalic idiocy in children. Member of the German Surgical Society, the American Surgical Society, the Neurological Society, the Sociologie in Paris, and a correspondent of the Royal Association of Physicians of Buda-Pesth. He has interested himself in questions of medicine, is President of the Medical Association, and has devoted much of his time to the study of archaeology in reference to prehistoric man, on which latter subject he has delivered several lectures, beginning before the Royal Institution. Mr. Horsley is an ardent supporter of experimental research, and on of himself and his English colleagues at the Church Congress of 1892, his article on the subject the tenth Century and by many the Times, &c., is well known. 25 Cavendish Square, W.C. ; London.

Robert Forman, M.A., one of the most distinguished and authors in the Congregational movement was born in London on Sept. 18, 1851. He is the son of the Rev. T. G. Forman, at that time minister of Tonbridge and was educated at Tettenhall Green School, and New College, Oxford; taking a first class in divinity and subsequently becoming a Fellow of the College and Lecturer in divinity. About this time he published a book, "A History of the Church," which is still a favourite text-book in universities and Public Schools. In 1883 Dr. Horton's name came before the public in connection with the appointment by the government of the University as one of the examiners of "The Rudiments of Faith," which included examination in the Thirty-Nine Articles. A fierce opposition was started in the Clerical and Conferences of the University at the time of a Nonconformist to the University. Serious opposition was started, and a meeting of Convocation the following year was defeated by a considerable majority. In the following January Dr. Horton was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church, Lyndhurst Road, and the services of which he had been conducting in a tentative way for three years previously. The success of his ministry may be judged from the fact that whereas at the formation of the church on Oct. 27, 1880, the total membership was 59, including himself, the number of members at present in active communion is 1170, besides about 100 whose names still remain upon the register, but are abroad or residing too far away for practical connection with the Church. The work of the Church is highly organised, and the reports of the various institutions connected with it, in the "Church Manual," form a considerable volume. A large mission and social settlement is also carried on at Lyndhurst Hall, Warden Road, Kentish Town, which was erected some years ago at a cost of over £6000. In 1893 Dr. Horton was invited to deliver the annual lectures on preaching at Yale University, and visited America for that purpose, the lectures being afterwards published under the title of "Verbum Dei." In recognition of this important service the University conferred upon him the degree of D.D., but personally Dr. Horton does not use it, nor the ordinary title of "Rev.," preferring to be considered simply a Christian layman. Notwithstanding the pressure of his pastoral duties, and the number of his outside preaching engagements, Dr. Horton has found time to add considerably to the literature of the day, his principal works, in addition to those already mentioned, being "Inspiration and the Bible," "Revelation and the Bible," "The Book of Proverbs," "This do," "The Cartoons of St. Mark," "The Lyndhurst Road Pulpit," "Oliver Cromwell," "The Teachings of Jesus," "John Howe," and "The Women of Scripture." He is also a frequent contributor to the magazines, and many of his papers have been republished in attractive form, such as "The Art of Living Together," "The Four Pillars of the Home," "The Conquered World," "Success and Failure," &c. Recently a series of addresses by him on Romanism, republished under the title of "England's Danger," has excited wide interest and attention. His monthly lecture to artisans appears in the "Christian World Pulpit" on the Wednesday following the first Sunday of each month, and thus reaches a wide circle of readers. Dr. Horton, in the year 1898, occupied the position of Chairman of the London Congregational Union, and he has already filled the Chair of the London Missionary Society. Address: Chesils, Christ Church Road, Hampstead, N.W.

HOSKINS, Admiral Sir Anthony Hiley, G.C.B., son of the late Rev. Henry Hoskins, was born in 1828. He was educated at Winchester, and entered the

NAVY in 1842. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1843, Commander in 1850, and Captain in 1856. As a Midshipman in H.M.S. Porpoise he was present at the operations off Madagascar and in the Mauritius Channel in 1845 and 1847. During the Kaffir War of 1850-52 he was a Lieutenant of H.M.S. Amot, and acted as Naval Aide to General Sir Harry Smith, being several times mentioned in despatches. He went to China in 1857 as Commander of H.M.S. Saney, and was present at the capture of Canton and the Taku Forts as Commodore. Sir Anthony Hosmer had command of the Australian station between 1871 and 1874, when he was promoted to C.B. He held the appointment of Aide-de-Camp to the Queen for three years before his promotion to flag-rank in 1875. As a Rear-Admiral he was employed on special service in Egypt during the war of 1882 and was awarded a K.C.B. and the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. Upon his return to England he was appointed Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves. In 1888 he went to the Mediterranean as Commander-in-Chief, and while on that station was presented with the Medal of the first class by the Sultan of Turkey. Sir Anthony has been three times a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, and received a G.C.B. as a special reward for distinguished service upon his retirement from the active list in November 1894. He has also served upon several of the committees appointed by the Admiralty to inquire into service matters, and was the recipient of a good-service pension in 1890. HOSMER, Harriet, born at Watertown, Massachusetts, Oct. 8, 1831, was educated at Lenox, Massachusetts, and early displayed a taste for art. She received a few lessons in modelling in Boston, and then entered a medical College in St. Louis to study anatomy and dissection. Her first work in marble was a reduced copy of Canova's bust of Napoleon, which was soon followed by an ideal work, "Hesper, or the Evening Star." In 1852 she went to Rome, and became a pupil of Gibson. After two years of study and modelling from the antique, she produced the busts of "Daphne" and "Medusa." Her first full-length figure in marble was Onona, completed in 1855, and this was followed in the same year by "Puck," of which many copies have been made. Next came a companion piece, "Will-o'-the-Wisp." Her reclining statue of "Beatrice Cenci" was completed and exhibited in 1857. A colossal statue of "Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra," a half-next important work, like "Sleeping" and the "Will-o'-the-Wisp," is a design of a memorial to Abraham Lincoln. Besides sculpture, Miss Hosmer is talented for designing steam machinery and devising plans, especially in connection with such as a method of boring Italian limestone into pipes, which she resided for many years in Italy, and made occasional visits to the United States.

HOTHAM, Admiral Sir Frederick, K.C.B., and C.B., at the Nore, is the son of Captain John Hotham, R.N., and nephew of the Barons Hotham. In 1862 he became a member of the Executive Council of Canada, in 1862 to 1863 he served as Minister of Finance; 1863-64 as Receiver-General, and 1864-66 as Postmaster-General. He succeeded the Hon. A. A. McArthur as Minister of Finance, and on the 1st of the first Dominion Government, following year, he accepted the office of Minister of Inland Revenue.

a Member of the Privy Council. position he resigned in 1868 on leaving the Lieut.-Governorship of India, held by him till 1873. He was elected a C.B. in 1867, and a K.C.M.G. in 1873. He lives at Toronto.

HOWORTH, Sir Henry Hoyle, Esq., M.P., Vice-President of the Society of Antiquaries, Corr. Member of the Royal Academy of Lisbon and of the Ethnographical Society and Anthropological Society of Italy, Hon. D.C.L., F.R.S., F.G.S., &c., is the son of the late Henry Howorth, of Lisbon, merchant, and born in Lisbon, July 1, 1842, educated at the Merchant School, and called to the bar at the Inner Temple, June 11, 1867. He has devoted himself chiefly to literature and science, and is the author of a large work, "History of the Mongols," of which 11 volumes are published, and which is in progress; a "History of Ching-han and his Ancestors," based upon a very new chronicle of the race found in the Peking Library (this work has been included in a series of over 30 chapters in Indian Antiquary); of a considerable amount of work entitled "The Mammoth and the Flood," discussing the problems connected with the destruction of so-called glacial man and his contemporaries; and a second work entitled "The Glacial Period and the Flood," in which the results of the more extravagant glacialists are attacked, and the effects which they assign to ice are attributed to water.

These two works, which have been abundantly reviewed in the Quarterly Review and elsewhere, involve a radical attack upon the current theories of glaciality. Sir Henry Howorth has also published a work on the "History of the Glaciation of Rochdale," for the Chetham Society. In addition he has written more than twenty scientific memoirs, chiefly on geological, ethnographical, and historical subjects. Among these are several series of papers on the Westerly Drifting of the Glaciers, on the Early Ethnography of Europe, on the Spread of the Slavs, in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute; a series of papers on the Northern Frontiers of Europe, in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a series on the Early Expedition of the Scandinavians, in the Journal of the Royal Historical Society. He has also published memoirs to the International Congress of Orientalists, to the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, the Archæological Magazine, the Journal of the Numismatic Society, the Quarterly Review, and other reviews; and has published numerous letters to the Times, Illustrated London News, &c., on political and social subjects. He is a magistrate for Lancashire; and for more than twenty years he has been actively interested in Lancashire politics. He is a trustee of Owens College and a Feoffee of Chetham's College and Library. In 1894 he was appointed President of the Archaeological Institute, and in May 1899 was appointed Trustee of the British Museum in place of the late Mr. Drury Fortnum. Sir Henry Howorth was elected a Conservative member for South Salford at the general election of 1886, and again in 1893. In recognition of his works upon Eastern history, &c., he was created a K.C.I.E. in 1892, and a F.R.S. in 1893. In 1869 he married the eldest daughter of the late J. P. Brierley. Addresses: 30 Colingham Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

HOWSE, Henry Greenway, M.B., F.R.C.S., received his medical education at Guy's Hospital, London, and graduated M.B. at the University of London, where he was Surgical Scholar and Exhibitioner in Physiology and Biology. He is Senior Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery at Guy's, Consulting Surgeon at Evelina Hospital, Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., and Member of Council, and lately Vice-President of the Royal College of Surgeons (Eng.), and has been Examiner in Surgery and in Anatomy at the University of London. He has contributed important articles to Heath's "Dictionary of Practical Surgery," 1886, to Stevenson and Murphy's "Treatise on Hygiene," to the Med. Chir. Transactions, "Guy's Hospital Reports," the Transactions of the Pathological Society, and other leading medical journals. Address: 59 Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

HOWTH, Earl of, William Ulick Tristram St. Lawrence, K.P., was born on June 25, 1827, and succeeded his father as 4th Earl in 1874. He was educated at Eton, and then entered the army, from which he retired, as Captain of the 7th Hussars, in 1850. He acted as State Steward to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland from 1855 to 1858, and from 1859 to 1866; and he sat in the House of Commons as Liberal Member for the borough of Galway from 1868 to 1874. Addresses: 55 Jermyn Street, S.W.; and Howth Castle, co. Dublin.

HUBBARD, The Hon. Evelyn, M.P., was born in London on March 18, 1852, and is the youngest son of the 1st Baron Addington, and Maria Margaret, eldest daughter of the 8th Baron Napier, of Merchiston. He was educated at Radley, and at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he took a second class in Classical Moderations in 1872, and a second in History in 1874, and graduated B.A. in 1874; M.A. 1878. He engaged in business in Russia in 1875, and is a member of the firm of Russia merchants, Messrs. Hubbard & Co., of St. Helen's Place, London, and of Egerton, Hubbard & Co., of St. Petersburg. He is a Director of the Bank of England, a Commissioner of Public Works Loans, a D.L. for the City of London, and in 1895 was elected an Alderman of the London County Council, an office which he resigned in March 1898. As a Conservative he contested North Bucks twice, in 1889 and 1891, and Plymouth in 1895, when, in company of Sir Edward Clarke, he was beaten by only 26 votes. He was returned for Brixton West at a bye-election in January 1896. He married in 1881 Evelyn Maude, youngest daughter of Wyndham Spencer Portal, of Malshanger, Hants. Addresses: 38 Lennox Gardens, S.W.; The Rookery, Downe, Kent.

HUBBARD, N. W., Alderman of the London County Council, was born at Brixton, Surrey, on September 29, 1846, his parents being in a humble position. He received but little education in a local school, and having lost his father very early in life, he went out to work at the age of nine years. Mr. Hubbard very early began to take interest in public affairs, at first devoting his efforts chiefly to social and temperance reform. In the year 1881 he was elected a member of the Lambeth Vestry, and he has continued to be a member up to the present time. Chiefly through his untiring efforts, baths and wash-houses were established in Lambeth in 1897, and were opened on the 9th July by the Prince of Wales, Mr. Hubbard presiding at the opening ceremony. When the London County Council came into existence in 1889, Mr. Hubbard was elected a member for the Norwood Division of Lambeth, and was again re-elected in 1892. At the elections in 1895, however, he lost his seat, but the Progressive party, knowing his worth, and being desirous of retaining his services, made him an Alderman, which position he still occupies. He has been Chairman of the Fire Brigade Committee, the Highways Committee, and Vice-Chairman of several other committees, and is at the present time Chairman of the Asylums Committee. In connection with his temperance work, Mr. Hubbard is a prominent member of the Independent Order of Good Templars, and for four years occupied the position of Grand Counsellor of the Grand Lodge of England. For the last thirty years Mr. Hubbard has been a successful merchant, whilst in addition he is Chairman of the British Homes Assurance Corporation, Limited, 25 Great Winchester

Street, E.C., an institution for the purpose of enabling persons to be the owners of their own homes. Hubbard has several times been asked to contest a parliamentary seat, but at the present has not accepted of the proffered quests. Address: 39 Shakespeare Lane, Herne Hill, S.E.

HUDLESTON, Wilfrid E. F.R.S., J.P., is the son of John E. of Knaresborough, M.D., who in 1867 assumed by royal license the name of Hudleston, in right of his wife, heiress of line of the Huddesbroughs of Cumberland. He was born on June 2, 1828, and educated at York University, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1850. During the period between 1850 and 1860 he travelled in Lapland, Greece, Turkey, and other countries. He is an ornithologist, and contributed to the earlier numbers of the Ibis. In the years he has paid much attention to the study of geology, and has written numerous papers, reviews, and addresses which have appeared in the Proceedings of the Geological Society, the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Mineralogical Magazine, and the Palaeontographical Society, and in other publications. He is a President of the Geological Society, of the Mineralogical Society, of the Naturalists' Society, and of the Naturalists' Union. He was elected a member (1889-90) of the Devonshire Association for the Advancement of Literature, and Art, and in 1891 President of the Geological Society of London, of which he had previously been Secretary. In 1897 Mr. Hudleston was awarded the Wollaston Gold Medal by the Council of the Geological Society. Address: 8 Stanhope Gardens, S.W.

HUDSON, Charles Thomas LL.D. Cantab., F.R.S., son of Corrie Hudson, Esq., of Gillingham, born at Brompton, London, on June 1, 1828, and was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1848, and at Warrington in 1852. He was elected a member of the Royal Microscopical Society in 1889, and elected a member of the Royal Society in 1889. He is the author with Mr. P. H. Goss of the book "Hudson and Grosse's 'Rotifera,' the discoverer of Pedalion in numerous new genera and species, described in papers published in the Quarterly Journal of Microscopy and the Annals and Magazine

HUGGINS, Sir William, K.C.B., Hon. F.R.S.E., D.C.L. Oxon., Cantab., Edin., Dublin, and St. vs, Ph.D. Leyden, was born in , Feb. 7, 1824, and received his education at the City of London . He afterwards continued his in mathematics, classics, and languages with the assistance of masters. Much of his time was to experiments in natural philo- and he collected apparatus by the which he gained considerable prac- knowledge of the elements of chemis- lectricity, magnetism, and other es of physical science. In 1852 he lected a member of the Micro- ol Society, and for some years he d himself with much assiduity, with l of the microscope, to the study of and vegetable physiology. In 1855 liam Huggins erected an observa- ; his residence at Upper Tulse Hill, occupied himself for some time with ations of double stars, and with l drawings of the planets Mars, r, and Saturn. From the first establishment of his observatory it was his desire not to continue in the beaten track of astronomical observation, but, if possible, to bring to bear upon the science of astro- nomy the practical knowledge which he had obtained of general physics. For his important discoveries and researches by means of the spectroscope applied to the heavenly bodies, Sir William Huggins received, in November 1866, one of the Royal Medals placed at the disposal of the Royal Society, of which he had previously, on June 1, 1865, been elected a Fellow. In 1867 the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society was awarded to Sir William Huggins and Dr. Miller for their conjoint researches. Sir William Huggins has since continued his prismatic re- searches by a re-examination of the nebulae with a more powerful spectroscope, by which his former results have been con- firmed. He has also examined the spectra of various comets, and has found that the greater part of the light of these objects is different from solar light. Sir William Huggins has made observations of the spectra of the solar prominences, and devised the method by which the forms of these objects may be seen. From 1875 he has been engaged in obtaining photographs of the ultra-violet portions (invisible to eye observation) of the spectra of the stars. This difficult research has led to important results, and has opened quite a new field of work to the astronomer; it furnishes one of the chief data which we at present have as to the probable relative ages of the stars and of the sun. Sir William has extended this method of research to the planets, to comets, to the Great Nebula in Orion and to other nebulae; new results of importance being obtained. For these newer researches, and for that on the motion of stars in the line of sight, Sir William Huggins a second time received a medal from the Royal Society, the Rum- ford Medal being conferred upon him in 1880; also a Prix Valtz (1883) from the Institute of France; and the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society for the second time (1885). The research on the motions of the stars in the line of sight was indeed a new departure of the utmost importance in astronomical physics. It has since been followed up at Greenwich, and at Potsdam and Harvard, by means of photography. Besides revealing to us the orbits of many stars, and otherwise undetectable companion stars, the study of line of sight motions must certainly widely increase our knowledge of the general laws and arrangements of the stellar universe. The work of the Tulse Hill Observatory continues to be actively carried on. Some of the latest investiga- tions (still in progress) include researches on the evolution of double stars ; on the correlations of the ultra-violet spectra of stars, and those of nebulae ; while in the Physical Laboratories attached to the Observatory researches have recently been made on the spectrum of Calcium which have important bearings on the problems of solar and stellar physics ; and other chemical researches are in hand. An autobiographical article giving a useful account of Sir William Huggins's early work, which laid the foundations of Astrophysics in this country, was published in the Nineteenth Century for June 1897, under the title "The New Astronomy." Sir William Huggins delivered the Rede Lecture at the University of Cambridge in 1869, when he gave an account of his researches in astronomy by means of the spectroscope. In May 1870 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge, and at the Commemoration at Oxford the same year, the degree of D.C.L. On the occasion of the meeting of the British Association at Edinburgh in 1871, he was created honorary LL.D. of that university. A large duplex telescope by Messrs. Grubb, of Dublin, consisting of an achromatic of fifteen inches, and of a reflector of eighteen inches, constructed at the expense of the Royal Society, was placed in Sir William Huggins's hands, and fixed in the observatory erected by him at Upper Tulse Hill. In July 1872 he was elected a Foreign Member of the ancient University, Dei Lincei, in Rome. In the October of the same year the Academy of Sciences of Paris awarded the Lalande Prize for Astronomy to Sir William Huggins, as an acknowledgment of his researches in the physical constitution of the stars, planets, comets, and nebulae. The late Emperor of Brazil, who has twice paid long visits to Sir William Huggins's observatory, honoured him with the distinction of Commander of the Order of the Rose in March 1873. About the same time he was elected a Foreign Member of the Royal Society of Denmark, and also of the Philosophical Society of Lund. In January 1874 he received the honour of being elected a Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences of Paris. At the tercentenary commemoration of the University of Leyden, in 1875, Sir William Huggins received the honorary degree of Doctor of Physics and Mathematics. In 1877 he was elected a Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Göttingen, and a member of the Royal Society of Bohemia. In 1886 he received the degree of LL.D., honoris causa, from Trinity College, Dublin ; in 1888 the Prix Janssen from the Institute of France ; and in 1897 the Wilde Medal from the Lit. and Phil. Society of Manchester. He is also an Hon. Fellow of the R. of New South Wales ; an Hon. Member of the American Acad. and Sciences, Boston ; and a various other learned Societies and abroad. Sir William H. HUGHES, Professor D ward, F.R.S., was born in l May 16, 1831 ; his parents. emigrated to the United States. in 1850 (on account of his gre talents), appointed Professor of the College of Bardstow in where he had received his. His equal talents for physica and mechanics later on procur appointment to the Chair o Philosophy at the same College. great invention was that of t telegraph which bears his name. Professor Hughes went to Lc superintend the making of his l ment, but the patent for it wa out in the United States unti that year the invention became success, and no sooner was tl than Professor Hughes received from the editors of the America Press summoning him to New American Telegraph Compan in possession of the Morse inst levied rates for transmission felt to be excessive. The H writer was therefore taken u tion to the Morse. A company and the lines of several sma were leased. In 1857 these : panies united to form one large —the present Western Unio Company. In that year Profe came to England in order introduction here, but the E rities metaphorically threw c his invention, and he could time, persuade the telegrap here even to try it ; so, after fruitless efforts, he went to F the French Imperial Govern put the instrument in practi experiment between Lyons an the end of that trial a provisio was made with Professor Hu right to the use of the instr the French lines ; stipulatio

Experimental trials should be continued extended between Marseilles, Lyons, and Bordeaux for twelve months, during which a committee of the highest scientific experts should watch and report on the results obtained. The report of the committee being highly favourable, the French Government, in 1861, adopted the Hughes instrument for all their important lines. The Emperor Napoleon III. took great interest in the invention, and he sent for Professor Hughes in order to consult him privately upon several of Majesty's own electrical inventions. Professor Hughes was nominated, in 1862, Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur, and he was a member of the Telegraph Commission de Perfectionnements. In the year capacity he undertook, in conjunction with Professor Guillemin, at the request of the Government, a series of experiments upon the comparative value of the lightning protectors then in use. The experiments were made at the Laboratory of the École de St. Cyr, and the subject of memoirs published in the Comptes rendus of the Academy of Sciences. At the end of the year 1862, the Italian Government invited Professor Hughes to visit Italy, and instruct their officers in the use of his instrument.

When this was done, and the instrument was used probationally for six months between Florence, Genoa, and Turin, at the end of which time the Hughes system was adopted for all their important lines. In 1863 the United Kingdom Telegraph Company of England adopted the Hughes instrument for their lines. In 1864, Professor Hughes was invited by the Russian Government to visit St. Petersburg, where he remained nine months, during which he had the honour of being a guest of the Emperor in the Summer Palace of Tsarskoezelo, where he was requested to demonstrate his invention, and also to give a lecture on electricity to the Czar and his suite. His instrument was adopted for long Russian telegraph lines, and he was made a Knight of the Order of St. Vladimir.

Between 1864 and 1876 Professor Hughes was called successively to Germany, Austria, Turkey, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, and Spain, where his telegraph system met with the same thorough approval. In 1878 Professor Hughes announced through a paper to the Royal Society his discovery of the microphone. His instrument not only transmits speech, but magnifies the smallest sound, so that it is easy to render audible the faintest sound, such as the walk of a fly. The microphone is now universally employed as a transmitter to the telephone. In 1880 he presented to the Royal Society his invention of the Induction Balance, now well known to the scientific world. In 1880 Professor Hughes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and he has since read numerous papers upon electricity and magnetism before that Society, for which, together with his discovery of the microphone and invention of the Induction Balance, the Royal Society, in 1885, bestowed upon him their Royal Gold Medal, and in 1897 the Prince of Wales, as Chairman of the Society of Arts, presented to him, in the name of the Society, and in presence of the Council at Marlborough House, their Gold Albert Medal, "in recognition of the services he has rendered to arts, manufactures, and commerce by his numerous inventions in electricity and magnetism, especially the Printing Telegraph and the Microphone." The Post Office in England now makes use of the Hughes system for all its Continental messages, and it is in active service in all the large cities of the Continent. In 1881 Professor Hughes represented Great Britain as one of the Commissioners at the Paris Electrical Exhibition; and in 1886 he was elected President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. He has received numerous orders of knighthood, medals, and diplomas from the different countries which have appreciated his works. Professor Hughes is Commander of the Légion d'Honneur (France); Charles III. (Spain); Iron Crown (Austria); Medjidieh (Turkey); and Knight of St. Anne (Russia); St. Maurice and St. Lazarus (Italy); St. Michael's (Bavaria); Grand Officer of the Royal Order of Takovo (Serbia); Officer of the Royal Order of Leopold (Belgium); and he received the special Gold Grand Prix (one of ten only), Paris Exhibition, 1867, as well as the Grand Diplôme d'Honneur, Paris Electrical Exhibition, 1881; besides numerous other medals and titles of less importance. Address: 40 Langham Street, Portland Place, W.

HUGHES, Colonel Edwin, M.P., L.C.C., V.D., was born at Droitwich, Worcestershire, May 27, 1832, and educated at the Grammar School, Birmingham. In 1862 he was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Plumstead Artillery Volunteers, and became a prize-winner at many county and Wimbledon competitions. In 1865, Mr. Hughes was appointed chief county Conservative agent, and was successful in gaining enough on one revision to win six seats, which have ever since been kept by the Conservatives. In 1874 he was transferred to the City of London Conservative Association, and increased the Conservative majority by thousands, so that in 1880 they polled two to one, and in 1885 four to one. Glasgow on the occasion of the installation of the late Duke of Buccleuch as Chan-

 in Prof. Hull's life was his visit to Arabia Petrea and Palestine towards the close of 1883. On the recommendation of Colonel (now Major-General) Sir Charles Wilson, R.E., he was nominated by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Society to take the command of an expedition organised for making a geological and topographical survey of the Arabah Valley and adjoining territories between the Sinaitic Peninsula on the south and Southern Palestine on the north. In that expedition he was accompanied by Colonel Kitchener, R.E. (now the famous Sirdar of the Egyptian Army), Mr. H. C. Hart, his son Dr. E. G. Hull, and several assistants;
 and in November of the above-named year (1883), the party, with an escort of twenty-nine camels and their drivers, left Suez, and traversed the Sinaitic Peninsula, the Arabah Valley from Akabah to the Dead Sea, visiting Mount Hor and Petra, and thence across Southern Palestine to Gaza by Beersheba; the period occupied being about three months. By this expedition the surveys of Sinai and Palestine were connected, and the geological phenomena mapped and described. Collections of plants and animals were made by Mr.
 Hart, and meteorological observations were carried out daily by Mr. Reginald Laurence. The narrative of the expedition was drawn up and published by the Palestine Exploration Committee, under the title of "Mount Seir, Sinai, and Southern Palestine"; and the geological details are contained in the memoir, "On the Physical Geography and Geology of Arabia Petrea,
 &c.," 1886. In 1893 Prof. Hull visited Egypt and the Nile Valley as far as the First Cataract, for the purpose of examining the evidence regarding the former magnitude of that river as compared with that of the present day; and arrived at the conclusion that in the Pleistocene (or Glacial) epoch its volume was vastly greater than at present. The evidence for this conclusion was laid before the Geological Society of London. At the annual meeting of the Geological Society of London, in 1890, the Murchison Medal was presented to Prof. Hull in consideration of his services to Geology. Prof. Hull is the author of several works and scientific memoirs, of which the following are the more important: "The Coal-fields of Great Britain: their History, Structure, and Resources," 1865, 4th edit., 1881; "A Treatise on the Building and Ornamental Stones of Great Britain and Foreign Countries," 1872; "Contributions to the Physical History of the British Isles," 1882; "Sketch of Geological History,"

1887; "A Text-Book of Physiography or Physical Geography," 1888; "The Physical Geology and Geography of Ireland," 1878; "Mount Seir, Sinai, and Southern Palestine," 1885; "Memoir on the Physical Geology and Geography of Arabia Petrea, Palestine, and adjoining Districts," 1886; "Our Coal Resources at the Close of the Nineteenth Century," 1897; also several memoirs of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and papers in the Transactions of learned and scientific societies. Prof. Hull is an Honorary Member of the Geological Societies of Belgium, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Manchester; and of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, and of the Academy of Science, Philadelphia. On the completion of the Geological Survey of Ireland in 1890, Prof. Hull retired from the public service. Address: 20 Arundel Gardens, W.

HUMBERT I., Rénier-Charles-Emmanuel-Jean-Marie-Ferdinand-Eugène, King of Italy, the eldest son of the late King Victor Emmanuel II., and of Adélaïde, Archduchess of Austria, was born at Turin, March 14, 1844. At an early age he obtained an insight into political and military life under the guidance of his father, whom he attended during the war of Italian Independence, although he was then too young to take an active part in the struggle. The youthful heir to the throne was more closely connected with the movement for the unification of Italy, which followed the events of 1859. In particular he took part in the work of reorganising the ancient kingdom of the Two Sicilies; and in July 1862 he visited Naples and Palermo, where he shared the popularity of Garibaldi. When the war between Prussia and Austria was imminent, Prince Humbert was despatched to Paris to ascertain the sentiments of the French Government in reference to the alliance between Italy and Prussia. On the outbreak of hostilities he hastened to take the field; obtained the command of a division of General Cialdini's army with the title of Lieutenant-General; and was present at the disastrous battle of Custoza (June 23, 1866), where it is said he performed prodigies of valour. On April 22, 1868, he married, at Turin, his cousin, the Princess Marguerite Marie Thérèse Jeanne of Savoy, daughter of the late Duke Ferdinand of Genoa, brother of King Victor Emmanuel. The Queen is a most accomplished lady, an artist, and a mountaineer of courage and endurance. A son was born at Naples, Nov. 11, 1869, who received the names of Victor Emmanuel Ferdinand Mary Januarius, and the title of Prince of Naples.

After the occupation of Rome by Italian troops in 1870, Prince Humbert and the Princess Marguerite took residence in the Eternal City. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Jan. 9, 1878. As he was at Naples, Nov. 17, 1878, a man named Passanante approached the Royal carriage and attempted with a poniard to assassinate his Majesty. The King escaped a slight scratch, but Signor Crispien, Prime Minister, who was with him, was wounded rather badly in the chest. Passanante was condemned to death, but the punishment was commuted to life imprisonment. King Humbert received the Order of the Quirinal, March 2, 1878. He is Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle, and of the Austrian Order of the Golden Fleece, &c. King Humbert and Marguerite celebrated their silver wedding at Rome in April 1893. His eldest son, Crown Prince Victor Emmanuel, born at Naples, was married in Oct. 1880 to the Princess Helen of Montenegro. An attempt upon the King's life in 1882 happily failed. There had been much talk as to the unpopularity of the King, and this event was almost regarded as confirmation of such reports. As he was driving out on April 22 to the Velocipede Racecourse, a workman struck him with a dagger. The blow was not serious, but the man was seized, and was eventually sent to penal servitude for life.

HUMPHREY, The Rev. Wm. S.J., son of John Humphrey, Esq., of Pitmedden, Aberdeenshire, was born at Aberdeen, July 31, 1839. He was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and was a member of the General Council of the University of Aberdeen. He studied at the University of Edinburgh; was a clergyman of the Church of England; Dr. Forbes, Bishop of Brechin, made him the living of St. Mary Magdalene, Aberdeen. He became a Roman Catholic in 1868, and went to Rome, where he pursued his theological studies at the Gregorian University. He was ordained priest in 1871, and became a Cardinal in 1874. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1874. Humphrey is the author of "The Teacher," 7th edit.; "Mary Mother of God," 7th edit.; "The Written Word," "Other Gospels"; "Mr. Stephen and Cardinal Bellarmine on the Religious State"; "The Bible and the Christian Marriage"; "The Mediator," 2nd edit.; "The Christ"; "Elements of Religion"; "Conscience and Law, or Princonduct"; "Recollections of Disciparianism"; "His Divine"; "The Living God"; and has to the "Catholic Academia" fourth. Address: 114 Mount Vernon Square, W.

For two years he served as Major in his regiment, and was promoted to Major in August 1882, Major in and Colonel in January 1894. In the Nile Expedition, was in despatches and was awarded the third class and the fourth class. In 1885 he served with the Egyptian Frontier Force. During 1889 he served on the Egyptian Frontier Force.

Frontier in command of a the Egyptian Army and took engagements at Arguin and was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel. In 1892 Colonel Hunter was appointed Governor of the Red Sea Littoral at Suakin, and afterwards of the Egyptian Frontier. In 1896 he served with a Expeditionary Force under Kitchener in command of the brigade, being present at the Battle of Firket and the operations at were mentioned in despatches, and promoted to Major-General for distinguished service in the field. In March of 1898 General Hunter made a reconnaissance of the enemy's position at Atbara, and shortly after the brilliant action was fought in which 3000 dervishes were slain and 4000 taken prisoners. General Hunter was second in command on that occasion. He was appointed Governor of Omdurman on the settlement of affairs after the battle. Address: Highthorn, West Kilbride, Ayrshire.

HUNTER, Colin, A.R.A., was born in Glasgow, July 16, 1841, and is the son of John Hunter, bookseller and postmaster, of Helensburgh. He was educated in that town, and began painting at twenty years of age, after four years' clerkship. His education as a painter was derived from nature. His principal pictures are "Trawlers Waiting for Darkness," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1873; "Salmon Stake Nets" (R.A.), 1874, now in the Sydney Government collection; "Give Way" (R.A.), 1875; "Digging Bait" (R.A.), 1876; "Their Only Harvest" (R.A.), 1878, now the property of the Chantry Bequest Trustees; "Silver of the Sea" (R.A.), 1879; "Mussel Gatherers," and "In the Gloaming" (R.A.), 1880; "The Island Harvest" (Fine Art Society's Rooms), 1881; "Waiting for the Homeward Bound" (R.A.), 1882, now in the Adelaide collection; "A Pebbled Shore" and "Lobster Fishers" (R.A.), 1883; "Herring Market at Sea" (R.A.), 1884, now in Manchester Corporation collection; "The Rapids of Niagara" (R.A.), 1885; "The Woman's Part" (R.A.), 1886; "Their Share of the Toil" (R.A.), 1887; "Fishers of the North Sea" (R.A.), 1888; "Baiters" (R.A.), 1889; "The Hills of Morven" (R.A.), 1890; and, more recently, "Ireland" and "Lobster Fishers," 1893; and "The Gleanings of the Herring Harvest," and "Wintry Weather," 1894. Since 1895 he has exhibited some eighteen pictures of wild life at the Royal Academy's Exhibition. Mr. Hunter was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in January 1884, and is also a Member of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society. He married, in 1873, Isabel, daughter of John H. Young, of Glasgow. Address: 14 Melbury Road, Kensington, W.

HUNTER, Sir William Guyer, K.C.M.G., M.D., F.R.C.P., eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Hunter, of Catterick, Yorkshire, was born in 1831, and educated at King's College, London, at Aberdeen University, and at various hospitals. He entered the Indian Medical Service, Bombay Presidency, in 1850, and served through the Burmese War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1876 he was appointed Princial of the Grant Medical College; and in 1879 Vice-Chancellor of the University of Bombay. He retired in 1880, and in 1883 went out to Egypt to serve on the Cholera Commission. For his services on this occasion he was made a K.C.M.G. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Conservative member for Central Hackney, and was again returned for the same constituency in 1886, retaining the seat until 1892. He married (2), in 1871, a daughter of S. Stainburn. Address: 21 Norfolk Crescent, W.

HUNTER, Sir William Wilson, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., M.A. Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Cambridge and Glasgow, son of the late A. Galloway Hunter, Esq., of Denholm, was born July 15, 1840, and educated at the universities of Glasgow, Paris, and Bonn. He headed the list of Indian civilians appointed in 1862; and after distinguishing himself in Calcutta by proficiency in Sanskrit and the modern vernaculars in India, passed through the appointments of a junior civil servant in the Bengal districts. On the outbreak of the Orissa Famine of 1866, he was appointed Inspector of Public Instruction in the province of Orissa and the south-western division of Bengal. At the end of the dearth he received the thanks of the Government, but was invalided to England. When on sick leave Sir William Hunter wrote "The Annals of Rural Bengal," which in the next ten years passed through five editions; and a "Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia." On his return to Bengal, he received the gazetted acknowledgments of the Governor-General and the Secretary of State; together with a present of Rs. 20,000 of public money, also notified in the Government Gazette, for his services. In 1869 he was attached on special duty to the Secretariat of the Government of Bengal; in 1870 to that of the Supreme Government of India, acting for a time as Under-Secretary; in 1871 he was appointed Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India. As the head of this Department he organised, and carried out from beginning to end, the Statistical Survey of India. The first census of India was taken in 1872. In 1876 he issued the "Statistical Account of Bengal" in twenty volumes. For the other eleven provinces of India a statistical survey was executed under his direction in each district of an area "equal to all Europe less Russia." Sir William Hunter again received the gazetted thanks of the Government. His labours had done much to throw light on the causes and management of famines, and to bring them within administrative control. In 1878 he was appointed in the first list of the new Order of the Indian Empire. In 1880 the Statistical Survey of India had been brought to completion in six volumes, and its records had been made available to the public in nine volumes. In 1881 he issued a continuation of this vast work, alphabetically arranged in the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" in nine volumes. In the same year he was appointed a Member of the Legislative Council, and in 1882 of the Education Commission. As a Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Sir William Hunter took part in the important series of resolutions which issued from the Indian Legislative Council between 1881 and 1887, especially affecting the Land Law, and the Rights of Cultivators. As President of the Indian Education Commission he was largely instrumental in consolidating public instruction in India on a new basis. The results of these labours have been briefly but accurately described in the development of the Department of Public Instruction in India into a national system of education for the country. For these services he again received the gazetted thanks of the Government and was appointed a Companion of the Star of India. In 1884 Sir William Hunter was deputed to England, by the Governor-General in Council, to give evidence to the Parliamentary Committee on the economic aspects of Indian railway development. In 1886, in addition to his duties in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, the Government appointed him to the Public Accounts Commission, to conduct a searching inquiry into Indian expenditure, and to report on the financial relations of the Provincial Governments to the Supreme Government of India. Among the honours conferred on Sir William Hunter during the course of his Indian career was the title of the Vice-Chancellorship of the University of Calcutta. In 1887 he was appointed Knight Commander of the Star of India, and having completed his twenty-first year of service, he retired from that office. On his return to England he brought out the expanded edition of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" in fourteen volumes. Since then he has been a consistent and powerful advocate of moderate reform in India. As an examiner and lecturer in the Honours School of the University of Oxford, and as a member of the Faculty of Arts, he has taken an active part in the university life of Oxford. He has also impelled the University Press to publish a series of short histories and biographies, now well known as "The Rulers of India." Of this series Sir William Hunter was the projector and editor, and of its lumes three are from his hand. William Hunter has received honorary degrees from the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Glasgow; and is an honorary member of many learned societies in Europe and Asia. He is an active sportsman and J.P. for Berkshire and Hampshire, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of Hampshire county. His best-known books are "Annals of Rural Bengal," "Orissa, an Indian Province under Native Rule," "The Indian Mussulmans," "A History of Famine Warnings," "A History of Lord Mayo," 2 vols.; a shorter history of the same in one volume, "The Life and Work of the Marquess of Dalhousie," "A Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia," "The Indian Gazetteer of India," 14 vols.; "The Indian Empire, its History, People, Products," which condenses into one volume, for popular use, the main results of the Statistical Survey of India. His "History of the Indian Peoples" has been translated into five languages, and its English editions have reached five thousand copies. Among his recent works are "The Old Missions," "The Thackerays in India," and "The Life of Brian Hodgson." In March 1897 he published vol. i. of an important history of British India. Sir William married the daughter of the late Thomas Murray, M.A., LL.D., J.P., author of "The Literary History of England," and other antiquarian works. Residence: Oaken Holt, Cumnor, Berkshire; 128 Piccadilly; and Athenæum.

HUNT-GRUBBE, Admiral Sir James, K.C.B., son of the late Admiral Hunt-Grubbe, was born in London and entered the navy in 1844. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1854, serving in Scourge on the West Coast of Africa, took part in the bombardment of the fort of Pessie and Labadie, and was subsequently landed for the instruction of the Coast Artillery. In 1855 he was ordered to command H.M.S. Teazer for suppression of the slave-trade on the Coast of Africa, and a few years afterwards commanded H.M.S. Jaseur on the same station for a similar purpose. As Lieutenant of H.M.S. Arrogant he took part in the operations on the river Niger in 1861, and also the capture of the fortified town of Saba. He was promoted in despatches and promoted to Commander. In 1866 he was appointed Governor of the Island of Ascension. In the second phase of the Ashanti War in 1874 he commanded the Naval Force, taking part in all the fighting and the capture of Kumassi. He was wounded, mentioned in despatches, and promoted to C.B. As Captain of H.M.S. Sultan he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria, and being the Senior Captain of the Mediterranean Fleet at that time, he was appointed to command the offshore squadron in the attack on the forts, and for his services on that occasion he received a K.C.B. Sir Walter also had charge of the transports in the feint on Aboukir, and was constantly employed in watching the enemy's coasts until the close of the campaign. He was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1884, and the following year was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Cape and West Africa station. For three years he was Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, and also Umpire in the Naval Manœuvres of 1893 and 1894. He attained the rank of full Admiral in 1895, and was appointed President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, retiring from the active list in 1897. Admiral Sir Walter Hunt Grubbe has been an Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and is a J.P. for Hampshire. He married, in 1867, Mary Anne, daughter of William Codrington, Esq., of Wroughton, Wilts. Address: Royal Naval College, Greenwich.

HUNTINGTON, Daniel, LL.D., American artist, was born at New York, Oct. 14, 1816. He was prepared for College by Rev. Horace Bushnell at New Haven, and entered Hamilton College in 1832; and in 1835-36 was a pupil of S. F. B. Morse in the art department of the New York University. In 1836 he exhibited "The Toper Asleep," a "Bar-room Politician," and several landscapes. In 1839 he studied in Florence and Rome, where he painted "The Sacred Lesson" and "Christian Prisoners"; and, on his return to America, painted "Mercy's Dream" and "Christiana and her Children." In 1844 he again went to Rome, where he painted the "Roman Penitents," "Italy," "The Communion of the Sick," and several landscapes. In 1851 he visited England, where he painted the portraits of several distinguished personages, among them Sir Charles Eastlake (then President of the Royal Academy) and the Earl of Carlisle, now in the collection of the Historical Society. Among his later works, besides numerous portraits, are "Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham in the Tower," "Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine Parr," "Queen Mary Signing the Death-Warrant of Lady Jane Grey," "The Good Samaritan," "The Sketcher," "Ichabod Crane and Katrina van Tassel," "The Counterfeit Note," another "Mercy's Dream," "The Republican Court," a number of Shakespearean subjects, "Chocurna Peak," "Philosophy and Christian Art," "Sowing the Word," and "Titian and Charles V." In 1882 he visited Spain, and painted "The Goldsmith's Daughter," "The Doubtful Letter," as well as portraits. Since his return he has painted "A Burgomaster of New Amsterdam," and many portraits of distinguished people. He was one of the founders of the Century Club, of which he was President until 1895; and he is a Vice-President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He was President of the National Academy of Design, New York, from 1862 to 1891, with the exception of a few years.

HUNTINGTON, The Right Rev. Frederick Dan, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop of Central New York, was born at Hadley, Mass., May 28, 1819. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1839, studied divinity at Cambridge, and in 1842 became pastor of a Unitarian church in Boston. In 1855 he was elected preacher to Harvard University, and Plummer Professor of Christian Morals. In 1860 he withdrew from the Unitarian denomination, and was ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church. He organised a new parish, which he named Emmanuel Church. In 1861 he was one of the founders of the Church Monthly. In 1869 he was consecrated Bishop of Central New York, taking Syracuse for his Cathedral City. Among his publications are: "Sermons for the People," 1856; "Lessons on the Parables," 1856; "Christian Believing and Living," 1860; "Lectures on Human Society, as illustrating the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness of God" (Lowell Lectures), 1860; "Elim, or Hymns of Holy Refreshment," 1865; "Lessons for the Instruction of Children in the Divine Life," 1868; "Helps to a Holy Lent," 1872; "Steps to a Living Faith," 1873; "New Helps to a Holy Lent," 1876; "Personal Christian Life in the Ministry," 1887; "Forty Days with the Master," 1891; a Pamphlet on "Strikes," 1891; "The Golden Rule applied to Business and Social Life," 1892; besides other pamphlets, sermons, charges, and contributions to various periodicals. In 1883, by appointment, he wrote the Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops.

HUNTLY, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Charles Gordon, Bart., LL.D., J.P., was born at Orton-Longueville, Peterborough, on March 5, 1847, and succeeded his father as 11th Marquis in 1863. He is the premier Marquis of Scotland, acted as Lord-in-Waiting from 1870 to 1873, and was Captain of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms in 1881. Lord Huntly filled the position of Lord Rector of Aberdeen University in 1890, 1893, and again in 1896. He was in 1869, to Amy, daughter of Sir Cunliffe-Brooks, Bart., of Bolton, Lancashire. Address: Orton-Longueville, Peterborough, &c.

HURLBATT, Miss Ethel, F.C. of Bedford College, London, is a native of Kent, and was educated at private schools until 1884. In 1888 she entered Exeter College, Oxford, as an Exhibitor, and took a second class in the Honour School of Modern History. She remained in College until June 1890 for further historical work, and received a Special Scholarship given by the University of London to the members of the workers' Company. In 1892 she was appointed Principal of Aberdare Hall, a residence for women students of the University College of South Wales and Glamorgan, Cardiff. During the first year of her tenure of this office the number of students increased from 17 to 29, and permanent buildings were erected and occupied in January 1895. Miss Hurlbatt acted as Hon. Sec. for South Wales of the Association for the Promotion of Education of Girls in Wales. She served on the Committee of the Welsh School of Cookery and Domestic Science, Cardiff, and was a Governor of the Welsh School, Llandaff. For several years Miss Hurlbatt was employed temporarily during the Long Vacation upon the staff of Bodleian Library, Oxford, where she was employed in calendaring manuscripts. In February 1898, Miss Hurlbatt was appointed Principal of Bedford College (for Women), London. There can be no doubt that this College will have increasing importance in the future, and is recognised by the Cowper Commission (London University) as one of the best qualified for recognition as a "School" of the revised University of London. There are at present 180 students attending College (37 in residence), of whom 100 are preparing for examinations of the University of London, for which the College specially fits them.

HUTCHINS, Sir Philip, K.C.S.I., was born in London in 1838, and is the fifth son of Sir Philip Hutchins and Isabella, daughter of Thomas, sometime President of the College of Surgeons of England, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, London, and joined the Madras Cavalry in 1857. He was District Judge of Madras in 1872-82, and after having been called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, became a Judge of the High Court of Madras in 1883, and a member of the Council in 1886. rebels, and which ensured the of the former, and gained for Ignatieff and his family the l protection of Nicholas I. The of this notice had at the very out-is career the Emperor Alexander is godfather. He was educated and in the Corps des Pages, and,
g to custom, quitted that select ment for young aristocrats to ie Guard; and in the Military y, after three years' study, he was ed as staff officer. At the begin-the Crimean war he was ordered the staff of General Berg. He l at Riga the post of Quarter-general of the Baltic corps. He ssed from the military to the tic service, finding his point of transition in the military attachéship to the Embassy at London. His chief performance in this capacity was a report on England's military position in India, which so pleased the Emperor that he summoned Captain Ignatieff to Warsaw for a personal interview. In 1858 Ignatieff, now a colonel and aide-de-camp to the Emperor, was sent on a special mission to Khiva and Bokhara. He was afterwards made a major-general in the Imperial suite, and sent as a plenipotentiary to Peking, 1860, where he concluded a treaty by which the province of Ussuri was ceded by China to Russia. On his return to Russia he was made Director of the Asiatic Department in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In 1864 he was appointed Minister at Constantinople, where his legation was afterwards (1867) raised to the rank of an embassy. Apart from his rank as ambassador, he was a lieutenant-general, and general aide-de-camp to the Emperor.

The object which General Ignatieff steadily pursued at Constantinople was to secure for Russia a powerful influence over Turkey. He completely reassured the late Sultan Abdul Aziz as to the intentions of the Government of St. Petersburg, while on the other hand he gained the good-will of the Christian subjects of the Porte by his courteous behaviour and his simulated anxiety to protect them. In the negotiations between the various European Powers prior and subsequent to the war between Russia and Turkey, General Ignatieff took a very prominent part, and the treaty of San Stefano was mainly his work. He was recalled from the embassy at Constantinople, May 2, 1878, when Prince Lobanoff was sent there in his place. Afterwards he was appointed Minister of the Interior, from which post he was dismissed in June 1882, owing to disagreements with the pacific M. De Giers. He remained, however, a member of the Council of the Empire. He is a bitter enemy of the Nihilists.

INGRAM, The Right Rev. A. F. W. See WINNINGTON-INGRAM, A. F.

INGRAM, John H., was born in London, Nov. 16, 1849, and educated at Lyonsdown and City of London Colleges and by private tutors. He entered the General Post Office in 1868. In 1863 he published a small volume of verse, subsequently suppressed. This was followed, in 1868, by "Flora Symbolica," a work on the folk-lore of flowers, which has passed through numerous editions. In 1873 he began a series of articles in English and American periodicals, calling attention to misrepresentations about the life and character of Edgar Allan Poe; and in October 1874 embodied some of the results of his investigations in a short "Memoir of Poe," prefixed to a four-volume edition of the poet's works. This was followed in 1880 by an exhaustive two-volume biography of Edgar Allan Poe; new one-volume editions of which work have since been published, the latest in the Minerva Library of Famous Books, for which series Mr. Ingram edited and copiously annotated a new edition of Lockhart's "Life of Burns," 1890. In 1879, under the name of "Don Felix de Salamanca," he published "The Philosophy of Hand-writing," wherein the characters of several celebrated contemporaries were assumed to be portrayed by their calligraphy. In 1881 he published a volume of "Fairy Tales," translated from the Spanish of Fernan Caballero, and in 1882 a collection of historical sketches, styled "Claimants to Royalty." In the winter of 1883 he published a volume of historical ghost stories, entitled "The Haunted Homes of Great Britain," and in 1884 a second series of similar narratives. In the same year appeared his life of "Oliver Madox Brown," the young poet-painter, who died in 1874. In 1884 Mr. Ingram edited an illustrated édition de luxe of Edgar Poe's "Tales and Poems," in 4 vols., and a selection from Poe's works, in 2 vols., for the Tauchnitz collection. In 1885 he published a monograph on Poe's "Raven"; in 1887, a collection of Mrs. Browning's Poems, with Memoir, and in 1889 a variorum edition of Poe's "Poetical Works." He is editing a series of original biographical manuals, entitled the Eminent Women series, and wrote for it, in 1888, a Life of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. It is the only complete memoir of Mrs. Browning yet published, has gone through several editions, and has been adopted as a University text-book. In 1892 Mr. Ingram edited, with a biographical introduction, a reprint of George Darley's "Sylvia," and wrote various papers for Mr. Miles's "Poets and Poetry of the Nineteenth Century." He is a contributor to many of the leading reviews of Europe and America, and has occasionally lectured on behalf of educational institutions. Address: General Post Office, E.C.

INGRAM, John Kells, LL.D., Litt.D., born in the county of Donegal, Ireland, on July 7, 1823, and eldest son of the Rev. William Ingram, was educated at Newry School and Trinity College, Dublin. He was elected scholar of his College in 1840, and Fellow in 1846, Professor of Oratory and English Literature in 1852, Regius Professor of Greek in 1866, and Librarian in 1879. He is now Vice-Provost of Trinity College. He was President of the Statistical Section of the British Association in 1878, and in that capacity delivered an address on "The Present Position and Prospects of Political Economy," which attracted much attention at home and abroad, and was translated into German by the well-known economist, Dr. H. Von Scheel, and into Danish by A. Peterson. He also gave an address to the Trades Union Congress in 1880 on "Work and the Workman," of which a French translation appeared in the full work. He is the author of the article "Patriotism" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" (9th edit.), which has since been included in a separate volume. His work has been translated into French, Spanish, German, Swedish, Polish, Czech, and Japanese. He has also contributed to the same Encyclopædia the article "Slavery" (separately published additions, in 1895, and inserted into German) and many other notices, amongst which may be mentioned those of Quesnay, Turgot, Pitt, Smith, Ricardo, Arthur Young, and Leslie. He is author of "General Etymology in England," "Etymology of Liddell and Scott," and others, in Hermathena, a university journal, which he edited for some years. He has also edited "The Opus Majus" of Ramon Lull, "The First English translation of the Imitatione Christi," on "Metaphysical Tales," and other subjects. He has also published the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, a paper on "The Weak Endings of the English Language," in the Transactions of the Shakespeare Society, vol. 1, 1881, on Shakespeare and Tennison's "Lectures on Shakespeare" (Dublin, 1882), and of the etymological part of William Smith's Latin School Dictionary, 2nd edit., 1883. He edited for the English Text Society, in 1886, an English version of the Imitatione Christi, mentioned above. He was President of the Library Association in 1884, and delivered an address on "The Library of Trinity College, Dublin." He has been President of the Statistical Society of Ireland, and of the Royal Irish Academy, and is one of the Trustees of the Library of Ireland, a Visitor of the National Museum, Dublin, and a Commissioner for the Publication of the Laws and Institutions of Ireland. He received in 1893 the Hon. Degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow. He is an Hon. Member of the American Library Association. He married, in 1851, Anne, daughter of J. J. Ralph. See SCHREINER,

IRVING, Sir Henry, LL.D., the name assumed by John Henry Brodribb, the actor, only son of the late Samuel Brodribb, was born Feb. 6, 1838, at Keinton, near Glastonbury, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, in George Yard, Lombard Street, London. He made his first public appearance at the Sunderland Theatre, Sept. 29, 1856, and after a series of engagements at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, and Liverpool, extending over nine years, he was engaged on July 30, 1866, to play, with Miss Kate Terry, at Manchester, by Mr. Dion Boucicault, in an original play of his, entitled "Hunted Down." This led to a London engagement, when he came out at the St. James's Theatre as Doricourt in the "Belle's Stratagem." He subsequently played at Drury Lane, the Haymarket, and the Gaiety theatres. In May 1870 he transferred his services to the Vaudeville Theatre, playing Digby Grant in Mr. Albery's comedy of the "Two Roses," which character he sustained for 300 consecutive nights. His representation of "Hamlet" at the Lyceum Theatre, Oct. 31, 1874, produced a great sensation among the playgoing public, and opinion was at first much divided as to the merits of the performance, but it is now generally admitted that by his rendering of this and of other Shakespearian parts, Mr. Irving has placed himself at the head of English tragedians. "Hamlet" was played for 200 nights, the longest run of the play on record. He appeared in "Macbeth" Sept. 18, 1875; in "Othello" in 1876; and next as Philip in Tennyson's drama of "Queen Mary." Afterwards Mr. Irving played his Shakespearian parts in the provinces, in Scotland, and in Ireland. When in Dublin he played "Hamlet" by the request of the University, he having been presented with an address in the Dining Hall of Trinity College. In January 1877 he added to his Shakespearian repertory by playing "Richard III." at the Lyceum. The withdrawal of Mrs. Bateman from the Lyceum gave Mr. Irving supreme control over the theatre, of which he had long been the mainstay. It opened under his management on Dec. 30, 1878, when he again played "Hamlet" for 100 nights. The most remarkable incidents of Mr. Irving's management have been the production of "Othello" (in which he alternated the parts of the Moor and Iago with Mr. Edwin Booth), "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado about Nothing," "The Cup," "Twelfth Night," and "Faust," all which have been played in conjunction with Miss Ellen Terry. A public banquet was given to Mr. Irving at St. James's Hall, on July 4, 1883, shortly before his departure with the

Lyceum company for a theatrical tour in the United States. A second visit to America was made in 1884, and before its close Mr. Irving delivered an address to the students of Harvard University on the art of acting. He also delivered an address by the invitation of the Vice-Chancellor (Dr. Jowett) at Oxford, on June 26, 1886. On May 5, 1887, Mr. Irving was elected a Life Trustee of Shakespeare's birthplace. On June 1 he produced Byron's "Werner" at the Lyceum Theatre for the benefit of Dr. Westland Marston, with the fine result of giving over £800 to the distressed dramatist. On October 17 he visited Stratford-on-Avon for the purpose of making the dedicatory speech at the presentation of a public fountain by Mr. G. W. Childs, of Philadelphia, and the next day left Liverpool for a third tour in America, lasting until March 24, 1888. During his stay in the States he was given, on March 15, a reception by the American Goethe Society, and on March 19, by special desire of the War Department, he took his company to the Military Academy at West Point, where, with Miss Ellen Terry, he gave "The Merchant of Venice" in Elizabethan dress and without scenery of any kind. On March 12 the great blizzard occurred which paralysed New York for a week, and on that evening the Star, where Mr. Irving was performing, was the only theatre open. After a short season at the Lyceum he took "Faust" on tour, and at Bolton laid the foundation-stone of a new theatre. On November 28 he was entertained at a public banquet in Birmingham. On December 29 he produced "Macbeth" at the Lyceum, with Miss Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth, and ran it until the following summer, nearly 200 nights, which is the longest run of the play on record. In April of the year 1889 he visited Germany, where "Julius Cæsar" and "The Merchant of Venice" were presented for him at the Berliner Theatre by Herr Barnay; and on his return home he played, with Miss Ellen Terry, before the Queen at Sandringham. On September 28 he revived at the Lyceum Watts-Phillips' play "The Dead Heart." The play ran the whole season, ending in the summer of 1890, after which, with Miss Ellen Terry, he made a short provincial tour, giving recitals of "Macbeth" with the accompaniment of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music. On Sept. 20, 1890, he produced "Ravenswood," by Herman Merivale, founded on Sir Walter Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." This was followed in 1891 by a revival of "Much Ado," "The Lyons Mail," and "The Corsican Brothers." During the season of 1892 Mr. Irving's company played "Henry VIII.," a notable revival, at the Lyceum, the first part taking the part of Cardinal Wolsey. The next part was not dissimilar, for he appeared as "Becket" in the Tennysonian great play of that name. At the end of 1893 Mr. Irving gave revivals of familiar pieces in which he then took his company to America, and, on his return to the Lyceum in the spring of 1894, revived "The Taming of the Shrew." On September 1894 he appeared at the Lyceum in a little play by Dr. Conan Doyle, in which he figured as a Waterloo veteran. In 1895 he appeared as King Arthur in a play of that name, and in 1896 in "Cymbeline," a Shakespearean play. In April 1897 he appeared as Napoleon in a translation of "Madame Sans-Pain." He received the honour of knighthood in May 1895, in the autumn of which year he again visited America. In June 1897 he delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge on "The Theatre in its relation to the State," and on the 15th of the month received the LL.D. of the University. After a long absence from the scene of his former triumphs and of serious ill-health, Sir Henry Irving returned to the Lyceum Theatre in 1899, opening with the play of "The Hunchback of Notre-Dame," specially written for him by Victorien Sardou. He received a shower of unprecedented enthusiasm from his old admirers. In "Robespierre" (running May 1899) he sustained the part, while Miss Ellen Terry played the chief female character. Address: Grafton Street, Bond Street, V. Athenæum.

ISABELLA II., Maria Louisa, ex-Queen of Spain, was born at Madrid, Oct. 30, 1830. Her father, Ferdinand VII., had been induced by the influence of his wife, to issue a Royal Decree, revoking the Salic Law at his death, Sept. 29, 1833. His daughter, then a child, was proclaimed Queen, under the regency of her mother, Maria-Christina. This event was a signal for civil warfare, as the late king's brother were supported by certain classes of the nobility. The war of succession lasted several years, and the country was desolated by the struggle between the constitutional and Christina parties, until the final confirmation of the claims of Isabella II. by the nunciating sentence of exile on Don Carlos and his adherents. In 1840 the king died, finding it impossible to continue the government without concessions to public feeling for which he was indisposed, retired to France, leaving her power into the hands of Isabella, whom she had been previously common to the head of affairs. For following three years, whilst that conditional leader was able in great measure to direct her education and training, the young Queen was subjected to purer and stronger influences than she had before experienced. She was declared by a decree of Cortes to have attained her majority, 15, 1842, and took her place among signing sovereigns of Europe. Maria-tina returned to Madrid in 1845, and restoration to influence was marked by marriage of Isabella II. to her cousin, Francisco d'Assisi, the elder son of maternal uncle, Don Francisco de Asis, which took place Oct. 10, 1846. Exposed to the intrigues of a party whose interests were based on this unconstitutional union, Isabella II. never knew the local influence of domestic happiness; disagreements and reconciliations having attended each other alternately in her married life. It deserves special mention, however, that during her reign Spain rose to its rank among the great powers of Europe, while the internal progress of the country advanced with rapid strides. On Feb. 16, 1868, a great revolution broke out in Spain, starting with the fleet off Cadiz, and gradually spreading over the whole Peninsula. The speedy result was the proclamation of a Republican Provisional Government under Prim, Serrano, and others at Madrid, and the flight of Queen Isabella to France. On November 6 her husband took up her residence in Paris, where she remained during her exile, with the exception of an interval spent at Pau during the Franco-Prussian War. On June 25, 1870, she renounced her claim to the Spanish throne in favour of her eldest son, the Prince of the Asturias. After eight years of exile she returned to Spain and was received at Santander by her son, the late King Alfonso XII. (July 1876). Queen Isabella has had five children: 1. Infanta Marié-Isabel-Françoise d'Assise-Christine-de-Paule-Dominga, Dec. 20, 1851. 2. Alfonso XII., late King of Spain. 3. Infanta Maria del Pilar, born June 4, 1861. 4. Infanta Maria Paz, born June 23, 1862; and 5. Infanta Maria Eulalie, born Feb. 12, 1864.

ISRAELS, Josef, a Dutch painter, was born at Groningen in 1824. He studied in Amsterdam, under Kruseman, and next in London, under Picot; and received Gold Medals of Honour in Paris, Brussels, and Amsterdam. He also had conferred upon him the Belgian Order of Leopold, and was nominated a member of the French Legion of Honour. His principal paintings are: "The Tranquil House," "The Shipwrecked," and "The Cradle," "Interior of the Orphans' Home at Katwyk," "The True Support," "The Mother," and "The Children of the Sea" (in the Queen of Holland's collection). In 1873 he exhibited at the French Gallery in Pall Mall, "Minding the Flock," and since that time has continually added to that long list of pictures in which he has recorded the sadder aspects of humbler life. Among his later pictures we may mention "The Little Sick-Nurse," and the "Sewer," 1888. At the Paris Exhibition of 1889 he obtained a grand prix. He was elected a correspondent of the Academy of Fine Arts in January 1885. Mr. Israels has resided in the Hague for many years. His brother, Mr. Lehman Israels, born at Groningen in 1833, went at an early age to the United States, where he acquired a considerable reputation as a journalist. He was for several years foreign editor of the New York World. A monograph of the work of Josef Israels has been written by Netscher, and translated into French by Zilleken.

ITO, High Admiral of the Japanese fleet during the war with China, was for ten years at the head of the Yokosha Arsenal. In the summer of 1894 he was put in command of the Japanese naval forces engaged against China off the coast of Korea, and quitted his post at the arsenal to go on board his flagship the Matsushima. On Sept. 7, 1894, a great naval battle took place between the Chinese and Japanese fleets. Twelve Chinese cruisers and warships were conveying transports full of Hunanese soldiers to the scene of war, when twelve Japanese ironclads and cruisers and five torpedo-boats under Admiral Ito engaged them. The fight lasted some seven hours, and resulted in the sinking or destruction of four Chinese men-of-war, and the disablement of many others. Only one Japanese warship was disabled, but the troops had all been landed before the engagement. The Japanese fleet was again ordered to sea in October, after it had been refitted at Port Arthur. Admiral Ito explained the tardy progress of Japanese influence in Korea on the ground that it was necessary to restore order in that country, to crush the brigands swarming in the mountain districts, to erect works in order to keep open the line of communication with the Japanese armies, and to enrol and train the Koreans as soldiers. In November he co-operated with the land forces attacking Port Arthur. Towards the end of January 1895 he was reported to be narrowly watching Wei-hai-wei, the forts of which had fired upon his ships on the 21st. In February the whole place, together with the Chinese fleet, was surrendered to him by Admiral Ting, who subsequently committed suicide, together with three principal Chinese officers. Admiral Ito, in compliance with the dead man's request, allowed all the soldiers in Wei-hai-wei and all the sailors in the Chinese fleet to return home free, and even conceded them the honours of war. He has resumed his duties at the arsenal, and resides in the palace in the Park surrounding it.

IVEAGH, Lord, Edward Cecil Guinness, Bart., K.P., LL.D., J.P., D.L., of Castlenock, co. Dublin, born on Nov. 10, 1847, formerly a member of the great firm of brewers in Dublin, is the younger brother of Lord Ardilaun, and is well known as a munificent philanthropist, who has given a quarter of a million to be applied to the better housing of the poor, and also as a scion of a house whose wealth has been systematically employed for the promotion of schemes of public utility. His father, Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, it will be remembered, rebuilt St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin; and even the most rigid teetotalers, when they see the purposes to which the great fortune of the Guinness family has been devoted, may almost be expected to forgive the source from which it has been derived. In December 1898 Lord Iveagh made two munificent offers, the first of a sum amounting to £250,000 for the further endowment of the Jenner Institute of Preventive Medicine, which has been gratefully accepted, the second of a like amount for the improvement of an insanitary area in the heart of Dublin. This last offer requires the sanction of Parliament. It is a scheme for erecting workmen's dwellings, &c., in the Bull-Alley area of Dublin, and for otherwise improving the streets of that district. He was raised to the peerage on Jan. 1, 1891, and received the degree of Hon. LL.D., Dublin, in the same year. He was made a K.P. in February 1896. Sir Edward married, in 1873, Adelaide Maria, daughter of Richard Samuel Guinness, M.P. for Deepwell, co. Dublin. Addresses: Farnleigh, Castlenock, co. Dublin; and Elveden, Suffolk.

IZZET BEY, Ahmet, was born some forty years ago, and was educated for the law. In the later days of Sultan Nedim he was appointed to the post of Tidjaret. After the accession of Hamid (q.v.) he became a favourite, in which position he greatly helped himself. From being a reporter he became a counsellor, and in 1894 he was Sultan's right-hand man. He was the ruin of Kiamil Pasha and his Cabinet, and induced his master to seek protection from British pressure. His Cabinet are nearly all his. Naturally he has crowds of enemies. The old Turkish party hate him for his phil policy, while the advanced party like his despotic methods. He has the command of the Palace police, and knows the Power behind the Throne.

JACKSON, Frederick George, Arctic explorer, born in 1860, is the son of G. F. Jackson of Leamington. He was educated at Denstone College and Edinburgh University. He has traversed the Australian deserts and the tundras of Siberia. In 1894 he was the command of the Arctic Expedition by Mr. A. C. Hearnshaw. He set out from London in the Warder, fixed his headquarters in Foul Bay, in a small house which he called Elmwood, near Cape Flora. For three years he spent there he mapped the whole region, which he proved to consist of a continuous mass of islands of a number of islands. He discovered Gillies Land from his maps, the existence of which there has been much controversy. He has brought home valuable collections, immense numbers of ethnographical graphs, and most valuable meteorological and magnetic observations. In 1896 he came across Nansen off the north of Josef Land, and his "Are you Nansen?" has become almost as famous as the "Livingstone, I presume!" of another known explorer. He returned to England in September 1897. In the month of December 1897, he announced his intention of starting upon another expedition as soon as possible. His whaler, will be left as far north of the island as possible, and he will push a sledge drawn by dogs or ponies accompanied by only one other man. He laments the apathy of British geographers with regard to the north area, where so much remains to be discovered. He is an Hon. Corresponding Member of the Geographical Societies of America and Italy, received a knighthood of the class of the Royal Order of St. Olaf.

JACKSON, Thomas Graham, R.A., M.A., F.S.A., is the son of Hugh Jackson, a solicitor, and was born at Hampstead, on Dec. 21, 1835. He was educated at Brighton College and Wadham College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took honours at both Classical Moderations and the Final School of Lit. Hum.; graduated B.A. in 1858, and was elected a Fellow of his College in 1864. He vacated his Fellowship in 1880, but was elected an Hon. Fellow in 1882. Selecting the profession of an architect, he was a pupil of Sir George Gilbert Scott, R.A., from 1858 to 1861, was elected an A.R.A. in 1892, and became a full Academician in 1896. Mr. Jackson's name is closely connected with most of the recent buildings in Oxford, whether it be restoration, additions, or entirely new work; and the following buildings in the University and city may be cited as instances of his skill in design, and in blending new work with old: The New Examinations Schools of the University; restoration of the Bodleian Library, St. Mary's (the University), and All Saints' Churches; new additional buildings for Brasenose, Lincoln, Corpus, Trinity, Balliol, and Hertford Colleges; Somerville Hall; the City High School; and the High School for Girls. He has provided new buildings for some important public schools, viz.: Rugby, Harrow, Westminster, Uppingham, Radley, Brighton, Giggleswick, Cranbrook, &c., as also new buildings at the Inner Temple and at the Drapers' Hall. Amongst his churches may be mentioned those at Annesley, Hornblotton, Stratton, Wimbledon, Northington, &c. He has also furnished designs for numerous private houses. Mr. Jackson is the author of: "Modern Gothic Architecture," 1873; "Dalmatia, the Quarnero, and Istria," 1887; "Wadham College, Oxford: its History and Buildings" (with illustrations), 1893; "The Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Oxford: its History and Architecture"; and numerous articles on subjects connected with Architecture. Addresses: 14 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.; and Eagle House, Wimbledon.

JACKSON, The Right Hon. William Lawies, M.P., J.P., eldest son of the late Mr. William Jackson, of Leeds, was born at Otley in 1840, and was educated privately and at a Moravian school. He is a Director of the Great Northern Railway Company, and a prominent figure in the leather and woollen trades. He represented Leeds from April 1880 until the dissolution in 1885, after having unsuccessfully contested the borough in 1876. In 1885, 1886, 1892, and 1895, he was returned for the Northern division of Leeds. In Lord Salisbury's first administration he received the important appointment of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to Sir Henry Holland, and in the Ministry of 1886 again held the same post. He was regarded as one of the strongest of the subordinate members of the administration, and in 1891-92 was Chief Secretary for Ireland. In 1890 he was made a Privy Counsellor. He married, in 1890, Grace, daughter of G. Tempest. Addresses: 27 Cadogan Square, S.W., and Athenæum.

JACKSON, William Walrond. D.D., Rector of Exeter College, Oxford, eldest son of the late Right Rev. William Walrond Jackson, D.D., Bishop of Antigua, West Indies, was born in Trinidad on May 17, 1848, and educated at Collington College, Barbadoes, and at Balliol College, Oxford; B.A. 1869 (first class Classics Moderations, 1878; second class Lit. Humaniores, 1879); M.A. 1883; D.D. 1892. Dr. Jackson was elected to an open Fellowship at Exeter College in 1883; he was Tutor of that Society from 1883 to 1888; Proctor of the University in 1872; Secretary of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools' Examination Board, 1876-80; Select Preacher before Oxford University, 1880-82; Censor of the Non-Collegiate Students, 1883-87; and was elected Rector of Exeter College in 1887. He is a Member of the Hebdomadal Council, and of various educational bodies within and outside the University. He has always taken an active part in educational questions in Oxford, and in all questions affecting the relations between the University and the education of the country at large. Address: Exeter College, Oxford.

JACOB, The Right Rev. Edgar. D.D., Bishop of Newcastle-on-Tyne, is a son of the late Archdeacon Jacob, and of Anna, eldest daughter of the late Hon. and Rev. G. T. Noel, Canon of Winchester. He was educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1865, and a third class in Lit. Hum. in 1867. Ordained by the late Bishop Wilberforce in 1868, he was successively curate of Taynton and Witney, Oxfordshire. A year of parochial work in Bermondsey followed, after which he accepted the domestic chaplaincy to the late Dr. Milman, Bishop of Calcutta, remaining in India with that prelate until his death in 1876. In 1877 he had charge of the Wilberforce Memorial Mission in South London. In 1878 he was appointed by his old college of Winchester to the important parish of Portsea. During his long incumbency here the parish church was rebuilt by an anonymous donor. His warlike was found in the hands of Smith. Dr. Jacob was Canon of Winchester from 1876 to 1880, Chaplain to the Queen in 1874, in-Orinary, 1874-75, and Chaplain to Bishop of Exeter from 1876 to 1880. Addresses: 41 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

JAMES, Henry, American novelist and essayist, was born at New York City, April 15, 1843. He is the son of the late Henry James, a forcible writer on religious and philosophical topics (born 1811; died Dec. 18, 1882). In his eleventh year his family went abroad, and after some stay in England made a long sojourn in France and Switzerland. On their return to America in 1860 they first resided in Newport, Rhode Island, removing to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1866. Mr. James attended the Harvard Law School for a year or two while his family were at Newport, but a few years after their removal to Cambridge, 1869, he went abroad, where he has since remained, with the exception of occasional brief visits home. He now lives in London, though he spends considerable time in Italy. He has been a contributor to most of the American magazines, but his celebrity rests mainly upon his novels, which usually deal with the American as found abroad. His published books are: "Watch and Ward," 1871; "A Passionate Pilgrim, and other Tales," 1875; "Roderick Hudson," 1875; "Transatlantic Sketches," 1875; "The American," 1877; "French Poets and Novelists," 1878; "The Europeans," 1878; "Daisy Miller," 1878; "An International Episode," 1879; "Hawthorne" (one of the English Men of Letters series), 1879; "A Bundle of Letters," 1879; "Confidence," 1879; "Diary of a Man of Fifty," 1880; "Washington Square," 1880; "The Portrait of a Lady," 1881; "Siege of London," 1883; "Portraits of Places," 1884; "Tales of Three Cities," 1884; "A Little Tour in France," 1884; "Author to the Hospital. In 1878 he was appointed Medical Officer, but his service was interrupted by a voyage to the United States, in charge of a patient, and by the fact of a good opening for himself at Kimberley. About this time his health broke down through overwork and he decided to go to Kimberley, hoping that a complete change of environment would quite restore him.

He arrived in South Africa and entered into partnership with a local doctor and soon acquired a large success as a doctor was very high and among his patients on the frontier were President Kruger, of the Orange Free State, and the Matabele chief Lobengula, whom he cured of gonorrhea. His professional income at this time has been estimated at £1000 and £6000 a year. It was in 1880 that Mr. Rhodes and Dr. Jameson met and formed that close partnership which has existed ever since.

Dr. Jameson, the British South Africa Company, experienced a great deal of difficulty in the negotiations for the opening of Mashonaland, and it was at this time that the history of the Chartered Company and Dr. Jameson first lent active aid to his friend and abandoned a medical practice to undertake an adventurous mission. In order to develop Mashonaland and other territories it became necessary to obtain concessions from the Matabele chief, through the aid of the pioneer force wished to be placed upon the frontier and went to Bulawayo. Ultimately an agreement was reached to all that was required of him. In 1889 the Home Government granted a Royal Charter to the South Africa Company, entitling it to the development of the territories lying to the south of the Orange River, and Mr. Selous was in charge of the expedition was therefore successful, and Mr. Selous was in charge of the expedition was therefore successful, and Mr. Selous was in charge of the expedition was therefore successful.

Dr. Jameson again gave up his medical practice and undertook an expedition to the wavering king, Lobengula, with a successful result. It now became more evident that his services were indispensable to the Chartered Company and to Mr. Rhodes. Dr. Jameson therefore relinquished altogether his medical practice, and joined the Chartered Company. He accompanied it to Bulawayo and settled at Fort Jameson. A few months he started upon an exploring expedition through an unknown country to discover, if possible, a route leading to the East Coast of Africa, which might be constructed as a waggon road and ultimately converted into a railway. But as a wide belt of the country through which he passed is inhabited by the tsetse fly, whose bite is fatal to oxen, the idea of a waggon road was abandoned and the Beira Railway constructed, which has reduced freights into Mashonaland by one half. Dr. Jameson's next venture was a mission to Gungunhana, King of Gazaland, who had been defeated by the Portuguese and taken prisoner. Gungunhana had for years asked the British Government to assume a Protectorate over his country without avail; the Chartered Company therefore entered into negotiations with him with a view to granting him a subsidy for certain concessions. This arrangement was strongly resented by the Portuguese, who immediately asserted a suzerainty over Gazaland. Their claim was allowed by Lord Salisbury. Dr. Jameson then determined to undertake a journey to Gungunhana before the Portuguese could make final arrangements. In company with two other Englishmen he started his march over 600 miles of entirely unexplored and unhealthy country, and made the journey in 43 days. They endured great hardships and were nearly starved, and being constantly wet with wading through rivers and marshy ground, suffered severely from malarial fever. His two companions nearly died by the way, and he himself never fully recovered from the effects of that terrible journey. Dr. Jameson had no difficulty in getting a concession signed by the King, who was glad of the opportunity of throwing off the Portuguese yoke. Although no territory was ceded to the Chartered Company on that occasion, it was entirely owing to the prompt action of Dr. Jameson that the Portuguese were prevented from absorbing Gazaland. During 1891 the Administrator of the Chartered Territories resigned, and Dr. Jameson, at the instance of Mr. Rhodes, was appointed his successor. He had not been in office many months when a large body of armed Boers made an attempt to invade a portion of Mashonaland which borders the Transvaal. Dr. Jameson met them and explained that he would oppose their passage by armed force. He had a parley with the leaders, and persuaded some of them to trek into Mashonaland, where they would be welcomed and enjoy equal rights with the English settlers. Ultimately the remainder returned peaceably home. About this time signs of unrest became only too apparent among the Matabele, and to prevent a massacre of whites, Dr. Jameson determined to take the field, more especially as he discovered that the Matabele had for many months been secretly preparing for war. He made a plan of campaign, foresaw the duration of the war and the speedy collapse of the rebellion, and astonished his officers by his power of organisation and tactical ability. In a few months, after several successful engagements, he completely subdued the Matabele, and having been allowed a free hand in the business, he conducted the settlement with admirable skill. Towards the end of 1894 Dr. Jameson visited England, meeting with a very cordial reception. On Jan. 24, 1895, a dinner was given in his honour in Whitehall Rooms by his fellow students at University College, where he had been Resident Medical Officer for two years. Mr. Christopher Heath was in the chair, and many eminent members of the medical profession were present. A few days after he delivered an address in the Imperial Institute before the Prince of Wales and an audience of 2500 people. The past, present, and future of South Africa constituted the subject of the address. Before he left England a C.B., civil division, was conferred upon him in recognition of his splendid work in South Africa. Towards the end of 1896 the discontent and agitation of the Outlander population of Johannesburg took a serious turn, and they secretly armed and determined to force the Boer Government to grant them constitutional rights. On Dec. 28 a letter was sent to Dr. Jameson, who was at Mafeking, asking him to come and help them. On the following day he started to their assistance with the Bechuanaland Police, 600 strong. Major Sir John Willoughby was in command of the force, and they took with them eight Maxim guns. After having cut the telegraph wires, they crossed the Transvaal border and pressed on to Krugersdorp. As soon as the news reached England, Mr. Chamberlain ordered the High Commissioner of South Africa publicly to repudiate Dr. Jameson's act by proclamation. At the same time Sir Hercules Robinson sent a despatch to Jameson ordering his immediate return. Dr. Jameson, however, disregarded the message, and at Krugersdorp he was met by a force of 1000 Boers, and fighting ensued. He then pressed on to Doornkop, hourly expecting some promised assistance from Johannesburg. Meanwhile the Boer force had been considerably augmented, and Jameson at last hoisted a flag of truce and gave in on the condition that the lives of his followers were spared. They were taken to Pretoria, and he and his officers were sentenced to be shot; but it was afterwards arranged that the whole force should be given up to

Her Majesty's Government. He was at once telegraphed to Pretoria to his satisfaction at the decision of the Transvaal Government. At the crisis the German Emperor telegraphed to the Boer President, placing him upon successfully repelling the invasion of the Transvaal. The interference on the part of the Emperor caused the most widespread indignation in England, and led to the commissioning of a Flying Squadron to punish the Emperor in spite of the disastrous consequences of the illegal raid. Dr. Jameson's arrival in London met with a warm ovation. He was taken to Bow Street charged before Sir John Bridge, under the Foreign Enlistment Act, and his officers were committed for trial. Jameson's trial was at bar before three judges, Lord Chief-Justice presiding. He was found guilty and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, Jameson receiving fifteen months. The term. As a result of the length of his health was broken, and a necessary operation the Home Secretary ordered his release. He had spent a year of his time. Dr. Jameson led a retired life, chiefly devoted to the reading of English and scientific and professional literature. During the sitting of the Scott Commission, which had been appointed to inquire into the causes of the Jameson's was called as a witness, his evidence made use of the expression "If I had been successful, I should have been forgiven."

JANET, Paul, French philosopher, was born in Paris on April 20, 1859. He is a follower of Cousin, and was Professor at Bourges and Strasbourg at the Lycée of Louis-le-Grand. In 1864 he became Professor of the Faculty of Philosophy at the Sorbonne, and member of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, which instituted prizes for his "La Famille," 1864; "Histoire de la Philosophie de l'Antiquité et dans les temps modernes," 1867; "Problèmes du XIX. Siècle," 1875; "Philosophie de la Révolution," 1875; "Les Causes-Finales," 1875; "Philosophie Française Contre l'Éclectisme," 1879; "Les Maîtres de la Philosophie Moderne," and "Les Origines de la Philosophie Contemporaine," 1883; "Histoire de la Philosophie," in collaboration with Saisset, 1887; a centenary of his French Revolution, 1889; "La Philosophie de Lamennais," 1890. He contributed to the Revue des D mnnaire des Sciences Philosophiques, Le, &c., and is a Commander of the Legion of Honour. He is also a member of the Higher Council of Public Instruction. His Paris address is 59 Rue de Grenelle.

JANSSEN, Pierre Jules César, an astronomer, was born at Paris, 22, 1824, and in 1860 gained his D.Sc. for a remarkable thesis on "L'Absorption du Chaleur rayonnante obscure dans l'atmosphère de l'Œil." In 1853 he was appointed Professor at the Lycée Charlemagne, and from 1865 to 1871 Professor at the École Supérieure d'Architecture. His chief work, however, has been done in connection with the numerous astronomical observations on which he has been sent. In 1849 he was sent to Peru to determine the position of the equator, but the fever of the Peruvian forests incapacitated him. From 1854 to 1864 he was studying the solar spectrum in Italy. In 1867 he observed a total eclipse at Trani, and the results of his observations of Santorin. In 1868 he was sent to observe the eclipse of the sun at Madras, in India, one of the most important of modern times, which led to the discovery of the corona. The Academy of Sciences granted him the Lalande Prize, awarded specially to five times its normal amount. To observe the eclipse of 1870 in France he escaped from Paris in a balloon, November 2, and travelled 300 miles in five days, descending at Savenay. In 1874 he observed the transit of Venus in Japan with great success, and he accompanied an English expedition to Siam in 1875. In 1876 he ascended Mont Blanc to study the position of an observatory. His reports have been included in the "Annales de la Commission des Archives des Missions Scientifiques." He is an honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh, and F.R.S. of England. He was awarded the Rumford Medal in 1877. In 1878 he was appointed Director of the Central Observatory at Meudon. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 63 Rue de Vaugirard.

NAVIER, Louis Joseph, born at Port-au-Prince, Hayti, May 7, 1855, son of Jean-Baptiste Janvier, a retired infantry captain and District administrator, grandson of a French colonel, was educated till fourteen years of age at the Wesleyan Primary School, founded at Port-au-Prince and directed by English Wesleyan missionaries; then at the Lycée National, till he was eighteen; then at the School of Medicine and Military Hospital of Port-au-Prince, till he was two-and-twenty; then at the Faculty of Medicine of Paris, where he was a Doctor of Medicine of the University of Paris, and was Prizeman of the École in June 1881. He entered the School of Political Sciences of Paris in October 1881; passed with success the examinations of the Administrative Section in July 1883; of the Diplomatic Section in July 1885; of the Political Economy and Finance Section in July 1887, and obtained the three separate diplomas. He was the delegate of the Haytian Government at the Conferences held from 1884 to 1887 for the Copyright Convention of Bern, and signed the Convention of 1886 and ratified it. He has been the correspondent in Paris during the Exhibition of 1889 of the Moniteur, the "journal officiel" of the Republic of Hayti. Appointed Secretary to the Haytian Legation in London in September 1889, he was specially detached by permission of the President of Hayti as representative of the Haytian Orthodox Apostolic Church of Hayti at the Congress of Old Catholics at Lucerne, in September 1892. He has been Chargé d'Affaires of Hayti at the Court of St. James since November 1892. JAPP, Francis Robert, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry, Aberdeen University, was born at Dundee, Feb. 8, 1848. He is the youngest son of James Japp, minister of the Catholic Apostolic Church, and was educated at schools in Dundee and St. Andrews, and at the universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and Bonn. In 1881 he was appointed Lecturer on Chemistry in the Normal School of Science (now Royal College of Science), South Kensington. From 1885 to 1890 he was Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, and in the latter year received from the Society the Longstaff Medal for Chemical Research. In 1890 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the University of Aberdeen. He has published, chiefly in the Journal of the Chemical Society, numerous researches (over 60) dealing almost exclusively with questions relating to organic chemistry, and is also joint author, with Sir Edward Frankland, of a Text-book of Inorganic Chemistry. Address: The University, Aberdeen.

JARVIS, Thomas Stinson. Canadian author and politician. Born, May 31, 1861, was educated at Upper Canada College, and, when seventeen years old, was sent away for a year's travel. He went to the European continent, spent a winter in Italy and some time in continental countries. He studied law from 1879 to 1883, and was called to the bar. His first literary effort, "Letters from East Lopham," was compiled from letters written to his parents while in the East; in 1884 he published "Wendray Hangstead." In 1887 he removed to New York, where he published "The Heretic" as his second novel, and "The Ascent of Life," followed early in 1894. The remainder of the year he spent in Paris and London, whence he published in New York "One Loved in New York."

JAYNE, The Right Rev. Francis John, D.D., M.A., Bishop of Chester. was born Jan. 11, 1848, and is the son of John Jayne, J.P. He was educated at Rugby School and William College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took a first class in Moderation in 1867, and a double first class in the final school year, which year he became a Fellow of Jesus College. He was ordained in 1871, and was for a year curate of St. Clement's, Oxford, afterwards becoming Tutor of Keble College, where he remained until 1879. In that year he was appointed Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, of which institution he greatly increased the efficiency. In 1880 he accepted the important vicarage of Leeds, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Gott, who became Dean of Worcester. In 1884 he was consecrated Bishop of Chester. In 1892 the Bishop initiated a discussion on public-house reform, and has since urged the necessity of temperance legislation on constructive lines. He is a warm advocate of what is known as the "Gothenburg System" of State-controlled liquor-traffic, and both on the platform and in the press has constantly advocated his views. He married in 1872 Emily, daughter of Watts J. Garland, of Lisbon. Addresses: The Palace, Dee Side, Chester; and the Athenarium.

JEX-BLAKE, Sophia, M.D., is the daughter of Thomas Jex-Blake of Sussex Square, Brighton, and sister of the present Dean of Wells, and was born in January 1840. At the age of eighteen she became a mathematical tutor at Queen's College, London, where she remained for three years. After travelling on the Continent and in America, in order to study the education of girls, she entered on a course of medical training under Dr. Lucy Sewall, in Boston, U.S.A., in 1866. Returning to England two years later, she matriculated in the Medical Faculty of the University of Edinburgh. Being, however, not permitted to take her degree, she brought an action against the University in 1872, which she eventually lost in the Scotch Court of Appeal. She took the degree of M.D. at the University of Bern in 1877, and became a Licentiate in 1877, and a Member, in 1880, of the Irish College of Physicians. Leaving Edinburgh in 1874, she came to London, where she founded the London School of Medicine for women. She returned to Edinburgh in 1878, and in the same year opened a Dispensary for women and children, and a Cottage Hospital in 1885. In the following year she founded the Edinburgh School of Medicine for Women, which was recognised by the University of Edinburgh in 1894, and she is at the present time Dean of the school, and Lecturer on Midwifery. Dr. Jex-Blake is the author of "American Schools and Colleges," 1866; "Medical Women," 1872 and 1886; "Puerperal Fever," 1877; and "Care of Infants," 1884. Address: Brunsfield Lodge, Whitehouse Loan, Edinburgh.

He entered while very young the Court of Music at Vienna, where he studied under Joseph Böhm. From the age of twelve years he attracted much attention at Leipzig by his rare skill on the organ, and obtained an engagement, which he held for seven years, in the Gewandhaus. Meanwhile he assiduously pursued his studies, and received the guidance of Ferdinand Dabbe, who received lessons in the theory of music from Moritz Hauptmann. In 1835, on his first visit to Paris, and in the same year he was appointed Director of the Concerts at Weimar. In 1833 he was Master of the Chapel Royal at Berlin. After this he appeared in the capitals of Europe, and paid visits to London, where he gave several of concerts. In 1869 he became a member of the Senate of the Berlin Academy, and was nominated Director of the Instrumental Music in the Court of Music then recently established in the Prussian capital. He was created an honorary Mus. Doc. of the University of Cambridge, March 8, 1877. His fame rests mainly on his extraordinary skill as an instrumentalist, but he is also a great artist not to keep his technical ability always subordinate interpretation of the music he is giving. As a composer he belongs to the school of Schumann. The "Concert Hongroise" (Hungarian Concerto) of his chief compositions for violin orchestra. In August 1882 he was named conductor of the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, and Musical Director of the Royal Academy of Arts. He has lately visited England since then, and has been principal violinist at the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts at the Royal Albert Hall since they were first given there. On March 17, 1889, the fiftieth anniversary of his first appearance in London was celebrated, he being presented with a magnificent violin by his admirers. His wife, Amalie Joachim, his wife, the daughter of German ballad and oratorio singer, died in February 1899. Oxford University has conferred on him the D.C.L. and Cambridge that of Mus. Doc.

JOHNSON, Eastman, American painter, was born at Lovell, Maine, July 1, 1811. From the age of seventeen he devoted himself seriously to art work, and in 1849 went to Düsseldorf, where he studied two years, and afterwards resided for four years at the Hague, where, besides numerous portraits, he executed "The Savoyard" and "The Card-Players," the finest elaborate pictures in oil. After his return he became the principal European galleries, established himself in Paris, but was afterwards called home to Washington. In 1858 he settled at New York, where he remained. His favourite subjects are American rural and domestic life, including negro and other subjects, though he has devoted himself almost exclusively to portrait-painting. He resided in Europe in 1885. Among his best works, many of which have been reproduced in engraving and chromo-lithography, are: "The Old Kentucky Home," "The Farmer's Sunday Morning," "The Village Blacksmith," "The Agent," "The Maple-Sugar Camp," "The Dictating to his Daughters," "The Light unto his Feet," "The Husking Bee," "The Cranberry Harvest at Nantucket," and "The School Philosophy at Nantucket." Among the sittings he has painted are those of Mr. Cleveland, Chester A. Arthur, Dr. J. M. Cosh, and William M. Evarts.

JOHNSON, The Most Rev. Ed-ward Ralph, D.D., Hon. LL.D. Camb., Bishop of Calcutta, fifth son of William Johnson, of Castlesteads, Cumberland, was born at Castlesteads, Feb. 17, 1801, and educated at Rugby, and at Wadham College, Oxford (B.A. 1850; M.A. 1860; D.D. 1876). He was ordained deacon and priest by the Bishop of Worcester—deacon, with a title to the curacy of Farnborough, in the county of Warwick—in 1851. He was appointed, in 1860, to a minor canonry in the cathedral of Chester, and to the curacy of the cathedral parish of St. Oswald. In 1866 the Dean and Chapter appointed him to the rectory of Northenden, in the county of Chester, where he succeeded the late Archdeacon Woolrough. He was selected by the Bishop of Chester, in 1871, to fill the post of Archdeacon of Chester, upon the resignation of the late Archdeacon Pollock. In October 1876 he was appointed to the Bishopric of Calcutta, vacant by the death of the late Dr. Robert Milman. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, Nov. 30, 1876, and was in 1898 succeeded by the Head-master of Harrow, Dr. Welldon.

JOHNSON, The Right Rev. Henry Frank, LL.B., D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Colchester, was born at Walbury, Essex, on Dec. 17, 1834, and is the son of Col. John Johnson. He was educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge. Entering the army, he was cornet in the 1st Dragoons from 1855 to 1856, but finding, like the Archbishop of York, that he had a vocation for the Church, he retired, and in 1858 was ordained. He has been successively curate of Richmond, Surrey; Sawbridgeworth, Herts, 1860-62; vicar of High Wych, Sawbridgeworth, 1862-80; rector of Chelmsford, 1880-94; Archdeacon of Essex, 1885-94; and of Colchester since 1894, in which year he became Bishop Suffragan of Colchester. He married, in 1857, Emily, youngest daughter of Thomas Perry of Moor Hall, Harlow. Address: Chelmsford Rectory.

JOHNSON, Lionel, poet and critic, is the eldest son of the late General Johnson, and was born at Broadstairs, Kent, on March 15, 1867. After a distinguished career at Winchester, he entered New College, Oxford, in 1886, and graduated in 1890 (B.A.), after obtaining a second class in Classical Moderations and a first class in Lit. Hum. Coming up to London, he commenced authorship, writing for Frederick Greenwood's brilliant and short-lived Anti-Jacobin, for the eccentric and admirable art quarterly, the Hobby Horse, to which he contributed poetry while still a schoolboy, and for the Academy and Daily Chronicle, &c. His scholarly criticisms in these two last-mentioned journals are the delight of many readers. Mr. Johnson is justly regarded as one of the late Walter Pater's leading dis-styles. We meet only one his "Letter to Sir Thomas Browne" and his critiques on the Celtic spirit and on Renan. Mr. L. Johnson has also made his mark as a poet of fictionation, having published "Poems" and "Islands and other Poems" besides contributing verse to the two books of the Rugby Club and to the Speaker, the Outlook, and other well-known papers. His "Art of Living as Hardy" is a weighty prose contribution to the study of that novelist. Address: 5 New Square, Lincoln's Inn.

JOHNSON, The Right Hon. William Moore, Q.C., is the only son of the Rev. William Johnson, M.A., formerly Chancellor of Ross and Cloyne, and rector of Cienore, County Cork, by Elizabeth Anne, daughter of the Rev. William Hamilton, F.R.C.D., and was born in 1828. Expedition"; in 1887, "The Slave"; and in 1888, "Livingstone." He was a student of the Royal Academy of London, 1878-80, was a Fellow of the South Kensington School of Art, and has frequently exhibited at the Royal Academy and elsewhere. In 1880 he travelled through Algeria; in 1882-83 through Congo and other parts of West Africa, and in 1884 conducted an expedition to Mount Kilimanjaro in East Africa. In 1887 he surveyed a portion of the Daita, and in 1889-90 was at Nyassa and Tanganyika, for the making peace between the Arab and African Lakes Company. In 1891 made a C.B., and in 1892 was Commissioner and Consul-General of British Central Africa, and administered the extensive territory of that protectorate. He visited Egypt in 1894, and frequently lectured on the subject of Central Africa, and in 1895 of that year published, as a special publication, a short and interesting account of his charge. This forms one of a series of blue-books and reports on Central Africa published by him between 1891 and 1897. In 1897 he was appointed Consul-General of Tunis. His latest work is "British Central Africa," published in 1897. He was created a Knight in January 1896; was appointed General for the Regency of Tunis, 1897; and received the Jubilee Medal, 1897. In 1896 he married William's daughter of the 5th Lord Bessborough, daughter of Sir H. Percy Anderdon, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Address: H.R.M. Consul-General, Tunis, North Africa.

JOHNSTON, Richard M., American writer, was born in Wilkes County, Georgia, March 8, 1841, graduated at Mercer University, in 1861, and, after teaching for a year, was admitted to the Bar. He was offered a judgeship, but declined to accept the Chair of Literature at the University of Georgia, where he remained until the outbreak of the Civil War. Retiring to his country home near Georgia, he there opened a school for boys, which in 1867 led him to Baltimore, Maryland, where he since resided. He has published numerous contributions to periodicals in conjunction with William Howard, a "Life of Alexander H. Stephens, 1878, and "A History of English Literature," 1879; "Dukesborough Tale," "Old Mark Langston," 1884; "The Tourists," 1885; Mr. Absalom B.

HNSTON, William, M.P. (known as Johnston of Ballykilbeg), was born in Ballypatrick, Feb. 22, 1829, is the son of John Brett Johnston and his wife Anna Henriette Scott, and received his education at Trinity College, where he graduated B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Bar in 1872. He was elected M.P. for Belfast, in the Protestant interest, in 1873, and was re-elected in 1874, and sat for the constituency till 1878, when he was elected Inspector of Irish Fisheries. He held that office till 1885, when he was elected by Lord Spencer for a speech at the General Synod of the Church of Ireland. Mr. Johnston has been since 1885 a member of the Orange Institution, and was imprisoned for two months, in 1886, for taking part in an Orange procession at Bangor, co. Down, on July 12 of the previous year. He is the author of "Nightshade," 1857; "Freshets," 1857; and "Under which King?" 1872. He was returned for South Belfast in 1873, and was again elected in 1877, 1882, and 1885. He has long been identified with Temperance movements, both of a social and a political character, and has been for many years an abstainer. In 1898 he was unanimously elected President of the Irish Temperance League. In the House he is the leading representative of the Orange movement. He married (3), in 1863, Georgiana Hay, daughter of Sir John Hay, Bart., of Ballykilbeg, co. Down.

JOICEY, Sir James, Bart., M.P., was born on April 6, 1846, and is the son of John Joicey, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was educated at Gainford School, near Durham. As Chairman and Managing Director of James Joicey & Co., Ltd., of the Lambton Collieries, Ltd., he is one of the most extensive coal-miners in the northern counties. He is the principal proprietor of the important Newcastle Daily Leader, Director of the N.E. Railway, J.P. for Durham County, Northumberland, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Member for the county of Durham. Since 1885 he has sat in Parliament as Liberal Member for Chester-le-Street, Durham. In 1884 he married (2) a daughter of the late Colonel Drever, H.E.I.C.S. Addresses: 58 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Longhirst, Northumberland.

JÓKAÏ, Maurus (or Mór), the most productive and genial of Hungarian novelists, was born Feb. 19, 1825, at Komorn. His father was an advocate, of good and ancient family, and a strict Calvinist, so that his son was puritanically brought up, until his twelfth year, when he was left an orphan. For two years before his father's death he had been learning German at Presburg, but he was then left to teach himself, until in 1840 he went to the High School at Pépa, and in 1842 to that of Kecskemét, at both having the Hungarian poet Alexander Petöfi as his schoolfellow. In 1844 he went to Pesth, where he was articled to an advocate, and obtained his diploma, of which, however, he never availed himself; for in 1846 he was already editor of the then very famous Wochenblatt. In 1848 he proclaimed the "Twelve Points of Pesth," and in the same year he married Rosa Laborfalvi, the greatest of Hungarian tragedians. In 1849 he followed the Hungarian Government to Debreczin, where he edited the Arendblätter, and was present at the capitulation of Villagos, August 28. To escape being made prisoner, he resolved on suicide, but was hindered by the fortunate arrival of his wife from Pesth. She had converted all her jewels into gold, and the pair found their way on foot through the Russian army, reached a safe hiding-place in the wood of Bukk, and at last got safe to Pesth. Ten years followed, during which Hungarian literature became well-nigh extinct. Almost alone this young man created a new one, and since political journalism was impracticable he betook himself to fiction. He has published in 160 vols. 25 romances of several vols. each, 320 novelettes, and six dramas, of which more than half a million copies have been sold amongst six millions of Magyars, besides translations into various languages. Amongst his most popular romances are: "The Good Old Assessors," "A Hungarian Nabob," and its continuation, entitled "Zoltán Kárpáthy," "Sad Times," "Oceania," "The White Rose," "The Accursed Family," "Transylvania's Golden Age," "The Turks in Hungary," "The Last Days of the Janissaries in 1820," "Poor Rich Men," "The World Turned Upside down," "Madhouse Management," "The New Landlord" (translated into English by A. Patterson, London, 1865), "The Romance of the Next Century," "Black Diamonds," "Die Zonen des Geistes," "Beloved to the Scaffold," 1882; "The White Woman of Leutschau," &c.

Among his dramas may be mentioned: "King Koloman," 1858; "The Martyrs of Szizquetvar," and "Milton," 1878. In 1863 Jókai established, as an organ of the Left, the Hon (Fatherland), the most widely circulated Hungarian journal, in which many of his romances appeared. He has also become chief editor of the Governmental journal, the Nemzet (Nation). In 1898 his novel, "Dr. Dumany's Wife," was translated into English.

JOLY, John, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in 1858 in Hollywood, King's County, Ireland. He is the youngest son of the late Rev. J. P. Joly, M.A., Rector of Clonsast, and Julia, daughter of Frederick, Count de Lusi, Resident Prussian Minister in Greece. Owing to the early loss of his father his education and preservation during a delicate boyhood devolved upon his mother, to whose influence he ascribes what enthusiasm for science he possesses. He was partly educated, also, at the Rathmines School, Dublin; entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1876, and took the degree of Bachelor of Engineering in 1883. He received the degree of M.A. (Stip. Con.) in 1887, and of Doctor of Science in 1889. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1892. He is Honorary Secretary of the Royal Dublin Society, has occupied successively the posts of Assistant Lecturer in Engineering and in Experimental Physics in Trinity College, and is now Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. He is author, among others, of the following papers: "On the Direct Experimental Determination of Specific Heats of Gases at Constant Volume," Phil. Trans. Roy. Soc., vol. 182; "On the Method of Condensation in Calorimetry," Proc. Roy. Soc., vols. 45 and 47; "On the Specific Heats of Minerals," ibid. vol. 41; "Observations on the Spark Discharge over the Surface of Dielectrics," ibid. vol. 47; "On the Steam Calorimeter," ibid. vol. 47; "On the Volcanic Ash of Krakatoa," *Proc. "On the Origin of the Canals of ibid.," "On the Volume-change attending Fusion," ibid.; "Marine Geological Investigations," Roy. Dublin Soc., vol. viii.; "On the Sap," Phil. Trans. Roy. Soc., vi.; "On the Path of the Transpiration," Annals of Botany, vol. ix. 339 Waterloo Road, Dublin.

JONES, Lieut.-Col. Alfred Sir U.C., Assoc. M. Inst. C.E., was born in Liverpool, Jan. 24, 1832, and is the son of the late Archdeacon J. Jones, and his wife Hannah, daughter of Thomas Pares, Esq., J.P. of Hope Derby. He was educated at the L.C. College. While serving as a Lieut. in the 9th Lancers he passed his examinations by the Public Works Department, India, 1857, for employment as an Engineer, and graduated at the Staff College, 1860. Lieut.-Colonel Jones was sent at the battle of Buddikeeshwar at Delhi throughout the siege operations including the assault and capture of the city, having been Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General to the Cavalry from August 8 to Sept. 23, 1857, served with the 9th Lancers in Great pursuing column, and was present at the actions of Bolundshuhur and Aligarh, battle of Agra, where he was dangerously wounded, having received a mortal wound and twenty-two sabre cuts, was mentioned in the despatches of Hope Grant on three different occasions (Brevet of Major, Victoria Cross, &c. with Clasp). He was awarded the medal for the following service: "The Lieut. Jones charged the rebels and rode through the ranks of the rebels, killing the drivers, and, with Lieut. Yule's assistance, turned the guns of the village occupied by the rebels, which were quickly dislodged. This was a well conceived act, gallantly executed." As has been stated, he was Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General at the siege of Delhi, 1857, and held a similar appointment at the Cape of Good Hope, 1861-67; Adjutant of the Staff from 1869-70, when that appointment was abolished on his own evidence before a Royal Commission on Military Expenditure resulting in a saving of £400 per annum on the army estimates for the last 17 years, while the duties have been carried out efficiently as Lieut.-Colonel Jones proposed. In civil matters he has been Consulting Engineer to the Board of Wrexham for sewage disposal; Council Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 1876; Membre de la Société d'Hygiène, 1877; Fellow of the Royal Institute, 1880; and Member of the Institution of Municipal Engineers. He is the author of "Will a Sewage Pay?" 1874 (third edit., 1885), and papers on sewage disposal in the transactions of the Society of Arts and of the Sanitary Institute, and in other professional publications. But Lieut.-Colonel Jones is perhaps best known in connection with the Canvey Island scheme, introduced by himself and other engineers, approved and recommended by Lord Salisbury's Royal Committee on Metropolitan Sewage Discharge in their Final Report, 1884. This scheme has been elaborated and perfected by Lieut.-Colonel Jones and his partner, Mr. J. Bailey, F.R.S., Member Inst. C.E., and has been the consideration of the London County Council since 1889. In 1879 he was awarded one of the only two £100 prizes ever offered by the Royal Agricultural Society of England for the best-dredged sewage farms.

David Brynmor, M.P., Q.C., born at Pentrepoeth Morriston, Swansea, Glamorganshire, on May 12, 1861, and is the eldest son of the Rev. David Jones, of Swansea, sometime Minister of the Congregational Unions of South Wales and of Victoria. He was educated at University College School, University College, London, where he was Hume Scholar in Jurisprudence in 1883. He graduated LL.B. (Lond.) in 1885, obtained a studentship of the Council of the University of London, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1886. After practising in London and the South Wales Circuit from 1886 to 1892, he was appointed Judge of the Mid Wales County Court Circuit in the latter year, and transferred to the Gloucester Circuit in 1892, and resigned in 1893. He made a Q.C. in February 1893, he practised in the Gloucester division of Gloucestershire from 1893 to 1899, and was elected M.P. for the Swansea District in 1899, and acted for the Swansea District in the same way as a Liberal. He served as a member of the Royal Commission on the Affairs of Wales and Monmouthshire, 1893-1894. He is at present a member of the Executive Committee of the University of Wales, and Hon. Standing Member of the University, a governor of the University Colleges of Wales (Aberystwyth and South Wales and Monmouth), and one of the Whips of the Welsh Liberal Parliamentary party. Mr. Jones published "The Divine Order and Other Poems and Addresses," by Thomas Jones of Swansea, with an introduction by Mr. Browning, 1884; he has also published an essay on "Welsh History and Recent Research," 1891; "Home Rule and Imperial Sovereignty," 1886; and various magazine articles and papers on the Welsh laws. He is a vice-president of the Cymmrodorion Society, before which he has read several papers. He acted as Senior Counsel for the promoters of the Welsh University, and drafted the charter with Mr. Cadwaladr Davies, and defended it in the House of Commons in 1893. In 1895 he successfully acted as honorary arbitrator between masters and men in regard to the dispute and strike at Aber-gwynfe Collieries. He also took an active part in bringing together the Welsh National Liberal Convention at Cardiff in February 1898. He married in 1892 Florence, widow of A. de M. Mocatta, and daughter of Major Lionel Cohen. Addresses: 27 Bryanston Square, W.; and 12 King's Bench Walk, Temple.

JONES, Emily Elizabeth Constance, was born in 1848, at Langstone Court, Herefordshire, and is the eldest daughter of J. Jones, Esq., M.D., J.P., and his wife, Emily Edith, who was daughter of Thomas Oakeley, Esq., J.P., of Lydart House, Monmouth, and his wife, Elizabeth Pearce, co-heiress of Llanrumney Court, Monmouthshire, and was descended from the ancient Welsh families of Lewis of Llanthwy and Morgan of Llanrumney. Miss Jones was educated at Miss Robinson's, Alstone Court, Cheltenham, and at Girton College, Cambridge, and took a First Class in the Moral Sciences Tripos in 1880 (was bracketed with the Senior), and appointed Resident Lecturer in Moral Science at Girton College in 1884, and Librarian in 1889. She has retired from both offices. Miss Jones was joint translator with Miss Elizabeth Hamilton of "Lotze's Micro-cosmos," and editor of the translation, which was published in 1885, and reached a third edition in 1888. Miss Jones is also the author of "Elements of Logic as a Science of Propositions," published in 1890.

JONES, Henry Arthur, was born on September 28, 1851, at Grandborough, in Buckinghamshire, and is the son of Silvanus Jones. After receiving the middle-class education of that period at the Winslow School, he was sent into the world at thirteen to shift for himself. He was engaged in commercial pursuits for some years, devoting all his leisure to the study of literature and to writing, and it was not until Dec. 11, 1878, that his first play, "Only Round the Corner," was produced by Mr. Rousby at the Exeter Theatre. In the summer of 1879 he made his first appearance before a London audience as a dramatic author. This was in the comedietta "A Clerical Error," which was accepted by Mr. Wilson Barrett and produced by him at the Court Theatre. His next essay in dramatic writing was a play entitled "His Wife," an adaptation of Mark Hope's "Prodigal Daughter," which was written for and produced by Miss Bateman at Sadler's Wells Theatre, and was afterwards played in the provinces. In November 1882 "The Silver King" was produced by Mr. Wilson Barrett at the Princess's Theatre. This play ran for over a year, and has been since played without intermission in America, Australia, and the English provinces. In 1884 Mr. Henry Arthur Jones wrote the first of the series of plays of modern English life with which he has since become so closely identified. This play, "Saints and Sinners," was produced at the Vaudeville on September 25 of that year. The propriety of dealing with religious matters on the stage provoked a considerable amount of discussion, but the play ran for over 200 nights. After the production of "Saints and Sinners" Mr. Jones reverted for a time to melodrama, and wrote, amongst other plays, "Hoodman Blind," "The Noble Vagabond," "The Lord Harry," "Heart of Hearts," "Hard Hit," &c. But it was not until 1889 that he was able to devote himself to the class of work that was really congenial to his inclination. On Aug. 27, 1889, "The Middleman" was produced at the Shaftesbury Theatre with Mr. Willard in the leading part. This achieved an instantaneous success, and ran for over two hundred nights, and was followed on May 21, 1890, by "Judah," a psychological play which achieved equal popularity. Both these plays have been translated and produced in Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium, and Denmark. On Jan. 15, 1891, "The Dancing Girl" was produced at the Haymarket Theatre, with Mr. Tree in the leading part. This ran for over a year. In the autumn of 1891 Mr. Jones went into theatrical management, and his new comedy, "The Crusaders," was produced by him at the Avenue Theatre, running for one hundred nights. "The Bauble Shop" was produced by Mr. Chas. Wyndham at the Criterion Theatre on Jan. 26, 1893, and in the following autumn "The Tempter," a four-act tragedy, was produced by Mr. Tree at the Haymarket Theatre. Nearly all of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's plays have been produced in America. In 1894 Mr. Jones wrote "The Case of Rebellious Susan," which achieved a great success with Mr. Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore in the leading parts. Recent dramas from his pen are: "Michael and his Lost Angel," produced at the Lyceum Theatre in 1894; a successful clerical career, with Mr. Forbes in the leading part. In the same year "The Rogue's Comedy" was produced at the Garrick Theatre, and this was in 1897 by "The Physician and the Liars," both at the Criterion Theatre. Address: Townshend House, New Regent's Park, N.W.

JONES, Capt. Henry Mich late Minister at Lima and Quito in 1830, and entered the army. He served through the Crimean War with great distinction, being severely wounded at the Alma and the Redan. Left the army in 1857, he entered the Civil Service the next year. In 1860 he was Consul-General at Tabreez, and subsequently at Christiania and Philadelphia. In 1889 he was Minister at Bangkok, and promoted to Peru in 1894. He has

JONES, Kennedy, part proprietor of the London Daily Mail, and was Director of the London Evening Standard. Born in Glasgow, on May 4, 1843, he was educated at the High School, Glasgow. In 1884 he began his career as a journalist by joining the editorial staff of the Evening News, and in 1889 became the editor of the Birmingham Daily Mail. He came to London a few years later, and his address is: Daily Mail Office, Carmichael House, Temple, E.C.

JONES, Morris Charles, F.S.A., born in Montgomeryshire, May 1845, and educated at Bruce Castle, Tottenham. He is the author of many genealogical and antiquarian and privately-printed pamphlets, and of "Abbey of Valle Crucis: its Old Foundation Charter," 1866; and "Feudal Barons of Powys," 1880. He is the founder and chief supporter of the Powysland Club, an archaeological society for Montgomeryshire, and also of the Powysland Museum and Library at Llanidloes, with which he has been connected therewith. He has devoted much of his time to the illustration of the archaeological history of his native country, and in 1867 has been the editor of "The Montgomeryshire Collections," issued by the Powysland Club, which contain many valuable and useful contributions to local genealogy and history, and afford a large and extensive material for the study of the county of Montgomery. In 1887 the archaeological services were acknowledged by a testimonial raised by public subscriptions, which were devoted to the purchase of a fine life-size group representing a scene in the history of the county, which, at his request, was placed in the Powysland Museum.

JONES, Thomas Rupert, F.R.S., late Professor of Geology at the College, Sandhurst, naturalist, geologist, and antiquary, was et. 1, 1819, at No. 6 Wood Street, Idc, London, and is the son of John ilk merchant and silk throwster, of and Taunton (descendant of the ys family of North Wales), and Jones (née Burberry), of Coventry. He was President of the Geologists' Association, 1879-81; Vice-President of Section C, British Association, at Montreal, in 1884; and President of Section C, at Cardiff, in 1891. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and of the Geological Society of London; Honorary Member of numerous scientific societies, British and foreign; Recipient of the Murchison Geological Fund in 1882; and Lyell Medallist of the Geological Society in 1890. Address: 17 Parson's Green, Fulham, S.W.

JONES, Rev. William, Primitive Methodist minister, was born at Halesowen, Worcestershire, July 6, 1834. He received a fair modern education. His first appointment of special importance was to Tunstall, the mother church of the Primitive Methodist connection. His next special appointment was to Birmingham, in 1867. It was while here that his fame as a preacher and lecturer became universally known. His name became a household word not only in his own denomination, but in Nonconformist churches generally. He was a familiar figure and speaker on many great occasions in the famous Town Hall. From Birmingham he returned to Tunstall. During his term of ministerial service he was instrumental in building, at a cost of £9000, the Jubilee Memorial Schools opposite the church. At the same time he rendered important service to the denomination by preaching and lecturing up and down the kingdom in behalf of its various interests. He was a constant contributor to the denominational newspaper. His own church, large as it is, was always crowded with persons eager to listen to him when he was at home. He was elected chairman of the first School Board for Wolstanton. When, in 1877, Surrey Chapel was taken over from Rev. Newman Hall by the Primitive Methodist Conference, Mr. Jones was appointed pastor, and to him belongs the honour of founding the first Primitive Methodist church in the historic building. From Surrey he removed to Derby, where another special task awaited him. The Central Church was in course of building, and as soon as it was finished he commenced his labours there, and succeeded in drawing together a large congregation and building up a powerful church. Mr. Jones's next appointment was to Stepney Green Tabernacle, London. He laboured subsequently at Grays, Lincoln, and Sunderland. At the Conference of 1896 he was elected to the office of President of the denomination. On his retirement he was presented with the thanks of the Conference. He is now for the third time stationed at Tunstall, and for the second time holds the position of Chairman of the School Board, besides being President of the Free Church Council for Tunstall and District. He is now in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Address: The Manse, Forster Street, Tunstall, Staff.

JONES, The Most Rev. William West, D.D., Archbishop of Cape Town, was born in 1838, and is the sixth son of Edward Henry Jones, of Hackney. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was a Foundation Fellow from 1856 to 1859. He obtained a second class in Classical Moderations in 1858, and a fourth in the Final Honours School of Mathematics in 1860; B.A. 1860; M.A. 1864; B.D. 1869; D.D. 1874. He was appointed Dean of Arts in 1864, and Vice-President of his College in 1872. He was Vicar of Summertown from 1864 to 1874, and Whitehall Preacher in 1870-72. He was appointed Bishop of Cape Town in 1874, and Archbishop in 1897. He is married to a daughter of Mr. John Allen, of Altrincham, Cheshire. Address: Bishop's Court, Claremont, Cape Town.

JORDAN, John Newell, C.M.G., Chargé d'Affaires in Corea, was born in 1857, and in 1876 became a student-interpreter in China. Having been Acting-Consul at Kiungchow and Amoy, he was attached to the Legation as Accountant in 1886, Assistant Chinese Secretary in 1889, and Chinese Secretary in 1891. In 1896 he was promoted to be Consul-General for Corea, to reside at Seoul, and in 1897 he was made a C.M.G.

JOUBERT, Petrus Jacobus, in-Chief of the Transvaal, was born in 1831, and first distinguished himself by his defeat of Sir George (Clayton) Hill, 1881. In 1893 and 1894 he offered himself to be nominated for President of the South African Republic, but was easily defeated by President Kruger. In 1896 he was the chief factor in the surrender of Dr. Jameson, a Boer, he acts severely on the Boers, concealing his men behind native obstacles, and trusting to their friendship to prevent their position being exposed. In political matters he is entirely obedient to Kruger's domination.

JOY, George William, painter, born at Dublin in 1844, and son of W. Bruce Joy, M.D. He received his education at Harrow, and then studied art as a Royal Academy student, and in Paris under Bonnat and Jalabert. His principal works, exhibited at the Royal Academy, are "Farewell," 1871; "Wellington at the Danais," "Truth," "The King shall never be beaten for Rest," 1894, the "Death of General," "The Bayswater Bus" and "The Arc," 1895; "Patience," 1897; "Christ and the Little Child," "The Merchantman Seeking Goodly Pearls," "Mary of Bethany," 1899. He married Florence, daughter of Thomas Macdonald. Address: The Red Lodge, 51 Pall Mall, Paddington, W.

JOYCE, Thomas Heath, Editor of the Graphic and Daily News, was born in London on July 9, 1842, is the son of Thomas Joyce, of Exeter, Somerset. He received the price of his education on the Continent, and has been on the staff of the Graphic from the first issue of that important paper in 1869. He has translated Victor Hugo's "History of a Crime," besides writing articles on various subjects in the Graphic and other magazines. Address: Freshford Hill, Bromley, Kent.

JOYNT, Miss Maud, M.A., second daughter of Deputy General Christopher Joynt, Indian Army, and entered Alexandra College, Dublin, in 1881. In 1883, at the intermediate examinations, she gained an exhibition in the middle grade and three gold medals in the same examinations in 1884.

marks of all Ireland, two gold and silver medals. She matriculated at Royal University in 1886, taking first prizes in Latin, first place and second in German, first place and second in English, first honours in Experimental Physics, and later in the same year scholarship of Modern Literature. She did first class exhibitions in 1887-88; in the latter year the Henry Hutchinson Stewart scholarship (Mod. Literature) a very distinguished honour. Her degree was obtained in 1889, with first class honours in modern literature, and the degree of M.A. was conferred on her in 1890.

D. Professor John Wesley, D.D., F.R.S., geologist, was born at Bath, Feb. 18, 1840; but when he was eight years of age his family moved to the neighbourhood of London.

His earlier years he was engaged in mining, first in London and afterwards in Lincolnshire, but his taste for science, especially for geological studies, led him in 1863, to become a student in the School of Mines. In the following year he accepted the post of Analytical Chemist in one of the great iron and steel works at Sheffield, but while there he met with a railway accident that interrupted his work and studies for a considerable time.

Upon his recovery, he determined to devote himself entirely to his favourite study, and commenced a geological survey of the county of Lincolnshire, the results of his investigations being published in a number of memoirs on the geological formation, which he showed admirably developed in that and adjoining counties. In 1867 he was asked to join the staff of the Geological Survey and to continue his work in connection with that body. During a period of several years he was engaged in working out the relations between the Jurassic and the Midland district as compared with those of the Northern and Southern England, and his book on the Geology of Rutland, &c., deals with this important question. In 1871 he was assisted by his friend the late Matthew Dyer to act with him for a time as a

Inspector, and to assist in the preparation of the way for the operation of the Education Act of 1870 in the eastern suburbs of London. After the completion of this work, however, he returned to his geological studies, and commenced execution of a long-cherished project, unravelling the complexities of the geology of the Secondary Strata of the British Highlands. Not only was he able to show what are the true relations between the great series of Triassic and Jurassic rocks in that area, but he also discovered and studied very interesting deposits of Carboniferous and Cretaceous age, the existence of which in the district had been previously overlooked. These studies led him to the investigation of the relics of the great Tertiary Volcanoes of the Western Isles of Scotland; and during several years he was engaged in travelling in various volcanic regions, and making comparisons between these and the districts in the British Isles in which igneous action was rife during past geological times, a long series of memoirs being published as the result of these researches. In 1877 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the same year, upon the retirement of Sir Andrew Ramsay, became Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines; in 1881 he accepted the same position in the Royal College of Science. From 1877 to 1885 Professor Judd was Secretary to the Geological Society, and during the years 1886 and 1887 held the office of President of that Society. In 1891 the Geological Society awarded Professor Judd the highest honour in their gift—the Wollaston Medal. In 1895 Professor Judd succeeded Professor Huxley as Dean of the Royal College of Science, and in the same year he was created a Companion of the Bath (Civil Division). He is the author of "Geology of Rutland," 1875; "Volcanoes: what they are and what they teach," 1878; "The Student's Lyell," 1896. He has, besides, published many papers in the Trans. Roy. Soc., and other scientific periodicals. He married Jeannie Frances, daughter of John Jeyes, in 1878. Addresses: 22 Cumberland Road, Kew; and Athenæum.

K

KASSON, John Adams, American statesman, was born near Burlington, Vermont, Jan. 11, 1822. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1842; studied law in Massachusetts, and was admitted to the Bar. He practised law in St. Louis, Missouri, until 1857, when he removed to Des Moines, Iowa. In 1861 he was appointed First Assistant Postmaster-General by President Lincoln; resigned in 1862, and was elected to Congress, 1863-67. He was United States Postal Commissioner to Paris in 1863, and again in 1867, when he negotiated postal conventions with Great Britain and other nations. He was a member of the lower house of the Iowa Legislature from 1868 to 1873, when he was again elected to Congress, serving until 1877. In that year he was appointed Minister to Austria, serving till 1881, when he was again sent to Congress, until he went as Minister to Germany, 1884-85. In 1898 he was appointed on the Joint Commission to settle matters in dispute between Canada and the United States.

KATO, Takaaki, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Emperor of Japan at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1860, and was educated in the Imperial University of Tokio, where he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1881. He was Private Secretary to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Chief of the Political Bureau in the Foreign Office at Tokio, from 1887 to 1890. In the latter year he became Director of the Banking Bureau, and of the Revenue Bureau, in the Finance Department, and held these posts till 1894, when he was appointed to the Foreign Office and Directorship of the Political Affairs Bureau, with the rank of Minister Plenipotentiary. He was ordered to proceed to London as Envoy Extraordinary in November 1894, and has remained in that position since 1895. In recognition of his services during the Chino-Japanese War of 1894-95, he was decorated by the Emperor of Japan with the third class of the Rising Sun of the Empire of Japan. Address: Japanese Legation, 8 Sussex Square, Hyde Park, W.

KAWASÉ, Viscount Masataka, late Japanese Minister at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1839, and belongs to a family who in former times were vassals of the Prince of Choshu, in Japan. During the disturbed period preceding the restoration of the Mikado, Kawasé experienced many vicissitudes, but his first important appearance was in command of a force raised to defend the territory of Choshu from the army of the Shogun. The latter was completely defeated, and terms of peace were arranged. Kawasé then visited Europe, and resided for some time in England, being one of the first Japanese who devoted themselves to the study of Western institutions with the view of engrafting such as appeared suitable on those of their own country. On his return to Japan he was appointed Vice-Minister of Public Works by the present Emperor, and subsequently Vice-Chamberlain of the Imperial Household. In 1874 he was sent to Italy to represent Japan. He then successively filled the position of Senator and Vice-Minister of Justice, and in 1884 was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. James's, a post which he filled until the beginning of 1895, when he was succeeded by Viscount Aoki, and created Viscount in 1887, and recipient of numerous decorations.

KAYSERLING, M., born in Germany, June 17, 1822, was there and at the University of Aargau, in 1861, Rabbi of the Synagogue in September 1870, and Preacher of the Jewish Community in Pesth, Hungary. In 1861 he was daughter of the celebrated Dr. Philippson. Dr. Kayserling's works are: "Sephardim: Romanische Juden in Spanien," Leipzig, 1850; "Feiertag in Madrid, zur Geschichte der Spanische Portugiesischen Juden in Spanien," 1859-61; "Memorien seines Lebens und Werken," Berlin, 1861; "Der Dichter und sein Beitrag zur Geschichte der jüdischen Literatur," Berlin, 1867; "Mendelssohn, sein Leben und Werk," 1852; "Zum Siegesfeste und Danklieder von M. Mendelssohn," 1866; "Die Rituale der jüdischen Synagogen," 1867; "Schlachten Bibliothek," Berlin, 1870; also published a volume of "Distinguished Jewish Women," a graphical work on Jewish diplomatic statesmen; several series of literary articles in the Deutsch-Jüdische Literatur, Frankfurt's Monatsschrift für Israeliten in Wien, Stein'sche Bibliographie; and some sermons. His most recent works are: "Biblioteca Española-Portuguesa," 1890; "The First Jewish Congress and 'Gedenkbücher,'" a book of Jews of the nineteenth century.

KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH

Hon. Sir Ughtred James, Bart., J.P., D.L., is the eldest son, born 1844, of the late Sir James Philip Shuttlesworth, Bart., D.C.L., 55 years Secretary of the Council on Education, by Janet, only child and heiress of R. Shuttlesworth Esq., of Gawthorpe Hall, Lancashire. Ughtred was educated at Harrow and at the London University, and author of the "First Principles of Chemistry" (the second edition of which was published in 1870). At the time of the Liberal party in North-East shire, he contested that division and was defeated by a majority. In October 1869 he became Member of the House of Commons for Hastings. His maiden speech in s delivered on the second reading elementary Education Bill in 1870. he called the attention of the subject of the London water In 1874 he was re-elected Member ngs, and brought before the House e of the dwellings of working a London, eliciting the promise ecretary Cross which resulted, in the passing of the Artisans' Act. In 1878 he moved resolu- the Government of London. At general election, 1880, he lost for Hastings, and having failed at tion in 1881, at Coventry, he was e House of Commons till he was by a majority of 2359, in 1885, Clitheroe Division of North-East re. During the time he was not ouse he served for two years on on School Board. He was also a of the Royal Commission on Re- y and Industrial Schools. He Under-Secretary for India when stone's third administration was 1886, and subsequently was ap- Chancellor of the Duchy of Lan- d a Privy Councillor. At the election of 1886, Sir U. KE, Right Rev. John Joseph, a Roman Catholic prelate, was Ballyshannon, county Donegal, Sept. 12, 1839. He went with his America in 1846, and was edu- St. Charles's College, and at St. minary, Baltimore, and in 1866 uined to the priesthood. He was pastor of St. Patrick's Church, ton, until 1878, when he was con- Bishop of Richmond, Virginia. he was appointed Rector of the University of America, which nally opened at Washington in 1 that year he received the degree from Laval University, Quebec, 893 that of LL.D. from Harvard y. At the request of the Catholic Archbishops of the United States, he organised and superintended the representa- tion of the Catholic Church in the World's Parliament of Religions held during the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, 1893. In 1897 he resigned as Rector of the Catholic University of America, and went to Rome.

KEBBEL, Thomas Edward, M.A., youngest son of the late Rev. Henry Kebbel, Vicar of Wistow and Kilby, in the county of Leicester, was born at Kilby Nov. 23, 1828, and graduated at Oxford in 1849. He was called to the Bar in 1862. Mr. Kebbel's first introduction to journal- ism was in 1855, when he was invited to join the staff of the Press newspaper, then newly established by the late Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli as the weekly organ of the Tory party. In 1867, when the Day newspaper was founded, repre- senting the views of the "Cave," Mr. Kebbel was engaged as the leading political writer in support of the Conservative Re- form Bill. Since that time he has been a contributor to the principal publications of the day—the Quarterly, Edinburgh, Fortnightly, Nineteenth Century, and National Reviews, Blackwood's, the Cornhill, Fraser, and Macmillan's Magazine, and, under Mr. Delane, he was a frequent con- tributor to the literary columns of the Times. In 1873 he joined the staff of the Standard, on which he has continued ever since. In 1864 he published "Essays on History and Politics"; and in 1881, on the death of Lord Beaconsfield, he was employed to edit a collection of his speeches published in two volumes by Messrs. Longman. In 1886 he published "Tory Administrations from the Accession of Mr. Pitt to Power in 1783 to the death of Lord Beaconsfield in 1881." In 1887 he brought out "The Agricultural La- bourer," an account of the English peasantry, pronounced by the Edinburgh Review to be the best of its kind. A new edition of this work came out in 1893. In 1888 he contributed a life of the poet Crabbe to the series of Eminent Writers. He is also the author of lives of Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Derby in the Statesmen series, and has recently pub- lished "The Old and the New," a com- parison between the country life of 1890 and 1840 (1891); and "Sport and Nature" (1893). He is a contributor of articles to the "Dictionary of National Biography." Address: 54 Cathcart Road, West Ken- sington, W.

KEENE, The Most Rev. James Bennett, Bishop of Meath, was born in Dublin on Oct. 25, 1849, and is the young- est son of A. Bennett Keene, M.A. He was educated at Rathmines School and Trinity College, Dublin, where his academic career was phenomenally brilliant. He was first Honour-man and Prize-man in Classics in 1867; first of the First Honour-men in Science in 1867, 1868, and 1869; first Primate's Hebrew Prize-man in the same year, and winner of scholarships in Mathematics, Hebrew, Syriac, and Chaldee, and of several theological prizes. He became Rector of Navan in 1879, and has been Prebendary of Tipper and Canon of St. Patrick's, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Meath, Head-Master of Navan College, and Diocesan Nominator and Secretary of the Board of Education. He is a member of the Senate of Trinity College, Dublin. Address: Bishops court, Ardbraccan, Navan.

KEKEWICH, The Hon. Sir Arthur, late Standing Counsel to the Bank of England, was born in 1832, and is the second son of Samuel Trehawke Kekewich, Pennore, Exeter, at one time M.P. for South Devon. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in Lit. Hum., and a second class in Mathematics, afterwards, in 1851, becoming Fellow of Exeter. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1858; made Q.C. in 1877; Bencher of his Inn in 1881; and was raised to the Judicial Bench (Chancery Division) in 1886. He married Marianne, daughter of F. W. Freshfield, in 1858. Addresses: 19 Park Crescent, Portland Place, W.; and Athenaeum.

KEKEWICH, Sir George William, K.C.B., D.C.L., Secretary to the Education Department, is the third son of the late Samuel Trehawke Kekewich, M.P., and a younger brother of the Judge, and was born in 1842. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first class in Classical Moderations, and a second class in Lit. Hum. In 1864 he entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn. He was appointed Examiner to the Education Department, the central authority for primary education, in 1867; Senior Examiner in 1871, and Secretary in 1890. In 1897 he was made Hon. D.C.L. of Durham. Address: Meadhurst, Sunbury Common, Middlesex.

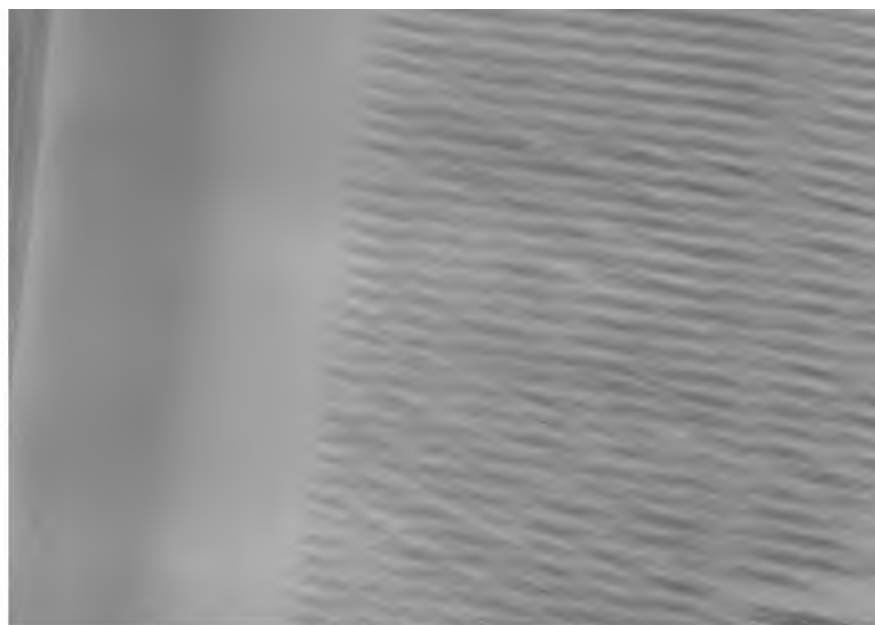

KELLOGG, Clara Louise, American vocalist, was born at Sumterville, South Carolina, July 1842. In 1843 her parents returned with her to Connecticut, where they remained until 1856, when they went to New York. At an early age she gave evidence of musical talent, and after some years of careful study made her first appearance at the Academy of Music in New York in 1861. After further study she appeared as Mrs. Gounod's "Faust," in the same year. Her success was not long within the next two years, as Linda di Chamounix, in the "Fanny of Seville," "La Sonnambula," "Lammermoor," and others. On Feb. 2, 1867, she made a successful London as Marguerite in "Faust." She returned to the United States in 1872 she again visited England at the Drury Lane Opera. In 1873-74 she organised an Entertainment Company, continuing until 1875, and going to Europe once more in 1876, at Her Majesty's in London. In 1877 she appeared at the Imperial Opera Houses of Vienna, Petersburg, and has since appeared in opera and concert in principal cities of the United States. She was married some years ago to Dr. Kosch.

KELLY, Rev. Charles Henry, M.A., B.D., was born at Salisbury, Nov. 25, 1833, and entered the School of the Society of Friends, Wesleyan College, Didburg, in 1851. During the first eleven years of his life he was Chaplain to Methodist troops, and was actively engaged during that time in securing the recognition of the rights of Nonconformists in the Army and Navy. For four years he was at the head of the Wesleyan School Department as the Secretary; and he was appointed superintendent of the general work of Methodism in 1880. He was the Delegate from the Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New York in 1888. Mr. Kelly holds a degree of D.D., although he has not received it. Address: Wesleyan Conference Office, City Road, London.

KELLY, The Right Rev. Butler Knill, Bishop of Moray, Caithness, N.B., was born in 1822, educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. in 1845, and D.D. in 1867. He was created Coadjutor-Bishop of New York in 1867, and succeeded as Bishop of New York in 1876. He was appointed Commissary to the Bishop of Chester in 1879; Archdeacon of Chester in 1880; Bishop-Commissary of Salisbury in 1884; elected Bishop-Coadjutor of Moray and Caithness in 1885; and Bishop in 1886. Address: Fife House, Inverness.

sity, he attracted the attention of the scientific men of the country by his paper "On the Uniform Motion of Heat in Homogeneous Solid Bodies, and its Connection with the Mathematical Theory of Electricity." The method of this paper was quite original, and later proved of the greatest importance in the discussion of problems in electrostatics and magnetism. This paper was soon followed by others showing the same remarkable scientific insight and mathematical ability, and it was at once manifest that Thomson was destined to take a foremost place as a scientific worker. In 1845 he became the first editor of the Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal, and held that office for nearly seven years. In its predecessor, The Cambridge Mathematical Journal, his article mentioned above had appeared, and several others of later date, of which we may note that "On the Linear Motion of Heat." From among the articles of later years, which have appeared in the various scientific periodicals or as communications to the learned societies, only a few of the most important can be selected for mention here. By his paper "On Electrical Images" he introduced an idea which has led to great advances in the mathematical theory of electricity. The value of his paper "On an Absolute Thermometric Scale" is shown by the universal use that is now made of that conception in calculations in thermodynamics. Many of his papers deal with the theory of heat—"On the Dynamical Theory of Heat"; "On the Thermal Effects of Fluids in Motion" (Joule and Thomson); "Compendium of Fourier Mathematics for the Conduction of Heat in Solids"; "Elasticity and Heat"—and his work in this department is worthy of special notice; for some of it was carried out in conjunction with Joule, and the warm friendship which existed between these two workers is a noteworthy feature in the lives of both. Other papers worthy of special mention are the following: "On a Universal Tendency in Nature to the Dissipation of Mechanical Energy"; "On the Theory of the Electric Telegraph"; "On the Use of Observations of Terrestrial Temperature for the Investigation of Absolute Dates in Geology"; "On the Electro-Dynamic Qualities of Metals." These papers, with others, have all been collected and published in 3 vols. under the title of "Mathematical and Physical Papers." The third volume was published in 1890, but since then many valuable papers have been published, of which the most recent are a lecture to the Victoria Institute "On the Age of the Earth," and a lecture to the Royal Institution "On Volta-Contact

 and in 1891 Chancellor of the Diocese of St. Albans. He was the junior counsel for the Bishop of Lincoln in the historical trial of that prelate before the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1889-90, and has been engaged in a number of other important ecclesiastical cases. Mr. Kempe is the author of a number of papers on mathematical subjects, the value of which has been recognised by his election to a Fellowship of the Royal Society in 1881. The earlier of these papers were mainly about "linkages"; the most important being one published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1875, "On a general method of producing exact rectilinear motion by linkwork," and a little book,
 "How to Draw a Straight Line," published in 1877. Later papers related to some interesting theorems as to the movement of a plane (Nature, vol. xviii. p. 149), the colouring of maps (id. vol. xxi. p. 399);
 the graphical representation of invariants and covariants (Proc. Lond. Math. Soc., vol. xvii. p. 108, and vol. xxiv. p. 97); the connection between logic and geometry (id.
 vol. xxi. p. 147) and knots (*Proc. Roy. Soc.
 Edinburgh*, 1886). In 1886 Mr. Kempe communicated to the Royal Society an important paper on the nature of the subject matter of exact thought, entitled "A Memoir on the Theory of Mathematical Form," which was printed in the Philosophical Transactions for that year. He has taken an active part in the management of the London Mathematical Society, of which body he was for some years the Treasurer, and was in 1893 and 1894 the President. He has served as a Manager of the Royal Institution in Albemarle of the Royal Society. He married (2), in

KEMPE, The Rev. John Edward,
 M.A., son of A. J. Kempe, Esq., F.S.A., a distinguished antiquary, was born March 9, 1810; educated at St. Paul's School and Clare College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1833 as a Senior Optime, and first class in Classics; and M.A. in 1837.
 He was appointed Curate of Tavistock, Devon, in 1833, and elected a Fellow of his College in 1841. He became Curate of Barnet, Herts, in 1844; incumbent of St.
 John's, St. Pancras, on the presentation of Bishop Blomfield, in 1846; of St. Barnabas,

Kensington, in 1848; and Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, on the presentation of Lord Aberdeen, as Premier, 1853. In 1861 he was appointed by Bishop Tait to the Prebendal Stall of Chamberlainewood, in St. Paul's; in 1864 he became one of her Majesty's Chaplains; and in 1868 he was elected one of the Proctors in Convocation for London, being re-elected in 1874. In 1880 he retired from Convocation, and in 1895 resigned the Rectory of St. James. He was a rural Dean of the Diocese, and is considered to have rendered great services to the Anglican Church in general, and especially to its cause in London, by having established, and conducted as President for many years, monthly conferences, at which clergy and laity met for the discussion of Church questions. Mr. Kempe has published lectures on the Book of Job, and on Elijah; occasional sermons and prefaces to lectures delivered in St. James's Church on "The Use and Abuse of the World," "Companions for the Devout Life," and "Classic Preachers of the English Church," besides an adaptation of Bishop Andrewes' "Devotions," &c. Mr. Kempe is also the founder of the St. James's Diocesan Home for Female Penitents; and he was one of Bishop Tait's principal counsellors and coadjutors in the origination and earlier working of the Bishop of London's Fund. In 1868 Mr. Kempe was offered the Bishopric of Calcutta by Lord Cranborne (now Marquis of Salisbury), who was then Indian Minister, but declined it for family reasons. In 1843 he married Harriet, daughter of the Rev. R. Wood, of Osmington House, Dorset, by whom he has a daughter and four sons, of whom one is Chancellor of the Diocese of Newcastle, Southwell, and St. Albans. His present address is 14 Montague Place, W.

KENDAL, Mr., the stage name of Mr. William Hunter Grimston, was born in London on Dec. 16, 1813. He was educated at a private school and under a tutor, and went on the stage in Glasgow in 1862. Here he remained for several years, supporting Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, Helen Faucit, &c., and in 1866 appeared for the first time in London, at the Haymarket Theatre, the play being "A Dangerous Friend." He played many important parts at the Haymarket, at the Court, and at the Old Prince of Wales's Theatre. From 1879 to 1888 he was lessee and manager, together with Mr. John Hare, of the St. James's Theatre, and with that distinguished player produced "The Queen's Shilling," "The Squire," "Impulse," "The Ironmaster," "A Scrap of Paper," &c., &c. He married the well-known actress, Miss Madge Robertson, in 1882, and acted with her ever since. He is a Canadian and American actor, and between the years 1880 and 1885 was exceptionally successful at the Portland Place, W.

KENDAL, Mrs. Mrs. W. Hunter Grimston, nee Margaret Robertson, was born in Grimsby, Lincolnshire, March 14, 1838. Her grandfather, her father, and her uncle were all actors. Her father was the dramatist T. W. Robertson. "Madge" Robertson's debut was made on July 29, 1860, when she appeared at the Haymarket as Ophelia in the Hamlet of Walter Montgomery. On March 14, 1868, she made her first success in the metropolis as Lillian Dumont in Dr. Westland Marston's "Romance," which was performed the first time on that occasion at the Haymarket Theatre. On Aug. 12, 1868, Robertson was married to Mr. W. Hunter Grimston, who on the stage society is known by his assumed name, Kendal. In the ensuing five years she appeared at the Haymarket in many characters. The creation of the part of Lillian in "New Men and Old" gave Mrs. Kendal a position as one of the leading comedienne of the day. In 1875 she began a short engagement at the Opera Comique, and in the autumn joined the company organised by John Hare for the Court Theatre. After she joined the Prince of Wales's Theatre then under the management of Mr. Mrs. Bancroft. In January 1877, Kendal returned to the Court Theatre. In 1879 she joined the company at the St. James's Theatre, under the joint management of Mr. Kendal and Mr. Hare. In September 1889 Mr. and Mrs. Kendal went to America, where they made four tours up to 1895, when they returned to England, having obtained extraordinary success. Mrs. Kendal contributed to Murray's Magazine a series of gossip articles, chiefly autobiographical, entitled "Dramatic Addresses: 12 Portland Place, W. The Lodge, Fife, Yorks.

KITCHENER OF KHARTOUM, Major-General Sir Horatio t, R.E., G.C.B., K.C.M.G., Sirdar Egyptian army, and Pacha, eldest the late Lieut.-Colonel H. H. Kit- of the 13th Dragoons, was born 1850, and educated at the Royal Academy, Woolwich. He entered y as a Lieutenant of Royal Engi- January 1871, and was promoted in January 1883, Major in October d Colonel in April 1888. During the Prussian War of 1870 he saw some on the French side as a volunteer. t years between 1874 and 1882 were 1 civil employment. In 1874 he the survey of Western Palestine for Conder, but after the attack arty at Safed, in 1875, he returned and, and for two years was engaged g down the Palestine Exploration map. Returning to the Holy Land he executed the whole of the sur- Galilee. In 1878 he was sent to to organise the Courts. He was pointed Vice-Consul at Erzeroum. ntly he returned to Cyprus and survey of the entire island. In aring that an Egyptian army was rganised by Sir Evelyn Wood, he volunteered for the service, and was ap- pointed one of the two Majors of the cavalry. Major Kitchener soon acquired a knowledge of the Egyptian character, so that he was often entrusted with missions of some delicacy, which were always car- ried out in a most satisfactory manner. In June 1884 he was appointed Deputy- Assistant Adjutant-General of the Intelli- gence Department under Sir Chas. Wilson, and took part in the Nile Expedition. He also drew up a scheme for the relief of Khartoum and the rescue of Gordon. It was to have been effected by a small brigade of infantry, led with confidence and moved with celerity, but the plan was overruled. For his services he was several times mentioned in despatches, and was promoted Brevet Lieut.-Colonel. In August 1886 he succeeded General Watson as Governor of the Red Sea Territories, and the judicious advice he then gave the Arabs enabled them to overthrow Osman Digna at Tamai with great slaughter. Subsequently he succeeded Colonel Cherm- side as Governor-General of the Red Sea Littoral, and Commandant at Suakin. At the action of Handoub he commanded the Egyptian troops, and was severely wounded. In May 1888 he left for Eng- land, being succeeded at Suakin by Lieut.-Colonel Holled Smith. Upon his arrival he was nominated Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, which appointment carries with it the rank of Colonel; he was also awarded the Medjidie of the second class. Towards the end of the year Colonel Kitchener again left for Egypt, and was appointed to com- mand a Brigade of the Egyptian army in the Soudan. He was present at the action of Gamaizah, and was mentioned in despatches. At the battle of Toski, in August 1889, he was in command of the mounted troops. He was again mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B. In 1892 he succeeded Sir Francis Grenfell as Sirdar of the Egyptian army, with the local rank of Ferik or Lieut.-General. Colonel Kitchener had been, since 1888, Adjutant-General and second in command of the army, and also Inspector-General of Police at Cairo. His next achievement was the re-capture of Dongola. In the summer of 1896 an expeditionary force, composed of English and Egyptian troops, advanced into the Soudan with the object of re- taking from the Dervishes the lost pro- vince of Dongola, and after several successful engagements the whole pro- vince was subdued. Sir Herbert Kitchener was promoted Major-General and created a K.C.B. for distinguished service in the field. The Khedive also conferred upon him the Medjidie of the first class, and the Osmanieh of the second class. The vic- tory enabled him to extend a railway to rise in the reign of George IV. educated in Glasgow, and appointed Head-Master of the Normal School, Ceylon, before he was twenty age. He was partner in a coffee plantation in the interior of the island, and wrote the "History of Ceylon," from chronicles, and "Forest Life in Ceylon" from his own experience. He was first Hon. Sec. of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. He was subsequently appointed Professor of Logic in the Calcutta University, and in 1860 was transferred as Commissioner to Oudh by Lord

His "Private Life of an Eastern Ruler," published before the great Indian Mutiny broke out, gave a faithful account of the reign of Nussir-ood-deen, King of Oudh, incidentally of the state of that province before its annexation. This work was translated into most of the languages of Europe, and was referred to in Parliamentary supporters of the Government of India as proving the necessity for the annexation of Oudh to the British dominions in India. In Fraser's Magazine, when

Mr. Froude, Mr. Knighton published "Village Life in Oudh," and, in 1871, issued his "Private Life of an Eastern Ruler."

Mr. Knighton retired from the Oudh Commission in 1878, and devoted himself to literature. He was elected a Vice-President of the Society of Literature in London, and the International Literary Association of Paris. In 1889 he had a statue of Shakespeare on the Boulevard Haussmann, in Paris—a statue modelled by Paul Fournier, the French sculptor. Mr. Knighton is Doctor of Arts, a Doctor of Philosophy, and Doctor of Laws of the Giessen University in Germany. These degrees were conferred on him when Baron Liebig was President of the Philosophical Faculty in Göttingen University. His most recent work, "Lessons for Life," was translated into French by M. Léon Delbos, under the title "Lectures pour la Vie," and has been popular in Paris, in London, and in America. Of Mr. Knighton's contributions to the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature the most remarkable are "Early History," "Cleon the Democrat," "Philosophy of Epicurus and Modernism," and "Greek and Latin Wit." He died, in 1883, Charlotte, daughter of V. Drake, K.C.B. Address: Tile Street, Leonard-on-Sea.

KNOLLYS, Sir Courtenay, K.C.M.G., Secretary of Trinidad, was born in 1841 and is the fourth son of Canon Knollys. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a second class in the Final Schools. He rowed for Oxford in the boat race in 1872 and 1873; won the Diamond Sculls at Henley in 1872, and the Goblets in 1873. In 1874 he was appointed Sub-Receiver of Trinidad; from 1879 to 1894 he was Auditor-General and Colonial Secretary of Barbadoes, and in the latter year was appointed to his present post. He married in 1874 Ellen May, daughter of P. H. de la Motte, and in 1897 was created a K.C.M.G. His address is: Port of Spain, Trinidad.

KNOLLYS, Sir Francis K., K.C.M.G., K.C.B. (Civil), was born in the thirties, and is the second son of the late General the Right Hon. Sir W. T. Knollys, K.C.B., and Elizabeth, daughter of the late Sir J. St. Aubyn. He is well known as Private Secretary and Groom-in-Waiting to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. He received the honour of knighthood in 1897. He married in 1887 a daughter of the late Sir H. Tyrwhitt, Bart., and of the Baroness Berners. Official address: St. James's Palace, S.W.

KNOWLES, James, F.R.I.B.A., born in 1831, was educated as an architect at a private school, at University College, in his father's office, and in Italy. He is a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and has executed many architectural works, chiefly in London and its neighbourhood—amongst which may be mentioned Aldworth, the Surrey residence of Lord Tennyson; Kensington House, with its gardens and adjuncts; the Thatched House Club, St. James's Street; the public garden and fountain in Leicester Square; Albert Mansions in Victoria Street; and St. Saviour's, St. Philip's, and St. Stephen's churches at Clapham. Mr. Knowles has also been engaged in literature from an early age, contributing many articles to journals and reviews, and in 1860 compiling (from Sir Thomas Malory) "The Story of King Arthur," which reached a sixth edition. In 1869 he originated the Metaphysical Society, a club consisting of forty members, being chiefly eminent representatives of the most various forms of belief and contemporary thought on speculative subjects—Anglican, Roman Catholic, Nonconformist, Positivist, Agnostic, and Atheistic—and constituted for the full, free, and confidential discussion of philosophical questions. The list of members included Lord Tennyson, Mr. Gladstone, Dr. Martineau, Cardinal Manning, the Archbishop of York, Prof. Huxley, Prof. Tyndall, Prof. W. K. Clifford, Father Dalgavus, Mr. John Morley, Mr. Arthur Balfour, Dr. Ward, Mr. Froude, Mr. Ruskin, the Duke of Argyll, the Bishop of St. David's (Thirlwall), the Bishop of Peterborough (Magee), the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (Ellicott), Mr. Frederic Harrison, Sir J. Fitzjames Stephen, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Lord Selborne, Sir F. Pollock, Mr. R. H. Hutton, Prof. Seeley, Prof. Henry Sidgwick, Sir M. E. Grant Duff, Mr. Robert Lowe (Lord Sherbrooke), Lord Arthur Russell, Mr. Shadwick Hodgson, Mr. James Hinton, Mr. St. George Mivart, Sir Andrew Clark, Sir John Lubbock, Prof. Pritchard, Dean Stanley, Sir William Gull, the Dean of St. Paul's (Church), the Rev. F. D. Maurice, Prof. Sylvester, Mr. Walter Bagehot, Mr. Mark Pattison, Rev. Dr. Mozley, Mr. Croom Robertson, &c. In 1870 he succeeded Dean Alford in the editorship of the Contemporary Review, which, by enlisting the aid of the members of the Metaphysical Society, he raised to a position of influence and importance. In 1877, owing to a change in the proprietorship of the Contemporary Review, a separation took place between it and Mr. Knowles, when—supported by more than one hundred writers of celebrity (mostly members of the Metaphysical Society, and contributors to the Contemporary Review)—he established the Nineteenth Century, a monthly review, in which, as his own property, the principle of the unfettered and unbiassed discussion of all topics of public interest, by authors signing their own names, might be preserved without interference. The Nineteenth Century immediately attained, and still preserves, a very wide circulation. The introductory sonnet was written by Lord (then Mr.) Tennyson, who had become intimately acquainted with Mr. Knowles, consulting with him upon all matters of business, &c., and sharing rooms with him, for several years, as a joint-tenant, in Victoria Street, Westminster. A very influentially-signed protest against the proposed Channel Tunnel Scheme which appeared in the Review largely assisted in defeating that project, Mr. Gladstone often reproaching the editor that "he had stopped the Channel Tunnel," and another important protest signed by hundreds of women of all ranks against "Female Suffrage" helped to hinder that scheme. Mr. Knowles is a collector of works of art, a member of the Burlington Fine Arts Club, and a frequent contributor to the Winter Exhibition of the Old Masters at the Royal Academy and to other exhibitions. Permanent address: Queen Anne's Lodge, St. James's Park, S.W.

John Knox, Vicar of Exton, Rutland, born on Dec. 6, 1847, at Bangor, North Wales, was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he was elected a scholar in 1865, took a first class in Moderations, and a first class in Lit. Hum., and a first class in Law and Modern History, and took the degree of B.A. in 1868, and of M.A. in 1872, whilst the hon. D.D. was conferred upon him in 1873. At Oxford he was a Fellow of Magdalen College from 1868 to 1875, and held the office of Vicar of St. John Baptist from 1879; tutor of Merton College, 1885; and chaplain of Merton, 1885. He became rector of St. Beauchamp, Leicester, in 1888, and of Aston, Birmingham, and was appointed chaplain to the Bishop of Worcester in 1891. Mr. Knox was in 1894, Hon. Canon of Worcester, rector of Philip's, Birmingham, Archdeacon of Birmingham, and Bishop Suffragan of the Diocese of Worcester, married (1) in 1878, Ellen French, daughter of the Rt. Rev. Theobald French, Bishop of Lahore (1892); (2) in 1895, Ethel of the Rev. Canon Newton, Redditch. Address: St. Philip's Birmingham.

K. Mrs., née Isa Craig, was born at Midhurst, Oct. 17, 1831. At an early age she began to contribute anonymously to al periodicals, and at last her contributions to the Scotsman, under the signature "Isa," attracted notice, and led to her employment in the literary department of that journal. She published a collection of her poems in 1857. In 1857 she came to London, and was engaged by Mr. Hastings to edit the National Association for the Advancement of Social Science, to which she acted as secretary and literary assistant. Her marriage with her cousin, John Knox, in 1859, she won the prize for her Ode (against 620 competitors), recited at the Burns Centenary in 1859, and in 1865 published "Duchess and other poems. Among later works from her pen may be mentioned "The Consolation," 1874, and "Esther's story, which in 1880 was in its third edition. In 1892 selections of her poems were edited by Dr. Japp.

KNUTSFORD, Viscount, The Hon. Henry Thurstan Holman, G.C.M.G., Knight of Justice of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, son of Sir Henry Holland, the physician, and President of the Institution of Great Britain, and daughter of James Caldwell, Wood, Staffordshire, was born Oct. 3, 1825, and educated at Harrow School, Cambridge, taking a first-class degree in 1847. After the preliminaries he was called to the Bar in 1849 by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and joined the Middle Temple. Undertakings of a delicate nature soon devolved upon him, and he was frequently employed by the Treasury, in conjunction with Mr. W. Stephenson, the late Mr. Hamilton, then Secretary to the Treasury, and the late Mr. George Arliss, also attached to the same office, to reorganise the establishment of public offices, among the numbering the Ecclesiastical Commission, the Law Board, and the Woods and Forests Commission. In 1851 he was employed by the then Lord Chancellor in the onerous duty of drawing up the Bill, in 1852, became law under the name of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. This task he carried out under the direction of the late Mr. Justice Willes, the Royal Commissioners. The Common Law Procedure Act of 1854

which followed the measure just mentioned, was the next work upon which Sir Henry Holland was engaged as draftsman. He was next employed by Lord Chief Baron Sir Fitzroy Kelly in drafting two of the criminal measures which became law in 24th and 25th Vict. The County Court Judgeship of Northumberland was offered him by Lord Campbell when Lord Chancellor, but the appointment was declined. Sir Henry continued to practise at the Bar until the beginning of the year 1867, when Lord Carnarvon selected him to fill the office of legal adviser to the Colonial Office. In 1870 he was promoted to an assistant under-secretaryship, and remained in that office until August 1874, when he resigned in order to stand for the borough of Midhurst; he was elected without a contest, and took his seat in the House of Commons in the following session. In 1885, after the borough of Midhurst was disfranchised, Sir H. T. Holland stood for the new borough of Hampstead, and beat his opponent, the Marquis of Lorne, by a large majority. In June 1885, when Lord Salisbury took office, Sir H. T. Holland accepted the post of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and held that post till the September following, when he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, and became a Privy Councillor. He was again returned for Hampstead in 1886, and again appointed Vice-President of the Council on Education. In January 1887 he was appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies, continuing in office till 1892, and as Secretary of State presided over the Colonial Conference which was held in London in 1887. In 1888 he was raised to the peerage, and took the title of Knutsford. In 1889 he carried through the House of Lords a Bill for giving a constitutional government to Western Australia, but it was rejected in the House of Commons. It was, however, passed in 1890 by both Houses. In 1895 he was created a Viscount. Lord Knutsford is a Bencher of the Inner Temple, a Deputy-Lieutenant of Middlesex, and a magistrate for the counties of Surrey and of the county of London. He is also a Trustee of the National Portrait Gallery. He married (1), in 1852, Elizabeth Margaret, daughter of Mr. N. Hibbert of Watford, and (2), in 1858, Margaret Jean, daughter of the late Sir Charles Trevelyan. Addresses: Pinewood, Witley, Godalming, Surrey; and Athenæum.

KOCH, Professor Dr. Robert, the eminent bacteriologist, was born at Klausthal, in Hanover, on Dec. 11, 1843. He studied medicine at the University of

Göttingen from 1862 to 1866, and having taken his degree was appointed assistant-surgeon in the General Hospital at Hamburg, and afterwards practised privately at Langenhagen in Hanover, and at Rackewitz in Posen. In 1872, when District surgeon at Wallestein, he began his bacteriological investigations, and consequently was appointed in 1880 a member of the Imperial Board of Health. About that time he discovered a method of colouring microscopical preparations, by means of which he in 1882 isolated the tubercle bacillus, and produced tuberculosis by its inoculation in animals. In 1883 he was appointed a Privy Councillor, and given the direction of the German Cholera Commission, which visited Egypt and India. He then discovered the so-called "comma" cholera bacillus, and for his services received a gift of 100,000 marks (£5000). Two years later he went to France to make further investigations in regard to the cholera bacillus, and on his return was appointed Professor in Berlin University and Director of the Institute of Hygiene in Berlin. In 1891 he became an honorary Professor and Director of the New Institute for Infectious Diseases. At the beginning of the year 1890 he became famous for his discovery of the phthisis bacillus, and for a specific agent which arrests the ravages of the same. Invalids crowded to Berlin to be inoculated with Dr. Koch's lymph, of which the secret was closely kept. The German Government even sought to obtain a monopoly of its sale. The lymph was sent to various hospitals in Germany and abroad, notably to King's College, London. A committee of French doctors, however, visited Berlin in 1890 in order to study the newest Koch method, and announced, as a result of their investigations, that in several cases the lymph had aggravated the disease it was meant to cure. The celebrated Virchow also maintained that the injected lymph tended to produce centres of irritation. During the six years (1890-1896) work on the Koch cure and bacteria-caused disease has been going on steadily. In 1897 he said that, on the whole, his experiments led him to believe that perfect immunity from tuberculosis was brought about in two or three weeks after using the larger doses of his newer tuberculin; but he uttered an emphatic warning against unrealisable expectations. A patient who, in the natural course of things, has only a few more months to live can gain no benefit from his treatment; but with suitable cases he has had no failure. In 1896 he was summoned to Cape Colony to study the cattle plague (rinderpest) then raging in South Africa. In the next year he visited India to study the bubonic plague, whence a German East Africa and how this plague was really a rat-bacillæmia. Human in China, Tibet, the Kissaiba, close to the Victoria. He anticipated that, within a distance of time, the last plague would disappear. He has written on splenic fever and wound-plague.

KÖHLRAUSCH, Friedrich, German physicist, was born at Oct. 14, 1840, and is the son of Kohlrusch, Professor of Physiol. langem. He was educated chiefly by his father, and at an early age he was appointed to the chair of Physiology. He was promoted in 1870 to Zürich, Darmstadt, Würzburg, and finally appointed President of the Imperial Physical and Technical College at Charlottenburg. His chief work has been: "Leitfaden der physikalischen" of which the eighth edition was published at Leipzig in 1896; "Das Leitvermögen der Elektrolyte" (Leipzig, 1890), in conjunction with L. Holborn. He also contributes greatly to the Annalen der Physik. He is a member of the scientific societies of Berlin, Munich, St. Petersburg, and Haarlem, and of the Society of London. Address: 25, Unter den Eichen, Charlottenburg.

KÖLLIKER, Rudolph A., F.R.S., German physiologist and anatomist, was born at Zurich, July 8, 1817, and became Professor of Physiology in his native town in 1845. He was appointed to the chair of Anatomy at Würzburg in 1847. Among his chief works are: "Manual of Human Histology," which was translated into English in 1854; and the Challenger report on the tulida, 1880.

KOLTZOFF - MASSALSKY, Princess, whose literary pseudonym is "Princess Dora d'Istria," was one of the daughters of Michael Ghika, and niece of Prince Gregory IV., who was the first to spread among the people of Wallachia liberal institutions of civilisation. She was born at Bucharest in 1829, married in 1849 to the Russian Count Koltzoff-Massalsky. Disliking the autocratic system of government in Russia, she quitted that country in 1855. She spent five years in Belgium and Switzerland, carefully studying the customs and laws, and, having made a tour through Greece, she went to Italy in 1861. At this period Garibaldi addressed to her a letter, requesting her to exert her influence over the Roumanians, to induce them to rise

KOTZE, ex-Chief-Justice of the South an Republic, is a Cape Dutchman by , has been called to the Bar at the r Temple, and has always been much vour of an English system in matters . He has translated into English, annotated Van Liewen's well-known an-Dutch text-book. He is now edit- the Transvaal Law Reports in 1881. f-Justice Kotze first came into noto- for condemning to death two high- robbers who had shot at a policeman. men were reprieved after the sentence been everywhere protested against. was dismissed by President Krüger in February 1898 for refusing to ply with the law of 1897, by the 4th on of which the judges were directed eat the resolutions of the Volksraad ws. He declared this to be a trespass he liberties of the people and an k on the independence of the country, more particularly of the voteless Uitlanders, whose property would depend absolutely on the pleasure of the majority of the Volksraad for the time being. He claimed for the Bench the so-called "Testing Right," i.e., the right to see whether laws passed by the Volksraad are in accordance with the provisions of the Grondwet, or written constitution. Mr. Kotze came to England in June 1898 to lay his case before the Colonial Secretary, by whom he was received most sympathetically.

KOUROPATKIN, Major-General, of the Russian army (sometimes spelled Koropatkin and Kuropatkin), is said to have been born in 1843, and was first famous as the chief of the staff to General Skobelev. He was left for dead at the Shipka Pass. After the Russo-Turkish war he wrote a book upon its operations. Although Skobelev's right-hand man, he held the rank of Captain only during the Russo-Turkish war; after which, however, he obtained the command of the light troops in Turkestan. He was again with Skobelev at the attack on Geok Tepe, where he had the rank of Colonel.

KOWALEWSKY, Alexander, F.R.S., embryologist, was born at Duna-burg, Nov. 19, 1840, and became Professor at St. Petersburg. He is known for his researches on the embryology of invertebrates, which led to Haeckel's (q.v.) "Theory of the Gastræa"; for his discovery of the true position of the Ascidians; and for investigations of the development of the Brachiopods. He was elected a Foreign Member of the Royal Society, and is now Professor at Odessa.

KRANTZ, Camille, French statesman, was born at Épinal in 1848. His father was a life Senator and Commissioner-General of the 1878 Exhibition. He studied at the Ecole Polytechnique, and became an engineer. In 1893 he was elected deputy for his native town, Épinal, and acted as reporter on the last French Budget. In religious matters M. Camille Krantz is a Protestant. He entered official life on the offer of M. Dupuy, made in October 1898, to accept the portfolio of Minister of Public Works in the new Government which succeeded that of M. Brisson, and in May 1899 he succeeded M. de Freycinet on his resignation.

KREHL, Ludolf, is Professor of Arabic at Leipzig, and Chief Librarian of the University. For the past forty-eight years he has been editor of the Zeitschrift, the organ of the German Oriental Society, and has contributed many important papers to its pages. His principal work is the edition of Bukhary's "Corpus of Mohammedan Traditions." Other works by Professor Krehl are "The Religion of the Pre-Islamic Arabs," 1863; "Essays on the Koranic Doctrine of Predestination and Faith," 1877; "The Life of Mohammed," 1881, &c.

KROPOTKIN, Prince Petr Alexeievitch, a Russian revolutionist and geographer, was born at Moscow, Dec. 9, 1842. At the age of fifteen he entered the Corps of Pages at St. Petersburg, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1862. Attracted by the desire of travelling, he joined a regiment of Cossacks of the Amur, and spent five years in Eastern Siberia, first as Aide-de-Camp to the Military Governor of Transbaikalia, and, after 1863, as Attaché for Cossacks' Affairs to the Governor-General of Eastern Siberia. During these five years he thrice visited the Amur and Usuri, and made extensive journeys in Siberia and Manchuria. In 1863 he crossed North Manchuria from Transbaikalia to the Amur, via Merghen; in the same year he took part in the first steamer expedition up the Sungari to Ghirin. Accounts of these journeys, and several others, are published in the Memoirs of the Russian and the Siberian Geographical Society, from the former of which he received the Gold Medal. Promoted Captain in 1865, he returned in 1867 to St. Petersburg, and studied four years at the Mathematical Faculty of that University, and acted as Secretary to the Physical Geography Section of the Geographical Society. He then published the reports of his chief expeditions to the Olekma and Vitim Highlands, as well as a general sketch of the Orography of Eastern Siberia. In 1871 he was sent by this society to explore the glacial deposits in Finland and Sweden, the account of which is embodied in a larger work on the Glacial Period, the first volume of which was published by his brother Alexander, in the Memoirs of the Geographical Society, while he was confined in prison. In 1872 he paid a visit to Switzerland and Belgium, and became acquainted with the International Working-Men's Association, and joined the most advanced anarchist section of it. He returned to Russia and became a member of the widely-spread organisation of the Tchaykovtzy; was arrested in March 1874, and confined to the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, where he continued to write on the Glacial Period. He was transferred to the prison of the Military Hospital, and escaped on July 12, 1876, and went to England. The next year he rejoined, in Switzerland, the Federation of the International Working-Men's Association, and in February founded at Geneva the anarchist Révolution, now published in Paris. He fled from Switzerland in September, and stayed first for a few months at London, while his wife passed her time at Berlin, B.Sc., and then went to reside in London, where he roused an agitation against the Russian Government both in the Newcastle Chronicle, Fortnightly Review, and Nineteenth Century, and gave a series of lectures at Newcastle and in London. In October 1882 he went again to Thonon, where he was arrested on 20, 1882. On Jan. 19, 1883, he was condemned by the Police Correctional Court at Lyons to five years' imprisonment for participation in the International Working-Men's Association. He was liberated on Jan. 15, 1886, by the President of the French Republic. His anarchist papers contributed to the Révolution have been collected by Elise Reclus, and were published in October 1885, in a separate volume, under the title "Paroles d'un Révolutionnaire," which have had a wide circulation in the shape of pamphlets, in English, German, &c. His review articles on prison reform published in book form, in 1887, under the title "In Russian and French Prisons." In 1892 appeared in French the latest nihilistic utterances, entitled "Récherche du Pain." He has written an article on Russia in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and in "Chambers's Encyclopædia." In 1896 he issued "L'Anarchisme philosophique, son idéal," which was translated into English in 1897. In 1897 appeared his "The State: its History." Address: Bromley, Kent.

KRÜGER, Stephanus Jo Paulus, President of the South African Republic, was born at Rastenburg, Prussia, Oct. 10, 1825. With his family, and fellow-Boers he took the Great Trek of 1836-37, and settled at Natal, the Orange Free State, and the Transvaal. When quite a spectator of the battles in which the advancing Boers drove the Matabele, Moselikatse, father of Lobengula, from the Limpopo. In his youth he was renowned as a fine game shot and a runner. He shot great quantities of animals in the uncultivated country, and was conversed by the Boers. He became a member of the strictest Dutch Reformed Church, and distinguished himself, like the President, as a preacher. The Bible was his sole education, and considering Boer ideals were, he needed became a Field Cornet, District Commandant, and Commandant, and in 1872 became a Member of the Executive Council under President Burgers, and was then distinguished for coolness, courage and common-sense. In the war with England in 1881 he was chosen one of the Provisional Government, and his post was made permanent in 1883, when he was elected President of the new African Republic for five years. He was re-elected in 1888 and 1893. On the occasion of Jameson's Raid and the abortive insurrection in Johannesburg (1896), he made a masterly display of what his enemies called finesse, and what many good judges regard as diplomacy, he succeeded in preventing the Uitlanders, or what he considered as hunting foreigners, from acquiring rights with the Boers, his old passionnés. He was humane and lenient on more than one occasion during the days succeeding the Raid. In the Transvaal he demanded an indemnity for the Raid of £600,000 for material damage and £1,000,000 for "moral damage," besides a small sum of odd shillings for the expense, which excited the mirth of those who failed to see the satire involved in a scrupulously accurate bill of costs. In January 1898 he was re-elected for the second time by an overwhelming majority, winning more than 12,800 votes, while Schalk Burger polled only 3700, and Paul Kruger 2001. As the white population numbers 180,000, and the total number of votes polled was only 18,600, this gives an idea of the oligarchic character of what is really a seventeenth-century Dutch republic. A statue has been erected to President Kruger at Pretoria. A characteristic of the man and his reign is that Mrs. Kruger's especial wish should have been respected, and that the ugly chimney-pot, should have been removed, so that rain-water may collect and afford solace to thirsty birds. It is called "Oom Paul" by his adoring subjects, and is a typical Boer in appearance and mind. His supporters regard him as a strong, sincere man, a type out of the seventeenth-century Holland, who has struggled successfully against usurping dynasties, and retained the independence of his little fatherland against overwhelming odds. His official income is £7000 per annum, besides innumerable allowances. His grandfather, Hazelrigg of old, he has already amassed a very large fortune, but the simplicity of his life and surroundings makes his wealth a superfluity.

WANG-HSU, Emperor of China, may be likened to Joseph II. of Austria. He was born on Aug. 15, 1871, and is a grandson of the late Emperor Tung-Chih, and nephew of his predecessor Hsien-Feng, and succeeded to the throne on Jan. 12, 1875, previously, in accordance with Chinese custom, having taken the name of Tsai-t'ien. His Kwo Hao, or reigning name, is, however, the above. Until he was twenty-one he was under the regency of his aunt, Tze-hsi (q.v.), the Empress-Dowager, who, although sprung from the dregs of the people, is admitted to be a woman of great energy and ability. She has often been compared to Catherine the Great, and the analogy is not infelicitous, in regard to her greed of power, extravagance, and other characteristics. In July 1898 the German Emperor presented Kwang-Hsu with the Order of the Black Eagle set in diamonds. For some time past he had been much influenced by one of his advisers, Kang-Yu-Wei, the Cantonese reformer, who persuaded him to issue a decree ordering his people to cut off their pig-tails, assume foreign dress, and adopt a curious form of Christianity which he had evolved from the teaching of the English missionaries, and had afterwards corrected in accordance with the teachings of Confucius. The Emperor's reforming decrees amount to some two hundred perhaps, and evince a sincere desire for the reform of a corrupt bureaucracy. One of the most important edicts was issued in August 1898, and abolished the time-honoured system of literary essays in ancient subjects which constitute the examinations for governorships, &c. The essays, the edict provided, were in future to deal with practical modern subjects, and the highest examination of all was to be held in the Emperor's presence. Calligraphy, which in China implies a scholar's knowledge of words, was in future not to be insisted on on the ground of its being "an empty accomplishment." Another very important reform, promulgated in June, provided that members of the Imperial family should in future be sent abroad to travel and study. A college of foreign literature and science at Peking was also projected, and education was in many ways to be popularised. In April 1898 the Empress-Dowager openly threatened to dethrone him if he persisted in these schemes of reform. However, in July, he promulgated a decree, the effect of which was to close about two-thirds of the Buddhist temples throughout the Empire. The Empress warned him that he was going too fast, throwing thousands of officials into idleness, and getting himself detested by the old Manchu aristocracy. On Sept. 21, 1898, by a coup d'état, in conjunction with Li Hung Chang (q.v.), she seized the reins of power, arrested the young Emperor's reforming advisers, and sequestered him within the precincts of the Summer Palace at Peking. It was idealist. He was one of the first masters of Japanese art, visiting that country in 1866. In his stained glass he has most perfectly performed the still impossible of rivaling the colours of the finest enamel windows, and has, like many glass-painters, perfected a method of "leading" by which the mechanical details are made to contribute to the artistic effect of details and general effect. In 1869 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy, and he is also a member of the Society of American Artists. An account of his work appeared in the Portfolio for May 1896.

LAFFAN, The Rev. Robert Stuart Percy, M.A., Principal of Cheltenham College, was born on Jan. 18, 1853, and is the eldest son of the late Lieutenant-General Sir Robert Michael Laffan, K.C.M.G. He was educated at Winchester and at Balliol College, Oxford, of which college he was an exhibitioner. He took a first in Moderations and in Lit. Hum. (1878; M.A. 1884). He took orders in 1882; was Senior Classical Master, and afterwards Chaplain of Derby School, 1884; Head Master of Edward VI.'s School at Stratford-on-Avon, 1884-95; and in 1895 was appointed to his present post at Cheltenham. He announced his intention of retiring from the Principalship in 1899. Mrs. de Courcy Laffan, to whom he married in 1883, has been on the staff of All the Year Round since 1878, and has published a number of novels, of which "Madelon Lemoine" is well known. It is now in its fourth edition. Address: Pellier Lodge, Cheltenham.

LAGDEN, Sir Godfrey Yeatman, F.R.S., Commissioner of Basutoland, is the son of the late Rev. R. Dowse Lagden, of Asham House, and was born in 1851. From 1869 to 1877 he was a clerk in the General Post Office in London, but in 1878 he was appointed clerk to the Secretary of Government of the Transvaal under British administration, and later Private Secretary to O. Lanyon, Sir W. Bellairs, and Sir John Wood while administering the Government. In 1881 he was Secretary of the Transvaal Royal Commission for land claims, and he then served as a correspondent in Egypt during the war.

The next year he became Colonial Secretary of Sierra Leone, but in 1884 he went to South Africa as Secretary and Assistant Commissioner of Basutoland. He was promoted to Assistant Commissioner in 1885, and to Commissioner of Swaziland in 1892, and then Resident Commissioner of Basutoland.

He married, in 1881, Frances, eldest daughter of Bishop Bousfield, of Pretoria. Address: British Residency, Maseru.

LAKING, Sir Francis Henry, K.C.V.O., M.D. Heidelberg, M.R.C.P., L.S.A., was born in 1817, and received his medical education at Heidelberg, where he obtained the M.D. degree in 1869, and at St. George's Hospital, London, where he was House Physician from 1869 to 1870 and Medical Registrar from 1871 to 1874. He is the Surgeon-Apothecary to the households or persons of the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Dukes of York, Saxe-Coburg, and Connaught. He attended the Prince of Wales in the summer of 1898, when his Royal Highness was suffering from fracture of the patella, and at the same period was sent to visit the late Queen of Denmark. He is "Visiting Apothecary" to St. George's Hospital; Consulting Physician to the Gordon Hospital for Fistula; Assistant Physician to the Victoria Hospital for Children, &c., and a Member of the Royal Institution. He was appointed K.C.V.O., September 1898. He is married to Emma, daughter of Joseph Mansell. Addresses: 62 Pall Mall, S.W.; and 13 Addison Road, W.

LAMB, Horace, M.A., F.R.S., son of the late John Lamb, of Stockport, was born on Nov. 27, 1819, at Stockport, and educated at Stockport Grammar School, Owens College, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was second Wrangler and second Smith's Prizeman in 1872; Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity in 1872; Professor of Mathematics in the University of Adelaide, South Australia, in 1875; and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884; and Professor of Mathematics in Owens College, Victoria University, Manchester, 1885. He is the author of a treatise on "Hydrodynamics," and of various papers on Applied Mathematics, principally on Hydrodynamics, Elasticity, and Electro-magnetism. In the year 1890 he was awarded the Hopkins Prize of the Cambridge Philosophical Society "for his various important contributions to Mathematical Physics." In 1897 he published a work on the Infinitesimal Calculus. In 1875 he married Elizabeth, daughter of the late Simon Foot, of Dublin. Address: 6 Wilbraham Road, Fallowfield, Manchester.

LAMBER, Juliette. See ADAM, MME. EDMOND.

LAMBERT, George, M.P., is the son of the late George Lambert, of Spreyton, Devonshire, and was born in 1866. He was educated at North Tawton Grammar School. He has represented the South Molton Division of Devonshire as a Liberal member of the House of Commons since he sent to Bombay, Mr. Landor that after proceeding for no less 5 marches with only one bearer and coolie (28 out of his original complement of 30 deserted him a few days from g), he lost his provisions, and, by of treachery, was made prisoner a desperate struggle for liberty. d his two men were put in chains ntended to death, but the Tibetans that firing and inhuman torture t frighten him, Mr. Landor's execu-as ordered. L-POOLE, Stanley, born in a, Dec. 18, 1854, eldest son of E. S. of the Science and Art Department ied in 1867), was educated under rection of his great-uncle, E. W. the Orientalist, and proceeded to

Corpus Christi College, Oxford, whence he took his B.A. degree in 1878, M.A. 1895. As early as 1870 his studies had been turned towards numismatics by his uncle, R. S. Poole, the Keeper of Coins in the British Museum, and in 1872 he published his first treatise on Arabic Coins in the Chronicle of the Numismatic Society. In 1874 he was appointed by the Trustees of the British Museum to write the official "Catalogue of the Oriental Coins" in the national collection; the work appeared in 8 vols., 1875-83, and was couronné by the French Institute. Three volumes of a subsequent "Catalogue of Indian Coins" were published in 1884-92, and 2 vols. of "Additions to the Oriental Collection" in 1890. A "Catalogue of the Arabic Glass Weights in the British Museum," making the fourteenth volume of catalogue, followed in 1891; and a "Catalogue of the Mohammedan Coins in the Bodleian" was published in 1888. He has also printed 4 vols. of collected papers on Arabic Numismatics, 1875-93. On the death of Mr. Lane, in 1876, the duty of completing his great Arabic Lexicon devolved on his grand-nephew, who brought out vols. 6-8, between 1877 and 1893, and published a "Life of E. W. Lane" in the former year. In 1883 he was sent to Egypt by the Science and Art Department, for which he wrote a handbook of the "Art of the Saracens," 1886. With a view to collecting materials for a Corpus of Mohammedan numismatics, he visited Russia in 1886, and examined the coin cabinets of Stockholm, St. Petersburg, and Constantinople. In 1888 he published in 2 vols. the "Life of Stratford Canning, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe," from the ambassador's private and official papers, of which a popular edition appeared in 1890; and in the latter year he edited the despatches of Sir G. F. Bowen, the colonial governor, and published a memoir of Sir Richard Church, the generalissimo of the Greeks in the War of Independence. His next biography (1894) was the "Life of Sir Harry Parkes, late Minister to China and Japan," in which Mr. F. V. Dickins collaborated; and his latest is a "Life of Saladin," now at press. He is at present engaged upon a "History of Mohammedan India" and a biography of the Emperor Bābar. His chief works, besides those already mentioned, are "Speeches and Table-talk of the Prophet Mohammed" (Golden Treasury Series); and "Le Koran, sa Poésie et ses Lois" (Bibliothèque Elzévirienne), 1882; "Arabian Society in the Middle Ages," "Studies in a Mosque," 1883 (2nd edit., 1893); "Picturesque Egypt" (edited by Sir C. Wilson), and "Social Life in Egypt," 1883; "Prose Writings of Jona-

"Rulers of India." 1893: "The Mohammedan Dynasties." 1896. In all, he has published about sixty volumes. He also contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Chambers's Encyclopædia," the "Dictionary of National Biography," and weekly critical reviews; and is a member of the Russian Archaeological and other learned societies, and an honorary member of the Egyptian Commission for the preservation of the monuments of Arab art. During two visits to Cairo in 1895 and 1897 he wrote a "Catalogue of the Coins in the Khedivial Library" there, and was instrumental in obtaining, through Lord Cromer's influence, a large increase in the Egyptian grant for the preservation of the Arab monuments, on which his report was presented to Parliament in the Egyptian Bluebook for 1898. He married, in 1879, Charlotte Bell, second daughter of the late David Wilson, of Ballymoney, co. Antrim, and niece of Gen. Fr. R. Chesney, R.A. Addresses: 3 Newnham Road, Bedford; and Athenæum.

LANG, Andrew, M.A., Hon. LL.D., critic, poet, and anthropologist, son of John Lang and Jane Plenderleath Sellar. was born at Selkirk, Mar. 31, 1844, and educated at the Edinburgh Academy, St. Andrews University, and Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained first classes in Classical Moderations and the Final Schools. In 1868 he was elected a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer at St. Andrews University on Natural Religion, and delivered his inaugural address on Jan. 17, 1889. He has published, in verse, "Ballades in Blue China," 1881; and "Helen of Troy," 1882; "Rhymes à la Mode," 1884; and "Grass of Parnassus," 1888; and, in prose, "Custom and Myth," 1884; "Myth, Ritual, and Religion," 1887. Lange form of th institutions for appointr petition wa written by thoroughly mischievous as then cari warmly vini educate the had never b enough to set public opinion on fire outside the profession. Although litigation was unsuccessful, the Government in curious contrast to their previous promising attitude, soon after sanctioned the opening of classes for history, and literature for women students at the Victoria Lyceum, which was to be lent to university study, and by the capacities of women for serious work were to be tested. A further step is a realisation of Frl. Lange's plan of opening of an institution where women might receive instruction in those branches of science which are the indispensable basis for any profession. These courses, called Real-kurse (comprising mathematics, chemistry, natural sciences, political economy, and languages), were opened in October 1889, in the presence of the press Frederick, on which occasion Lange delivered an address on the necessity of training women's faculties, and is greater in our day than it has been before. The advancement of women's education and culture is Frl. Lange's one aim and object, to which she attaches every other interest subservient to her identified with every movement designed to strengthen the capacities of women and to widen their spheres of influence and usefulness. The small band of women who are working for a near solution of the Woman's Question in Germany are raising rapidly, and their eyes are with hope and confidence on Frl. Lange, who has shown ability and courage in every initiative where it is necessary.

LANGEVIN, The Hon. Sir Hector Q.C., K.C.M.G., C.B., LL.D., born at Quebec, Aug. 25, 1826, was educated at the Seminary in his native city, and at law at Montreal, and was called to the bar in 1850. He was created Q.C. in 1864. He was for some time chief of the Melanges Religieux, Montreal; afterwards one of the editors of Le Canadien, Quebec, and wrote for the Administratif des Paroisses, or Official Laws and Customs of Lower Canada, 1862 (second enlarged edition). Mr. Langevin, elected Mayor of Quebec in December 1857, was re-elected in 1858 and 1859, has filled the chair of Institut Canadien, and has been President of the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Quebec. He was elected January 2, 1858, member of the Provincial Parliament, by the county of Dorchester, and has always voted the Conservative party. In 1864 Mr. Langevin became Solicitor-General for Lower Canada, with a seat in Sir E. P. Tache's Administration, and exchanged the former for the Postmaster-Generalship in November 1866. He was one of the Canadian delegates to the conference at Prince Edward Island on the question of the Confederation of the British North American Provinces in the summer of 1866, and afterwards to the Quebec Conference, and repaired to London with other commissioners towards the end of that year, in order to complete the arrangements. On the organisation of the Dominion Cabinet in 1867, Mr. Langevin became a Privy Councillor, Secretary of State of Canada, Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and Registrar-General; and in November 1869 exchanged that office for that of Minister of Public Works, which he retained until the fall of the Macdonald Government in 1873. At the General Elections of 1878 he was returned for Three Rivers (which he still represents), and was sworn in as Postmaster-General in the Liberal-Conservative Government of that year. This portfolio he resigned, in May 1879, for that of the Ministry of Public Works, which he continued to fill until he resigned the office in August 1891. He was made a C.B. after the arrangements for the organisation of the Dominion Government, and in 1881 had the order of K.C.M.G. conferred upon him. He is also a Knight Commander of the Roman Order of St. Gregory the Great, and LL.D. of Laval University. In 1851 he married Justine, daughter of Colonel Fetu.

LANGFORD, John Alfred, LL.D., was born at Birmingham, Sept. 12, 1823, and was educated at the Mechanics' Institute, but in 1851 took private lessons in classics and mathematics from Prof. Lund, at Queen's College in that town. His first public work was to take a very active part in securing Aston Hall and Park for the people, for which he was presented to the Queen, when her Majesty performed the opening ceremony on June 15, 1858. He was an original Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, a post which he resigned in 1877. He was a Member of the Birmingham Free Libraries Committee, 1864-74; and teacher of English Literature in the Birmingham and Midland Institute, 1868-74. In 1875-76 he visited Australia and the United States, and the results of his travels were published in a series of articles in the Birmingham Weekly Post in 1876. He was elected a Member of the Birmingham School Board in 1874, and re-elected in 1876, 1879, 1882, 1885, and 1888. In 1891 he retired, having been a Member of the Board for seventeen years. In 1892 he was elected a Member of the Yardley School Board, and was appointed Chairman of the Attendance and Appeals Committee, but was not a candidate for re-election in 1895. He has been a meetings of the Birmingham Archæological Society, published in its Transactions; and is the author of several pamphlets on current topics. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Greenville and Tusculum College in 1869. Address: Astley House, Fernley Road, Sparkhill, Birmingham.

LANGLEY, John Newport, M.A. D.Sc., F.R.S., was born at Newbury on Nov. 10, 1852. He is the second son of John Langley, by his wife, Mary Groom, eldest daughter of Richard Groom, formerly Assistant-Secretary in the Tax Department, Somerset House. Mr. Langley's earlier education was carried on partly at home and partly at the Exeter Grammar School. In October 1871 he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; was elected a Foundation Scholar in May 1874; and obtained a first class in the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. Upon graduating from the School he devoted himself to civil engineering, and then for architecture, but soon abandoned these for astronomy. In 1863 he went to Europe, and upon his return to America in 1865 became an assistant in the Lick Observatory. He remained there, only for a few months, being appointed professorship of Mathematics at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. In 1867 he was Director of the Lick Observatory of the Western University of Pennsylvania (at Allegheny); and in 1867 was appointed Assistant-Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, succeeding to the full position in November 1887. Secretary has accompanied many of the expeditions sent out by the U. S. Government to observe eclipses of the sun in various parts of the world, the study of which was the work to which he has devoted himself, and by which he has become known. Besides his lectures in America, he in 1885 lectured at the Royal Institution in London, made an address before the Institution for the Advancement of Science in Southampton. He received, in 1887 the Rumford medal from the Royal Society of London, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences is a member of many scientific societies, American and European, and is a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers. He has a degree of LL.D. was conferred by Harvard University in 1885, and by other institutions of which he is a member. That of D.C.L. by Oxford in 1885. In addition to his numerous strictly scientific papers, he published in 1884-85 The New Astronomy, some more popular.

N, John, F.R.C.S., received medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, became M.S. in 1861, and F.R.C.S. in 1865. He is a Member of the Royal Society, has been Vice-President and Professor of the Royal College of Surgeons in England, and a Member of the Examiners. He is Surgeon in Charge on Clinical Surgery at his hospital, and surgeon to a number of other institutions. He is Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Medical Societies of London, and of the 'St. Bartholomew's Hospital Society'. He has contributed papers on "Hernia," &c. He is the author to Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," and has edited Holden's "Manual of Dissection." Address: 62 Harley Street, W.

LANGTRY, Lillie, actress, is the daughter of the Rev. W. C. Le Breton, Dean of Jersey, and was born in 1852. In 1874 she was married to Mr. Langtry, a native of Belfast, and about 1881, after having been for some years celebrated for her beauty in London society, determined to go on the stage. Mrs. Langtry made her first public appearance on Dec. 15, 1881, at the Haymarket Theatre, in "She Stoops to Conquer." In January of the following year Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft engaged Mrs. Langtry to play at the Haymarket Theatre, and she appeared in the character of Blanche Haye in Robertson's play of "Ours." She appeared as Rosalind in "As You Like It," at the Imperial Theatre, on Sept. 23, 1882, and subsequently went to America. Mrs. Langtry has twice leased the Prince's Theatre (now the Prince of Wales's Theatre). At the end of the summer season of 1885 she went once more to America, and in 1887 became a naturalised citizen of the United States. In 1891 she leased the Princess's Theatre in London, and appeared as Cleopatra in "Antony and Cleopatra." Her husband died under melancholy circumstances in 1897.

LANKESTER, Professor Edwin Ray, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., eldest son of Edwin Lankester, M.D., F.R.S., coroner for Middlesex, was born May 15, 1847, at 22 Old Burlington Street, London, and was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was appointed Fellow and Lecturer of Exeter College, Oxford, in 1872, and Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in University College, London, in 1874. He is an Honorary LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews (1885), Examiner in the Universities of Cambridge, London, and New Zealand, and one of the Honorary Fellows of Exeter College, Oxford, his colleagues being the late Lord Chief-Justice, Mr. Froude, Sir E. Burne-Jones, Mr. William Morris, and the Regius Professor of Divinity. He is a corresponding member of the Imperial Academy of Science, St. Petersburg, &c. In 1878 the professorship in London held by Mr. Lankester was selected by Mr. Jodrell for endowment, with the interest of £7000, and subsequently large laboratories and a museum, adapted both to class teaching and to the pursuit of original investigations in the field of natural history, were placed at his disposal by the Council of the College. Professor Lankester was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875. He has

miletical and Pastoral Lectures," three Lectures on Preaching, delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral." Dr. L is widely known as a traveller and explorer. It occurred to him to make his travels a means of philanthropic and religious usefulness, partly by the visitation of hospitals and prisons, and partly by the distribution therein, and the sale, of religious literature. Accordingly he visited in 1874 prisons in Sweden, Finland, Russia, and Poland; Norway, Sweden, and both shores of the Gulf of Bothnia; in 1877, during the Russo-Turkish War, Austria-Hungary, Rumania, and Slavonia; and in 1878 St. Petersburg and Archangel. The foregoing journeys, each of a few weeks only, during which he was asked whether he could do something for Siberia. This led in 1870 to his traversing the Eastern coast here in a tolerably straight line from the North to the Pacific, crossing America, seven months finishing the circuit of the world. Another journey of five months took him, in 1882, through Russian Central Asia, including Kuldja, Bokhara, Samarkand, and this was followed by a third journey, in 1885, through the five kingdoms of Europe. Among the results of these journeys may be mentioned the gross distribution in public libraries and elsewhere of about 150,000 copies, in twenty languages, and in particular the providing at least one copy of a portion of Holy Scripture for the room of every hospital and prison throughout Siberia, Russian Central Asia, and, less completely, the Caucasus and certain parts of European Russia. The results of these travels have appeared in 100 newspapers and magazines, also in two vols., published 1882, in "Through Siberia" (now as one vol. in its fifth edition), and translated into German, Swedish, and Danish; also, in "Russian Central Asia," in two vols., translated likewise into German, and bound into one volume, published in 1884, and entitled "Through Central Asia; an Appendix on the Russo-Afghan War." As a parochial clergyman, in 1881 to his curacy at Greenwich. Dr. L. served as Assistant Minister of St. Martin's, Blackheath, in 1880-82; in 1885-86 was in sole charge of St. Andrew's, Eltham; after leaving which he asked whether he would "come out and do the way" by a Pioneer Mission to Mongolia towards Tibet. This was the last and greatest of his honorary missionary journeys, namely, of 950 days, in five of the kingdoms of Europe, in Africa, and every kingdom of Asia, the course of which he distributed in eleven languages through five new countries, and also came in contact with about 400 missionaries, residing at 170 mission stations, in 110 localities, and working under fifty societies. He also collected some few thousands of specimens of the fauna of Russian and Chinese Turkistan. In 1892 Dr. Landsdowne was appointed by the trustees Chaplain of Morden College, Blackheath, S.E. In the same year he married Mary Ann Colyer, eldest child of Charles and Mary Ann Colyer, of Farningham and Greenhithe, and proceeded on a tour to Spain and Portugal, thereby completing his visits to every kingdom of Asia and Europe. In 1893 he published another considerable work, in two volumes, entitled "Chinese Central Asia: a Ride to Little Tibet," a record of part of his last journey in Asia. Dr. Landsdowne was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society in 1876, and in 1880 became a member of the General Committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, before the annual meeting of which, at Swansea, he read a paper. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Archbishop of Canterbury, confirmed by Her Majesty's letters patent. He is, by invitation of the Council, member of the Victoria Institute, member of the Royal Asiatic, and sundry other societies. Address: Morden College, Blackheath, S.E.

LANDSDOWNE, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., G.C.M.G., D.C.L., LL.D., late Viceroy and Governor-General of India, eldest son of the 4th Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G., by his second wife, the Hon. Emily Jane, eldest daughter of the Comte de Flahault and the Baroness Keith and Nairne, was born Jan. 14, 1845. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1864; Hon. D.C.L. 1888; Hon. LL.D. Camb.; Hon. LL.D. McGill University, Canada, 1884), and was formerly a Captain in the Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry. He succeeded his father in the Marquisate and other titles in 1866. Lord Lansdowne was a Lord of the Treasury from 1868 to 1872, and Under-Secretary for War from the latter date till 1874. He was appointed Under-Secretary for India when Mr. Gladstone took office again in 1880, but retired two months afterwards (July 8), owing to a disagreement with the Government on the subject of the Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill. In May 1883 the Queen approved the appointment of Lord Lansdowne as Governor-General of Canada, in succession to the Marquis of Lorne, who retired in October of that year, on the completion of the period for which he was appointed. Lord

Lansdowne was created G.C.M.G. a few months later. At the expiration of his term of office as Governor-General of Canada (the chief events of which were the suppression of Riel's rebellion in the North-West, the execution of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the satisfactory settlement of the long-standing controversy concerning the North American Fisheries). Lord Lansdowne was appointed by her Majesty Viceroy and Governor-General of India. His Excellency took his seat at Calcutta on Dec. 10, 1888. In December 1893 he was succeeded by the Earl of Elgin. He was appointed a Trustee of the National Gallery in 1894. In July 1895 he was appointed Secretary of State for War. His lordship is a magistrate for Wiltshire, and also for the county of Kerry. He married, in 1869, Lady Maud Evelyn Hamilton, youngest daughter of the first Duke of Abercorn. Addresses: Lansdowne House, Berkeley Square, W.; Bowood Park, Calne, Wilts; and Athenæum.

LA RAMÉE, Mdle. Louise de, commonly known to her readers as "Ouida," was born at Bury St. Edmunds in 1840. At a very early age she commenced authorship, and contributed to Coburn's New Monthly. She has written a large number of popular novels, some of which possess high literary charm. Of these the principal are "Held in Bondage," 1863; "Chandos," 1866; "Idalia," 1867; "Under Two Flags," 1867; "Folle Farine," 1871; "In a Winter City," 1876; "In Maremma," 1882; "Bimbi" (stories for children), 1882; "Wanda," 1883; "Othmar," "Guilderoy," 1889; "Signa," 1875; "Moths," 1880; "Syrilin," "Rufino," "Santa Barbara," "The Tower of Taddeo," "Two Offenders" (tales), 1894; "Le Selve," 1896; "The Massarenes," and "Toxin, an Altruist," 1897. "Ouida" lives in Florence, and is a well-known figure in Anglo-Florentine circles. Her novels deal with all phases of European society, and the scenes of many of them are laid in Italy.

LARMOR, Joseph, M.A. (Camb.), D.Sc. (Univer. Lond.), D.Sc. (Roy. Univer. Ireland), F.R.S., was born in 1857, being the eldest son of the late Hugh Larmor of Magheragall, Lisburn, Co. Antrim, and was educated at the Royal Belfast Academical Institution, at Queen's College Belfast, and at St. John's College Cambridge. He has been a Fellow of St. John's College Cambridge since 1880, and University Lecturer in Mathematical Physics since 1885. From 1880 to 1885 he filled the chair of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College Galway, and in the Queen's University in Ireland, and for some years he was a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is at present Examiner in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at the University of London; a Governor of the University of Birmingham; Treasurer of the Royal Society; Vice-President of the Philosophical Society; and a member of the Council of the Royal Society. He has published memoirs on various subjects of mathematics, and has contributed to the publications of several of the other journals. Address: St. John's College, Cambridge.

LASCELLES, The Right Hon. Frank Cavendish, G.C.F.S., late Right Hon. William Lascelles, M.P., third son of the late Lord Harewood, and of Lady Catherine Howard, daughter of the Duke of Exeter. Born in 1841, he entered the Diplomatic Service at the age of 18, and soon afterwards appointed to the Legation of Madrid. Until 1878 he held subordinate posts in Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Rome, Washington, and in all these varied positions he displayed the character of an able, patient diplomatist, especially when he held the post of Attaché d'Affaires. In 1878 and 1879 he held the post of Consul-General in Egypt, and his capacity convinced his superiors of his fitness for higher and more independent spheres of action. In 1879 he was sent to Bulgaria in a subordinate position, and displayed in that difficult post much ability and discretion. In 1880 he was made a K.C.M.G., and in 1881, 1887, was appointed to the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Bucharest. Thence, in July 1891, he was transferred to the Court of Teheran, succeeding Drummond Wolff there as Minister Plenipotentiary. His activity and energy in Persia caused him to be so much appreciated by the Foreign Office that he was appointed him to one of the most important posts in the Diplomatic Service, when he was made Ambassador to St. Petersburg at the close of 1893, in succession to the late Sir Robert Morier. In 1894 he was appointed to Berlin. He married, in 1894, Mary, daughter of the late Sir John Lubbock, M.D. Lady Lascelles died at Berlin in April 1897. Address: Embassy, Berlin.

LASKER, Emanuel, chess-player, of the world and of England, was born Dec. 24, 1868, at Berlin, in Prussia, and received a university education

und Göttingen. When only fifteen of age he entered seriously on the chess, and won a first prize in a Berlin tournament. He won a prize at the Graz International in 1890. He gave exhibition matches in London in 1891, and in the first prize at the National Tournament. In the now cele- brantangular match against Messrs. Bird, Gunsberg, and Mason, he won the first prize with 6½ games out of 10. He toured in America from 1892 onwards, and beat Steinitz by ten games to five, of which four were won. He studied mathematics in his spare days, and has won three im- portant chess championships, that of Eng- land in 1892, of America in 1894, and of the world in 1897. He has won many first prizes in chess tourna- ments and has published several works on chess and on mathematical subjects. Ad- dress: 71 Chiswell Street, E.C.

ALLE, Jean, French baritone, born in 1859, and was educated as an actor, but gave up that career and entered the Conservatoire. His success was great, for he is a consummate actor, as a singer of high rank. He takes pains with a part, ransacking every book to study Hamlet, becoming a specialist to play Polyucte, and studying logic before undertaking Aida. He is a frequent performer at Covent Garden, and is a great favourite with the audiences.

LEY, John, F.J.I., editor of the Illustrated Paper, was born in London Oct. 30, 1842, and is the only son of the late John Lash Latey, who for many years edited the Illustrated London News. Both his parents were Devonians, and he received his early education at Exeter. He has been practically all his life a journalist. He joined the Penny Illustrated Paper when it was started by Messrs. Proprietors of the Illustrated London News in October 1861, and has worked for it since, latterly as art and literary editor. To the columns of the Illustrated News, to which his paper is still attached, he has contributed largely, having succeeded the late Mr. Spellen as writer of Parliamentary sketch for that paper. He has been the rise of the Parnellite party in the House of Commons, he was well known in the Gallery as "The Silent Member," which pseudonym he composed his own centenary articles. For several years he has contributed to the Penny Illustrated a series of articles, signed "The Lion." These were in great part amusing satires on the follies and vices of the age. "Bird's-eye Views," in the same paper, were also devised by him, in collaboration with Mr. Harry Furniss. Mr. Latey has been a busy novelette writer, the Christmas Annuals of the Penny Illustrated Paper having been largely the work of his pen. He has also written a comedietta, "The Rose of Hastings," a "Life of General Gordon," and translations of Dumas' "Mohicans of Paris" (Routledge), and Paul Féval's "Fils du Diable," which in its English dress appeared as "The Three Red Knights." Mr. Latey was one of the founders of the London Press Club, and is a Fellow of the Journalists' Institute. Address: 10 Milford Lane, Strand, W.C.

Henri Léon Émile, is the son of a famous novelist under the Second Empire, born at Orleans in April 1841, educated at the Lycée Louis le Grand, and immediately took up letters. He started by writing smart Parisian papers, le Paris, Le Gil Blas, and in which he displayed talents of wit and mordant satire. His plays have been since reprinted in France with the titles "Mam'selle" "Petites Fêtes," &c. But he has been on the stage. His first début at the Théâtre de la Comédie in four acts, entitled "Mam'selle" (May 1890), for which he won the Thoirac prize of the Académie. Two years later he wrote a satirical drama, "Les Femmes de la même maison," in which he sought to contrast the life of the great aristocratic families with that of their subjects. It was refused, but, under the name of "Mam'selle," it was produced at the Vaudeville (Paris) with immense success. Thanks to its continual play, it remained in the program. In April 1894 he wrote "Les Femmes de la même maison" for the Odéon, and in 1895 his "Viveurs" was produced at the Vaudeville. On Dec. 8, 1895, he was elected a Member of the Académie. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 5 Rue d'Astorg.

Ernest, French historian, born at Evion-en-Thiérache, Dec. 18, 1841, educated at the Church of Paris. He entered the army in 1862, and in 1865 he was in History. After having served at the Lycées de Versailles, he became a docteur ès lettres and a Professor of Modern History at the Sorbonne in 1888. He was elected to the French Academy in the place of Admiral Jurien de la Gravière, having been created an Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1887. He is remarkable both for the depth of his historical study and for the elementary historical text. His chief study has been the French Revolution and the close relation of policy with its past. His works are: "Études sur l'Histoire de la France," 1879; "Essais sur l'Allemagne," 1887; "La Jeunesse du Grand Frédéric," 1891; "Trois Empereurs d'Allemagne," 1888; studies of William I., Frederick III., and William II. Amongst his historical text-books may be cited: "Sully," 1880; "Histoire de France," 1890; and "La Première Année d'Histoire de France," 1876. He wrote an introduction to a translation of Professor Freeman's "Historical Geography of Europe," and he has written essays on university questions. He is a frequent writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes and the Revue de l'Enseignement Supérieur. His Paris address is 5 Rue de Médicis.

LAW, William Arthur, dramatist, was born on 22nd March 1844 at North Repps Rectory, near Cromer, Norfolk, his father being the Rev. Patrick Comerford Law, Rector of North Repps, and his mother Frances, daughter of the Right Rev. Alexander Arbuthnot, Bishop of Killaloe. His family is the Irish branch of the Scotch family of the Laws of Lauriston, which branch went over to Ireland with "Strongbow" in 1166, and his ancestor, Sir Michael Law, fought under William of Orange at the battle of the Boyne in 1690; and another ancestor, Lord Danganmore, fought on the opposite side for James, his title and estates being afterwards forfeited for high treason. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and in 1864 obtained a commission in the 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, in which regiment he served at home and in Burma for eight years. In 1872 he went on the stage, his first engagement being at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh. After acting in the provinces and at the Surrey Theatre for two years he joined Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Company in 1874, and was connected with it for five years. In 1877 he married Miss Fanny Holland of the same company, and from 1879 to 1881 he and his wife gave an entertainment of their own throughout the country. In 1881 Arthur Law was engaged at the Savoy Theatre, when he retired from the stage and devoted himself solely to writing plays. His first piece, "A Night Surprise," was produced at the German Reeds' entertainment on Feb. 12, 1877. He wrote 19 plays for the German Reeds, and up to the present has also produced 20 plays in the London theatres. At German Reeds' we may mention: "A Night Surprise," "A Happy Bungalow," "An Artful Automaton," "Enchantment," "£100 Reward," "Castle Botherem," "A Flying Visit," "A Merry Christmas," "All at Sea," "Cherry Tree Farm," "A Bright Idea," "The Head of the Poll," "Nobody's Fault," "A Strange Host," "Treasure Trove," "A Moss Rose Rent," "A Terrible Fright,"

LAWSON, John Grant, M.P., J.P., D.L., is the son of the late Andrew Lawson of Aldborough, Yorkshire, and was born in Yorkshire on July 28, 1856. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1882. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1881, and has represented the Thirsk and Malton Division of Yorkshire as a Conservative member of the House of Commons since 1892. He is a Parliamentary Charity Commissioner, and one of the Deputy-Chairmen of Committees of the House of Commons. Addresses: 14 Arlington Street, S.W.; and Elm Bank, York.

LAWSON, Sir Wilfrid, Bart., M.P., eldest son of the late Sir Wilfrid Lawson of Aspatria, Cumberland, and of Caroline, daughter of Sir James Graham of Netherby, was born Sept. 4, 1829, and succeeded to the title and estates on his father's death in 1867. From an early age he has been an enthusiastic advocate of the temperance movement, and is now the leader and President of the United Kingdom Alliance, and is its spokesman in Parliament. At the general election of 1859 he stood, in conjunction with his uncle, the late Sir James Graham, as a candidate for the representation of Carlisle, and succeeded by a narrow majority over his opponent, Mr. Hodgson. In March 1864 he first moved for leave to introduce the measure now so well known as the Permissive Bill, the main principle of which is the giving to two-thirds of the inhabitants of any parish or township an absolute veto upon all licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors granted within their districts. It was supported by forty members. In 1865 he was displaced at the general election by his former opponent, Mr. Hodgson; but, at the general election of 1868, on appealing to the enlarged constituency as a supporter of Mr. Gladstone he was returned at the head of the poll. Sir Wilfrid Lawson succeeded, on June 18, 1880, in carrying his Local Option resolution by a majority of 26, and in 1881 and 1883 he again got it passed. In 1885 he stood for the new Cockerham division of Cumberland, but was defeated by a Conservative majority of ten. In 1886, as a Gladstonian Liberal, he gained the seat by a large majority, and was again returned in 1892 and 1895. Sir Wilfrid is an advanced Radical, and is in favour of the disestablishment of the Church, and of the abolition of the House of Lords and of standing armies. He is married to a daughter of J. Pockington, Secretary of Netherlands Cumberland. Address: Brayton, Carlisle.

LEA, Arthur Sheridan, M.A., Sc.D., F.R.S., was born in New York, of English parents, on Dec. 1, 1853. He came to England in 1859, where he has since resided, and was educated in a private school, and at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in October 1872, reading at first for Honours in Mathematics. In his second year he turned his attention to Natural Science, and was elected to a Foundation Scholarship in May 1875, being placed in the first class of the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. Immediately after taking his degree he proceeded to Germany and worked with Professor W. Kühne, of Heidelberg, in conjunction with whom he published his first paper, "Beobachtungen über die Absonderung des Pankreas" (Untersuch. Physiol. Inst. Heidelberg, vol. ii.). After his return to England he acted as head-assistant to Professor Michael Foster, during which time he lectured on Chemical Physiology. He was appointed Lecturer to Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, in 1881, and University Lecturer in 1884. In October 1885 Gonville and Caius College elected him to a Fellowship, whereupon he migrated to this Society from Trinity. While actively engaged in teaching and in endeavouring to promote the progress of science he published a short series of papers, dealing chiefly with enzymes or soluble ferments, which appeared in the Journal of Physiology and in the Proc. Roy. Soc., the most important being "A Comparative Study of Artificial and Natural Digestions" (Jour. Physiol., vol. xi., 1890). He has further been responsible for the Appendix to the several editions of Foster's "Text-book of Physiology," publishing it in an enlarged and extended form as a separate volume in 1892. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1890. Address: Caius College, Cambridge.

LEBRET, M., French statesman, was born at Étampes in October 1853. After passing with distinction through the School of Law, he was in 1879 entrusted by the then Minister of Education with a mission to England and Scotland for the purpose of reporting on leases and agricultural legislation and usages. He published, on his return, a treatise enumerating the conclusions arrived at during his journey, and soon afterwards was appointed Professor of Law at the University of Caen. He was elected Deputy for the town of Caen in 1893, and at the general election in the summer of 1898 was re-elected. In October of the same year he was offered and accepted the portfolio of Minister of Justice in M. Charles Dupuy's Cabinet. M. Lebreton is new to ministerial work. He is Mayor of Caen, and, in his professional capacity, stands in considerable repute. He is probably one of the highest authorities on technical jurisprudence.

LECKY, The Right Hon. William Edward Hartpole, eldest son of John Hartpole Lecky, Longford Terrace, Dublin, and Maria, daughter of W. E. Tallents, Newark-on-Trent, was born at Newtown Park, near Dublin, March 26, 1838, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1859 and M.A. in 1863. Devoting himself to literature, he soon gained distinction as an author. His acknowledged works are "The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland," published anonymously in 1861, and republished in 1871-72: "History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe," 2 vols., 1865 (fifth edit., 1872); "History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne," 2 vols., 1869; "History of England in the Eighteenth Century," vols. i. and ii. 1878, vols. iii. and iv. 1882, vols. v. and vi. 1887, vols. vii. and viii. (completing the work), 1890. A Cabinet Edition of the History in twelve volumes was published in 1892, the last five being devoted to Ireland and Irish affairs down to the Addington Ministry. Mr. Lecky published a small volume of poems (1891), and an important work on contemporary politics, called "Democracy and Liberty," in 1896, a second edition of which was published in 1899, and created some stir through its adverse comments on Mr. Gladstone. His first three works and a large part of his History of England have been translated into German, and some of them into other languages. Most of his works have gone through many editions in England. Mr. Lecky has received the honorary degree of LL.D. from his own University of Dublin, and from the Universities of St. Andrews and Glasgow; the degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, and the degree of Litt.D. from the University of Cambridge. In 1894 he was elected Corresponding Member to the Institute of France. He is also an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy. In November 1895 he was elected member of Parliament for the University of Dublin, and is a prominent figure in the debates of the House. In 1897 he was made Privy Councillor. He has contributed occasionally, but not frequently, to periodical literature; and since the division in the Liberal party, in 1886, he has been an active member of the Unionist party. He married, in 1871, Elizabeth, Baroness de Dedem. Addresses: 38 Onslow Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LECOQC, Charles Alexandre, a celebrated French composer of popular operatic music, was born in Paris in 1832, and studied under Halévy, entering the Conservatoire in 1849, where he gained several prizes and became Professor of Music. His duties as Ledochowski Domestic Protonotary Apostolic, and as a diplomatic mission to the Auditor of the Nunciature in Rio de Janeiro, and Santiago de Cuba, was nominated Archbishop of the partibus infidelium, on his Sept. 30, 1861, to the Netherlands, where he remained until January 1866 he was transferred to the Archbishopric of Gnesen and the occupant of that See he took the title of Primate of Poland. On account of his resistance to the demands of Prussia against the Church, in 1874, cast into prison, and he was incarcerated in the dungeons when he was proclaimed as the Pope in a secret consistory at Rome, March 15, 1875. He was released from captivity, Feb. 3, 1876. After leaving from his diocese, he proceeded to Lyons, where he took possession of the church of Santa Maria (May 11). He was cordially received by Pius IX., and lived in the palace where he continued administration of his diocese. Legal proceedings were taken several times against the Prussian Government, and he was condemned in default to imprisonment and to the large fine for having excommunicated his lesser clergy. He was confined in the Vatican for being handed over by the Italian Government, who, however, they had asked for his extradition. In 1884 the Pope appointed Secretary of Memorials, and continued his living in Rome and archiepiscopal seat. This was the Prussian authorities on the attacks on Cardinal Ledochowski who in January 1892 was the effect of the Propaganda.

Lee, American soldier and statesman, born at Clermont, Fairfax County, Va., Nov. 19, 1835. He is the late General Robert E.

Lee. He graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1856. On the outbreak of the war between the States in 1861 he resigned from the United States Army, and entered the Confederate service. He became Lieutenant-Colonel of the First Virginia Cavalry and later was made Colonel and participated in all the campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia. In July 1862 he was made Brigadier-General, and in September 1863 Major-General. In March 1865 he was put in command of the whole cavalry corps of the Army of Northern Virginia, and a month later he was compelled to surrender to General Meade and retired to his home in Stafford County, Virginia. In 1885 he was elected Governor of Virginia, serving four years; in June 1896 he was appointed United States Consul-General to Cuba, which position he held until the opening of the war between the United States and Spain, when he returned home and was made a Major-General and given command of an army corps in the United States Army.

LEE, The Rev. Frederick George, D.D., born Jan. 6, 1832, at Thame Vicarage, Oxfordshire, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Frederick Lee, M.A., rector of Easington, in that county. He was educated at the Grammar School, Thame, and at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated S.C.L., and became both a University and a College prizeman in 1854. His Newdigate Prize, "The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyons," has passed through five editions. He was afterwards a student of Cuddesdon Theological College, and was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest in 1856, by the Bishop of Oxford. He has been curate of Sunningwell, Berks, assistant-minister of Berkeley Chapel, and incumbent of St. Mary's, Aberdeen. He was created hon. D.D. of the Washington and Lee University at Lexington in Virginia in June 1879. At present he is vicar of All Saints', Lambeth. He was F.S.A. from 1857 to 1892. Dr. Lee founded and edited the Union Review from 1863 to 1869, and was hon. secretary of the Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom from 1857 to 1869. He was likewise one of the originators and officers of the Order of Corporate Reunion, established in 1877. This body, confined exclusively to members of the Church of England, has exercised considerable influence, acquired rather by construction than reform, and has at the same time successfully perpetuated the best traditions of the Oxford Tractarians. Its special organ, The Reunion Magazine (1877-79) embodies its fundamental principles, set forth very clearly. He is the author of "Poems," 2nd edit., 1855; "The Gospel Message," 1860; "The King's Highway, and other Poems," 2nd edit., 1872; "The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyons, an Oxford Prize Poem," 5th edit., 1894; "The Message of Reconciliation," 2nd edit., 1868; "Petronilla, and other Poems," 2nd edit., 1869; "The Beauty of Holiness," 4th edit., 1869; "Parochial and Occasional Sermons," 2nd edit., 1873; "Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell," 3rd edit., 1870; "The Christian Doctrine of Prayer for the Departed," 2nd edit., 1875; "Memorials of the Rev. R. S. Hawker," 1876; "A Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms," illustrated by A. W. Pugin, &c., 1877; "The Sinless Conception of the Mother of God, a Theological Essay," 1881; "A Manual of Politics," 1889; "The Validity of the Holy Orders of the Church of England Maintained and Vindicated," 1870; "The Bells of Botville Tower," 1874; "The Words from the Cross," 3rd edit., 1880. As editor, Dr. Lee has issued two series of "Sermons," and one of "Essays on the Reunion of Christendom" (with a Prefatory Essay by Dr. E. B. Pusey), "Lyrics of Light and Life," 2nd edit., 1878. He wrote "Order out of Chaos," 1881; and has published "Altar Service Book of the Church of England," "The Book of Epistles," "The Book of Gospels," "Directorium Anglicanum," 4th edit. He has also written "Glimpses of the Supernatural," 2nd edit., 1877; "More Glimpses of the World Unseen," 1880; "Glimpses in the Twilight," 1885; and "Sights and Shadows; being Examples of the Supernatural," 1894. His work, "The History and Antiquities of the Prebendal Church of the B. V. Mary of Thame," an illustrated folio of considerable size, was published in 1883, and brought about the restoration of that church under Mr. J. Oldrid Scott. His studies in History, chiefly bearing on the Tudor changes in the sixteenth century, have resulted in the issue of "Historical Sketches of the Reformation," 1879; "The Church under Queen Elizabeth," 3rd edit., 1897; "Edward the Sixth, Supreme Head," 2nd edit., 1889; and "Cardinal Reginald Pole, Archbishop of Canterbury," 1888. In all of the above, numerous original MSS. have been largely made use of, and fresh light thrown upon past events. A metrical "Litany of the Faithful Departed," by Dr. Lee, approved for use by several Catholic dignitaries, used in various convents and religious communities, has had a very extended circulation in England, America, and Australia. Dr. Lee has likewise been a contributor to the Nineteenth Century, the Christian Remembrancer, the Contemporary Review, Archæologia of the Society of Antiquaries, the Naturalist, and other similar serials. A son, John Lambeth.

LEE, Rev. Richard, V.D. Born 5. 1846, at Odagh, near Kesh, son of the late Rev. B. Lee, Scholar of Trinity College, Dublin. Curate of Odagh dioc. He was educated at the Odagh Hospital; 1865-69 at Jesus College, of which College he took a degree of B.A. in 1869, and of second class of Classics, M.A. in 1872; and M.A. Trinity College, Dublin, 1873. He was admitted to Holy Orders by the Bishop of Limerick, and ordained Priest in 1874. He came Curate of Holy Trinity, Lecturer in 1875 of St. Peter's Wharf; and Curate of St. Mary's, Lothbury, in the Diocese of Limerick. He was appointed Assistant-Master of the Hospital in 1871; and became Master in 1876. Address: Odagh Hospital, E.C.

LEE, Sidney, editor of the Dictionary of National Biography, was born on Dec. 5, 1859, was educated at the London School, Proceeded to Trinity College at Michaelmas 1878, where an Exhibition in Mathematics was awarded, and graduated B.A. with a First in the Final School of Modern History in Midsummer 1882. From 1882 to 1884 Mr. Lee interested himself in English literature, and, while an undergraduate, he contributed to the Quarterly Review two articles entitled respectively "The New Study of Shylock," in February 1880, and "The New Study of Love's Labour's Lost," in October 1880. New facts were then brought together from an examination of the papers and contemporary literature, and new light was thrown on the circumstances under which two plays of Shakespeare were written. The papers attracted the favourable attention of Shakespeare scholars, and Mr. Lee's views on the questions at issue have been generally adopted by commentators. In 1882 he edited for the Early English Text Society a reprint of Lord Berners' early 14th century translation of the French romance of "Huon of Burges." At the end of 1884 he published an edition of a work entitled "Stratford-on-Avon the Earliest Times to the Death of Shakespeare," which reached a new edition in 1890. In 1886 he edited, with valuable additions, the autobiography of Lord Herbert of Chesham; while

2 a bookseller who had the original publisher some of this work tried to sell in the form of a new work by which a new edition was made for the Court of Chancery, and the application failed. Mr. Lee is the principle of the translation of the Athenæum, which was printed as a pamphlet, versus Gibbings." Meanwhile, in 1883, Mr. Lee had become the associate of Mr. Leslie Stephen, of the "National Biography," a house of biography, probably by Mr. George Smith (Co.). After taking a large part of editing the under-ten years, Mr. Lee was engaged, in the spring of 1890, by Mr. Stephen, and a year after his retirement owing to ill health, he came sole editor. Thirty volumes have been issued at quarterly intervals under his sole supervision. In 1897 Mr. Lee presided at a public dinner of the contributors to Mr. Stephen's work. On the 8th July 1897 he was the guest of honor at a public banquet which was published to the editor, and was attended by many persons. In January 1898, at the Royal Institution a discourse on "National Biography" was printed in the form of a pamphlet for March and circulated in pamphlet form. Besides his part as editor of the "Dictionary," Mr. Lee has been a contributor, and nearly 800 articles to his pen. Each of the volumes of the "Dictionary" contains him of the first importance. Elizabethan authors or chief contribution is the Shakespeare in the fifty-first volume, published in June 1897, which was the first endeavour to co-ordinate coherently, facts about the great dramatic works which antiquaries had during the past two centuries. Mr. Lee has since gone further and has made a succinct, yet coherent, Shakespeare, and has based the "Dictionary" a full biography of the poet, containing newly-discovered facts, published in an index in this country and in likely to rank as the best on the subject. The Academy in January 1899 as one of the books of 1898. Address: 10, Kensington, W.

LEGOUVÉ, Ernest Wilfred, a French dramatist, the son of Gabriel Legouvé, author of "Mérites des Femmes," was born in Paris, Feb. 14, 1807. At an early age he wrote novels, plays, and poems, and his lectures on "L'Histoire Morale des Femmes" were published in 1848. In 1849, in conjunction with Scribe, he produced "Adrienne Lecouvreur," which gained great popularity through the personation of the heroine by Rachel. She, however, paid a fine of 5000 francs rather than perform in his "Médée," a play which in Montanelli's Italian version was in 1856 very successful with Ristori. In 1856 he succeeded Ancelot as a member of the Academy. Among his works are "Beatrice," 1861; "La Croix d'Honneur et les Comédiens," 1863; "Miss Suzanne," 1867; "Messieurs les Enfants," 1868; "La Bataille de Dames," 1873; "Etudes et Souvenirs de Théâtre," 1880; "Le Mérite des Femmes," 1882; "La Lecture en Action," 1883; "Une Éducation de Jeune Fille," 1884; "Soixante Ans de Souvenirs," 2 vols., 1886-87; "Fleurs d'Hiver," &c., and "Une Élève de Seize Ans," 1890. His collected plays were published in three volumes in 1887-90. He rose to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1887, and has since been promoted a Grand Officer. He is by far the oldest member of the Academy, and may be styled the Grand Old Man of French Drama. His Paris address is 14 Rue St. Marc.

LEHMANN, Rudolf, artist, was born Aug. 19, 1819, at Ottensen, near Hamburg, and educated at Hamburg. His art education he received in Paris, Munich, and Rome, where he afterwards resided for some time, and where his studio was much frequented. He has lived in London since 1866. He obtained three Gold Medals at three Paris Exhibitions, and was created a Knight of the Order of the Falcon by the Grand-Duke of Saxe-Weimar. His portrait, painted by himself at the request of the Director of Public Galleries in Florence, is placed in the Galleria degli Uffizi of that city, in the room set apart for portraits of distinguished artists painted by themselves. M. Lehmann's chief pictures are "Sixtus V. Blessing the Pontine Marshes," bought by the French Government for the Museum at Lille (this is his largest work); a "Madonna," and a "St. Sebastian," ordered by the French Government for two churches in France; "Graziella," from Lamartine's "Confidences"; "Early Dawn in the Pontine Marshes"; numerous pictures of modern life and costume in Italy; numerous portraits of distinguished persons in England, amongst whom are

LEIGHTON, John, F.S.A., artist, descended from the Leightons of Ulysses-Forfarshire, was born in St. James's, Westminster, Sept. 15, 1822, became a member of the Royal Academy in 1848. Mr. Howard, R.A., and was one of the pioneers of industrial and technical education, aiding by example the work of the Department of Science and Art, by the foundation of the "Suburban Schools," of which the Prince of Wales was the Patron. His first publication, a series of outlines, came out in 1848, but he had previously contributed to several exhibitions. In 1848-50 he published several serio-comic brochures, on art principles (then little appreciated), under the name of "Luke Limb." In 1851 Mr. Leighton aided Owen in arranging the first International Exhibition, about the same time published a series of twenty-four outlines, called "Money," and at the same time published "Suggestions in Design," which was greatly enlarged in 1881, and was the first ever issued in all styles. With it and several members of the Academy, he promoted a free exhibition of pictures, and with Roger Fenton founded the Photographic Society, of which he was the President of the Royal Academy's first Chairman. He was a member of the Copyright Committee of the Royal Society of Arts that met in 1868-69 and drew the law as it now stands, and has been seen at the International Copyright Congresses, at Antwerp, 1877, and Paris, 1889, under the chairmanship of M. Meunier. Mr. Leighton has had great success in his graphical and typographical experience. He has lectured on "Libraries and the Oriental Art," and "Binocular vision"; the "Advantages of a System of a Postal Ballot," and "Pictorial Advertising, its Use and Abuse"; and has also travelled in Russia, Caucasus, and Georgia, for the purpose of studying the Byzantine art of the Greek Church. In 1869 it was at Mr. Leighton's suggestion that Earl Sydney, the Lord Chamberlain, modified the Court costume at St. James's, making it more dignified than of yore. He has illustrated "Moral Emblems," "Lyra Germanica," "The Life of Man Symbolised," and "Madre Natura." In 1871 he edited, with illustrations, "Paris under the Commune." He is one of the original proprietors of the Graphic, and a founder of the Ex-Libris Society, and a Vice-President. Mr. Leighton served on the Commissions of the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, also in Paris, 1855 and 1867, and Philadelphia, 1867, and was a Juror in Paris in 1878, where he first exhibited his scheme for the "Unification of London," preserving the City, the map now being in Spring Gardens. Mr. Leighton is also a herald, and it was at his suggestion that Wales desired to adopt an emblem for the Principality on the Royal Standard, and the Cross of St. David on the Union Jack, a plea for which he put forth in his "Book-Plate Annual." He has three times contested the Borough of North St. Pancras in the Liberal Unionist interest, and once retired when an Unionist was returned. Mr. Leighton is a life member of the Society of Antiquaries, the Society of Arts, the Royal Institute, the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, the London Archaeological Society, the Zoological Society, the Corporation of the Artists and Literary Fund, the Ex-Libris, and many other kindred associations. He has recently published an important little work on a large subject, "The Unification of London: the Need and the Remedy" (with maps and plans). Address: Ormonde, Regent's Park, N.W.

LEIGHTON, Mrs. Marie Connor, novelist and critic, is the daughter of the late Captain James Nenon Connor, 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, and was born in Clifton in 1869. She began to devote herself to literary work at a very early age, and was educated mainly at Marquise, Pas de Calais, France. At the age of fifteen she wrote and published "Beauty's Queen," a three-volume novel, which was followed by "A Morganatic Marriage" in 1885; "Sweet Magdalen," 1887; "Husband and Wife," 1888; "The Triumph of Manhood," 1889; "The Lady of Balmerino," 1891; and "The Heart's Awakening," 1893. In 1889 she married Robert Leighton, with whom in 1891 she joined the literary staff of the Messrs. Harmsworth, and has written for Answers and others of the Harmsworth series of articles recently published, J. R. Gilmore, author of "Among the Pines," and formerly an editor of the New York Tribune, attributes entirely to Mr. Leland the so-called "Emancipation movement," during the Civil War, by means of which the Union men, who were still opposed to the Abolitionists, were reconciled to freeing the slaves, and he adduces the highest authority to prove that this emancipation policy, as conducted by Leland in the Continental, induced Abraham Lincoln to advance the emancipation by many months, a movement which, it is now generally conceded, perhaps saved the Union by greatly abridging the war. Even Lincoln and all his Cabinet deemed the act premature. He has of late lived chiefly in Italy. Address: Messrs. Baring Brothers and Co., 8 Bishopsgate Within, E.C.

LEMAIRE, Mme. Jeanne Madeleine, née Coll, French artist, born in 1850, at St. Rossoline, near Cannes, was brought up by her aunt, Mme. Herbelin. She from her earliest years imbibed a love of art from that eminent miniaturist. There was never any doubt as to what the pursuit of her life would be. As soon as the little girl could move about, a pencil was her greatest joy, so that even at the age of five or six the childish mind dictated attempts in imitative art. It is unfortunately but too seldom that the first efforts of those who afterwards become eminent in their profession are preserved, and we are not aware that any of Mme. Lemaire's juvenile artistic productions are in existence. Those, however, having charge of the child were, luckily, most careful not to neglect any evidence of unusual talent, so that at the age of nine the child was placed with a Mme. Cavé to learn drawing, this being followed by four years' instruction at M. Chaplin's school. In 1865, and when but fifteen years of age, the artist exhibited her first picture at the Salon—a portrait in oils of her grandmother—the talent in which was so fully recognised by the judges, that it was only the extreme youth of the artist that prevented a prize being adjudged for the work. Then followed a succession of pictures at the Salon—most of them being in oils—"A Columbine," an exceedingly clever work that was greatly admired, and one that at once foreshadowed the artist's future fame; "Diana Vernon," and another fancy figure in "Corinne," showed a sense of beauty of form and colour that fairly took the public by surprise. Rapidly developing into a facile and productive painter, the artist's works became as numerous as they were diversified in manner. Season after season her works were to be seen at the exhibitions of the Société d'Aquarellistes Français, of which she was a member, her subjects embracing flowers, genre, and portraits. Mme. Lemaire also engaged somewhat extensively in book illustration, producing a series of forty water-colour drawings for the édition de luxe of "L'Abbe Constantin," by Ludovic Halévy, and a large number for the novel "Férit," by Paul Hervieu. In 1890 the artist had two oil paintings—"Ophelia" and "Sonnail,"—at the exhibition of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts, in the Champ de Mars. In 1891 she exhibited "Five," and, in 1892, "Le Char des Fées," &c. In addition to all this, Mme. Lemaire has entered the field as a pastellist, for which branch of art French painters are noted. She is a member of the Société des Pastellistes Français, and a series of her drawings were at one time on view at the Goupil Gallery. Her Paris address is 31 Rue de Monceau.

LEMAÎTRE, François Élie Jules. French poet and critic, was born at Venezy, April 27, 1853, and began his education at the seminary of the Chapelle St. Mesmin, near Orleans. He entered the École Normale in 1872, and became an assistant-master at the Lycée of Havre in 1875. In 1881 he passed to Algiers, then to Besançon; but in 1884 he deserted the ill-paid paths of professorial work, to devote himself entirely to literature. He became the editor of the Revue Bleue, in which several of his articles attracted much attention, especially one on Flaubert. But it is above all as a dramatic critic that he has earned his European reputation. Succeeding Weiss on the Journal des Débats in 1886, he has since then given to the world a weekly article on the drama that may be said to have revolutionised the methods of criticism; and, at any rate, to have created a new school of dramatic critics in England, of whom Mr. A. B. Walkley is the chief representative. He was elected to the Academy in 1895 in succession to Duruy. His first work of any size was "Les Contemporains," 1886 &c., of which the studies on Zola, Ohnet, and Victor Hugo created a great impression. His dramatic criticisms have been collected into volumes entitled "Impressions du Théâtre," of which the tenth volume was published in July 1898. Although a critic of peculiarly sarcastic power, he has been unable to keep from writing plays himself. His first was "Révélée," which was played at the Odeon in 1889. This was followed by "Le Député Leveau," 1890, and by "Le Mariage Blanc," which was played at the Théâtre Français in 1891; as have been "L'Age Difficile" and "Le Pardon." His plays are noted for their advanced views, and are appreciated by select audiences. He now writes for des Deux Mondes, and is a less impressionist and more realistic. As a playwright he deals with his own class. He is in the Legion of Honour. His address is: 39 Rue d'Artois.

LE MARCHANT, Francis. was born in 1844, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford. He was a first in Lit. Hum. 1866. He went to India as a member of the Council, and in 1896 was appointed to the Council of the Secretary

LEMONNIER, Antoine Camille. Belgian critic and writer, born at Ixelles, near Brussels, in 1835. He first attracted public notice by his criticisms on the salons in 1863-66. In 1887 he obtained the quinquennial Grand Prize given by the Government for a standard work on his "La Belgique." M. Lemonnier, however, best known as a naturalistic school, affecting brutality in his methods. His works are "Contes Flamands et Wallons," "Les Charniers," 1881; "Les Concubins," 1885; and "Lupanar," 1886. In 1889 his Gil Blas, entitled "L'Enfant de la rue," was stopped by the authorities to pay a fine of £40. He is a contributor to the Figaro, L'Echo de Paris, and other French journals.

LENBACH, Franz. a German portrait-painter, born at Schrobenuhausen in Bavaria, in 1836. He at first followed the trade of a master-mason, but on his return in 1856 he entered the Munich Academy to study painting, and after a pupil of Gräbe and Piloty. He turned himself to genre painting, and his "Family in a Storm" excited much interest. In 1858 he went with Piloty to Rome, where he painted a picture of "The Martyr of the Cross," which by its realism and color created a great sensation in Munich. He then returned to portrait-painting, taking especially Rembrandt, as his model. In 1860 he received an appointment to the School of Art at Weimar, but in order to pursue further studies he returned to Munich. In 1867 he exhibited a masterly portrait of the artist, Von Hagn; and, after travels in Italy and Spain, he returned to Munich, and soon became famous for his portraits. Commissions came from all parts, and for a time he worked in Vienna, but he returned again in Munich, where, when

younger brother of Sir William Luchford Leng, of Sheffield. Sir John was educated at the Hull Grammar School, and was Head-master of Mr. J. D. In 1847, when only nineteen years of age, he was appointed sub-editor of the Dundee Advertiser, and thus began a very brilliant career as journalist. Four years afterwards (1851) he went to Dundee to take the position of editor and general manager of the Dundee Advertiser. That same year he passed its jubilee, having been founded in 1801, but although advanced Liberal principles in its management, it was in consonance with the prevailing in the locality, it was so handicapped by the heavy paper stamp and the duties that its bi-weekly circulation was very limited, and its consequence was diminishing. Sir John set vigorous work to improve and infuse new life into the Dundee Advertiser, which has since come a power of considerable influence, not only locally but throughout the country. About ten years after he took the management—that is, as “the taxes on knowledge” were increased—the Advertiser was changed from bi-weekly to a daily journal, the price reduced to one penny. In 1857 Sir John established the People's Friend, a weekly paper whose circulation soon over 250,000, there being twelve editions, specially adapted to the districts of Scotland. Another paper which has proved successful was founded by Sir John, in 1877, of the Evening Telegraph, a daily halfpenny paper, the several editions of which have a very large circulation. Some years ago he had founded a literary journal the People's Friend, which was published monthly, but was received with such favour that it was changed into a daily. This publication has been the means of introducing many new writers to the public, such popular novelists as Annie and Adeline Sergeant having first appeared in print as contributors to its columns. In addition to the journalistic work, an extensive business in commercial printing and lithography is conducted under Sir John's management; and the small office which was sufficient for the Dundee Advertiser in 1851 has now developed into a very extensive establishment. The Liberal principles which Sir John professed in 1851, when he undertook the editorship of the Dundee Advertiser, have been consistently maintained and advocated by him in his various journals. He has from the first been an adherent of Mr. Gladstone; an advocate of Home Rule for Ireland, Scotland, England, and Wales; and a supporter of measures calculated to bring about conciliation between Capital and Labour; while on temperance questions he has striven to introduce measures whereby the liquor traffic would be controlled by the people. The prominence given to his political convictions on popular questions naturally suggested that he would be found of great service in Parliament, but he was reluctant to abandon his journalistic career, and it was after he had declined no fewer than fifteen invitations that he at length consented to enter the field of politics. The death of Mr. Firth in September 1889 caused a vacancy in the representation of Dundee, and Sir John was induced to become a candidate. On that occasion he was elected without opposition. At the general election in 1892 Sir John was returned at the top of the poll as representative for Dundee in conjunction with Mr. Edmund Robertson, Civil Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's fourth administration. On the distribution of birthday honours in 1893 he received a knighthood, and this dignity was accepted by him chiefly as an honour to the Press, and to the city of his adoption. He is a Magistrate for the counties of Forfar and Fife, Deputy-Lieutenant for Dundee, and President or Vice-President of numerous societies. Besides his journalistic work, Sir John has published a number of books and pamphlets, amongst which are the following: “Impressions of America,” 1876; “The Electric Light Recommended to Gas Companies and Corporations,” 1878; “Scottish Banking Reform,” 1881; “American Competition and British Agriculture,” 1881; “Practical Politics,” 1885; “How Best to Deal with the Unemployed,” 1886; “Trip to Norway,” 1886; “Home Rule all Round,” 1890; “Excessive Patent Fees,” 1891; “Canadian Cattle Importation,” 1893; “Disestablishment in Scotland,” 1894; “Nationalisation: the Dream of the Labour Party,” 1895; “Letters from India and Ceylon,” 1896; “Some European Rivers and Cities,” 1897. He married (1), in 1851, Emily Cook, of Beverley, who died in 1894; and (2), in 1897, Mary Low, of Dundee. Address: Kinbrae, Newport, Fife.

LEONCAVALLO, Ruggiero, composer, was born in Naples on March 7, 1854. He enjoyed the friendship of Wagner, and for a long period of time lived in Paris, where he composed songs and occasional pieces, and planned his trilogy of Italian history, of which the "Medici" constitutes the first part. In May 1892 he produced his short dramatic opera, "I Pagliacci," at Milan, and in November 1893 his "Medici" was first performed in the same city. The success of Mascagni's short operas may be said to have paved the way for his own. His works have often been heard at Covent Garden.

LEOPOLD II (Leopold-Louis-Philippe-Marie-Victor), King of the Belgians, son of the late King Leopold I., upon whose death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1865, he succeeded to the throne as Leopold II., was born in Brussels, April 9, 1835, and married, Aug. 22, 1853, the Archduchess Marie of Austria, by whom he has had three children—two daughters and one son, the Duke of Brabant, who died in January 1869 at the age of ten. In 1855, in company with the Duchess of Brabant, he made a lengthened tour through Europe, Egypt, and Asia Minor. As Duke of Brabant, he took a prominent part in several important discussions in the Senate, especially in that relating to the establishment of a maritime service between Antwerp and the Levant. His Majesty has visited this country very frequently. General Gordon was his friend, and was in his service until ordered to leave Brussels for the Soudan. His "silver wedding" was celebrated with great rejoicing in August 1878. His Majesty takes a great interest in the development of the Congo Free State, was practically the founder of it, and is now its ruling sovereign. He has lately been zealously advocating the claims of his country in China, but without success. Having no son living, and daughters being excluded from the succession by the Belgian Constitution, the elder son of his brother, the Comte de Flandre, was heir-presumptive to the throne until his death, Jan. 23, 1891, aged twenty-two. Now Prince Albert, the only brother of the late Prince Baldwin, is heir-presumptive.

LEO THE THIRTEENTH, The Pope, is the son of Count Ludovico Pecci, by his wife Anna Prosperi. He was born at Carpineto, in the diocese of Anagni, in the State of the Church, March 2, 1810, and was baptized by the names of Vincenzo and Gioacchino. His mother always called him by his first name, and he also used by himself the appellation of his studies, which was his second name, Gioacchino. His father sent him, along with his brother Giuseppe, to the town of Viterbo. There he studied law and humanities under the direction of Nardo Giribaldi, a man of letters, until the year 1824, when, on the death, he was sent to Rome to an uncle, and took up his abode in an apartment of the palace of the Muti. In November 1824 he entered the schools of the Collegio Romano, where he was instructed by the teachers Fathers Ferrarini, Giuseppe Bonvicini, both famous for eloquence and virtue of order. Three years later he began to study mathematics. He followed Father Giovambattista, nephew of Leo XII., and Don Carafa, a mathematician. Pecci's assiduity and talent, and his first prize in Physics—obtaining the first accessit in mathematics—he passed to the course of law, and in the four years of the law he attended the lectures of Giovanni Perrone, Francesco Marzucchinelli, Cornelius Van der Linde, and Francesco Xavier Patrizi, the late Cardinal Patriarch. Being philosophy Pecci was, in spite his youth, to give lectures in philosophy to the pupils of the College. In his third year of law he sustained a public dispute, obtained the first prize in the following year, being then but 16 years old, he obtained the first prize in philosophy. Even in Viterbo was noticed for his ability, perfect propriety of conduct, seemed entirely devoted to study, took no part in entertainments, sazioni, amusements, or pleasures of twelve or thirteen he wrote prose or verse, with facility he mentioned that since he had the volume of his verses, chief of which had been printed at Udine. He entered the College of Noble Ecclesiastics. Abbate Pecci frequented the Roman University to learn civil law. Pecci and the Riario Sforza (afterwards Cardinal bishop of Naples) were the youths who eclipsed all the companions in study. Cardinal Sala took much interest in assisting him with advice in becoming a Doctor in Law, by Pope Gregory XVI., a de-

He remained in Brussels for ra, and was then nominated Perugia on Jan. 19, 1846, about the previous to the death of XVI. He was created and pro- Cardinal by Pius IX. in the of Dec. 19, 1853. He was a f several of the Congregations als—among them those of the f Rites, and of Bishops and

tant Encyclical Letter on Labour, which presents the Papacy in a new and liberal light. Later, His Holiness bade the French clergy recognise the Republic, the result being that many hitherto disaffected Mon- archists have accepted the present order of things in France. On Feb. 19, 1893, His Holiness celebrated his episcopal Jubilee, and held a State celebration at St. Peter's before immense crowds of pilgrims. The English pilgrims on this occasion were headed by the Duke of Norfolk. In October 1894 the Pope summoned a conference of the Patriarchs of the Greek and other Eastern Churches at the Vatican, but the gathering was without results. In March 1895 considerable excitement was aroused in Austria owing to an announcement in the leading organ of the Christian Socialists' Party that the Pope had sent his blessing to the party, whose leader, the well-known Polish priest and Christian Socialist agitator, Father Stojalowski, was then awaiting his trial on a charge of inciting civil discontent, and to the journal itself. At about the same time an intimation was given to the world that, being approached by many English churchmen, both lay and clerical, who desired reunion with the Church if only certain restrictions, including the enforced celibacy of the clergy, could be withdrawn, the Pope was disposed to grant some mitigation as to celibacy, but, the English bishops being divided, nothing further came of the pronouncement. Following up this appeal to His Holiness, Viscount Halifax, as representing the English churchmen before mentioned, visited Rome and conferred with Cardinal Vaughan, the Pope's English Vicar, as to the conditions of reunion. The Pope did not endorse Cardinal Vaughan's conclusions favouring the promotion of individual conversions, but stated his desire to address an appeal to the English people. His famous utterance was published on April 20, 1895, inscribed "Ad Anglos," and the pathetic plea for the unity of Christendom was followed, in June 1896, by an Encyclical addressed to the Bishops of the Church, in which the conditions of unity—in brief, unqualified recognition of Rome—were laid down. As was observed at the time by all thinking people, not one word from the beginning to the end of this statement could be found to justify the assumption of Lord Halifax and kindred spirits that Rome would or could treat the question of reunion as a matter of negotiation or compromise. Although rebuffed, members of the English Church Union sought for the recognition by Rome of Anglican Orders, and the assistance of Mr. Gladstone was enlisted in that behalf. But neither Mr. Gladstone's touching per-social appeal to His Holiness nor the earnest, if misguided, efforts of the High Church Party availed. On Sept. 21, 1896, the now-famous "Papal Bull on Anglican Orders" was promulgated, and, to the keen disappointment of Mr. Gladstone and to the dismay of the English Extremists, the Pope unequivocally refused to recognise English ecclesiastical Orders, setting forth in his pronouncement an elaborate argument to justify Rome's reiterated negative. When receiving the Cardinals and his Court on the celebration of his 87th birthday in March 1897 the Pope emphasised the drastic nature of his Bull, which, he said, had been issued "in order to enlighten those who were honestly mistaken and to cut short sophistical evasions." His Holiness has not since made a further appeal to the English Church, convinced, probably, by the severe and discouraging criticism of both Prelate and laity that his Pontificate will never see the dawn of the reunion of the West. The only two recent intrusions of the Pope into English political life have been the bestowal, in March 1896, of his blessing on Mr. John Dillon as the new leader of the Irish Party, and his expressions of sympathy with the objects of the Irish Race Convention, which met in Dublin during September 1896. But the Pope's active interest in European affairs has of late been as keen as ever, and in 1896 he made various representations to the Governments of Hungary, Bulgaria, and Serbia, concerning which it is impossible to comment here. An Encyclical was published in May 1897, exhorting the faithful, on the occasion of Pentecost, to pray for the unity of all Christians; and in the following month the Pope solemnly canonised two old priests, Anthony Zaccaria (1502-39) and Peter Fourier (1565), a ceremony which had not been seen in St. Peter's for thirty years. His Holiness at this time made an important statement as to the Church's attitude towards the French Republic, asserting that the supreme criterion of the common good imposed upon Catholics the acceptance of the existing form of government. On Aug. 14, 1897, the Pope received in audience Sir Wilfrid Laurier (q.v.) on his visit to Europe. This interview resulted in the appearance, on Dec. 24, 1897, of an Encyclical on the Manitoba Schools Question, in which, while asserting the concessions obtained by Catholics as inadequate, the Pope advised the faithful on their part not to refuse a partial compromise. On the previous day, Leo, speaking at his customary Christmas reception to the Cardinals, declared the hostility between the Vatican and the Italian Government to be "repugnant to the national traditions and to the fact that such a state of affairs is not supported by the overwhelming majority of Catholics. In the spring he endeavoured to act as mediator between Spain and America, without success, and in the summer of 1897 he was engaged in writing about the celebration of the American War, but without success. On June 1897 His Holiness received one of his early days as a prisoner. "In Praise of Frugality" is a translation of this poem, which is a model of the Epistles of the Pope, by Mr. Andrew Lang (q.v.). The effort was a great appeal for asceticism in the world, and much astonishment was caused by a production from a statesman in years. From time to time in recent months (1898) there have been issued as to the Pope's health, and but for the issue of this, it is issued with unusual regularity. An early part of 1899 a series of performances on His Holiness's health has only partially recovered.

LÉPINE, Louis, Frédéric (1846-1900) was born at Lyon in 1846, and died at that town and at the Lycée Grand, Paris. He was attending school when the war of 1870 broke out, and he at once enlisted in the 1st of the Rhône, and after the war passed into a volunteer regiment. By Colonel Denfert-Rochereau, in the war he was called to the front, and in 1877 was appointed to the La Palisse. Having held office at many towns, in 1880 he was promoted Préfet of the Indre. From 1886 to 1891 he was Chief of the Préfet de Police at Paris, and he went to the Loire as Préfet instrumental in arbitrating between masters and men during the glass-workers and engineers' strike, passed to the Seine-et-Oise, where he was recalled to Paris to be Lozé as Préfet de Police during the riots of the students. On 1891 he was appointed Governor of Algeria.

LE ROUX, Henri (known as Le Roux), French writer, was born at Havre in 1860, and early in life turned to journalism, and was a notable contributor to the Revue Politique et Littéraire. M. Jules Claretie (q.v.) began of the Comédie Française, and took his place on the Troisième serious work was a translation of the Russian of Stepaniak's "S Russia," and he has since published a quantity of novels, travels lettres. Among the most important these are "Les Âmes en Peine," "L'Enfer Parisien," 1888; "Entre," 1889; "Au Sahara," 1891, illustrated with photographs by the author; "En 1891, travels in Spain, Morocco, Algeria," "Les Mondains," 1893. In an adaptation of the Russian novel Tolstoy's, entitled "Crime et Châtiment," was played at the Odéon. He is alier of the Legion of Honour, and his address is 167 Boulevard Males-

LESCHETIZKY, Theodor, musician, born at Langert, in Austrian Poland. He was educated by his father, Czerny and Sechter, and began to play at the age of 15. For many years Professor at St. Petersburg Conservatory, and first came to England as pianist in 1864. Afterwards, he settled in London, where he has acquired the reputation of being the finest pianoforte player in Europe. Among his pupils are Ignacy Paderewski (q.v.), Mark Hambro and Madame Essipoff, whom he recently married. In the autumn of 1891 he came to England on a visit to Southampton, and gave several recitals at the Salle Erard and elsewhere, being cordially greeted. His compositions include an opera, entitled "Die Erste Walzer," which was played at Prague in 1864, and numberless pieces for the piano-

1865; "Clarissa," 1866, which was also exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition; "Nausicaa and her Maids," 1871; "School Revisited" (his most celebrated picture), 1875; "Cowslips" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill" (his Diploma picture), 1877; "Home, Sweet Home," 1878; "Naughty Kitty" and "Alice in Wonderland," containing portraits of the artist's wife and daughter, 1879; "All that Glitters is not Gold," 1880; "Hen and Chickens," 1881; "Molly," "Sally in our Alley," "Pique," and "A Daughter of Charity," 1882; "Daughters of Eve" and "Wayside Rest," 1883; "A Girl with a Silver Bowl full of Roses" and "A Thames Boat-house," 1887; "Sun and Moon Flowers," 1889. More recently he has exhibited at the Royal Academy "November Sunshine," and "Toby," 1895; "Kathleen," and "September Sunshine," 1896; "The Day of Rest," 1897; "The Ash Grove," and "Arlington Row, Gloucestershire," 1898; "The Peaceful Highway," 1899. In 1881 Mr. Leslie gave up his house in St. John's Wood and removed with his family to an old-fashioned riverside house at Wallingford, where he has lived ever since. Mr. Leslie has at times used the pen as well as the pencil, being the author of "Our River," the first edition of which was published by Messrs. Bradbury & Agnew in 1881. In 1893 Messrs. Macmillan published his "Letters to Marco," which were written to Mr. Leslie's old friend, H. Stacy Marks, R.A., on subjects from natural history and country life. Both these books are illustrated by the author. In 1896 he published "Riverside Letters." Addresses: Riverside, Wallingford, Berks; and Athenæum.

LESLIE, George Dunlop, R.A., the eldest son of the late Charles Robert R.A., was born at 12 Pineapple St. John's Wood, London, July 2, and educated at the Mercers' School City. From his father he received, as well as a great deal of instruction in drawing, the pure and tender feeling, as well as the simplicity and method which distinguish so many works of the father, which are reflected in the productions of the son. Young Leslie was, however, by his father at Mr. F. Cary's Academy of Art, Bloomsbury, whence he graduated a student in the Life School of the Royal Academy in April 1854. The picture he exhibited, called "Hope," was sold at the British Institution in 1857, and was purchased by Lord Houghton. The same year two small pictures by him were hung at the Royal Academy, and he has since regularly exhibited. In the spring of 1859 his father died, and the young artist entirely lost his resources. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1868, and a Academician, June 29, 1876. The last pictures which he has exhibited are "The Defence of Lathom House,"

LESSAR, Paul, was born in 1851, and comes of a Montenegrin family. He was educated at the École des Ingénieurs in St. Petersburg, and on account of his ability he was selected to accompany General Skobelev into Asia to survey for railways. In 1880 he joined General Komaroff as an expert in surveying and exploring the Turcoman country between the Caspian and Afghanistan. He established himself at Askabad, and in November 1881 he penetrated beyond Sarakhs, across the Afghan frontier, to within a few miles of Herat. In the course of two years he rode a distance of nearly 6000 miles, exploring the whole of the ground of the Russo-Persian and Russo-Afghan frontier. He became Diplomatic Attaché to the Governor of the Transcaspian, and to him was committed the real direction of the matter of the Afghan frontier. In 1885 he was sent on a special mission to London as geographical expert, to assist the Russian

LETHBRIDGE, Sir Roper, K.C.I.E., J.P., eldest son of the late Mr. E. Lethbridge, was born on Dec. 23, 1840, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in double honours (classical and mathematical). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. In 1868 he was appointed Professor in the Bengal Educational Department. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and acted as an Examiner of that University (and also of the University of Lahore), at various times from 1868 to 1876, in Political Economy, History, English Language and Literature, Mathematics, and Mental and Moral Philosophy. In 1877 he was appointed Secretary to the Simla Educational Commission, and placed on special duty to write the articles on the Feudatory States for the "Imperial Gazetteer of India." In the following year he was transferred to the Indian Political Department as Political Agent and Press Commissioner under Lord Lytton's Viceroyalty. He was for many years editor of the only Indian quarterly, the Calcutta Review; and is the author of a "History of India," also a "History of Bengal," and many other works. In 1885 he was elected Conservative member for North Kensington, and was again returned in 1886. He was created a Companion of the Indian Empire in 1877, a Knight Bachelor in 1885, and a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire in 1890. Sir Roper is a J.P. for Kent, Lord of the Manor of Exbourne, co. Devon, and patron of one living. He married (1), in 1869, Eliza, daughter of Mr. W. Finlay, and grandniece of the Right Hon. John, 13th Lord Teynham (she died in 1895); and (2), in 1897, Emma, widow of the late Mr. Frederick Burbidge of Micklefield, Herts. By his first marriage he has issue: Francis Washington Lethbridge, Lieutenant Indian Staff Corps and Assistant Cantonment-Magistrate of Rawal Pindi, India; William Agar Lander Lethbridge, Lieutenant 4th King's Own Regiment; and Caroline Anne Roper, married to Mr. Frederic Gorell Barnes, M.P. for the Faversham Division of Kent. Sir Roper is Chairman of the Indian Constitutional Association, Member of Council of the East India Association and of the National Indian Association, and Member of the Indian Committee of the Society of Arts; and Governor of the Plymouth College. Address: 21 Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.

LEWIS, Mrs. Arthur. See TERRY, KATE.

LEWIS, Professor BENJAMIN F.S.A., is descended from the celebrated Nonconformist of Matthew Henry the Unitarian and from a Huguenot family which seems to have migrated to England at the time of the Revocation. He was born in London in 1812, at the Islington Property Office, the late Dr. Jackson, Secretary of London, and at University College, London; he also read law under the late Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, and took the degree of B.A. at University College, London in 1843, with a Gold Medal and Scholarship in Classics; and was a Fellow of University College. He is the editor of the 9th edition of "Taylor on Evidence," the author of "Inns of Court" and other articles in the "Encyclopedia of English Law," "The History of the Temple," &c., &c. He was appointed in 1898 one of the Honorary Counsel to the Honourable Society of the Baronetage. Address: 4 Paper Buildings, Temple, E.C.

LEWIS, Most Rev. John Travers, D.D., LL.D., Archbishop of Ontario, born in 1825 at Garrysloyne Castle, the son of the Rev. J. Lewis, of St. Anne's, Cork, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as Senior Moderator in Ethics and Logic, and was Gold Medallist. He was ordained in 1848, and held the curacy of Newtown Butler; went to Canada in 1849, and was appointed by the Bishop of Toronto to the pastoral charge of the parish of Hawkesbury, which he exchanged in 1854 for the rectory of Brookville. He was consecrated first Bishop of Ontario, in Upper Canada, March 25, 1862. On Jan. 25, 1893, he was elected Metropolitan of Canada, and on Sept. 19 of the same year he was made Archbishop of Ontario at the General Synod held in Toronto for the Consolidation of the Church of England in Canada. Address: Bishopsleigh, Kingston, Canada.

LEWIS, The Right Rev. Richard, D.D., Bishop of Llandaff, was born in Pembroke-shire, March 27, 1821, and is the son of John Lewis. He was educated at Bromsgrove and at Worcester College, Oxford (B.A. 1843; M.A. 1846). He was instituted to the rectory of Lampeter-Velfry, Narberth, Pembroke-shire, in 1851, and was appointed Archdeacon of St. David's in 1875. In 1883 he was appointed Bishop of Llandaff in succession to Dr. Ollivant, and was consecrated to that See by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), in St. Paul's Cathedral on April 25 of that year. Addresses: The Palace, Llandaff; Heullan, Narberth; and Athenæum.

LEWIS, Professor William James, M.A., son of the Rev. J. Lewis, late of Bonvilston, born near Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Jan. 16, 1847, was elected a Scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, in October 1865, and obtained a first class in the University Examinations in Mathematics and Natural Science. He was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in April 1869. For some time he was Assistant-Master at Cheltenham College. He was a Member of the Total Eclipse Expeditions (English) of 1870 and 1871, and his observations on the polarisation of the corona have been published in the volume of "Solar Eclipses" issued under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society. In 1874 he began to study mineralogy, and for that purpose went to Cambridge, where he received the valuable assistance of Professor William Hallows Miller. He held an appointment in the Mineral Department of the British Museum from 1875 to 1877, in which latter year he resigned owing to ill-health. He has contributed several papers on Crystallography to the Philosophical Magazine. In

LIEBKNECHT, Herr, one of the leaders of contemporary Socialism in Germany, was born at Giessen, March 29, 1826. He attended the university of that town in his nineteenth year, and enthusiastically devoted himself to the study of philology, history, and philosophy, with the object of becoming a learned jurist or advocate. He showed socialistic tendencies at an early age, and, becoming enamoured of the writings of St. Simon, he hurried to Paris in aid in the February Revolution of 1848. Previously to this, however, he was disappointed with taking part in one of the revolutionary movements, and was angrily expelled from Austria in 1846. He joined the ouvroirs in Paris in 1847. This chapter over, he assisted in the ill-fated attempt to establish a republic in Germany, was arrested at Freiligrath and lay in prison for nine months before his trial. Soon after his liberation Liebknecht came into collision with the authorities for trying to "impregnate" the trade unions of the Republic with Socialist principles. He was accordingly conveyed to the frontier of France, handed over to the police of that country, who conducted him to the coast, and safely and surely on a ship, and, as he says, "packed him off to England in the bale of contraband goods." From October 1862 he remained in England, enjoying a life of honourable privation at the busy occupation of journalism, as an intimate associate of Frederick Engels and Karl Marx, who were also temporarily in this country. In 1862, on the proclamation of an amnesty, Liebknecht returned to Germany, and "to the tender arms of Prince Bismarck." He at once went to work to further the Socialist cause as journalist, schoolmaster, and lecturer. In 1865 he was again banished from Berlin to Russia. A candidate for Parliament in February 1867, he was arrested and imprisoned for three months, but was duly released seven months later for Schneeberg, in Saxony, and subsequently sentenced Offenbach on the Main. In Liebknecht, Bebel (q.v.), and others testify to his testimony, "in the press and in the assembly, against what they conceived as 'the fratricidal iniquity' of the Franco-German war. Arrested again, quite naturally, for high treason, Liebknecht with his colleagues was imprisoned for three months, and sentenced to two years' further incarceration. The "Man of Blood and Iron" passed his Anti-Socialist law in 1878, which continued in operation until 1890, when he retired. The effect of this law on Herr Liebknecht was to deprive him of all direct intercourse with his family for a period of twelve years. Opinions may differ with regard to the philosophy of Liebknecht, but as to the heroism and staunch conviction which have marked his career there can be no question. He visited this country in 1896, when he lectured throughout Great Britain, under the auspices of the Zurich International Socialist Committee, and returned to Germany to undergo another term of four months' imprisonment for lèse-majesté. His offence was the childish one of not rising to welcome the Emperor on his visit to open Parliament. His importance in German political life can be gauged by the fact that he has the high honour of representing Berlin in the Reichstag, in which assembly he is regarded as an "Incorruptible." He is also editor of Vorwärts, the leading Socialist organ in Germany, and is an eloquent parliamentary and public speaker.

LIEBLING, Alice, was born at Berlin, 27th November 1872, and was educated in that city and at Lausanne. Under the nom-de-plume of "Fred Aling" Madame Liebling has won a considerable reputation in Germany as a writer and a novelist. She contributed feuilletons and essays to the Berliner Tageblatt and the Montags-Welt, and in 1897 published her first novel, "Eltern Sünden" ("The Sins of the Parents"), which created some sensation in Germany on account of the boldness and vividness of the style, and the courage with which the psychological sides of the incidents were handled. "Fred Aling" has written some poetry, chiefly the ballet "Der Spielteufel," and two of her fairy tales inspired the composition of two of her husband's most famous piano pieces, "The Flower and the Butterfly" (Op. 11) and "The Star of Warsaw" (Op. 14), which were well received at the St. James's Hall in June 1898. Madame Liebling is now engaged in writing the libretto of Herr Georg Liebling's opera "Am Fjord," which will be produced shortly. "Fred Aling" has settled in the metropolis as special correspondent for Great Britain of the Berliner Kleines Journal, and of that Parisian curiosity, La Fronde, a paper written, printed, and published entirely by women. On the occasion of her husband's recital before the Queen at Osborne in August

LIEBLING, Georg, a German pianist, was born at Berlin, 22nd January 1805. As a child he showed remarkable musical ability both in composition and in execution. At the age of sixteen he became a teacher in the Kullak Conservatoire, Berlin, in the following year making his first tour through Germany and Austria, where he was enthusiastically received. He first studied the piano under Theodor and Franz Kullak, and learnt composition with Heinrich Urban and Alb. Becker. So promising was his future that, in 1834, Franz Liszt took him under his charge at Weimar, where he remained for two years, and thus completed his musical education. In October 1834 he gave his first Berlin concert, and from 1835 to 1838 travelled through Europe, performing before several of the Courts. He was appointed by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha as Court pianist and chamber virtuoso to his Court, and Liebling's career from that time has been one of increasing success. Although still young, he has become well known as a composer, fulfilling the promise of his early years in overtures, concertos, dances, and songs. He gave a series of ten recitals in London during 1897 and 1898 at the St. James's Hall, on each occasion receiving merited applause. His compositions, which are numerous, are widely known and played. Herr Liebling, on 4th September 1895, married, at Berlin, Alice, daughter of Herr Goldberger, an intimate acquaintance of the old Emperor, William I. On Aug. 14, 1898, Herr Georg Liebling played, by command, before her Majesty the Queen at Osborne, who expressed great delight at the performance, complimenting Herr Liebling on his skill as an executant and composer, and presenting him with a diamond pin as a memento of the occasion. In September 1898 Liebling was offered a professorship at the Guildhall School of Music, which, after some hesitation, he accepted, abandoning his projected American tour. He has played in several of the large provincial towns, such as Liverpool, Blackburn, and Manchester (at the Hallé concerts)—appearing with Patti at the Dome, Brighton—and has everywhere been received with great favour. Herr Liebling has settled, for the time being, in London. Address: 13B Hyde Park Mansions.

LI HSI, King of Corea, succeeded to the throne in 1864, and although he has the reputation of being a weak and vacillating ruler, owing to his country being the battle-ground of China and Japan, yet he has firmly held the Court of Peking in check, and does not possess Chosen, and to prevent ambassadors to other countries. Agent now resides at Seoul, and is regarded as the real King of Corea.

LI HUNG CHANG, 62 Prime Minister of China, was Fei Shienn, in the Anhwei Feb. 16, 1823. In 1860 he was with General other China suppressing the Taiping rebellion, then Governor of the Hubei. The other Chiang province his rule, he was created Viceroy of the united countries May 1870. In 1871 he was appointed Minister of the Potentiary, and in 1871 Viceroy of Kuang, and a Grand Chamberlain. After the Tien-Tsin massacre was despoiled of his titles and punished on the charge of the General in command, but the reigning Emperor restored him to the office of Grand Chamberlain, and was the mediator for the extradition for the murder of Mr. Mayer killed in 1876 while endeavouring to explore South-western China, also negotiated important treaties with Peru and with Japan. Li Hsi was till lately the Viceroy of the political provinces of Peking, such as the actual ruler or traitor of the Chinese Empire, man of liberal views, has been mining and coast-steamer carried on by English companies thought to be favourable even. He was the originator of the navy. During the recent war General Li Hung Chang, the man, and more than once disgraced by the Emperor, in 1895 the whole burden of which in a constitutional form be divided between various Ministries, Ministry, Marine Ministry, Ministry, and that without civil service to assist him. issues edicts, but does not means for carrying them. Hung Chang has devoted providing means, whether in detail. Indeed, he has been as the Atlas on whose shoulders the rotten fabric of Chinese has rested for thirty years beginning of the recent war vested by the Emperor with charge of the naval and sent to Corea, but early in deprived of the Yellow Jade Peacock's Feather, and was the chief command. He, continued Prime Minister. It was rumoured that in these merchants and others at anxious that he should be the charge of being under even German influences. Reported that he had been seduced in all his offices, and stored to complete favour 5) in view of the peace with Japan, which he is said taken. On March 28, 1896, he left Shanghai for Europe the Emperor of China at nation, thus beginning his round the civilised world, ought to have critically in-European situation. He declared object of his trip was to himself, in order to study report to the Emperor as to us for China. Indeed, he Emperor had expressly ordered the trip, and he affirmed that Europe was not at all that treaties of any sort, but he and to carry back useful. He visited Germany, the U.S., and Paris, arriving in August 1896. While here Li naturally as an honoured guest to almost everything doing homage in particular statue in Trafalgar Square, an invitation to Hawarden Mr. Gladstone. After payments to the Queen, Li left August 20, 1896, expressing his admiration cannot be withheld from good-will and gratification. To the United States and mission, returning via Yokohama, which he reached Oct. 3, proceeding to Peking (October 10 days Li Hung Chang was Minister for Foreign Affairs, enough, an Imperial edict he same time ordering him "for presuming to enter the ruined summer palace of the Empress Dowager." Suspended Li of going behind as a punishment deprived of his salary, although strongly advised the Foreign Minister of Disgusted at the treatment on his return, Li declared retiring into private life, died at his post, probably to impress Dowager and her late Emperor, but more particularly been hinted, in order to influence, the long series of which Russia has received to checkmate any inconvenient ascendancy which Britain might acquire at Peking. In March 1898 China acknowledged that the mission of her envoy, Li Hung Chang, to St. Petersburg, had been unsuccessful, and that she had no alternative but to agree to the Russian demands. It is impossible to trace here all the influences, direct and indirect, which Li Hung Chang exerted over the course of events. He evidently gave some measure of satisfaction to his Imperial master, for in June 1898 the Emperor conferred upon him the Chinese Order of the Double Dragon (third degree, first class), a distinction never before bestowed on a Chinese subject. Rumours were current in China during August 1898 reflecting doubtfully upon Li Hung Chang's integrity, and in September 1898 he was dismissed from the Tsung-li-Yamen by an Imperial decree. This momentous occurrence was regarded as a distinct success for British diplomacy, and, although Li was permitted to retain the position of Senior Grand Secretary, it was expected that, anticipating dismissal, he would resign. The cause of his disgrace was that he deceived the Tsung-li-Yamen as to the true nature of the terms of the Lu-han railway contract, and it was understood that, Li having served its purpose, Russia would abandon him. Towards the end of September 1898 rumour reached England that the Dowager Empress had recovered her ascendancy over the Emperor, and that consequently the return to power of Li Hung Chang, her lieutenant, was imminent. Whatever may be conjectured concerning his career as a diplomatist, admiration cannot be withheld from the elevating and distinguished efforts he has made to further the social and educational interests of his country. A recent writer, Mr. Valentine Chirol, has given the following portrait of this potent politician: "Gifted with no mean intelligence and with a double dose of Chinese cunning, he is too much of a sceptic to allow prejudices or principles of any kind to stand in his way. Brought more often than most of his fellow-countrymen into contact with Europeans, especially during his five-and-twenty years' residence at Tien-tsin, he has rubbed up acquaintance with Western modes of thought, and he has learned with some success the art of turning towards every European whom he meets that facet of his character which is most likely to impress his visitor. On proper occasions he will shed crocodile's tears over the iniquity of the opium trade, yet nowhere does the cultivation of the native poppy receive more encouragement than in the province which he rules or on his own vast estates. He will deplore the lamentable periodicity of families, and yet will allow his subordinates to engineer a gigantic corner in grain. It is difficult to believe that his own hands are clean when he is known to have amassed in the course of a long official career a colossal fortune, reputed by many to be the largest possessed by any single individual in the world, and certainly in China." His life was written by R. K. Douglas, and published in 1895.

LILLY, William Samuel, M.A., J.P., eldest son of the late William Lilly, of Windout House, near Exeter, was born at Fifehead, Dorsetshire, on July 10, 1840, and educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where in 1855 he obtained the senior scholarship and the Classical Prize. He graduated in 1861 in the Law Tripos, and in the same year obtained an appointment, by open competition, in the Civil Service of India. He was sent to the Presidency of Madras, where, after filling various public offices, he was appointed, in 1869, Under-Secretary to the Government. He left India on account of ill-health in 1870. He was called to the English Bar in 1873, and in 1874 was appointed Secretary to the Catholic Union of Great Britain, which office he still holds. He published, in 1884, "Ancient Religion and Modern Thought"; in 1886, "Chapters in European History," 2 vols.; in 1889, "A Century of Revolution"; in 1890, "On Right and Wrong"; in 1892, "On Shibboleths" and "The Great Enigma"; in 1893, with J. E. P. Wallis, a "Manual of the Law specially affecting Catholics"; in 1894, the "Claims of Christianity"; and in 1897, "Essays and Speeches," and is well known as a contributor to the Quarterly, Contemporary, and Fortnightly Reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century, upon philosophical and historical subjects. He is a Justice of the Peace for the counties of Middlesex and London. He married, in 1878, Susannah, second daughter of the Rev. George Hall. Residence: 27 Egerton Terrace, S.W.; Club: The Athenæum.

LINCOLN, The Hon. Robert Todd, American statesman, is the son of the sixteenth President of the United States, and was born at Springfield, Illinois, Aug. 1, 1843. He was prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Exeter, N.H., and graduated at Harvard in 1864. After a short stay at the Harvard Law School he was commissioned a Captain in the Union Army, and served through the final campaign of the Civil War. He then the study of law, was admitted to the bar and began the practice in Chicago. All offers of office were steadily refused. He was President Garfield in 1881, and held the portfolio of Secretary of the Cabinet, and this because of the assassination of Mr. Garfield was requested by President Harrison to retain his seat, which he declined. He resumed the practice of law where he remained until 1890, when he returned to England. He resigned at the beginning of Mr. Gladstone's Administration, and again resumed professional work in Chicago.

LINTON, Sir James Dromgole, President of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, was born in London, Dec. 26, 1840, and is the only son of the late James Linton, of London, and Jane Scott, of Carlisle. He soon showed talent within the reach of every purse. The porter of tea he has been a benefactor of the working-man, and of the working-man's wife and child. On Thursday in Jubilee week he sprang into fame as the provider drunk by some 300,000 poverty-stricken Londoners, in fifty-six different where Jubilee dinners were provided: them at the kind instance of the Princess of Wales. To this tea-drinking Sir Thomas Lipton personally contributed £25,000. His reward earned its reward, and he was knighted. Address: Osidge, Southgate, N.

L., Lord, Joseph Lister, Bart., F.R.C.S., LL.D., President of the Royal Society, Surgeon-Extraordinary to the Queen, Emeritus Professor of Clinical Surgery in King's College, London, is the son of the late Joseph Jackson Lister, of Upton, Essex, and was born in 1825. He is a B.A. and M.B. of the University of London, 1852; a Fellow of the College of Surgeons, England, 1852; a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, 1855. He was for many years Regius Professor of Surgery in the University of Glasgow, and afterwards Regius Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University of Edinburgh. In 1870 he was one of the members appointed to the General Medical Council for Scotland. In 1880 he received the Medal of the Royal Society; the following year the prize of the Academy of Paris was awarded to him for his observations and discoveries in the application of the antiseptic treatment to surgery, which has often been called "Listerism," and is now of worldwide fame and universal benefit. He received the degree of LL.D. from Glasgow University in 1879; D.C.L. from Oxford in 1880; LL.D. at Cambridge in 1883 and in 1883 was made a Baronet by Queen Victoria's recommendation. He has been the recipient of many other degrees and distinctions. In 1896, he was President of the Royal Society, elevated to the peerage, as Lord Lister of Lyme Regis, and is, if not the first man called to the House of Lords, at least the first to be called there in his own right. In the September of that year he was President of the British Association, and at the Liverpool meeting he addressed a masterly and comprehensive paper on "Listerism" and all that the term implies. Old pupils of his recognised his address the sum and substance of his teaching during many previous years, but the general public, profoundly ignorant of the recent march of surgical science, were none the less profoundly impressed with what to them proved a revelation. Since that date his lordship has taken much the same position in the world of English science as that taken by Huxley a decade or two ago. The Royal College of Surgeons of England has presented him with its medal, an honour granted to very few, and he has been fêted at a great banquet of the medical profession and of scientific men generally. His portrait, painted by Mr. G. S. S. G. S. S., and subscribed for by his admirers, was presented to him by Mr. Davis-Colley, on behalf of the surgical profession, in the theatre of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, in the hall of which it now hangs. More recently he was entertained by his former "dressers" at a banquet, of which Dr. St. Clair Thomson was secretary. At the Virchow address and dinner (October 1898), Lord Lister fitly presided, and was the object of the illustrious German savant's most fervent eulogy. During his address, Professor Virchow expressed the admiration felt for Lord Lister's grand scientific achievements by the Continent at large by one of those acts of spontaneous courtesy which, though rarely witnessed in this self-contained island, are an honour to foreign men of learning, for he turned round, at a critical point in his oration, and shook the subject of our notice warmly by the hand. It was a historic incident. In June 1899 the Council of the Royal Institution of Public Health awarded the Harben Gold Medal for 1899 to Lord Lister, "in recognition of his eminent services to preventive medicine." He is the author of papers "On the Early Stages of Inflammation," &c., in the Philosophical Transactions; "On the Minute Structure of Involuntary Muscular Fibre," in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; and of various other papers on "Surgical Pathology," &c. One of his latest papers on "Principles of Antiseptic Surgery" appeared in Virchow's Festschrift in 1891. He married, in 1856, Agnes, daughter of J. Syme. This lady died in 1893. Addresses: 12 Park Crescent, Portland Place, W.; and Athenæum.

LISTOWEL, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Hare, K.P., J.P., was born at Convamore, co. Cork, on May 29, 1833, and succeeded his father as 3rd Earl in 1856. Obtaining a commission in the Scots Guards in 1852, he was present at the battle of the Alma, where he was severely wounded, and retired as a Captain in 1856. He acted as a Lord-in-Waiting in 1880, was created K.P. in 1873, and is Vice-Admiral of the Province of Munster. Lord Listowel married, in 1865, Lady Ernestine Mary Brudenell-Bruce, daughter of the 3rd Marquis of Ailesbury. Addresses: Kingston House, Princes Gate, S.W.; and Convamore, Ballyhooly, co. Cork.

LITTLE, The Rev. William John Knox, M.A., Canon of Worcester, is a son of Mr. John Little, of Stewartstown, co. Tyrone, and was born in 1839. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1862 as a third class in the Classical Tripos, and proceeded M.A. in due course. He was successively assistant master in Lancaster and Sherborne Grammar Schools; curate of Christ Church, Lancaster; curate in charge of Turweston, Bucks; and curate of St. Thomas's, Regent Street. He was collated to the rectory of St. Alban's, Chetwood, in 1875, and remained there until 1885, when he was appointed Vicar of Hoar Cross. In September 1881 he was nominated by Mr. Gladstone to the canonry in Worcester Cathedral that had been vacated by the promotion of Canon Bradley to the Deanery of Westminster. Canon Knox Little is well known as a most eloquent popular preacher of the High Church School, whose sermons suggest the grand flights of the Jesuit orators of the Roman Church. Perhaps his most memorable sermon is that which he delivered on the text in the "Song of Solomon," "He is chiefest among ten thousand; he is altogether lovely." He is the author of "Characteristics of the Christian Life," "Meditations on the Three Hours' Agony of our Blessed Redeemer," "Motives of the Christian Life," and a volume of "Sermons" and some novels, one of which is "The Child of Stafferton," 1889. One of his most recent publications is "The Christian House, its Foundation and Duties," 1891. He married, in 1866, Annie, eldest daughter of Mr. Henry Gregson, of Moorlands, Lancashire, and has issue. Address: The Vicarage, Hoar Cross, Burton-on-Trent.

LITTLER, Ralph Daniel Makinson, Q.C., C.B., is the son of the late Rev. Robert Littler of London, and was born on Oct. 2, 1835. He graduated B.A. at the University of London in 1854, was Common Law Prizeman, and is a member of the Convocation of the University. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1857, but was admitted a barrister at the Middle Temple in 1870, becoming a Q.C. in 1873, and a bencher in 1882. He practises on the Northern and North-Eastern Circuits, and is the author of "Practice and Evidence in Divorce Cases";

"Digest of Cases bearing on Divorcement." Address: Temple, E.C.

LIVEING, George D.Sc., F.R.S., eldest son of George D.Sc., F.R.S., eldest son of George D.Sc., F.R.S., of Nayland, Suffolk, born Dec. 21, 1827, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. B.Sc. 1850; M.A. 1853; and in the same year Fellow and Lecturer in John's College. He was Lecturer in Bridge Essayists, 1853. He was Professor of Chemistry at Trinity College, Sandhurst, 1854. He was Professor of Chemistry in the University of Cambridge, 1861; and was elected to the Royal Society, 1870. He was Professor of Chemistry in the University of Cambridge, 1870. He was joint-author with Professor Bunsen of "Ultra-Violet Spectra of the Sun," in the Transactions of the Royal Society, 1868; and of many papers on spectroscopic subjects in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Proceedings of the Philosophical Society, and the Magazine; and of "Chemical Changes in the Result of the Dissipation of Heat," 1885. Besides his scientific work, Professor Liveing's energies have been given to the spread of education. In 1852 there were no laboratories in which students could make practical applications of science. In the year he established, at Trinity College, the first chemical laboratory for graduates in Cambridge, and for twelve years, he provided a laboratory built for him at Trinity College. This was the first system of experimental science in the University. In the first established local examinations of the University, he took a leading part, and for he was the organising secretariat of the examinations. During that great measure through his examination and inspection of secondary schools, admission of girls and girls to the examinations were also taken an active part in the movement, in 1873, of the Oxford Bridge Schools Examination. In 1875 he promoted, and in 1876, organised, the examination of the University in State Medicine, whole medical profession, since taken the name of Examinations in Public Health. He has been the model for similar examinations by other bodies. In recent years he has actively promoted the establishment of the Agricultural School of Agriculture, which has received

ral county councils. Appointed President of Magdalen College, to examine into the working of ty Colleges, he issued his "Report rsity Colleges," in conjunction .. Warren, in 1897. He married, Katharine, second daughter of l Ingram, rector of Great and illingham, Norfolk, who died in ithout issue. Addresses: The Cambridge; and Athenæum.

LIVERPOOL, Bishop of. See RYLE, THE REV. JOHN CHARLES.

LIVERSIDGE, Professor Archibald A., F.R.S., President Royal of New South Wales, was educated at a private school, and by private science in London. He entered the Royal College of Chemistry and Royal College of Mines, London, 1866, and obtained a Royal Exhibition at these places; this privilege was tenable for years with £50 per year and re- of all fees, equal to about £100 ion. At the same examination he obtained Medals in chemistry, mineralogy, and metallurgy. During his first year as at the Royal College of Chemistry given charge of the Chemical Laboratory at the Royal School of Naval Architecture for one term, during the illness of the lecturer, and published his first paper, "Super-saturated Saline Solution." He was trained in Chemistry at the Royal College of Chemistry, under Professor R. Meldrum, F.R.S., D.C.L., &c. He took the degree of Bachelor of Science, and the degree of Doctor of Philosophy of the School of Mines, Metallurgy and Mining, 1870, after studying and passed in Physics under Professor Tyndall, Geology under Professor Ramsay, Mineralogy and Metallurgy under Sir W. Warrington Smyth, and under Professors Willis and Percy. He spent some time in Dr. Frankland's chemical laboratory, as a student upon research work. In 1871 he obtained an open scholarship in Chemistry at Christ's College, Cambridge. His first year at Cambridge he held the office of Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University Laboratory for two terms in the absence of Dr. Hicks. He was one of the first two students in the new Chemical Laboratory at Cambridge, founded by Professor Michael Foster, and transferred to the Royal Society. In 1872 he offered the appointment of Professor of Chemistry and Mineralogy in the University of Sydney, and went out in the summer of that year. He was a Relative Commissioner at the Paris Exposition in 1878, and a juror in chemistry and metallurgy. He has been a trustee of the Australian Museum, Sydney, since 1874, and during visits to Europe, America, &c., purchased most of the non-Australian mineral and geological collections which it possesses. Professor Liversidge has also been a member of the Sydney University Senate since 1878 and Dean of the Faculty of Science since the formation of that faculty in 1883. He made the chemical investigations upon the Sydney water supply for the Government in 1876; was one of the original members of the Board of Technical Education, and Hon. Secretary of the Royal Society of N.S.W. from 1874 to 1889, except when he was President in 1883-84. He was the President for 1889-90 (this being an annual office). He was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society, England, in 1882. He published a work on the minerals of N.S.W. in 1888, to show the progress made in the knowledge of the mineralogy of N.S.W. during the first 100 years of its history. He originated the Australasian Association for the Advancement of Science, as a centennial record of the progress of the colonies. This Association held its first meeting in Sydney in 1890. He has visited Tasmania and New Zealand several times, Fiji, Java, China, Japan, and the United States in 1887. Professor Archibald Liversidge is an Associate of the Royal School of Mines, London; Fellow of the Chemical Society, London; Fellow Inst. Chemistry of Gt. Brit. and Irel.; F.G.S.; F.L.S.; F.R.G.S.; Mem. Phys. Soc. London; Mem. Mineralogical Soc. Gt. Brit. and Irel.; Cor. Mem. Roy. Soc. Tas.; Cor. Mem. Senckenberg Institute, Frankfurt; Cor. Mem. Soc. d'Acclimat., Mauritius; Hon. Fel. Roy. Hist. Soc. Lond.; Mem. Min. Soc. of France; Professor of Chemistry in the University of Sydney; Editor for many years of the Journal of the Royal Society of New South Wales; and is the author of nearly a hundred scientific papers and reports on chemistry, mineralogy, &c. Address: Sydney.

LLANDAFF, Viscount, The Right Hon. Henry Matthews, Q.C., ex-Hon. Secretary, was born in 1826, in Ceylon, where his father, of whom he was the only son, was a Puisne Judge. After graduating at the Universities of Paris and London, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, after having been admitted to the Inn at the early age of eighteen. In 1868 he took silk, and from 1872 to 1876 acted as Examiner in Common Law to the Council of Legal Education. He has been engaged in several of the great

B. John, was born on Aug. 7, 1840, End New Town, in the county of Essex. After a creditable examination, he received a call to the Methodist ministry, but pre-ferred a commercial sphere, remaining a teacher. In 1870 he established a journal, the Kingsland Monthly Messenger, which proved a success. In 1872 his services were transferred to the New Age, a weekly journal which had been established about twelve months, sale of about 5000 copies weekly. By his energy, it reached a circulation of about 80,000 copies weekly.

Mr. Lobb became the chief promoter. In 1876 he was urged by the late Samuel Morley, M.P., and George the well-known philanthropist, to fund for the Rev. Josiah Henson, a singular character of Mrs. Beecher's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Within a few months, by lectures and preaching, he raised for him upwards of £10,000.

He edited the story of Mr. Henson, which also contained a preface by the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury. Within six weeks upwards of 30,000 copies were sold. Subsequently the book was translated into twelve languages. A total of a million have been sold. On March 5, 1877, Mr. Lobb received Her Majesty's command to attend at Windsor Castle, with the hero of his book, and the honour of inscribing his name on Her Majesty's private album. At the election of the London School Board of 1882, he was returned for the ward of Hackney, second on the poll, with 11,576. In 1885, of the thirteen candidates he was returned at the head of the poll, polling 15,092. In 1888 he was returned at the head of the poll, with 17,360 votes; and at the triennial election of 1891 he was again at the head of the poll, polling 14,002. At the triennial election of 1894 he lost his seat, it being the first and only occasion on which Mr. Lobb had identified himself with any party.

Although known as an Independent, he was regarded as a "Diggleite." In 1894 he was again returned to the Board. It was said in justice to Mr. Lobb, however, that he was strongly opposed to the thelstan Riley and his friends on the same question. Mr. Lobb is known as a famous pamphleteer, on "School Extravagance," "The Scandals of Schools," "Pen and Ink Sketches of All Members," "A Twelve Years' Experience of the London School Board." His pamphlet, published in 1885, reached a sale of 97,000 copies in six weeks. He was for nine years Chairman of the Stores Committee, and subsequently Chairman of the Finance Committee in succession to

Sir Richard Temple, Bart., M.P. In 1886 he edited and published "The Life and Times of Frederick Douglass," the famous runaway slave who was afterwards Marshal to the District of Columbia, U.S.A., to which the Right Hon. John Bright contributed a preface. In 1879 he published the "Life of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D.," and also "Arrows and Anecdotes and the Story of the Great Revival." In 1877 he published a weekly paper called the Daisy Family Story Paper, which in five years reached a weekly sale of 15,000 copies. In 1882 he received £1000 for the copyright of the Daisy, which was subsequently conducted by Mrs. Joseph Parker of the City Temple. He is a Guardian of the City of London Union, of whom there are ninety-four, being elected in 1885 for the parish of St. Bride, Fleet Street, E.C. He is a Member of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, and has published pamphlets on dementia, imbecility, and idiocy in its various forms. He is Ex-Chairman of the Lunatic Visiting Committee of the City of London Union, the Contract Committee, and is Vice-Chairman of the Finance Committee. In 1887 he was elected a Member of the Court of Common Council for the ward of Farringdon Without. He has served on the Central Markets, the Billingsgate Market, and was Vice-Chairman of the Finance of the Markets Committees. He has served for ten years on the Officers and Clerks Committee, and six years on the Freeman's Orphan School Committee, and was Chairman for two years in succession. He is also a Member of the Guildhall Library Committee, the Epping Forest Committee, and one of the Court of Assistants to the Honourable Irish Society. On the occasion of the German Emperor's visit to the City he was a Member of the Reception Committee, and in 1894 served on the Lord Mayor's Committee; and on the occasion of the Queen's visit to the City on June 22, 1898, was one of the five Common Councillors appointed to receive Her Majesty with the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs at Temple Bar. He has served for twelve years as a Governor of Lady Holles's Trust to the Ward of Cripplegate, E.C. He is a Governor of St. Bride's Foundation, a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, and the Royal Geographical Society. On July 21, 1891, he was publicly presented with a testimonial in the form of a cheque for £250 and an illuminated address, in the Mansion House, by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Sir Joseph Savory, Bart., M.P. A silver tea and coffee service was at the same time presented to Mrs. Lobb. In 1896 he was the recipient of another public testimonial in the form of a solid silver fruit-stand was Minister of Commerce under M. de Freycinet in 1886, and of Public Instruction in 1888 under M. Floquet; and in 1886 was charged with the organisation of the International Exhibition of 1889. In the September elections of 1889 he was elected for the Second District of the 11th Arrondissement of Paris, beating the Boulangist Massard by a large majority. M. Lockroy was for long an important member of Victor Hugo's circle, having married the widow of Charles Hugo in 1877. On the constitution of the Brisson Cabinet in 1898, he was offered, and he accepted, the Portfolio of Minister of Marine, a position on which he has laid the foundations of an European reputation. His statesmanlike reorganisation of the navy received such support from all responsible parties that, notwithstanding the overthrow of his colleagues, M. Lockroy retained office as Minister of Marine in M. Charles Dupuy's Cabinet of October 1898, and through this unusual opportunity was enabled to continue the vast scheme whose foundations he

LODER, Gerald Walter Erskine,
M.P., LL.B., J.P., D.L., was born in Sussex on Oct. 25, 1861, and is the fourth son of the late Sir Robert Loder, Bart., M.P.
He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1888, he became private secretary to the Right Hon.
C. T. Ritchie, at that time President of the Local Government Board. From 1892 to 1896 he was private secretary to Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India. Since 1889 he has represented
Brighton as a Conservative, and is a Director of the London and Brighton Railway. He married, in 1890, Lady Louise, eldest daughter of the 10th Duke of St. Albans. Address: 48 Cadogan

LODGE, Professor Oliver Joseph,
D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., was born on June 12, 1851, at Penkull, near Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, and is the son of Oliver and Grace Lodge, and grandson of Rev. Oliver Lodge, of Barking, Essex, and of Elsworth, Cambridgeshire (formerly of co. Tipperary), and of the Rev. Joseph Heath, of Lucton, Herefordshire. At the age of eight he went to Newport Grammar School, in the house of Rev. John Hea-wood; with whom also, when rector of Combs, Suffolk, he was under private tuition between the ages of twelve and fourteen. At fourteen he was taken into business to help his father, who was in failing health, and he continued in business till the age of twenty-one; matriculating at the London University and taking honours in Physics at the intermediate B.Sc., by evening work. He also obtained, through the Science and Art Department,
a winter's work at the Chemical Laboratory, South Kensington. In 1872 he was

proximo accessit to a scholarship at St. John's College, Cambridge, and in the same winter went to University College, London, to study mathematics under Professors Henrici and Clifford, and to work in Professor Carey Foster's laboratory. He took the D.Sc. degree, and married in 1877; lectured on Physics at the Bedford College (for ladies), became Assistant-Professor of Physics at University College, London, and, during the illness of Professor W. K. Clifford, took charge of most of his classes. In 1880 he was appointed Professor of Physics at the University College, then just established in Liverpool. This office he continues to hold. In 1887 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1888 the honorary LL.D. of St. Andrews University was conferred upon him. He is best known as a teacher, and he has examined for both the London University and the Science and Art Department. His writings are a text-book of "Elementary Mechanics," 1877; and "Modern Views of Electricity," 1889; a treatise on the phenomena of lightning and other disruptive discharges called "Lightning Conductors and Lightning Guards," 1892; and a popular illustrated work on astronomical biography and discoveries called "Pioneers of Science," 1893. His scientific papers have appeared chiefly in the Philosophical Magazine, but he has written considerably in Nature and the Electrician; occasionally also in the Engineer. He has lectured at the London Institution on "Electricity and Light," and on "The Ether and its Functions"; also at the British Association at Montreal on "Dust"; and at the Royal Institution on the "Deposition of Dust Fume and Fog by Electricity," on "The Leyden Jar," on "Aberration," and (in 1897) to a Christmas audience on "The Principle of the Electric Telegraph." His chief experimental work has been connected with the alternating character of lightning and other discharges, and with the propagation of electro-magnetic waves (see Philosophical Magazine, August 1888). In this latter subject, he was on the track of the nearly simultaneous discoveries made by the late Dr. Hertz. These discoveries verify the electrical and optical theories of Clerk Maxwell, and owe their importance and rapid acceptance to his scientific insight. In conjunction with the late J. W. Clark, Professor Lodge discovered the now well-known power of electricity to coagulate or condense suspended particles of fume or fog. He has also written largely on electrolysis and on contact electricity, and has devised models illustrating Clerk Maxwell's theories. In 1891 he was President of Section A of the British Association at Cardiff, where he delivered an address, which is often quoted. His chief need for scientific recognition of "occult" phenomena is, in fact, an active member of the Psychical Research Society, and contributes to their Proceedings. For years he was engaged in the question whether moving magnets tend to disturb the ether of space, and questions connected with the astronomical aberration of light. Philosophical Soc., 1893, 1897). His other chief question is whether the ether is absolutely devoid of mechanical viscosity, and therefore undisturbed in a "rotational" motion by mechanical means. And of importance, made well known by the lightning guard for cables, and manufactured by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, is the fact that metals exert a powerful electrical influence, a principle which led to the most sensitive electric waves known. Such waves from one station can be detected at a distant station, and there can be made to affect any telegraphic instrument. This method of communication was demonstrated to a large number of persons, but most completely by Professor Lodge in 1894, though it has recently excited much interest in scientific circles. An account of his searches is contained in a paper published by the Electrician, London, entitled, "The Work of some of his Successors" in connection with Dr. A. Muirhead. Professor Lodge has now devised and experimented for syntonising or tuning the receiver in wireless telegraphy; the response is discriminative as well as efficient, and he has made further experiments in the same direction by which has not yet been published, but it has been referred to by Professor vanus Thompson in a recent paper to the Society of Arts. In February 1897 he was elected President of the Physico-Mathematical Society of London. Professor Lodge is married in 1877, Mary F. A. Marshall, 2 Grove Park, Liverpool.

LOEWE, The Rev. Dr. born at Zülz, in Prussian Silesia, and was educated at Rosenheim and was educated at the theological seminary at Liessa, Nicholasburg, and the University of Berlin. He was in 1839 Hebrew Lecturer at the University of Berlin, and a linguist to the late Duke of Saxe-Weimar; in 1856 Head-Master of the J. Finsbury Square; in 1858 Oriental Languages to the University of Berlin; and in 1865 Director of Sir Moses Montefiore College at Ramsgate.

urice, National Astronomer, born at Vienna, April 18, 1811, one of the most distinguished of the Observatory of his time. In consequence of his Jewish origin he was not allowed to follow a career in his own country. He was, however, owned co-discoverer of Uranus, and of this, and invited him to take him a post at the Observatory of Paris. He became a naturalised Frenchman. In 1873 he was made chief of the Bureau des Longitudes in Paris. The next year a member of the Académie des Sciences, to the chair of which he was nominated Sub-director of the Observatory in 1878, and remained in that position for 16 years. He is a member of the Académie des Sciences of Vienna and of the Royal Society, London. He gained in 1889, and in 1905, the Order of the Legion of Honour. His chief work has been the determination of the longitudes of Vienna, Paris, Algiers, compared

LO FENG-LUH, Sir Chih Chen, K.C.V.O., is the seventh son of Lo Shao Isung, a celebrated scholar and distinguished military officer of Foo Chow. He was born in 1850, and was educated privately by his father, and at the Imperial Naval College on the river Min, from which he passed out first in 1872. He subsequently came to London, and studied at King's College, and in 1877 was attached to Kosung Tao's Mission. From 1879 to 1881 he was at the Chinese Legation in Berlin, and in 1882 he became Secretary to Li Hung Chang (q.v.), accompanying him as First Confidential Secretary of his Staff on important foreign missions, among others, to Shimonoseki, where the Peace Treaty with Japan was signed (1895). He also formed part of the congratulatory Embassy to the coronation of the Czar and on the subsequent European tour (1896). In the next year he was appointed Chinese Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to London, which post he still holds. His Excellency became a Mandarin of the Fourth Rank in 1881, a Taotai in 1885, a Mandarin of the Second Rank in 1890, and in 1892 honours were awarded his ancestors for three generations. In 1896 he was created an Hon. Knight Commander of the Victorian Order, and he has also been decorated with Russian, German, Dutch, and Belgian Orders. He is the author of "Problems in Nautical Astronomy and Navigation," and "Solutions of Problems by Inter-Terminate Equations." Lady Lo, his wife, died in London in February 1899. Address: Chinese Legation, 49 Portland Place, W.

LOFTIE, Rev. William John, F.S.A., eldest son of John Henry Loftie and Jane Crozier, was born at Tandragee, in the county Armagh, July 25, 1839, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1864. Subsequently he turned to literature, writing first on antiquarian subjects in the People's Magazine (S.P.C.K.), of which he became editor in 1872. Elected F.S.A. in 1872, he published a "Century of Bibles," and in 1873 "The Latin Year," a collection of hymns. After holding temporary Church appointments he became Assistant-Minister of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, 1871, holding that post until 1895, and in 1879 published "Memoirs of the Savoy"; meanwhile, having spent some winters on the Nile, he wrote "A Ride in Egypt," and has since published "An Essay of Scarabs," and written papers in the Archæological Journal on "Egyptology." Being also a student of old prints, he published, in 1877, a catalogue of the works of Hans Sebald Beham. He became connected with the Guardian in 1870, and was a weekly contributor for six years. In 1874 he joined the staff of the Saturday Review, and has written on art and archæology in the Portfolio, the Magazine of Art, and many other periodicals. In 1894 he joined the staff of the National Observer. The Art at Home Series, begun in 1877, resulted in the issue of twelve volumes, by various writers, including Mrs. Loftie, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mrs. Oliphant, and Mr. Walter Pollock. He then turned his attention to municipal antiquities, and besides a short guide entitled "Through London," and other books, has published two editions of "A History of London," "Windsor," "Kensington, Picturesque and Historical," "Westminster Abbey," a volume on the "City" for Mr. E. A. Freeman's series of Historic Towns, the authorised "Guide to the Tower," for the Government, of which 10,000 copies were sold in the first three weeks; "The Cathedral Churches of England," 1892; and "Inns of Court and Chancery," 1894. Besides these literary labours, he was one of the founders of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings. He married, in 1867, Jeannie, widow of J. J. Burnett, of Galdirth, Ayr. Address: 3A Sheffield Terrace, Kensington, W.

LOFTUS, The Right Hon. Lord Augustus William Frederick Spencer, G.C.B., commonly called Lord Augustus Loftus, the fourth son of the 2nd Marquis of Ely, by the daughter of Sir H. W. Dashwood, Bart., was born on Oct. 1, 1817, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. Entering the Diplomatic Service, he was appointed Attaché at Berlin in 1837, and paid Attaché at Stuttgart in 1844. He accompanied Sir Stratford Canning (afterwards Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe) on his special mission to the Courts of Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Athens, in March 1848. He was appointed Secretary of the Legation at Stuttgart in 1852, and in Berlin in 1853; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Vienna in March 1858. In 1859 Lombroso joined the later on became a military. He was appointed in 1862 to of the department of mental the University of Pavia, where and an institution for the in-chiatric museum, and a series mes in the application of exact methods to the study of insanity. Testing to note, that at this perhaps we might call the of his professional career, Lombroso the displeasure and, indeed, of the scientific men of the as said contemptuously that he g madness with a yard measure, in which a slight element of ars to have been unnoticed by enthusiasts for the Lombroso However, notwithstanding the corn, the Professor went on his work, carrying on some investigations into the causes, a skin disease due to under- common among the peasantry of Italy, the Asturias, Gascony, and Corfu. Lombroso's system ide progress, and came to be opted. This may not have been much to the inherent value of las to the fact that his was the npt at that time to conduct investigation with due regard to ntfic discovery. Appointed as the Asylum at Pesaro, he intro- ny reforms in the conduct of ntion, and established a news- ten and managed by the insane. ards returned to Pavia, where he his psychiatric work, investigat- nence of atmospheric conditions nd, inventing an instrument to pain, and engaging in many rked by extraordinary ingenuity, and insight. It is said that even as a youth, exhibited a faculty, almost amounting to divining the possible bearings en's discoveries, and of turning ons to important use in the con- of new methods. Gifted as he ds rare art, Lombroso eagerly d the conclusions of Darwin as the latter's book, "The Origin as." An excellent critic has that Darwin's work "supplied, st time, an indispensable bio- is, and furnished that atavistic ich Lombroso was tempted to rst so much use, sometimes, it must be added, so much abuse. These circumstances combined to render possible for the first time the complete scientific treatment of the criminal man as a human variety, while Lombroso's own manifold studies and various faculties had given him the best preparation for approaching this great task." Lombroso, with his usual acuteness, at once commenced an elaborate treatise on much the same lines that Darwin had followed, testing the latter's theories at many points, and speculating with considerable success on the important suggestions towards the study of man which "The Origin of Species" gave to the scientific world. Lombroso's great work, "L'Uomo Delinquente," was not published, however, until 1876—nearly twenty years after the undertaking was conceived—and the second volume appeared only in 1889. The influence of "L'Uomo Delinquente" in Italy, France, and Germany is said to have been as immediate and as decisive as that of "The Origin of Species." Despine's "Psychologie Naturelle," the greatest work on the criminal which had appeared before Lombroso's, was partial; the criminal was therein regarded purely as a psychological anomaly. Lombroso first perceived the criminal as, anatomically and physiologically, an organic anomaly. He set about weighing him and measuring him, according to the methods of anthropology. Even on the psychological side he gained new and more exact results. He went back to the origins of crime among plants and animals, among savages and children. He endeavoured to ascertain the place of the criminal in nature, the causes of his appearance, and his treatment. It need hardly be said that this momentous investigation has earned for its conductor a reputation almost exceeding that of any other scientific man of the day. The results of that work are daily used on the Continent in the administration of several State prisons and in the control and supervision of many private asylums. Lombroso's methods have never been adopted in England. Rich, laborious, various, Lombroso's life-work has opened up so many new lines of investigation, and has suggested so many more, that it has everywhere been received as marking a new epoch. This distinguished man works steadily on in Italy. The scientific world is enriched, almost every month, by some new study of his, conceived in a truly remarkable brain. He has frequently contributed to the Nineteenth Century and other important English magazines. The Monist, an American quarterly philosophical magazine, contained in its number of June 1898 a very suggestive essay by Lombroso on "Progressive Phenomena in Evolution."

His work has now many English students, largely through the medium of such popular and useful series as the Criminology Series (Fisher Unwin) and the Contemporary Science Series (Walter Scott). Lombroso, as yet, exerts very little influence on English prison reformers, who are considered by some to run the risk of sinking the scientific beneath the purely emotional or traditional.

LONDON, Bishop of. See CREIGHTON, THE RIGHT REV. MANDELL.

LONDONDERRY, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Charles Stewart Vane-Tempest-Stewart. K.G., LL.D., D.L. J.P., son of the 5th Marquis, and Mary, eldest daughter of Sir John Edwards. Bart., was born on July 16, 1852, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford. As Viscount Castlereagh he unsuccessfully contested South Kensington in 1874, and Montgomery District in 1877, and sat for County Down from 1878 to 1881. On the death of his father in 1884 he succeeded to the title, and on the formation of Lord Salisbury's second administration in 1895, was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. He remained at Dublin till 1889. He was Chairman of the London School Board from October 1895 until 1898, and in 1897 was appointed A.D.C. to the Queen. He married the eldest daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and is the owner of extensive collieries in Durham. His ancestor, the second peer, was the celebrated Viscount Castlereagh. Addresses: Londonderry House, Park Lane, W.; Wynward House, Stockton-on-Tees, &c.

LONG, John Davis, American jurist and statesman, was born at Buckfield, Maine, Oct. 27, 1838. Educated at Harvard University, and graduating there in 1857, he afterwards studied law, was admitted to the Bar in 1862, and practised his profession in Boston. He was a Member of the State Legislature of Massachusetts in 1875-78, being Speaker of the Lower House for the last three years; was Lieutenant-Governor of the State in 1879 and Governor in 1880, 1881, and 1882; was elected to the forty-eighth Congress, and re-elected to the forty-ninth and fiftieth Congresses. In 1897 he was appointed to be Secretary of the United States Navy under President McKinley.

LONG, The Right Hon. Walter Hume, M.P., J.P., D.L. President of the Board of Agriculture, is the eldest son of the late Richard Penruddocke Long, Esq., of Dolforgan, Montgomeryshire (who represented North Wilts from 1865 to 1868), by Charlotte Anna, daughter of W. Fitzwilliam-Hughes, Esq., for Wicklow, and daughter of Walter Long, Esq., who represented North Wilts for thirty years. Born at Bath, July 13, 1854. He was educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, and represented North Wilts from 1880 to 1885, and was elected of that county from 1885 to 1890, when he was elected in July 1890, re-elected; in the following year, however, he was elected for the Division of Liverpool. From 1885 he acted as Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board, and in 1895 he became a member of the Board of Agriculture, and was appointed to the Privy Council. Mr. Long is described as being a "Progressive." He is a Magistrate, Lieutenant of Wiltshire, and the Wilts Yeomanry. He married Lady Dorothy Blanche, daughter of the 9th Earl of Cork, in 1881. Addresses: 11 Ennismore Gardens, Road Ashton, Trowbridge, W.

LONGLEY, Sir Henry, Bart., Charity Commissioner for Wales, was born in 1833, and was the late Archbishop Longley's daughter of the first Lord Longley. He was educated at Rugby School, Church, Oxford, where he was in 1856, M.A. in 1859, and B.A. in 1860. He was called to the Bar in 1860, and after going the circuit for a short time, ultimately settled at the Equity Bar and as a solicitor. He was appointed a Poor-Law Commissioner in 1868, and was in charge of the Metropolitan Poor-Law District from 1874. In the latter year he was appointed Third Charity Commissioner, and transferred the duties of the Metropolitan Schools Commissioner to the Charity Commission. He was appointed Secretary to the Charity Commission in 1879, and was re-appointed in July 1885 upon the death of Sir W. R. Seymour Fitzgerald. Sir H. Longley was created C.B. in 1880 and K.C.B. in 1889; he is the author of a report of the Local Government Board made in 1873 on "Poor-Law Administration in London, with special reference to the disposal by Boards of Guardians of Applications for Relief." He married in 1861, Diana, second daughter of Davenport, of Foxley, Herefordshire. Addresses: 8 Lowndes Street, S.W.; and 10, Whitehall, S.W.; and at General James, born in 1821; graduated at West Point Academy at West Point on duty in Missouri frontier till 1846; took part in the Mexican War, 1846-48, where he attained the rank of Major; served subsequently as Paymaster in the Mexican campaign, where he was a Major on the staff; resigned his commission in 1853; went to the South in the Civil War, and was appointed to the 1st Brigade of General Sherman's army near Centreville. He was in the affair at Blackburg, 1861, and engaged in the Battle of Run, July 21. He commanded troops in the campaign of May 6, 1862, and in the fighting of the Confederates at Chickamauga, and was a later part of 1861-62 General, and won the Medal of Honor in the campaign of Lee in the campaign of Pope, Burnside, and the battle of Sharpsburg. He was promoted to Major-General, with the rank of Major-General. He took an active part in the Battle of Vicksburg, July 1-3.

He was also conspicuous in the campaign of the Wilderness, May 1-6, 1864, where he was severely wounded, but recovered in time to lead his corps during the siege of Petersburg. He surrendered with General Lee in April 1865. After the war General Longstreet acted zealously for the restoration of harmony between the two sections. Having been amnestied by President Johnson, he was so cordial towards the Administration that President Grant appointed him Surveyor of the Port of New Orleans. In 1875 he took up his residence in Georgia, and in 1880 was sent as Minister to Turkey, where he remained until 1881. He was subsequently U.S. Marshal for the Northern District of Georgia, and in 1897 was appointed U.S. Commissioner of Railroads by President McKinley. He resides at Gainesville, Georgia.

LOPES, Sir H. C. See LUDLOW, LORD.

LOPES, The Right Hon. Sir Lopes Massey, Bart., of Maristow, Devon, M.P. for Westbury from 1857 to 1865, and for South Devon from 1868 to 1885, Civil Lord of the Admiralty from 1874 to 1880, D.L. for Wilts and Devon, was born on June 14, 1818, and educated at Winchester and Oriel College. Sir Massey had several parliamentary contests, but the most severe was that with Lord Amberley, son of the late Lord John Russell, for South Devon in 1868, which lasted sixteen weeks, and which Sir Massey won by a majority of upwards of 500 votes. During the thirty years he was a member of the House of Commons he took a very prominent part in all measures which had reference to the agricultural interest, and more particularly directed his attention to the subject of Local Taxation, contending that real property (i.e. land and houses) was very unjustly burdened with many charges which were national in their character, and ought therefore to be transferred to the Imperial Exchequer. Though at first there was much indifference on this subject among all parties, in and out of the House of Commons, and he met with comparatively little sympathy, he persevered every session in bringing this question before the House, and his able and exhaustive speeches in exposing the grievances and anomalies of the local taxpayer gradually created increasing interest in this subject until finally, in 1872, he carried a resolution "that it was expedient to remedy the injustice of imposing taxation of national objects upon one description of property, and that the ratepayers should be relieved from charges imposed upon them for the administration of

Pierre. See VIAUD, JULIEN.

ET, Émile, President of the republic, was born at Marsanne, a December 31, 1838, his father peasant proprietor. He studied in the degree of Doctor, and made himself at Montélimar, of which he became Mayor in July, 1870; entered political life in 1876, as representative of Montélimar, and took rank among the Republican Left. His parliamentary career was marked by his support of M. Dufaure, the enemy of the radical coalition; he voted for the pre-announced religious congregations, for teaching, for the invalidation of the Commune of the Blanqui, for free elementary education. He supported the Gambetta and Ferry ministries for the Tonkin and Tunis. In 1885 he became Senator for his department, sitting among the Moderate Right, and two years later was elected Minister of Public Works in the Cabinet, which resigned in 1887, when he was to join M. Floquet. M. de Freycinet resigned in 1892, and M. Carnot, called upon his death to re-form the Cabinet, which was with the majority of the former taking himself the Portfolio of Minister from M. Constans, while M. de Freycinet became Minister of War. It was that of the Extreme Left, the strike of the Carmaux miners, approached by the Left for lack of sympathy with the miners, and by the Right his tolerance towards attacks on the liberty of the subject. M. Loubet took himself as arbitrator between the company, and managed to bring to a peace between them. The turning this into a victory, made necessary demonstrations at Carmaux, Lyons, and the office of the company. Paris was almost blown up by an anarchist machine. The Right endeavoured to place the blame of this on the weakness of the Government, but they were unsuccessful in the division. However, in 1892, the Panama affair was used as a pretext for upsetting the Government, which was succeeded by that of M. Loubet.

of M. Ribot. In 1895 he was appointed President of the Senate, in succession to M. Challemeil-Lacour, and filled that post with much distinction. He was a warm friend of M. Faure, and advised him on critical occasions. On the sudden death of the latter, Feb. 16, 1899, M. Loubet was called upon by the united votes of the Senate and Chamber to fill his place. He has been all his life remarkable for his devotion to work and for simplicity of manners, being a contrast to M. Faure, who was most attentive to ceremony and a slave to the protocol.

LOUGH, Thomas, M.P., was born in Ireland in 1850, and is the son of Matthew Lough, of Killynebbur House, Cavan, and Martha, daughter of William Steel. He was educated at the Royal School, Cavan and at the Wesleyan Connectional School, Dublin. Mr. Lough, who is a strong Radical, contested Truro in 1886, and entered Parliament for Islington in 1892, being re-elected in 1895. In 1886 he founded the Home Rule Union, of which he has been an Hon. Secretary. He has been a citizen of the Metropolis since 1880, his business being that of a tea merchant, and in October 1892 he started the London Reform Union, having for its main object the improvement of the municipal government of London. He is now Chairman of the Union, Mr. Paasmore Edwards being President. He published, in 1888, "Glimpses of Early Ireland," and, in 1896, "England's Wealth, Ireland's Poverty." He married, in 1880, Edith, daughter of the late Rev. John Mills. Addresses: 29 Hyde Park Gate, S.W.; and Drummully House, Co. Cavan.

LOUISE, H.R.H. Princess, Marchioness of Lorne, Louise Caroline
Alberta, is the fourth daughter of her Majesty, the Queen, and was born at Buckingham Palace on March 18, 1848.
 She was married, on March 21, 1871, to the Marquis of Lorne, eldest son of the Duke of Argyll. The Princess devotes a good deal of time to painting and sculpture. She is an accomplished painter in water-colours, and an industrious hon.
 member of the exclusive Old Water-Colour Society. She is also distinguish-ed as one of the very few women sculptors in Great Britain. At an early age she is said to have watched the late Mrs. Thorneycroft at work, as the mother of the great sculptor modelled the young Royal Princes and Princesses at various ages. Afterwards she studied her difficult art under the late Sir Edgar Boehm, R.A., and under his influence produced her fine statue of the Queen, now placed in Kensington Gardens, between the east front of Kensington

Palace and the Round Pond. To execute this idealised representation of her royal mother she was chosen by the Committee of the Women's Jubilee Fund of 1887. The work was subscribed for by women, and is a conspicuous landmark in a park which contains only one other notable statue, that of Edward Jenner. Another fine example of her work is her marble bust of the Queen in the Gallery of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours. Her studio is in her home in Kensington Palace. Princess Louise, besides being a Princess of the United Kingdom, is Duchess of Saxony, and Princess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and V.A. and C.G.

LOVELAND, Richard Loveland, Q.C., D.L., Deputy-Chairman of the County of London Sessions, was born in London, July 18, 1841, being the only surviving child of the late John Perry Loveland, J.P., Middlesex, and Harriet Hannah, only child of the late Richard Errington, of Beaufort, near Hexham, Northumberland, and granddaughter of Thomas Loveland of Park Place, Islington, London. By royal license, dated March 28, 1861, he was authorised to take the surname of Loveland instead of that of Oldershaw, and to bear the arms of Loveland quarterly with those of Oldershaw. He was educated at Kensington Grammar School privately, and at Pembroke College, Oxford. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and Lincoln's Inn in 1865; and was Deputy-Chairman of Middlesex Quarter-Sessions, 1889-96. He was appointed Deputy-Chairman of the County of London Quarter-Sessions in 1896, and Queen's Counsel in 1897. He is editor of Sir John Kelying's "Crown Cases"; Shower's "Cases in Parliament"; Hall's "Essay on Rights of Seashore," and joint-editor of Griffith and Loveland "On the Judicature Acts." Mr. Loveland is Past Master of the Worshipful Company of Turners of London, and was an Alderman of the Middlesex County Council up to 1896. He married Maria Elizabeth Oddie, fifth daughter of the Rev. P. H. Hind, Vicar of Woodcote-cum-Southstoke, Oxon. Address: 1 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park.

LOW, Lord, Alexander Low, J.P., is the son of James Low of "The Laws," Berwickshire, and was born in 1845. He was educated at Cheltenham College, St. Andrews University, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained first class honours on graduating B.A. He was called to the Scotch Bar in 1870, and was appointed a Lord of Session in Scotland in 1890, at the same time receiving the title of Lord. He was married in 1875 to Annie, daughter of Lord Mackenzie, Lord of Session. Address: 3 The Gardens, Edinburgh; and 10 Edrom.

LOW, Lieut. General Sir John Low, G.C.B., was born in the parish of Kemback, Fife, in 1810. He entered the 4th Regt. of Foot as Lieutenant in September 1830, and was promoted Captain in January 1833, receiving the brevets of Major and Colonel in 1833. Sir Robert's considerable war service all over Afghanistan, and in Denmark, during the Indian Mutiny he was present at several actions, including the capture of Delhi, and in the operations in the Jhujjar district; the day after now, and the operations in the Punjab. He was mentioned in despatches, and was thanked by the Indian Government for his services, receiving a sword and two clasps. He commanded a brigade in the second Bussolai Expedition on the North-West Frontier in 1864. The War, however, gave Sir Robert an opportunity, for, as Director of the Army at Kabul, he rendered Sir Roberts invaluable services in the Candahar. He also accompanied the expedition to the Bazar Valley, and was at the action of Zawa. He was mentioned in despatches, and received the command of a brigade in the Burmese War of 1885 to 1886, of a brigade with the rank of Major-General, and was again mentioned in despatches. For his services in the campaign he was created a Knight of the Order of the Bath. He was also promoted to Major-General, and in 1893 he was promoted to command the Chitral Expedition. That campaign is considered a masterpiece of the "Art of War," and the issue to which it was brought was a very great measure to Sir Robert. As a reward for his distinguished services he was created a G.C.B., an honour before conferred upon an officer of the rank of full General or Lieutenant-General. He was promoted Lieut. General in November 1896. He married, in 1838, Constance, daughter of the late Col. Taylor, H.E.I.C.S. Address: London, India.

LOW, The Hon. Seth, M.P., was born at Brooklyn, New York, in 1850. He served in the Boer war of 1881, under Sir Evelyn Wood, in command of the Cavalry Brigade; served in the Egyptian war of 1882 in command of the Cavalry Division, and was present at the engagements of El Magfar Mahota, the two actions at Kassassin, and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, immediately after which he commenced a forced march with the cavalry, by which he obtained possession of Cairo, the surrender of its citadel, and of the rebel chief Arabi (six times mentioned in despatches, received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, K.C.B., Medal with clasp, second class of the Osmanieh, and Khedive's Star). From 1885 to 1890 he was in command of the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot, and was also I.-G. of Cavalry for Great Britain. From 1890 to 1891 he was I.-G. of Cavalry at the Headquarters of the army, and in 1892 was appointed Colonel of the 17th Lancers. In 1895 he retired. He is a J.P. for Hants. Address: Key Dell, Horndean, Hants.

LOWE, Canon Edward Clarke, D.D., born at Everton, near Liverpool, Dec. 15, 1823, youngest son of S. Lowe, Esq., solicitor, formerly of Whitchurch, Salop, and subsequently of Liverpool, was educated at Liverpool at a private school, and afterwards at Oxford, where he entered under Rev. W. Jacobson (who became Bishop of Chester) at Magdalen Hall in 1842, whence he was elected to the Bible Clerkship at Lincoln College in June 1844, where he was a pupil of the late Mark Pattison. He graduated B.A. in 1846 (third cl., Lit. Hum.), and the following year became Second Master of the King's School, Ottery St. Mary, and was ordained Deacon by Bishop Philpotts in September of the same year, and Priest in September of the year following. In 1849 he joined, at Shoreham, the Rev. N. Woodard, who had just begun his effort to found, by public boarding schools, a system of Church of England education for the middle classes. In January 1850 he opened, as Head-Master, at Hurst-pierpoint, the first middle school of the system, and remained in that office till the end of 1872, when he was appointed Provost of the Midland district of St. Nicolas College, as head of the Society of SS. Mary and John of Lichfield in union with St. Nicolas College, and directing the large schools at Denstone and Ellesmere for boys, and two for girls at Abbot's Bromley, as well as a boys' day-school at Dewsbury. In 1821, on the death of Canon Woodard, he was elected Provost of St. Nicolas College in succession to the founder, and returned into Sussex. In September 1873 he was preferred to a Canonry in Ely Cathedral, upon a vacancy falling to the Crown, vide vacante; and since 1880 up to the present time has represented the Chapter as Proctor in Convocation. He has published several small educational works; among others, "Porta Latina," Erasmus Colloquia, "An English Primer," and an annotated edition of G. Herbert's "Church Porch." Addresses: The College, Ely; and Hensfield, Sussex.

LOWE, Edward Joseph, F.R.S., J.P., D.L., eldest surviving son of the late Alfred Lowe, Esq., J.P., of Highfield, near Nottingham, was born at Highfield, Nov. 11, 1825, and in 1840 began that valuable series of daily meteorological observations which were continued to April 1882. In 1846 he published "A Treatise on Atmospheric Phenomena." About 1848 he assisted the late Professor Baden Powell in the meteorological observations for the British Association, and was the first to point out the convergence of meteors to a point in the heavens. "Prognostications of the Weather," a small work by him, appeared in 1849. In 1850 he became a member of the Royal Meteorological Society, of which he was one of the founders. In 1853 he wrote two valuable local works, entitled "The Climate of Nottinghamshire," and "The Conchology of Nottinghamshire." In the same year he likewise assisted the late Prof. Edward Forbes in the compilation of his work on "British Mollusca," and issued the first parts of the well-known "Natural History of British and Exotic Ferns." His next work, on "British Grasses," appeared in 1858, and he subsequently wrote two other botanical works on "Beautiful-leaved Plants," and "New and Rare Ferns," in 1861 and 1862; "Our Native Ferns," in 1865; and "Chronology of the Seasons," &c. In 1860 he was one of those who accompanied the Government expedition to Spain for the purpose of observing the solar eclipse, and was placed in charge of the meteorological departments in the Santander district. In 1866 he was local secretary to the British Association. In 1868 he was President of the Nottingham Literary and Philosophical Society. Besides being the author of the works enumerated, Mr. Lowe has contributed many papers on scientific subjects to various learned societies, and to the British Association; and he sent daily meteorological telegrams to the Board of Trade, and synchronous meteorological observations to the United States Government up to 1882. He was the inventor of the dry point hygrometer, and of the balloon ascents. He was the discoverer of an entirely new species of British fern, Polystichum rigidum (Baird); has been the many abnormal British ferns. Since 1886 he has devoted to the hybridisation of fern plants, and has recently discovered divisions of a pteridium which produce several ferns, which have multiple parents, and distinct varieties have been discovered. In 1891 he published a book on the Varieties of Ferns, and has of late years issued "The Ferns of Great Britain Varieties." For some years he has been a Deputy-Lieutenant of the Peace for Nottingham, Commissioner of Income Tax, Fellow of the Royal, the Geological, the Meteorological, and the Botanical Societies. In 1891 Anne, daughter of John Ashurst, he went to reside at Sharncliffe, near Chesham, which estate he inherited from Lord Kintore.

LOWELL, Percival, and Katharine Lowell, was born in Boston, United States of America, and took his degree at Harvard University in 1876. He has travelled extensively, especially in the Far East, in Japan, in 1883, he was Foreign Secretary and Consul, Korean Special Mission to the United States, the first to go from a Western Power. He returned with the mission the same year, the winter of 1883-84 in Asia. He published, in 1885, "Chronology of Korea"; in 1888, "The East"; in 1889, "Notes on the Corner of Japan," and poems in "Magazine," and lectured before the Society at Cambridge, Massachusetts is a Member of the Royal Society of Japan.

HER, The Right Hon. J.P., J.P., younger son of Sir Hugh Lowther, Bart., by Isabella, of the late Rev. Robert More, Rector of Easington-cum-Orkshire, was born at Swilling-Leds, in 1840, and educated at Trinity School and at Trinity Bridge (B.A. 1862, M.A. 1866). led to the bar at the Inner Temple 1864. The next year he was called for York in the Conservative Division continued to sit for that city.

He unsuccessfully contested the seat in February 1881, and in the same year was elected for North Lincolnshire, which he represented until November. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor-Law Board from August 1868, and Under-Secretary of the Colonies from February 1874 till February 1878, when he was appointed Chief Secretary of Ireland, which office he held until the resignation of Lord Beaconsfield's Government in May 1880. He unsuccessfully contested the East Lindsey Division of Lincolnshire, November 1885, also North Cumberland at the general election of 1886; but was returned for the Isle of Thanet Division of Kent, in June 1888, and again in 1892 and 1895. Mr. Lowther is a magistrate, deputy-lieutenant, and county alderman for the North Riding of York. He is well known as a member of the Jockey Club. Addresses: 59 Grosvenor Street, W.; and Wilton Castle, Redcar.

LOWTHER, The Right Hon. James William, M.P., LL.M., J.P., is the eldest son of the Hon. William Lowther, formerly M.P. for Westmoreland, and was born on April 1, 1855. He was educated at Eton, King's College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained honours in both the Classical and Law Tripos. He was called to the Bar in 1879, and was elected a Conservative member of the House of Commons for Rutlandshire in 1883. After unsuccessfully contesting Mid-Cumberland in 1885, he was, in the following year, elected Member for the Penrith Division of the same county; he still retains this seat in the Conservative interest. Mr. Lowther acted as an unpaid Charity Commissioner from 1887 to 1891, was Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs from 1891 to 1892, and he represented this country at the Venice International Sanitary Conference in 1892. Since August 1895 he has filled the offices of Deputy-Speaker and Chairman of Ways and Means. He was married in 1886 to Mary Frances, daughter of the late Right Hon. A. J. Beresford Hope. Address: 16 Wilton Crescent, S.W.

LOYD, Archie Kirkman, Q.C., M.P., J.P., was born in 1847, and is the son of the late Thomas Kirkman Loyd, Bengal Civil Service. He was educated at Brighton College, and in 1867 entered the Indian Civil Service. He was Prizeman in English Law and in Hindi at the further examinations, but retired from the Civil Service in 1869. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1868, joined the Norfolk and then the Midland Circuit, became Q.C. in 1892, and Benchman in 1894. From 1880 to 1881 he was Secretary to the Macclesfield Corrupt Practices Commission. He is a J.P. for Berks, and was elected to Parliament as Conservative member for the North or Abingdon Division of Berkshire in 1895. He is joint-editor of recent editions of Sir John Byles's work on Bills of Exchange. He married, 1885, Henrietta, daughter of the late E. L. Clutterbuck, of Hardenhuish, Wilts. Addresses: Hodcott, W. Ilsley, Berks; 60A Cadogan Square, S.W.; Lamb Buildings, Temple.

LOYSON, Charles, known as Père Hyacinthe, born at Orleans, March 10, 1827, was educated at Pau by private professors, where his father was Rector of the University. His mother was of the noble family Burnier-Fontonel, of the Château de Requier, Savoy. In 1845 he entered St. Sulpice, was ordained priest after five years of theological study, taught philosophy at the great Seminary at Avignon, and theology at that of Nantes, and officiated in his ecclesiastical capacity at St. Sulpice, in Paris. He afterwards spent two years in the convent of the Carmelites at Lyons, entered that Order, and attracted much attention by his preaching at the Lycée of that city. In June 1869 Père Hyacinthe delivered before the International League of Peace an address, in which he spoke of the Jewish religion, the Catholic religion, and the Protestant religion as being "the three great religions of civilised peoples." This expression elicited severe censures from the Catholic press. On Sept. 20 of the same year Père Hyacinthe published his famous Manifesto, addressed to the General of the Barefooted Carmelites at Rome, but evidently intended for the governing powers of the Church, in which he protested against the "sacrilegious perversion of the Gospel," and went on to say: "It is my profound conviction that if France in particular, and the Latin races in general, are given up to social, moral, and religious anarchy, the principal cause is not Catholicism itself, but the manner in which Catholicism has for a long time been understood and practised." This manifesto against the alleged abuses in the Church created intense excitement, not only in France, but throughout the civilised world, and the young monk was hailed as a powerful ally by all the open opponents of the Papacy. Soon after this he left France for America, landing in New York, Oct. 18, 1869. He was warmly welcomed by the leading members of the various Protestant sects in the United States, but, though he fraternised with them to a certain extent, he constantly declared that he had no intention of quitting the Catholic faith. On Sept. 3, 1872, he was married in London, at the Marylebone Registry Office, to Emilie Jane, daughter of Mr. Amory Butterfield, and widow of Captain Edwin Ruthven Meriman, of the United States. The late Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, and

— of Science Commission, the Commission, the Gold and Commission, and Chairman of the which settled the designs of coins. He was also for some man of the Public Accounts. It is, however, by his works on ancient vestiges and remains of Sir John Lubbock has most distinguished himself. He has written "Prehistory, as illustrated by Ancient Manners and Customs of Savage Races," 1865 (5th edit., 1889); "Origin of Civilisation and the Condition of Man," 1870, which like the preceding work, passed through several editions, and which has been translated into all the principal languages; "Origin and Metamorphoses of Insects," 1874; "On British Wild Flowers, and their Relation to Insects," 1875; "Sketch of the Thysanura and Coleoptera," two volumes of Lectures and a work on Ants, Bees, and was published in less than a year through several editions; "The Pleasures of Hunting" is the most popular of Sir John's works, and has run through thirty editions, of which several copies have been sold; "The Animals," "Fifty Years of Hunting," "Flowers, Fruits, and Leaves," "Introduction," "Chapters in Popular History," "The Beauties of Nature," "The Use of Life," "The History of Switzerland" (2nd edit.), and several separate memoirs on zoology, physiological, and archaeological in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Antiquaries, the Ethnological, Geological, and Natural History Societies, and the British Association. He was chosen as President of the British Association for the "Jubilee" in 1884, and presided over the meeting in London. He is now President of the Society. He has been President of the Ethnological and Entomological Societies, and of the Anthropological Society. Vice-President of the British Association, and of the Royal Society. Lubbock was twice chosen to represent the County of Maidstone in Parliament. In 1870, after he had been defeated as a candidate for West Kent by Mr. Stansfeld, he was returned for the County, an honour which was repeated at the general election of 1874; however, he lost his seat, but was immediately returned by the University of London, for which he now sits. In the House of Commons he has spoken frequently on financial and educational matters. He has been so fortunate as to have introduced more than twenty public measures, including the

Bank Holidays Act (1871), by which four new statute holidays were added to the two previously in existence. Amongst the other measures were: the Absconding Debtors Bill, the Apothecaries' Company Medical Act Amendment Bill, the University of London Medical Act Amendment Bill, the Falsification of Accounts Bill (by which, for the first time, it became an offence to falsify accounts for the purpose of fraud), the Bankers' Books Evidence Bill, the College of Surgeons Medical Act Bill, the Factors Acts Amendment Bill, Shop Hours Regulation Act, and the Bills of Exchange Act, which consolidates and confirms the whole law relating to bills of exchange, cheques, and promissory notes; the Public Libraries Amendment Act, the Open Spaces Act, and the Metropolis Management Act. More recently his name has been associated with the "Ancient Monuments Bill," which has received the sanction of the Legislature. In 1877 he moved the "previous question" to Mr. Gladstone's famous resolutions on the Eastern Question. In March 1878 he was appointed a Trustee of the British Museum, in the place of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell. In the same year the University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is also a D.C.L. of Oxford, LL.D. of Cambridge and of Edinburgh, and M.D. of Würzburg. He has had the honour of being elected an honorary member of many foreign scientific societies, both on the Continent and in America. He was Vice-Chancellor of the University of London for eight years, but resigned the office on his election to represent the University in Parliament. This seat he held without a contest till 1886, but on the dissolution Mr. Frederic Harrison was brought forward as a Home-Rule candidate, Sir J. Lubbock standing as a Unionist. The latter easily won the seat, polling 1314 votes against Mr. Harrison's 516. On the formation of County Councils he stood for the City on a requisition signed by the leaders of all parties, and out of 10,000 votes recorded, received 8900, the largest number of votes recorded for any candidate in the whole country. He was unanimously elected Vice-Chairman of the London County Council, and re-elected 1889; and in 1890 was elected Chairman, on the resignation of the Earl of Rosebery, and occupied this post to 1892. He is President of the London Chamber of Commerce, and was till 1899 President of the Working-Men's College, where he is now succeeded by Prof. A. V. Dicey. Several of his books have been translated into the French, German, Spanish, Italian, Danish, Swedish, Russian, Polish, Bohemian, Roumanian, LUDLOW, Sir Henry, Knt., Chief-Justice of the Leeward Islands, was born in 1838, and is the son of Mr. George Ludlow, late of Hertford, who was first cousin to Mr. Serjeant Ludlow, sometime Recorder of Bristol. Sir Henry was educated at Christ's Hospital and St. John's College, Cambridge, and graduated as B.A., 8th Wrangler, in 1857, and subsequently became M.A. and Fellow of St. John's. He obtained, in 1861, the student-ship granted by the Inns of Court to the student who passed the best examination previous to his call to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn; and was called to the Bar in 1862, and appointed Attorney-General of Trinidad in 1874, and Chief-Justice of the Leeward Islands in 1886. In conjunction with E. Chisholm Batten he published "Batten and Ludlow on the Jurisdiction of the County Courts in Equity," and in conjunction with H. Jenkyns, Esq., published "Ludlow and Jenkyns on Trade-Marks." He married, in 1876, Alice, daughter of Thomas Swordes. Address: St. John's, Antigua, West Indies.

LUDLOW, Lord, The Right Hon. Henry Charles Lopes, D.L., third son of the late Ralph Lopes, the second baronet of Maristow, Devon, by Susan Gibbs, eldest daughter of the late A. Ludlow, Esq., of Heywood House, Wiltshire, was born at Devonport, Oct. 3, 1828, and received his education at Winchester School, and at Balliol College, Oxford (B.A. 1850). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, June 7, 1852, and for some time he practised as an equity draughtsman and conveyancer. In 1857 he joined the Western Circuit, of which he became, in course of time, the leading "stuff gown." Mr. Lopes was made Recorder of Exeter in 1867, obtained his silk gown in 1869, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn shortly afterwards. In April 1868 he was returned to the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, as member for Launceston. He was re-elected in December 1868, and he continued to sit for that borough till January 1874. The Warrington Park property having in the meantime changed hands, it then became necessary for Mr. Lopes either to oppose the new owner or to seek for another seat. Choosing the latter alternative, he determined to stand for Frome, near which borough he had a residence and property. After a severe contest he was returned by 642 votes, against 557 recorded in favour of Mr. Willans, the Liberal candidate. He continued to represent Frome until his elevation to the judicial bench. Mr. Lopes was a frequent speaker in the House of Commons, and he succeeded in carrying through that House a Jury Bill containing more than a hundred sections, but there was not sufficient time to get it passed by the House of Peers. On Nov. 3, 1876, Mr. Lopes accepted the vacant judgeship in the Court of Common Pleas, in succession to the late Mr. Justice Archibald, and very shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. In November 1876, on the death of his maternal uncle, Sir Henry Lopes became the owner of Heywood, near Westbury, Wiltshire, a place which had been for many years in his mother's family, and where he now resides. On Dec. 1, 1885, he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal, and subsequently sworn of the Privy Council. He retired from the Court of Appeal in 1897, and was raised to the peerage as Lord Ludlow of Heywood, being granted an annuity of £3500. In 1854 he married Cordelia Lucy, daughter of Erving Clarke, Esq., of Efford Manor, near Plymouth, and thus became connected with the old Cornish families of Molesworth and Trelawney. She died in December 1891. Sir Henry was Treasurer of the Inner Temple for the year 1890; and has been a Member of the Council of Legal Education. He was appointed Chairman of the Wilts Quarter Sessions in 1895. Addresses: Heywood, Westbury, Wilts; 8 Cromwell Place, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LUGARD, Colonel Frederick J. D., C.B., D.S.O., who comes of a race of fine soldiers, is a nephew of the late General the Right Hon. Sir Edward Lugard, G.C.B. He was born at Fort George, Madras, in 1858, his father being an army chaplain there at the time. He was educated at Rossall, and passed from that school into Sandhurst direct. He entered the army as a second lieutenant in the 86th Foot, the Royal Irish Rifles, and soon after joined the Norfolk Regiment. In 1879 he went to India, and was attached to the expedition despatched to avenge the murder of Sir Louis Cavagnari. He saw a good deal of service in the Afghan War, and was present at the affair at Saidabad. Mr. Lugard occupied his leisure during the next three or four years in preparation for different army examinations, and in studying the phases of animal life, thus gaining a knowledge which stood him in good stead when he wrote the zoological part of his work on Africa. In 1885 he was promoted captain, and was appointed, by telegram, transport officer of the Indian contingent under General Hudson for Suakin. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a medal with clasp, and the Khedive's Star, for his services in Egypt. In 1886 Captain Lugard went as transport officer to the Ruby Mines Column in Burma. As there are no roads in the portion of the country through which he journeyed, and the way led over mountains 8000 feet high, and through a dense bamboo jungle, the difficulties in the path were very great, but so successfully did Lugard overcome them that he was made a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, then recently instituted. In 1888 he commanded an expedition which was sent against slave-traders on Lake Nyassa, when he was severely wounded. Afterwards, during sick-leave, he was appointed Representative in Uganda of the British East Africa Company, and on his return to England in 1893 published his important work on "The Rise of our East African Empire; or, Early Efforts in Uganda and Nyassaland," and in a series of public lectures and letters to the Times strenuously advocated the retention of those countries under British rule, in which efforts he has been successful. In 1894 Captain Lugard was employed by the Royal Niger Company in command of the expedition to Borgu, which was organised to negotiate treaties between England and the native potentates. He was created a C.B. in May 1895, and in the following year was sent in charge of an expedition to Lake Ngami. He was shortly after appointed Commissioner and Commandant of the Forces in Nigeria and Lagos. Colonel Lugard, on account of ill health, returned to England in August 1898. Club: Junior Army and Navy.

LUITPOLD, Prince Charles Joseph William Louis, Regent of Bavaria, was born at Würzburg, Mar. 12, 1821, and is the second son of King Louis I. of Bavaria. He is General and Inspector-General of the Bavarian Army, Chief of the Regiment of Bavarian Artillery, and proprietor of the first regiment of Austrian Artillery. He married, April 15, 1844, the Princess Augusta, Archduchess of Austria, and has four children. On the death of Louis II., King of Bavaria, on June 10, 1886, he was appointed Regent on account of the mental derangement of Prince Otto, the succeeding titular king.

LUMSDEN, General Sir Peter Stark, G.C.B., C.S.I., D.L., son of the late Colonel Thomas Lumsden, C.B., was born on Nov. 9, 1829. He entered the Indian Army in 1847, and has risen to his present rank by constant and active service, principally on the North-West and other frontiers of India. In 1857 he was employed in a difficult mission to Afghanistan, at the crisis of the Indian Mutiny, and creditably discharged his arduous and perilous duties. He served in Central India in 1868, under Major-General Sir R. Napier. He accompanied the expedition to China in 1860, and was present in all the actions there, including the assault and capture of the Taku Forts. He was Quartermaster-General of the Army in India from 1868 to 1873, and Adjutant-General from 1874 to 1879, and Chief of the Staff to the Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. P. Haines, during the last Afghan War. He was appointed Commissioner for the demarcation of the North-Western Boundary of Afghanistan, July 16, 1884. After the Penjdeh "incident," Sir Peter Lumsden returned home to report on the state of things to the British Government, and his place was taken by Colonel (now Sir West) Ridgway. He attained General's rank in 1890, and joined the Indian Staff Corps in that year. Sir Peter Lumsden was a member of the Council of India from 1883 to 1893, and was made a G.C.B. July 3, 1885. He married, in 1862, Mary, daughter of J. Marriott. Address: Buchromb, Duftown, Scotland.

LUNN, Henry Simpson, M.D., F.R.G.S., editor of Travel, was born at Horncastle, in Lincolnshire, on July 30, 1859, and is the eldest son of Henry Lunn. He was educated at the Horncastle Grammar School, and at Dublin University, where he graduated B.A., M.D., B.Ch. In 1887 Dr. Lunn left England for the Indian Mission field as a medical missionary. As correspondent to the Pall Mall Gazette he attended the Indian National Congress, becoming intimately acquainted with the leaders of the movement, and lecturing to large assemblies of educated Hindus on the development of their national life. The vigour with which he threw himself into his Indian work was responsible for a series of attacks of malarial fever, and he was ordered home only twelve months after he had entered the work. He was at once invited to become the colleague of the Rev. H. Price Hughes at St. James's Hall, and for two years was actively engaged in the work of the West London Mission. During this period he wrote a series of articles for Mr. Hughes's paper, the Mahodist Times, which led to a grave controversy and to a special Commission, of which the Right Hon. Sir Henry Fowler, Sir George Chubb, and others were members. The report of the Commission was indecisive, but the bitterness aroused was so great that Dr. Lunn resigned the Methodist ministry, and accepted an appointment as Sunday Evening Lecturer at the Regent Street Polytechnic. At this date he published his Indian experiences, under the title of "A Friend of Missions in India." In 1890 Dr. Lunn founded the Review of the Churches, a magazine expressing the increasing desire for inter-denominational comity. In this he was assisted by an editorial staff, including Dean Farrar, Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D.; Rev. John Clifford, D.D.; Rev. John Mac-kennal, D.D.; and Mr. Percy Bunting. In 1892 he founded the Grindelwald Conference for the consideration of the question of Christian unity, and was supported in arranging these gatherings by the Bishops of Ripon and Worcester, Earl Nelson, Dean Fremantle, the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, the Moderator of the English Presbyterian Church, the Moderator of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and a number of influential Nonconformist divines. In 1895 Dr. Lunn visited America and lectured on Christian Unity and on the Religions of India to large and enthusiastic audiences in New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Toronto, and Boston. He also delivered lectures at the Universities of Harvard, Brown, and Boston. During late years he has devoted considerable energy to the development of the tours which grew out of the Grindelwald Conference, and which have assumed a special educational character, and in connection with this development, he has published a series of guide-books entitled "How to Visit Switzerland," "How to Visit Italy," "How to Visit Northern Europe," and "How to Visit the Mediterranean." Recently Dr. Lunn has taken an active part in the organisation of Free Church Councils, and spoke at the last gathering of the National Federation of Free Churches in Bristol on the relation of the Free Churches to journalism. He is also a member of, and lecturer for, the Eighty Club. He was one of the original founders of the Liberal Forward Movement, and is a member of the Executive Committee. Dr. Lunn is married to Ethel, eldest daughter of Canon Moore, of Midleton Rectory. Address: 5 Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.

LUSHINGTON, Sir Godfrey, K.C.B., G.C.M.G. (1899), M.A., fifth son of the late Right Hon. S. Lushington, M.P., was born in 1832. He was educated at Rugby and Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1853, and also a first class in the Final School of Lit. Hum. in 1854; he was also elected a Fellow of All Souls' College. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1858, became counsel to the Home Office in 1869, and was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in 1876. Sir G. Lushington was, from 1883 to 1895, Permanent Under-Secretary at the Home Office, and was created a K.C.B. in 1892. Formerly a member of the London County Council, he was elected Alderman (Moderate) until 1900, but resigned his Aldermanship in March 1898. He was married, in 1865, to Beatrice, daughter of S. Smith, of Embley, Romsey, Hants. Addresses: 34 Old Queen Street, S.W.; Stokke, Great Bedwyn, Hungerford; and Athenæum.

LUXEMBURG-NASSAU, Grand-Duke of, Adolphus-William-Charles-Augustus-Frederick, was born at Biebrich, July 24, 1817, and married, at Dessau, April 23, 1851, his second wife, Princess Adelaide of Anhalt; his first wife, the Grand-Duchess Elisabeth Michailovna of Russia, having died in 1845 without issue. His only daughter, Princess Hilda, was married to the Crown Prince Frederick of Baden in 1885, a grandson of the Emperor William I., with a settlement of a million sterling. The Hereditary Prince Alexander is likewise an only son, born in 1852, and serves as major-general in the Austrian army. Should his sister die without issue, her dower will ultimately revert to him, and he will be one of the wealthiest princes in Europe, his father possessing, in addition to a fortune of at least three millions sterling, vast estates in Austria and Germany. Prince Alexander married, on June 21, 1893, Marie-Anne, Princess of Braganza. Through this union his family hope to secure the succession to the Luxemburg throne in the direct line, thus eventually avoiding complications with Prussia.

LYALL, Sir Alfred Comyn, K.C.B., G.C.I.E., son of the Rev. Alfred Lyall, was born at Coultston, Surrey, in 1835, and educated at Eton. He was appointed Home Secretary in India in 1873; Foreign Secretary in 1878; and Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces in 1882, having in the previous year been created a K.C.B. He was formerly Secretary to the Order of the Star of India, and the Order of the Indian Empire. Sir Alfred Lyall, who is no less distinguished in literature than in the public service, is the author of "Asiatic Studies, Religious and Social," 1882, and of a volume of poems. In 1866 he published a biography of Warren Hastings in the English Men of Action Series, and in 1891 delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge on "Natural Religion in India." In 1893 appeared his "Rise of the British Dominion in India" (3rd edit., 1893). In January 1888 he was appointed a member of the Council of India. He has the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford, and of LL.D. at Cambridge. In 1863 he married Cora, daughter of P. Cloete. Addresses: 18 Queen's Gate, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LYALL, Sir Charles James, K.C.S.I. C.I.E., LL.D., Edinb., late Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces of India, was born March 9, 1845, and educated at King's College, London, and at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1867 he entered the Bengal Civil Service, and was Assistant-Magistrate for Meerut until 1871, when he was appointed Under-Secretary for the N.W. Provinces. After holding other under-secretaryships, he became Secretary of the Chief Commissioner of Assam in 1880; and Secretary to the Government of India for the Home Department, 1889-95, when he was appointed to the post of Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces, India. In 1898 he was appointed Secretary of the Judicial and Public Department of the India Office. He has translated several texts from the Arabic. Address: Government House, Nagpur.

LYALL, Edna. See BATLY, ADA ELLEN.

LYDEKKER, Richard, F.R.S. F.G.S., F.Z.S., J.P. for Hertfordshire, eldest son of the late G. W. Lydekker, was born in 1849, went to Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1868, and in 1871 was second in the first class of the Natural Science Tripos, the late Mr. A. H. Garrod being senior. In 1874 he went with three friends on a tour to Kashmir, and while there in the autumn was appointed by Lord Salisbury (then Secretary for India) to the Geological Survey of India. He held this appointment until 1892, when he resigned on his marriage with the elder daughter of the Rev. Canon Davys, Rector of Wheatthampstead, Herts, for which county he became J.P. during the same year. During his service on the Geological Survey of India, he surveyed nearly the whole of the territories of the Maharaja of Kashmir.

The results of this difficult work were written after the author's return home, and published, with a map, by the Government of India in the Memoirs of the Geological Survey of India. In the winters during his Indian service, Mr. Lydekker was occupied in descriptions of the large series of vertebrate fossils from the Siwalik Hills at the foot of the Himalayas, this being continued (by special grant from the Indian Government) after his return to England. The results were published by the Indian Government in the Palæontologia Indica. In 1884 Mr. Lydekker undertook for the Trustees the writing of catalogues of the fossil mammalia, birds, reptilia, and amphibia in the British Museum. Of this work the mammalia occupy five volumes; reptiles and amphibians four, and the birds one volume. In 1893, and again in 1894, Mr. Lydekker, under the auspices of the Royal Society, went out to Argentina to study the fossil mammals in the La Plata Museum, the results of his investigations having been published in two volumes, illustrated by folio plates. He has written a number of papers on vertebrate palæontology, published in the Records of the Geological Survey of India, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Proceedings of the Zoological Society, Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, &c. While in India he was a Fellow of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. In 1880 he was elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society, and in 1883 he became a Fellow of the Geological Society, and was elected a member of the Council of the latter Society in 1886, and again in 1893, while in the following year he was chosen one of the Vice-Presidents, and in 1898 was elected on the Council of the Zoological Society. Mr. Lydekker is also joint-author with Professor H. A. Nicholson of the only "Manual of Palæontology" extant in this country; while, in co-operation with Sir W. H. Flower, then Director of the British Museum (Natural History), he has written "The Study of Mammals." To the general public he is, however, probably better known as the editor and chief author of the "Royal Natural History." Among his other contributions to scientific literature may be mentioned: an illustrated monograph of "The Deer of all Lands," "A Geographical History of Mammals," "Horns and Hoofs," "Forms and Phases of Animal Life," and "Life and Rock," three volumes of Allen's Naturalists' Library. He married, in 1882, Lucy Marianne, eldest daughter of Canon Davys. Address: The Lodge, Harpenden, Herts.

LYNE, The Rev. Joseph Leycester, called "Father Ignatius," son of Francis and Louisa Genevieve Lyne, was born Nov. 23, 1837, at Trinity Square, by the Tower of London, educated at St. Paul's School, then by Rev. G. N. Wright, at Ayscough Free Hall, Spalding, Lincoln, and Britannia House, Worcester; next at Trinity College, Glenalmond, Perth. He was ordained in 1860 to the curacy of St. Peter's, Plymouth, and was then Mission Curate to the late Mr. Lowder at St. George's in the East, but left him in 1862 to begin the attempt of restoring monasticism in the Church of England. He began at Claydon, near Ipswich, and moved to Norwich, Jan. 30, 1863. Next he moved to the Isle of Wight, to a house of Dr. Pusey's, at Chale, then to Laleham, Chertsey, for three years, and finally he purchased land among the Black Mountains, and built Llanthony Abbey, five miles beyond the old ruined Llanthony Priory. There is a Priory of Nuns attached to the Church, as well as an Abbey for Monks, after the example of many of the old double monasteries of the Saxon Church. The monks claim to follow the ancient rule of St. Benedict, and use the Benedictine Breviary for Choir Office and the Sarum Missal of the ante-Reformation Church of England. They wear the old English Benedictine dress. Mr. Lyne's monastic name is "Ignatius of Jesus." During the last few years Father Ignatius has inaugurated a special crusade in defence of the Holy Scriptures and Orthodox Christianity against the "Higher Critics" and other opponents of Orthodoxy within the Church of England. During the year 1893 he initiated at Llanthony Abbey a petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Convocation, praying that Church authority should arrest the attacks upon the Faith of Christ now so common among the clergy. The petition was largely signed first in Oxford, then throughout the country. It was presented by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. In the early part of 1893 the Monk's preaching at the University Church of St. Mary the Virgin in Oxford caused much excitement, being commented on as a significant fact by the Times and most newspapers throughout the country. Never had such vast congregations of men assembled in this historic church for centuries. "The feat of filling and more than filling St. Mary's with men only has not been accomplished by any other preacher," was the statement made by one of the chief Church papers at the time. At the Church Congress at Birmingham in 1893 Father Ignatius denounced the author of "Lux Mundi" as "an impugner of Holy Scripture and of our Lord Jesus Christ." He is the author of many published sermons, poems, hymns; the "Tales of Llanthony," "Brother Placidus," "Leonard Morris," and "Tales of the Monastery." He is the composer of many pieces of sacred music, 1860-98; also editor of

"Llanthony Monastery Tracts." In the years 1890 and 1891 the Welsh Monk made a missionary tour in America. From Quebec to the southernmost point of civilisation in Florida he preached the old-fashioned Gospel message, receiving invitations from bishops and clergy, from Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist ministers to preach in their places of worship. He was asked by the Superior of a Roman Catholic College to address their students, and in Chicago he preached in the Cathedral and in Mr. D. L. Moody's Tabernacle. The Monk's visit to North America was certainly, from an ecclesiastical point of view, unique. In the summer of 1898 he was ordained Priest at Llanthony Abbey by Archbishop Mar Timotheus, of the Syrian Church, and afterwards issued a manifesto with regard to his ordination, in which he maintained the validity of the orders he had received. Address: Llanthony Abbey, near Aber-gavenny.

LYNN, William Thynne, B.A., F.R.A.S., eldest son of the late William Bewicke Lynn, F.R.C.S., for many years one of the surgeons of Westminster Hospital, and descended from a family long resident in the county of Durham, was born at Chelsea, Aug. 9, 1835, and educated privately in the neighbourhood of Esher, Surrey. His first appointment, after a short preliminary training at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was that of an assistant at the Cambridge Observatory, under the late Professor Challis, in the year 1855, whence, in the following year, he returned to Greenwich as a member of the staff of the Royal Observatory, where Professor (afterwards Sir George) Airy was Astronomer-Royal. For several years he superintended the greater part of the astronomical calculations, during which he found time to devote some of his evenings to attending lectures at King's College, London, of which he was elected an associate in 1862. In that year he also graduated as B.A. in the University of London, after passing the requisite examinations in 1860 and 1861. In February 1862 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, to the Monthly Notices of which he from time to time contributed papers, of which the last appeared in 1896. In 1863 he published a small educational work called "The First Principles of Natural Philosophy." A long and serious illness compelled him to desist from night exposure, in consequence of which he retired from the Observatory in the month of February 1880. He continued, however, to give much of his time to astronomical literature, and numerous contributions from his pen appeared in the pages of the Observatory, the Athenæum, the Companion to the British Almanac, and other periodicals; besides his editing and revising various astronomical works. In 1884 he published a concise and popular summary of the most interesting facts known respecting the heavenly bodies (especially their movements) under the title "Celestial Motions: a Handy Book of Astronomy," of which a ninth edition appeared in 1897. In 1886 he was elected an Honorary Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. In 1880 he had been admitted a Lay Reader in the diocese of Rochester; and in 1889 he published two small volumes, intended chiefly for Sunday-school teachers, on "Bible Chronology," and "Brief Lessons on the Parables and Miracles of our Lord," and early in 1891 a third, entitled "Eminent Scripture Characters," and in 1892 a "Short Catechism of English Church History" in pamphlet form. In 1893 appeared also a small treatise on "Remarkable Comets" (of which a sixth edition was published in 1898), and "Brief Lessons on Astronomy," and in 1896 a companion volume to the former, entitled "Remarkable Eclipses," which is now in its third edition. The columns of Notes and Queries since 1882 contain a large number of contributions from his pen on literary, scientific, and Biblical subjects. "Celestial Motions" has been translated into French. Address: 3 South Vale, Blackheath, S.E.

LYONS, Sir Algernon M'Lennan, G.C.B., D.L., Admiral of the Fleet, was born in August 1833. He is the son of the late Lieutenant-General Humphrey Lyons by Eliza, daughter of Henry Bennett, Esq., of Fir Grove, Liverpool. He entered the Navy in 1847, and was promoted Lieutenant in June 1854, serving in that rank throughout the Russian War in the Black Sea. He commanded the boats of H.M.S. Firebrand in the destruction of Russian works on the Danube, and was mentioned in despatches. He was also present at the bombardment of Sebastopol, and as Flag-Lieutenant to the Commander-in-Chief assisted in subsequent operations in the Black Sea, including the capture of Kertch and Kinburn. Sir Algernon commanded H.M.S. Racer on the American Station during the Civil War, and in 1875 he was appointed Commodore on the West Indian Station. He was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1878, and became successively Commander-in-Chief in the Pacific, on the North American Station, and at Devonport, where he succeeded H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. From 1875 to 1878 he was an Aide-de-camp to the Queen, becoming First and Principal Naval A.D.C. to Her Majesty in 1895. Sir Algernon was appointed K.C.B. in 1889, and promoted to G.C.B. in 1897. He holds the Crimean and Turkish Medals and the Medjidieh of the fifth class, and is a Deputy-Lieutenant and J.P. for the county of Glamorganshire. He married, in 1879, Louisa, daughter of Thomas Penrice, Esq., of Kilvrough, Glamorganshire. Address: Kilvrough Park, Mill, R.S.O.

LYTE, Sir Henry Churchill Maxwell, K.C.B., F.S.A., Deputy-Keeper of the Records, Royal Commissioner on Historical MSS., is the son of the late J. W. Maxwell Lyte, Esq., grandson of the Rev. H. F. Lyte, the well-known hymn-writer, and the representative of the families of Lyte of Lytescary, co. Somerset, and Maxwell of Falkland, co. Monaghan. He was born in London on May 29, 1848, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took honours in Law and History and became M.A. In 1875 he published a "History of Eton College," of which a new edition, revised and enlarged, was issued in 1889. In 1880 and 1881 he contributed to the Archæological Journal a series of papers on "Dunster and its Lords," which was afterwards reprinted with additions as a volume for private circulation. This was followed, in 1886, by a "History of the University of Oxford from the earliest times to the year 1530." In the meanwhile Mr. Maxwell Lyte had been acting for some years as an Inspector for the Historical Manuscripts Commission. Reports by him on the Collections of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, the Duke of Rutland, and upwards of twenty other owners, have at different times been presented to Parliament. In January 1886 he was appointed Deputy-Keeper of the Records, in succession to the late Sir William Hardy, and as such was entrusted with the direction of all official publications and arrangements connected with the national archives, upon which he presents an annual report. In the following month he was nominated one of the Royal Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts. He was made a C.B. in January 1889, and a K.C.B. in 1897. He married, in 1871, Frances Fownes, daughter of the late J. C. Somerville, Esq., of Dinder, co. Somerset. Addresses: 3 Portman Square, W.; and Athenæum.

LYTTELTON, Hon. Alfred, M.P., M.A., is the eighth son of the 4th Lord Lyttelton, and was born on Feb. 7, 1857. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was captain of both his school and university cricket elevens. He graduated B.A. in 1878, was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1881, and joined the Oxford Circuit. He acted as Legal Private Secretary to Sir Henry James, when Attorney-General, from 1882 to 1886, was appointed Recorder of Hereford in 1894, and in the following year became Recorder of Oxford. Mr. Lyttelton has represented Warwick and Leamington as a Liberal Unionist Member of the House of Commons since 1895, and he was chosen to second the Address in the Lower House in 1897. Address: 16 Great College Street, Westminster, S.W.

LYTTELTON, Hon. Canon Edward, M.A., the seventh son of the 4th Lord Lyttelton, and Mary, daughter of Sir S. Glynn, born July 23, 1855, was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was foundation scholar, and where he gained a second-class in the Class Tripos in 1878. He was assistant-master at Wellington College, 1880-82; assistant-master at Eton College, 1882-90; and was appointed headmaster of Haileybury College in 1890. He was made an Honorary Canon of St. Albans in 1895. He married, in 1888, Caroline Amy, younger daughter of the Very Rev. John West, D.D., Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin. Mr. Lyttelton is the author of a "Handbook on Cricket," 1890; "Mothers and Sons," 1892; and "Shall we go on with Latin Verses!" 1897. He served on her Majesty's Royal Commission on Secondary Education, 1894-96. As a cricketer, moreover, Mr. Lyttelton has made his mark, and forms with his two brothers a remarkable trio of experts at this fine old English game. Residence: Master's Lodge, Haileybury College, Hertford.

MAARTENS, Maarten, novelist, was born in Holland, and received his education in Germany, and at the University of Utrecht. He is a barrister by profession, but for years now he has devoted himself entirely to literature. Some of his best-known books are: "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," "An Old Maid's Love," "A Question of Taste," "God's Fool" (perhaps his most popular work), and "The Greater Glory." These works, originally written in excellent English, are also published by the author in his native tongue. They present a not over-pleasant picture of bourgeois existence in the Netherlands, but are admitted by Dutchmen to be singularly true to life. On the occasion of her Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, ascending the throne on Aug. 31, 1898, Mr. Maarten Maartens published a charming poem in the Daily Chronicle of that date, hailing the youthful Sovereign as "Queen of the Lowlands by the Northern Sea."

MACALISTER, Alexander, M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., F.S.A., second son of Robert Macalister, Esq., was born in Dublin on April 19, 1844, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He became L.R.C.S. in 1861, L.R.C.P. 1862, and subsequently M.A. and M.D. of the Universities of Dublin and Cambridge. LL.D. of the University of Glasgow and of McGill University. In 1869 he was appointed Professor of Zoology in Dublin University, and of Anatomy in 1872. In 1883 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy at Cambridge, and he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College. He is F.R.S. and member of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland, and has published "Introduction to Animal Morphology," 1876; "Morphology of Vertebrate Animals," 1878; "Text-Book of Human Anatomy," 1889; and a number of papers on anatomical and other subjects. Address: Torrissdale, Cambridge.

MACALISTER, Donald, M.A., M.D., Cantab., B.Sc. London, F.R.C.P. London, was born May 17, 1854, at Perth, Scotland, and is the son of Donald MacAlister, Esq., formerly of Tarbert, Lochfyne, representative of the ancient family who were hereditary keepers of Tarbert Castle. He was educated at Aberdeen and at Liverpool Institute, and his scholastic successes were probably unique. He took the highest place in successive years in Oxford Senior, Cambridge Senior, and London Matriculation; five Gold and Silver Medals in the Science and Art Examinations; Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society; and five scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, October 1873, gained all College honours open to him, including the Herschel prize for Astronomy; graduated B.A. as senior wrangler and first Smith's prizeman 1877, and B.Sc. London the same year. He was Master at Harrow in 1877, and subsequently examiner, and was elected Fellow of St. John's in the same year. He studied medicine at Cambridge and St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, where he was Lecturer in Natural Philosophy, and graduated M.B. in 1881. He made researches in the physiology of heat-production under Professor Ludwig at Leipzig in 1881, and studied the mechanism of the heart and the architecture of bones, on which he has published papers. He graduated M.D. in 1884, and was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, 1886; appointed Goulstonian Lecturer 1887, and first Croonian Professor 1888; Secretary and Recorder in the Section of Mathematics and Physics of the British Association for Advancement of Science, 1879-84, and Vice-President 1886; is member of the Council and Linacre Lecturer, St. John's College Physician to Addenbrooke's Hospital; a Member and Secretary of the University Council of Senate, 1886-98; Secretary of the Special Board for Medicine, Examiners and University Lecturer in Medicine, Accessor to the Regius Professor of Physic; Elector to the Professorships of Medicine, Surgery, Anatomy, Zoology, and Pathology; member of the General Board of Studies, and of the Local Examiners and other Syndicates; Representative of the University on General Medical Council (elected 1889); Examiner in Medicine at Victoria University; Thomson Lecture at Aberdeen, 1889; late editor of the Esq. and of the Practitioner; member of the editorial committee of the British Pharmacopoeia, 1898; and editorial referee of the British Medical Journal. He has published an English edition of "Ziegler's Pathological Anatomy," 1885-86 (3 vols., 3rd edit., 1897-98), and is the author of "The Nature of Fever," 1887; "Antipretics," 1888; "Law of the Geometric Mean," 1879; "Advanced Study and Research in Cambridge," 1896; and other literary, scientific, and professional Memoirs. He is also a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Physical, Mathematical, and Physiological Societies of London; a Member of the Permanent International Commission of Hygiene and Demography (Madrid, 1898); and a Justice of the Peace for the county of Cambridge. He married Edith, eldest daughter of Professor A. MacAlister, in 1895. Addresses: Barrmore, Cambridge; St. John's, Cambridge; and Athenaeum.

MACALISTER, John Y. W., son of Donald MacAlister, Esq., formerly of Tarbert, born at Perth in 1867, was educated at the High School, Liverpool, and Edinburgh University. For two years he studied medicine, but his health broke down, and when he recovered he chose librarianship as a vocation. In 1878 he entered the Liverpool Library as sub-librarian, and two years later was appointed Librarian of the Leeds Library, where he superintended the erection of the new buildings, the internal portion of which was designed by himself. He catalogued the collection of some 90,000 volumes, and classified the whole library on a system devised by himself. Recognised as an expert, he was invited by the Yorkshire College to assist in planning and arranging their new library, for which he received the cordial thanks of the College. While in Leeds he contributed many literary and antiquarian articles to eds Mercury and Yorkshire Post, and successful lecturer. In 1887 he was the first librarian of the Gladstone Library. As soon as this appointment was made Mr. Gladstone invited Mr. MacAlister to Hawarden in order to discuss the plans for the new library, and to examine the statesman's ingenious methods of arrangement and classification. Immediately afterwards he was elected Librarian of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society (the "Academy of Medicine" of Britain), and the Committee of the Gladstone Library reluctantly released him from his engagement. He, however, continued as Librarian of the Gladstone Library for some months in an honorary capacity, and started the work on lines with a well-selected nucleus of books. In his new position he made his energy felt. The Society was housed in such cramped and ill-lighted quarters in Berners Street, that the notion of its valuable library was confined to the cellars, while its income was insufficient for its needs. He submitted a scheme to the Council, which decided that they should build new and ample premises on such a scale and on financial terms as, without cost to the Society, would place it ultimately in the possession. The scheme seemed unguine and risky that it was firmly opposed until Mr. MacAlister secured the powerful support of Sir Andrew

In accordance with the scheme the Society purchased the freehold of 20 Verulam Square. Handsome premises were erected, which have become the headquarters of most of the leading scientific and literary societies in London. Mr. MacAlister's most sanguine expectations were realised, and the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society is now not only the medical society, but one of the highest scientific societies of the kingdom.

In 1892 Mr. MacAlister was appointed Chairman of the Editing Committee of the International Congress of Librarians. In 1887 he was elected Honorary Secretary of the Library Association, and in that position has done great service to library movement. In 1886 he founded Library, a monthly magazine devoted to the work and literature of libraries, which soon became an established success. He also edited the "Public Library Series," the "Library Year-Book," and the "Library Association Series" of handbooks. In 1890 he took up the question of library legislation, then in a state of chaos, which was mainly due to his efforts that in 1894 Sir John Lubbock was able to submit to Parliament a Bill consolidating and amending the different Acts, which soon became law, and is now the law under which all public libraries are conducted. In 1892 he visited the principal libraries of France, and was invited by the late Duc d'Aumale to visit him at Chantilly, and to examine his magnificent library. He obtained from the duke an invitation to the Library Association to visit Chantilly, which they did when, later on, its annual meeting was held in Paris. His latest service to the cause of libraries was to secure for the Association, through the powerful influence of Lord Dufferin, Lord Windsor, and Sir John Lubbock, a Royal Charter of Incorporation, which was granted in February 1898. Mr. MacAlister numbers amongst his friends many men of light and leading in the world of literature. He was very intimate with the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, who shortly before his death sent him a complete set of his works, each volume containing an appropriate autograph quotation. Dr. Nansen is an intimate friend of his, and it was Mr. MacAlister who presented a library of well-selected books to the Fram. Among his most-treasured possessions are souvenirs from the famous expedition, which Dr. Nansen sent to him on his return. "Mark Twain" is another of Mr. MacAlister's many friends, and when in London, the greatest of humourists often smokes the pipe of peace at 20 Hanover Square with his friend. Mr. MacAlister is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of the Royal Geographical Society, and a well-known "Savage." His official address is 20 Hanover Square, W.

MACARTHUR, The Right Rev. James, D.D., Bishop of Bombay, was educated at the University of Glasgow, where he graduated M.A. in 1868. Becoming a Scotch Barrister in 1871, he was, three years later, called to the English Bar at the Inner Temple. Relinquishing the legal profession, Mr. MacArthur spent a year at Cuddesdon Theological College, and was ordained in 1878. After serving a curacy at St. Mary, Redcliff, Bristol, for two years, he was presented to the Rectory of Lamplugh, Cumberland, in 1880, and in 1887 he became Vicar of St. Mary, Tothill Fields, London. He was subsequently transferred to the Vicarage of All Saints, South Acton, in 1892, and was appointed Rural Dean of Ealing in 1894. In 1898 Mr. MacArthur was consecrated Bishop of Bombay.

M'ARTHUR, W. A., M.P., D.L., is the eldest son of Alexander M'Arthur, M.P., and was born in 1857, and educated privately. Entering upon a business career, he became partner in the firm of W. & A. M'Arthur, Australian merchants, and was Commissioner for New South Wales to the Colonial Exhibition in 1884. He is also a Director of the Bank of Australasia and a D.L. for London. His parliamentary career dates from 1886, when he contested Buckrose, Yorks., but was unseated on a scrutiny. In 1887 he was returned as a Liberal for the St. Austell Division of Cornwall, and was again returned in 1892 and 1895. He was a Junior Lord of the Treasury from Aug. 1892 to July 1895, and since March 1894 has been second Liberal Whip. He has acted as Hon. Sec. and unofficial whip to the Committee of Radical members. Address: 14 Sloane Gardens, S.W.

MACARTNEY, Sir Halliday, K.C.M.G., son of Robert Macartney, of Dundrennan, Kirkcudbrightshire, was born in 1833, and was educated for the medical profession at the Edinburgh University. In 1856, during his student days, he joined a contingent of volunteers being raised for the Turkish army, and served through the Crimea, studying Turkish at the same time. Returning to Edinburgh he graduated M.D., and entered the Army Medical Service as Surgeon in the 99th Regiment, at that time under orders for India, where the Mutiny had broken out. The regiment arrived too late at Calcutta for its services to be required, and was sent on to China, where Macartney was present at the taking of the Taku Forts, the attack on Peking, and the sacking of the Summer Palace. Remaining in China after the peace, he took service under the Imperial Government, 1862, being granted military rank and command together with General Gordon, of whom he was the friend. As an officer in the Celestial army, he drilled a force of 3000 men, which operated with success against the Taepings. He also established a military arsenal at Nankin, of which he was Governor for twelve years till 1876. He was then sent to England on a special mission in connection with the Margary incident. A permanent mission being resolved upon by China, he became its European Secretary, and as such paid frequent visits to the principal European capitals. He attended the coronation of the present Czar's father, and has been present at many of the principal State functions at home and abroad. He is officially described as Councillor and English Secretary to the Chinese Legation in London, and his unrivalled knowledge of the Chinese language, customs, and policy, has led to his being described by Anglo-Chinese officials as "a thorough Chinaman." He received the honour of the C.M.G. in 1881, and the K.C.M.G. in 1885, and has been decorated with the Orders of the Precious Star and the Double Dragon. In 1884 he married Jean, daughter of J. L. de Sautoy. Address: Portland Place, &c.

MACARTNEY, William G. I. M.P., is the eldest son of Mr. J. W. I. Macartney, M.P., of co. Tyrone and was born in 1852. He was educated at Exeter and Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated with a first class in History: 1875 (B.A.) He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1878, and was in the South-Eastern Circuit. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Conservative Member for South Antrim, which he continues to represent. In 1895 he was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty. Address: Clogher Park, Tyrone, and Palace Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

MACAULAY, James, M.A., M.D., eldest son of Alexander Macaulay, M.P., was born at Edinburgh, May 21, 1824. His early education was received at the Edinburgh Academy, where he was from 1824 to 1830. The Rector of the school in those years was the Venerable Archdeacon Williams, Tait, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, was "Dux" of the school in 1826. In 1830 he entered the University of Edinburgh, where he took degrees in arts and in medicine, attending also the classes in theology. After graduating in 1841, Dr. Macaulay studied in Paris and travelled in Italy and Spain. In 1843 he became joint-editor of the Literary Gazette, on the retirement of William Jordan, and retained the appointment till 1857. In the following year he became editor of the Leisure Hour and the Sunday at Home. From the Leisure Hour office was issued, about twenty years ago, the Boys' Own Paper, which was started in order to take the place of the pernicious weekly literature which had previously been provided; and was followed by the Girls' Own Paper. Both were founded by Dr. Macaulay. He has also written many books of biography, travel, and adventure, some of them chiefly for juvenile reading, such as "All True," "Stirring Stories of Peace and War," "Wonderful Tales from Real Life," "Anson's Voyage Round the World," and his story, "From Middy to Admiral of the Fleet." The last of these Christmas books is entitled, "Strange yet True; or, Interesting and Memorable Stories retold." "Notes of a Tour in the United States," which first appeared in the Leisure Hour, was afterwards issued as a volume, entitled "Across the Ferry," which passed through several editions. "The Truth about Ireland" contains the result of personal observation during repeated visits. One of Dr. Macaulay's volumes in the Pen and Pencil Series is "Sea Pictures," which Mr. Ruskin said was the best book he had ever seen on the subject. He has also published books on Luther, Dr. Johnson, and General Gordon; and in 1887, "Victoria R.I., her Life and Reign." On the occasion of the silver wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales he issued an annotated collection of the "Speeches and Addresses of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales during twenty-five years, 1863-88." Dr. Macaulay has been for thirty-five years the editor-in-chief of the Religious Tract Society's periodicals. He is now Consulting Editor of its magazines, and only an occasional contributor to the Leisure Hour and Sunday Home, to which he devoted so long a service as editor. He retired from the editorship of the Leisure Hour in 1895. He married, in 1860, a daughter of the late Rev. G. Stokes, vicar of Hope, Hanley. Address: 4 Wynnstay Gardens, Kensington.

MACBETH, Robert Walker, A.R.A., was born in Glasgow on Sept. 30, 1848, and is the second son of Norman Macbeth, R.S.A. He was educated in Edinburgh and abroad, and received his early training at the Royal Scottish Academy schools. He came up to London in 1871, and for a time drew for the Graphic. He became an Associate of the Royal Watercolour Society in 1874, and is an original member of the Painter-Etchers, as well as a Correspondent of the Institut de France. He has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and of late years has had the following pictures hung: "Unenvied, Unmolested," and "Dunster Castle," 1895; two illustrations to "The Fair Maid of Perth," "Cider Making," an etching of Sir E. Burne Jones's "Chant d'Amour," &c., in the Black and White Room, and "Marauders from the Moor," "Sweethearts and Wives," a water-colour, 1896; "The End of a Good Day," a portrait sketch of Alfred Gilbert, R.A., and another of Philip H. Calderon, R.A., 1897; "In Cloudland," "Sparklets," and, in the Black and White Room, two etchings of Mr. MacWhirter's "Affric Water," and another of his, "End of a Good Day." In 1899 he exhibited "Favourites of the Hunt," "Naval Manœuvres," and, in the Black and White Room, "Midnight Moths." He married, in 1887, Lydia, eldest daughter of General Bates. He lives at Washford, not far from Dunster Castle, in Somersetshire, and his London studio is 28 Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.

M'CALLUM, Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Edward, R.E., K.C.M.G., Governor of Newfoundland, was born in 1882, and is the son of Major H. A. M'Callum,

R.M.L.I. He passed out of Woolwich first in 1871, and was appointed Superintendent of Telegraphy in the Southern District in 1874. Subsequently he became Private Secretary to Sir William Jervois in the Straits Settlements, and prepared plans for the defence of Singapore. In 1879 he was at Woolwich at the Works Office, and in 1880 became Colonial Engineer of the Straits Settlements, and in 1884 Surveyor-General, when he constructed the new fortifications of Singapore. He was created a C.M.G. in 1887, and promoted Knight Commander in July 1898. He was Governor of Lagos until September 1898, when he was appointed to his present post in succession to Sir H. H. Murray, K.C.B.

M'CALMONT, Major Harry Leslie Blundell, M.P., J.P., D.L., was born in 1861, and is the eldest son of H. B. B. M'Calmont, Esq., barrister-at-law. He was educated at Eton, and in 1881 entered the 1st battalion of the 6th Royal Regiment, subsequently joining the Scots Guards in 1885. He retired in 1889, and is a Major in the 4th Battalion Royal Warwickshire Regiment (militia). In 1895 he was elected as a Conservative to represent Newmarket. He is well known as an owner of racehorses, especially of "Isinglass," winner of the "triple event" in 1893, i.e. the Derby, St. Leger, and the Two Thousand Guineas, and also of the Ascot Cup in 1895. He is a member of the Jockey Club and of the Royal Yacht Squadron, and owns the steam yacht Giralda. He married, in 1885, Amy H., daughter of Major-Gen. John Miller. This lady died in 1889, and he is now married to Winifred, daughter of General Sir Henry de Bathe, Bart. Addresses: 11 St. James's Square, S.W.; Cheveley Park, Newmarket, &c.

M'CALMONT, Major-General Hugh, C.B., J.P., is the eldest son of the late James M'Calmont, of Abbeylands, co. Antrim, and Emily, daughter of the late James Marten of Ross, co. Galway. Born on Feb. 9, 1845, he was educated at Eton. Entering the 7th Hussars, he served with the Red River Expedition in 1870, and three years later he was A.D.C. to General Wolseley on the Gold Coast. From 1878 to 1879 he was High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief in Cyprus, and held the same position in Natal in 1879-80. In the Egyptian War of 1882 he was Brigade-Major, and in 1885 commanded the Light Camel Regiment on the Upper Nile. He was raised to the rank of Colonel in 1885, and of Major-General in 1896. He was made C.B. in 1885, in recognition of his Egyptian services. He is a J.P. for counties Antrim and Dublin, and has sat for North Antrim since 1895. He married Rose Elizabeth, second daughter of the 4th Lord Clanmorris, in 1885. Address: Abbeylands, co. Antrim.

M'CARTHY, Jeremiah, M.A. Dublin; M.B. London; F.R.C.S. England; late Senior Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, was born in Dublin, and is of Irish parentage. He received his medical education at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the London Hospital, where for many years he was Lecturer on Surgery and Surgeon, retiring from the latter position in the autumn of 1898. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical and Hunterian Societies, and has contributed important articles to Quain's and Heath's Dictionaries. Address: 1 Cambridge Place, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

McCARTHY, Justin, M.P., eldest son of the late Michael Francis McCarthy, was born at Cork on Nov. 22, 1830. After receiving a liberal education there, he became attached to the staff of a Liverpool paper in 1853. He entered the Reporters' Gallery of the House of Commons in 1860 for the Morning Star, became foreign editor of that paper the following autumn, and chief editor in 1864; he resigned the latter post in 1868, and travelled through the United States for nearly three years, visiting thirty-five of the thirty-seven States. Since that time he has more than once revisited America. Mr. McCarthy has contributed to the London Review, the Westminster Review, the Fortnightly Review, the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, to several English magazines, and to many American periodicals, including the North American Review, and the Forum. He is the author of "The Waterdale Neighbours," 1867; "My Enemy's Daughter," 1869; "Lady Judith," 1871; "A Fair Saxon," 1873; "Linley Rochford," 1874; "Dear Lady Disdain," 1875; "Miss Misanthrope," 1877; "Donna Quixote," 1879; "The Comet of a Season," 1881; "Maid of Athens," 1883; "Camisola," 1885 (novels); of "Con Amore," a volume of critical essays; and "Prohibitory Legislation in the United States," an account of the working of the Liquor Laws in Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Iowa, and other States of the Union. In collaboration with Mrs. Campbell-Praed he has written three novels: "The Right Honourable," 1886; "The Rebel Rose," 1887; and "The Ladies' Gallery," 1888. More lately he has published "The Dictator," a novel, 1893; and "Red Diamonds," a novel, 1893. Mr. McCarthy's most important work is "A History of Our Own Times" (1878-80), being an account of what happened in these countries, from the accession of Queen Victoria to the general election of 1880. He has published the first and second volumes of a "History of the Four Georges." He has also written a short history of "The Epoch of Reform," the period between 1830 and 1850, published in 1882, and a "Life of Sir Robert Peel," in the series called "The Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria," published in 1891; in 1896 a "Life of Leo XIII."; in 1897, 5th vol. of "History of Our Own Times," up to June of that year; in 1898, "The Story of Gladstone's Life." Mr. McCarthy was for twenty-five years a political writer for one of the London daily papers. He was elected to Parliament as member for the county of Longford, Ireland, in March 1879, and was re-elected when the dissolution took place in 1880, in both instances without a contest. At the general election, 1885, he contested Derry, and was defeated by a majority of 29, but was immediately elected for Longford, by an immense majority. In 1886 he contested Derry again, and was defeated by a majority of 3, while at the same time he was returned unopposed for Longford. He claimed the Derry seat and obtained it on petition, and then elected to sit for Derry. He has since lectured in America. He is a Home Ruler, and was Vice-Chairman of the Irish parliamentary party in the House of Commons before the rejection of Mr. Parnell by the majority, when Mr. McCarthy was by them elected Chairman. He married, in 1855, Charlotte, daughter of the late W. G. Allman; she died in 1879. Address pro tem.: 11 Roxburgh Road, Westgate-on-Sea.

McCARTHY, Justin Huntly, author, was born in 1860, and is the son of Justin McCarthy, M.P. He was educated at University College School and College, and on his leaving the latter, travelled extensively and entered upon a career of journalism. He has written largely for the newspapers and magazines, and has published many books, including the following: (Poetry) "Serapion," "Hafiz in London," "Harlequinade"; (fiction) "Doom," "Dolly," "Lily Lass," "A London Legend," "The Royal Christopher"; (history) "An Outline of Irish History," "England under Gladstone," "Ireland since the Union," "The French Revolution"; (plays) "The White Carnation," "The Highwayman," "The Wife of Socrates," &c. He has also translated "Omar Khayyam," the "Arabian Nights," and Hafiz. He sat in Parliament as an Irish Nationalist from 1884 to 1892. In

M'CLELAN, The Hon. Abner Reid, Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick, was born at Hopewell, N.B., Jan. 4, 1831, of a family that had emigrated from Londonderry towards the end of the last century. He was educated at Mount Allison Academy, and for several years was a successful merchant at Hopewell. In 1854 he entered the N.B. Assembly as representative for Albert, and sat until the Union in 1867, which he aided to bring about, being Chief Commissioner of Public works at the time. In 1867 he was called to the Canadian Senate, where he sat until his appointment as Governor in 1896. Address: Government House, Frederickton, N.B.

M'CLINTOCK, Admiral Sir (Francis) Leopold, K.C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., is second son of the late Henry M'Clintock, Esq., uncle to the first Lord Rathdonnell, and of a daughter of Archdeacon Fleury. He was born at Dundalk in 1819, and entered the navy in 1831. After some years of foreign service, during which he was promoted to Lieutenant for special services in the recovery of H.M.S. Gorgon when stranded in South America, he returned to England about the time when great anxiety began to be felt for the safety of Sir John Franklin and his companions. He accompanied Sir James Clarke Ross as Second Lieutenant on board H.M.S. Enterprise, in the Arctic Expedition sent out by the Admiralty in 1848. Returning unsuccessful in November 1849, M'Clintock joined a second expedition sent out early in 1850, under the command of Captain Horatio Austin, as Senior Lieutenant of H.M.S. Assistance, Captain (Sir) Erasmus Ommaney. It was their fortune, in August 1850, to see, at Cape Riley, the first traces of the missing expedition. In the following spring, whilst frozen up at Griffith's Island, he signalled himself by an unprecedented sledge journey of eighty days and 760 geographical miles, reaching the most westerly point which had then been attained from the east, in the Arctic regions. Upon the return of this expedition to England in October 1851, Lieutenant M'Clintock was promoted to the rank of Commander. The following spring he again proceeded to the Arctic regions in command of H.M.S. Intrepid, one of five vessels composing the third searching expedition, under Sir Edward Belcher's command. In accordance with instructions from the Admiralty, the Intrepid, in company with the Resolute, Captain Kellett, wintered at

Melville Island, in order to search for the heroic Captain M'Clure and his companions; and most fortunately they were discovered and rescued, after their three years' imprisonment in the ice. M'Clintock again distinguished himself by his sledge journey of one hundred and five days and 1210 geographical miles, into the hitherto unexplored region northward of Melville Island. The comparative perfection to which Arctic sledge-travelling has been carried is almost entirely due to the improvements effected by him. Abandoning four out of the five ships embedded in the ice, and also M'Clure's ship the Investigator, the personnel of this expedition, with M'Clure and his companions, returned to England in October 1854, in the dépôt ship North Star, and two relief ships, freshly arrived out, under Captain Inglefield. M'Clintock was now advanced to the rank of Captain. In 1857 he accepted the command of Lady Franklin's own search expedition—to be fitted out at her expense. He selected, and appropriately equipped, the steam yacht Fox, of 177 tons, and with twenty-four companions sailed on July 1, 1857. He returned on Sept. 20, 1859, having discovered, upon the north-west shore of King William's Island, a record announcing the death of Sir John Franklin and the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror. M'Clintock brought home intelligence of their great discoveries and the fate of their crews, and many relics of the bold expedition. He published a very interesting account of his most important and successful searching voyage. Captain M'Clintock was received with great distinction. Knighthood, the Freedom of the City of London, and the highest degrees of the chief Universities were conferred upon him. Her Majesty, by her Order in Council, sanctioned his time in the Fox to count as sea-time served in the navy, for having brought home the only authentic intelligence of the death of Franklin and the fate of his companions. During the next six years Sir Leopold commanded, in succession, H.M.S. Bulldog, Doris, and Aurora, fulfilling various important and delicate duties abroad. From 1865 to 1868 he served as Commodore of the Jamaica Station. From 1868, until promoted to Rear-Admiral in 1871, he was a naval Aide-de-camp to the Queen; from 1872 to 1877 Admiral-Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, when he was promoted to Vice-Admiral; and from 1879 to 1882 he served as Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Stations. In 1884 he became a full Admiral and also an Elder Brother of the Corporation of the Trinity House; in 1887 he was selected for one of the few pensions open to admirals, for

"good and meritorious services"; and in 1891 he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath. He is the author of "The Voyage of the Por in the Arctic Seas," which has gone through five editions. In 1870 Sir Leopold M'Clintock married Annette Elizabeth, second daughter of Robert Foster Dunlop, Esq., of Monasterboice House, co. Louth, by Anna Elizabeth, sister of 10th Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, and has issue. Address: 8 Atherton Terrace, Gloucester Road, S.W.

MACCOLL, Canon Malcolm, was born March 27, 1838, on a sheep farm occupied by his father, a man of some distinction in mathematical sciences, in Inverness-shire, and was educated at Edinburgh, at Trinity College, Glenalmond, and at the University of Naples. He was appointed assistant-curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in 1861; chaplain to the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, 1862-63; curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, 1864-67. He spent the period between 1867 and 1869 in Southern Italy, chiefly in the study of theology, literature, and foreign politics. In 1871 he was collated to the rectory of St. George's, Botolph Lane, in the City of London. In 1884 he became a Canon residentiary of Ripon. He is the author of "Mr. Gladstone and Oxford," by "Scrutator," 2nd edit., 1865; "Science and Prayer," 4th edit., 1866; "Is there not a Cause? a Letter to Col. Greville Nugent, M.P. (late Lord Greville), on the Disestablishment of the Irish Church," 2nd edit., 1868; "The Reformation in England," 2nd edit., 1869; "The Oberammergau Passion Play," 10th edit., 1870; "Is Liberal Policy a Failure?" by "Expertus," 1870; "Who is Responsible for the (Franco-German) War?" by "Scrutator," 2nd edit., 1871; "The Damnable Clauses of the Athanasian Creed rationally explained," in a letter to Mr. Gladstone, 1872; "Lawlessness, Sacerdotalism, and Ritualism," 3rd edit., 1875; "The Eastern Question: its Facts and Fallacies," 1877; "Three Years of the Eastern Question," 3rd edit., 1878; "Christianity in Relation to Science and Morals," 5th edit., 1889; "Life Here and Hereafter," 2nd edit., 1896; "England's Responsibility towards Armenia," 4th edit., 1895; "The Sultan and the Powers," 2nd edit., 1896; besides contributions to periodical literature, and, in 1886, a pamphlet on the Irish Question, which passed through nine editions in the course of the year. In foreign politics he has made a special study of Mohammedanism as a theocratic system of government, inconsistent, as he contends, with civilisation, and fatal to the moral and intellectual development of any people who embrace it. This is his conclusion from the history and tenets of Islam, confirmed by his own observation in various Mohammedan lands. Address: The Residence, Ripon.

MACCOLL, Norman, M.A., editor of the Athenaeum, was born in 1843, and educated at Downing College, Cambridge, of which he was a Fellow. He was Har-Prizeman in 1868, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1875. He has published a work on "Greek Sceptics from Pyrrho to Sextus," 1869. Address: 1 New Court, Carey Street, W.C.; and Athenaeum.

M'CONNELL, W. R., Q.C., J.P., D.L. Chairman of the County of London Court of Sessions, was born on July 2, 1837, at Belfast, being the only child of David M'Connell, J.P., of Castlereagh House, co. Down, and Jane, his wife, daughter of Alex. M'Connell. He was educated at the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast, at a private school in England, at Heidelberg, and the University of London, where he graduated B.A. in 1858. He was ordained priest in July 1872, and was consecrated Bishop of Argyll and the Isles in 1878, when the hierarchy of Scotland was restored in March of that year. He was translated to his present see in 1892. Twenty years before that date the staunch Protestants of St. Andrews used to aver that there were only two Roman Catholics in the ancient University city, but under Archbishop Macdonald the Church of Rome has made converts in the diocese. Address: 42 Greenhill Gardens, Edinburgh.

MACDONALD, Sir Claude Maxwell, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., British Minister to the Court of China, son of the late Major-General J. P. Macdonald, was born in 1852. He was educated at Uppingham and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the army as a Lieutenant of the 74th Highlanders in March 1872. He was promoted Captain in 1881, and Major in 1882, in which year he went to Egypt and took part in the campaign, being present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was mentioned in despatches, and obtained the brevet of Major, the Khedive's Star, and medal with clasp. He remained in Egypt on special service, and in 1884 volunteered for the 1st Battalion of the Black Watch, which was attached to the Suakin Expedition, and took part in the battles of El-Teb and Tamai, where he was wounded. He obtained two clasps to his medal and the Osmanieh of the Fourth Class. From February 1883 until June 1887 he was attached by the War Office to the Agency at Cairo. He retired from the army in 1887, and was appointed Acting-Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar. In 1888 he became Commissioner on the West Coast of Africa, and the following year proceeded on a special mission to the Niger Territories. Subsequently at Berlin he took part in the delimitation of the boundary between the Oil Rivers Protectorate and the Cameroons, and then became Commissioner and Consul-General in the Oil Rivers Protectorate and the adjoining native territories. Sir Claude Macdonald was appointed in 1891 Commissioner and Consul-General in the Niger Coast Protectorate, Consul to the Islands of Fernando Po, and also Consul in the Cameroons. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1892, and K.C.B. in 1898. In January 1896 he was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Peking. Since his appointment, China has been passing through the most critical stage in its history; and although the British policy in the Far East has been severely criticised, yet Sir Claude Macdonald has secured some substantial concessions. Among them should be mentioned the decision of the Chinese Government to open all inland waters to navigation, whether by foreign or native steamers, and the assurance that no portion of the provinces adjoining the Yangtse-Kiang valley should be alienated to any other Power. It is also, in great measure, due to Sir Claude Macdonald that the Government undertook that, so long as British trade continued to exceed that of any other Power, the Inspector-General of Maritime Customs should be a British subject. In May 1899 he returned to England to take a short holiday, his health having been much impaired. Sir Claude married, in 1892, Ethel, daughter of Major W. Cairns Armstrong, widow of P. C. Robertson, Esq., of the Indian Political Service. Address: British Legation, Peking, China.

MACDONALD, Frederic William, born in Leeds, Feb. 25, 1842, is the son of the Rev. G. B. Macdonald, a well-known Wesleyan minister, and grandson of the Rev. James Macdonald. He was educated at St. Peter's Collegiate School, London, at Oxenford House, Jersey, and Owens College, Manchester, where he was Senior Prizeman in Classics, Greek Testament, and English Literature, session 1861-62. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1862. First stationed at Burslem, afterwards in Liverpool, Waterloo, Manchester, Southport, Kensington, and Clifton. In 1869 he was the representative of the British Methodist Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States at Cincinnati. In 1881 he was Fernley Lecturer on "The Dogmatic Principle in Relation to Christian Belief," and was appointed Professor of Systematic Theology at the Birmingham branch of the Wesleyan Theological Institution. In 1885 he published "The Life of Fletcher of Madeley"; and in 1887 "The Life of William Morley Punshon, LL.D." He was assistant-editor of the London Quarterly Review, 1872-76, and was elected a member of the Birmingham School Board in 1888. In 1891 he retired from his professorship to become Secretary of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, and in this capacity travels largely at home and abroad.

MACDONALD, George, LL.D., poet and novelist, was born at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, in 1824, and was educated at the parish school there, and at King's College and University, Aberdeen. After taking his degree he became a student for the ministry at the Independent College, Highbury, London, and was for a short time an Independent minister, but soon retired, became a lay member of the Church of England, and settled in London to pursue a literary career. His first work was "Within and Without, a Dramatic Poem," 1856; followed by "Poems," 1857; "Phantastes, a Faerie Romance," 1858; "David Elginbrod," 1862; "Adela Cathcart," 1864; "The Portent, a Story of Second Sight," 1864; "Alec Forbes of Howglen," 1865; "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood," 1866; "Guild Court," 1867; "The Disciple and other Poems," 1868; "The Seaboard Parish," 1868; "Robert Falconer," 1868; "Wilfrid Cumbermede," 1871; "The Vicar's Daughter," and "Malcolm," 1874; "St. George and St. Michael," 1875; "Thomas Wingfield, Curate," 1876; "The Marquis of Lossie," 1877. Besides these Mr. Macdonald has written books for the young; "Deals with the Fairies," 1867; "Ranald Bannerman's Boyhood," 1869; "The Princess and the Goblin," 1871; "At the Back of the North Wind," 1870; and others. He is also the author of "Unspoken Sermons," 1866; and a treatise on the "Miracles of our Lord," 1870. In 1877 he received a Civil List Pension of £100, in consideration of his contributions to literature. His later works are "The Gifts of the Child Christ, and other Poems," 2 vols., 1882; "Castle Warlock," 3 vols., 1882; "The Princess and Curdie," a fairy romance, 1882; "Weighed and Wanting," 1882; "The Wise Woman," a parable, 1883; "There and Back," a novel; and "A Rough Shaking," 1891; "Vicar's Daughter," 1893; "Lilith," 1895; "Salted with Fire," and "Rampolli," 1897. In May 1893 his poetical works were published in two volumes. For some years past Dr. Macdonald has lived principally at Bordighera, but pays annual visits to England. Address: Casa Coraggio, Bordighera.

MACDONALD, Greville, M.D., eldest son of George Macdonald, LL.D., the novelist and poet, was born in Manchester on Jan. 20, 1856. He was educated at King's College School, subsequently obtaining his medical education at King's College Hospital, where he gained several scholarships and prizes. In 1879 he took the membership of the Royal College of Surgeons; in 1881 he graduated with honours at the University of London, taking the degree of M.B., and his M.D. in the following year. After travelling in the East and on the Continent for some years, he was appointed Resident Medical Officer to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat in 1886; since which time he has devoted his attention solely to the study of affections of the nose, throat, and ear. In the following year he was appointed Honorary Physician to the same institution, which office he holds at the present time. In 1893 he was appointed Throat Physician and Lecturer on Diseases of the Throat and Nose to King's College Hospital. During the year 1888 Dr. Macdonald devoted his attention specially to a scientific investigation of the functions of the nose; the results of his experiments being published in a volume entitled "On the Respiratory Functions of the Nose." He had previously published (1887) a brochure entitled "The Forms of Nasal Obstruction in Relation to Throat and Ear Disease." He has since added to these "Board School Laryngitis," 1889; "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nose and its Accessory Cavities" (2nd edit.), 1892; "Hay Fever and Asthma," 1893. Besides the above he has contributed many articles and papers to the medical societies and journals, and is one of the editors of and contributors to the Medical Annual. One of his most recent papers is on "The Forms of Epithelial Hypertrophy in the Larynx" (International Clinics), 1895-96. Address: 85 Harley Street, W.

MACDONALD, Colonel Hector Archibald, C.B., D.S.O., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, was born April 13, 1862. He joined the Gordon Highlanders as a private soldier, and served in the ranks for over nine years. He first saw active service in the Afghan War of 1879-80, and for his conduct at the affair at Karatiga he was mentioned in despatches. He was attached to the Maidan Expedition, and was present at the engagement at Charasiah, and also took part in the operations round Cabul in December 1879. He accompanied Lord Roberts in the famous march to Cabul, and was present at the battle of Candahar, after which he was promoted Lieutenant for his distinguished conduct in the field. He also received a medal with three clasps and a bronze decoration. Lieutenant Macdonald went to South Africa in 1881, and took part in the Boer War, and was present in the engagement at Majuba Hill. In June 1885 he joined the Egyptian Constabulary, and served in the Nile Expedition of that year as Garrison-Adjutant at Assiout.

of Professor T. Rymer Jones, who he said to have first inspired him with taste for natural history. He was inner of Sir William Fergusson's in Surgery, the Medical Society's and a Certificate in Medicine, while at the College. Having passed the College of Surgeons he entered the as Assistant-Surgeon in 1849; was sent to the Royal Naval Hospital, Greenwich; took charge of the Medical Museum, and made numerous pathological drawings and records, preserved in the Museum. Subsequently he was appointed F.S. Herald, Captain Henry Mangles M. F.R.S., Feb. 18, 1852, for surveying and exploring service in the S.W. Pacific.

Before proceeding to join the service, Macdonald profited much by the information communicated to him by Professor Huxley, whose discoveries in the South Sea fauna he afterwards explored numerous opportunities of verifying, and himself studying the topographical history of the different localities visited either in the ship or in the tender the Torch. These included the islands of the Australian Continent, the Islands in Bass's Strait, the Percy Islands, New Hebrides, New Guinea, the Isle of Pines, and the Group. Microscopical drawings and descriptions of all the more important plants and products of dredge and net obtained in the expedition were communicated from time to time to the learned societies at home. He also assisted Mr. John Macgillivray, a pointed naturalist, and Mr. Frederick Rayner, the surgeon, in making a collection of objects of natural history which were sent home, and presented by the Lords of the Admiralty to the British Museum. He headed a perilous expedition into the interior of New Guinea, ascending the Rewa river to the Moli vei tala, with a diurnal horizon, for nearly a month. A abstract of the report sent home by the Captain was published by the Geological Society in the volume for 1857. After this, the Rev. Mr. Baker, an Missionary, and a party of teachers were clubbed and eaten Solo ira district. Much information was furnished from time to time to the Colonial Office, and on leaving London a gold chronometer was presented to Dr. Macdonald by the Governor, Sir William Denison, R.E., F.R.S., President of the Legislative Assembly, and gentlemen, in recognition of services rendered. He was also made Corresponding Member of the Australian Museum late William Sharp Macleay, Esq., of the "Horn Entomologica," whose splendid library at Elizabeth Bay was frequently consulted when objects of interest presented themselves. On arriving in England in 1859, at the age of 33, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was promoted and appointed the same year to H.M.S. Icarus (Commander, now Sir Nowell Salmon, G.C.B., V.C.), and in the West Indies encountered almost single-handed (two medical officers dying in succession) one of the most formidable epidemics of yellow fever on record. Some of the particulars connected with it will be found in the article on Yellow Fever in Reynolds's System of Medicine. He was awarded the M'Dougall Brisbane Gold Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, was also adjudged but not awarded the Keith prize, the technical reason being that he could not be called a Scottish Naturalist, as specified in the bequest. He gained the Sir Gilbert Blane Gold Medal for the journal of H.M.S. Lord Warlen flag-ship, Mediterranean Station (1871), and was frequently engaged as one of the medical board of examiners, and he subsequently superintended the Naval Medical Officers entering the Army Medical School, as Professor of Naval Hygiene and a member of the Senate. Dr. Macdonald was promoted to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals, &c., in 1880; appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth, in 1883; and placed on the retired list in 1886. The following are some of his published works: "Sound and Colour," setting forth the undulatory theory as the only trustworthy basis of analogy, 1869; "Guide to the Microscopical Examination of Drinking-Water," 1875; "Outlines of Naval Hygiene," 1881; "A Guide to Microscopical Examination of Drinking-Water," 1883. Address: Amwell Place, Hurst Pierpoint, Hassocks, Sussex.

MACDONALD, The Right Hon. John Hay Athole, Q.C., C.B., V.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., J.P., D.L. (Lord Kingsburgh), Lord Justice-Clerk of Scotland and Lord President of the Second Division of the Court of Session, son of M. N. Macdonald-Hume, of Ninewells, W.S., by Grace, daughter of Sir John Hay, of Smithfield and Haystoune, Bart., was born Dec. 27, 1836; educated at Edinburgh Academy and the Universities of Edinburgh and Basle (LL.D. Edin. 1884); became Advocate, Scotland, 1859, and Q.C. 1880. He was Sheriff of Ross, Cromarty, and Sutherland 1874-76, and of Perthshire 1880-85; Solicitor-General for Scotland 1876-80; and Commissioner of Northern Lighthouses 1876-80 and 1885-88; Member of H.M. He was created C.B. 1886, and received Volunteer Decoration 1892, and is a J.P. and D.L. for the County of the City of Edinburgh, and a Member of H.M. Board of Manufactures. He was Colonel-Commandant of the Queen's Rifle Volunteer Brigade (Royal Scots) 1882 to 1890, and is Brigadier-General of the Forth Brigade 1888; F.R.S.E. 1886 and F.R.S. 1888; Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers 1886; a Brigadier-General and Adjutant-General of the Royal Company of Archers (Queen's Body-Guard for Scotland); Chairman of Royal Commission on Boundaries of Glasgow 1888; unsuccessfully contested Edinburgh 1874 and 1880, and Haddington Burghs 1878. He sat as M.P. for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews 1885-88. He is an eminent electrician, having received numerous medals at International Exhibitions for inventions; is an authority on Criminal Law, and his books and lectures on Drill and Tactics have been used as a basis for the improvement of British Infantry drill. His chief works are: "Macdonald on Tactics," "Treatise on the Criminal Law," "Our Trip to Blunderland," "Common Sense on Parade, or Drill without Stays," &c. He married in 1864 Adelaide Jeanette, daughter of Major Doran of Ely House, Wexford; she died in 1870. Address: 15 Abercromby Place, Edinburgh.

MACDONALD, Sir William C., is the youngest son of the late Hon. Donald M'Donald, at one time President of the Legislative Council of Prince Edward Island. In 1854 he left Prince Edward Island and became an importer and tobacco merchant in Montreal. He received the honour of Knighthood (December 1898) for his gifts to philanthropical and educational objects in Canada. He has been especially munificent to the McGill University, his contributions to that institution amounting to upwards of 1,600,000 dollars. He is a Governor of McGill University, Montreal, a Governor of the Montreal General Hospital, and a Director of the Bank of Montreal. He is a Roman Catholic. Address: Montreal.

MACDONELL, Sir Hugh Guion, G.C.M.G., her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary at Lisbon, was born at Florence, March 5, 1832, and is the second son of Hugh Macdonell. He was educated at Sandhurst, and joined the Rifle Brigade in 1848, with which regiment he served in British Kaffraria till 1852. In 1854 he entered the Diplomatic Service as an unpaid Attaché, and was promoted to be paid Attaché at Constantinople in 1856, and rose to be Second Secretary in 1862. He was successively Secretary at Buenos Ayres 1869, Madrid 1872, Berlin 1875, Rome 1878, and Munich 1882. In 1885 he was British Minister to Brazil, being transferred to Copenhagen in 1888, and to his present post in 1893. He was created a C.B. in 1890, a K.C.M.G. in 1892, and a G.C.M.G. in June 1899. Address: British Legation, Lisbon.

MACDONNELL, Sir Antony Patrick, G.C.S.I., Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India, was born in 1844, and having been educated at Queen's College, Galway, he entered the Indian Civil Service in 1865. He became Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces in 1891, Acting Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in 1893, and Member of the Viceroy's Council in the same year. In 1895 he was promoted to his present post and was created a G.C.S.I. in 1897. In October 1898 he was entertained at a banquet in London by his friends and admirers. Address: Government House Allahabad.

McDUGALL, The Hon. William, C.B., Q.C., and a Privy Councillor for Canada, was born at Toronto, Jan. 25, 1822. His grandfather, John M'Dougall, served through the American Revolution in the British Commissariat. He was educated at Toronto and at Victoria College, and afterwards studied law. From 1848 to 1858 he conducted at Toronto a monthly journal on agriculture, and from 1853 edited the North American, which was merged in the Toronto Globe in 1857. He was first elected to Parliament as a Reformer in 1858; was appointed Commissioner of Crown Lands, and a Member of the Executive Council in a Reform Ministry in May 1862; and resigned office with his colleagues in March 1864 on questions of constitutional changes; in June of the same year accepted the office of Provincial Secretary in a coalition ministry formed to carry a measure to unite British America under one government. During the Fenian troubles in the summer of 1866 Mr. McDougall was charged with the duties of Minister of Marine. In the first Dominion Government of 1867 he was made Minister of Public Works, which position he held until 1869. In 1868 he and Sir George Cartier were sent to England to confer with the Imperial Government on some questions that had arisen between the Provinces, including the acquisition of the North-West Territory and Rupert's Land then claimed by the Hudson Bay Company, under its charter from Charles II. After five months' negotiations the delegates concluded the purchase of nearly one half the North American continent for £300,000, and one twentieth of the prairie land surveyed within twenty years. In 1800 he was commissioned Lieut.-Governor of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territories, but the half-breed rebellion, under the provisional government of Louis Riel, at the time prevented his entering the country. Returning to Ottawa he resumed his place in Parliament, and declined to assume the Governorship after the suppression of the outbreak. In 1873 he was Special Commissioner of the Dominion Government to confer with the Imperial authorities on the subject of the Fisheries and Emigration. Mr. McDougall sat for South Simcoe in the Ontario Legislature from May 1875 to September 1878, when he resigned to contest Halton in the Dominion Parliament, which he represented until 1882. He was offered the Governorship of British Columbia or the Chief Justiceship of Manitoba in 1878, both of which he declined. He resumed the practice of his profession at Ottawa as Consulting Counsel in special cases. In 1867 he was created C.B. (Civil), and subsequently became a Puisne Judge in the Province of Quebec.

MACEVILLY, The Most Rev. John, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, Primate of Connaught and Metropolitan, was born in Louisburgh, co. Mayo, on April 24, 1817, of respectable parents of the farmer class. He was educated at St. Jasteth's, Tuam, then graduated at Maynooth College, and after having earned the highest collegiate honours was a scholar of the Dunboyne Establishment for three years, and was ordained Priest in 1840. He was appointed Professor of SS. Scripture in St. Jasteth's in 1842, and in course of time became President of that College, which position he held up to the year 1857. In March 1857 he became Bishop of Galway, and in 1866 was also appointed temporary Administrator of Kilmacduagh and Kilfenora, remaining still Bishop of Galway. Between 1852 and 1894 he wrote a full Commentary in the English language on the entire New Testament, except the Apocalypse or Revelation. It has achieved a wonderful success, is used as a class book in almost all Colleges, and has reached (at any rate the Epistles and leading Gospels) the fifth edition. It is in great request at home and abroad, especially in America. The Archbishop, who is now in his eighty-second year, administers the largest Diocese in Ireland with wonderful vigour and vigilance. Address: St. Jasteth's, Tuam, co. Galway.

MACEWEN, Professor William, M.D., F.R.S., LL.D. (Glasgow), F.F.P.S. (Glasgow), was born in 1848, received his medical education at Glasgow University, of which he is M.D., and was appointed Regius Professor of Surgery in the same in 1892. He became F.R.S. in 1895. On the occasion of the Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Academy of Medicine in December 1898, he was appointed an Hon. Member of the Academy. He has published "Osteotomy," 1880; "Observations concerning Transplantation of Bone," 1881; "Transverse Fracture of the Patella," "Surgery of the Brain and Spinal Cord," &c. Address: 3 Woodside Crescent, Charing Cross, Glasgow.

M'GAW, Joseph Thorburn, M.A., D.D., was born on December 7, 1836, at Sunnyside, five miles from Belfast. His father, Mr. William Orr M'Gaw, was a well-known office-bearer in Carnmoney Presbyterian Church, and was held in the highest esteem for his superior intelligence and his marked integrity of character. His mother was a daughter of the Rev. Alexander Clarke, minister of Lylehill Presbyterian Church, near Antrim. He was sent at an early age to Belfast Academy, of which the Rev. R. J. Bryce, LL.D., was then Principal. In 1854 he entered Queen's College, Belfast, and secured the first Scholarship on the Classical side. In 1855, before he was quite nineteen, he was appointed Principal of the Coleraine Academy. In 1859 he became Headmaster of the English School of the Belfast Academy, and he was offered the Principalship some years afterwards. Prior to taking his degree he spent an extra session at the University of Glasgow. He graduated in the Queen's University in 1861, taking a double first in English Literature and Metaphysics, and obtaining a valuable exhibition and gold medal. In the same year, in competition with two distinguished rivals, he carried off one of the most coveted prizes of his college, the Senior Scholarship in Metaphysical and Economical Science, and became Assistant to the Professor of Logic and Metaphysics—Dr. M'Cosh, afterwards President of Princeton. Mr. M'Gaw studied theology at the General Assembly's College, Belfast. During his divinity course he took a leading part in philanthropic and religious work. In May 1862 he was licensed by the Presbytery of Belfast, and in the autumn of the same year he was ordained at Ramelton, in co. Donegal. In June 1865, before he had completed his twenty-ninth year, he was elected by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland to the Chair of Logic, Belles-Lettres, and Rhetoric in Magee College, M'GRATH, Terence. See BLAIR.

HENRY ARTHUR.

M'GREGOR, Robert. R.S.A. was born of British parents in Yorkshire, July 6, 1846. Both his father and grandfather were artistic designers for table linen and silk goods. He was educated in Manchester and Edinburgh; and elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy (A.R.S.A.) in 1862, and Royal Scottish Academician (R.S.A.) in 1869.

MACGREGOR, Sir William. K.C.M.G., C.B., M.D. and LL.D. Aberdeen, B.Sc. Cambridge, Lieutenant-Governor of British New Guinea, was born in 1847, and is the eldest son of the late John Macgregor. He was educated at Aberdeen and Glasgow, and in Berlin and Paris. He began his medical career as Resident Surgeon and Resident Physician at the Glasgow Royal Infirmary and Royal Lunatic Asylum, Aberdeen. In 1873 he was appointed Assistant-Government Medical Officer in the Seychelles, was Surgeon at the Civil Hospital, Port Louis, Mauritius, in 1874, and became Chief Medical Officer in Fiji, 1875. In 1875 he was appointed Administrator of the Government and Acting High Commissioner and Consul-General for the Western Pacific; and in 1888 Administrator of British New Guinea, and Lieut.-Governor in 1895. In 1894 he was made Lieut. Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Address: Governor's House, Port Moresby, British New Guinea.

MACHRAY, Most Reverend Robert. D.D., LL.D., the first secular Archbishop of the Church of England and Primate of All Canada was born at Aberdeen in 1822, his father being a lawyer. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, and Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, graduating in 1845. He became a Fellow of his College in 1861, when Vicar of Madingley was appointed Bishop of Rupert's Land, a post formerly including Manitoba and North-West Territories, but now only its former. He is Chancellor of St. John's College, Manitoba, and in 1884 became Primate of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. At the First General Synod of the Church of England in Canada he was made Primate of the Dominion and Archbishop of the See, September 1888. Address: Bishop's Court, Winnipeg.

M'ILWRAITH, The Hon. Sir Thomas. K.C.M.G., LL.D. was born at Ayr, N.B., in 1843, and was educated at the Glasgow University. He went out to Victoria in 1864, and was civil engineer of the Government railways. He entered the Queensland Parliament in 1869, was Minister of Works, 1873; and Premier, 1874-83, when the general election resulted in a majority for Sir Samuel Griffith. In 1885 he retired from public life, but re-entered it in 1888, arousing enthusiasm by his programme of a National Party, and he became Premier for a short while. During this period the well-known dispute arose with the Governor, Sir Antony Musgrave, as to his prerogative of mercy in the case of convicted criminals. He resigned his post in November of the same year through ill-health, and travelled to China and Japan. In 1890 he joined Sir Samuel Griffiths in defeating the Government, and became Treasurer in his administration during 1890-91. He was again Premier from 1892 to 1893, when he finally retired. He is married to Harrietta daughter of Hugh Mossman. Address: Brisbane, Queensland.

M'INNES, The Hon. Thomas Robert, Lieut.-Governor of British Columbia, was born at Lake Ainslie, Nova Scotia, Nov. 5, 1840. He studied medicine at Harvard University and at the Rush Medical College, Chicago, graduating M.D. in 1869. He practised for some years at Dresden, Ontario, becoming reeve of the town in 1874. In the same year he removed to New Westminster and was mayor of that town, 1876-78. From 1878 until 1881 he sat in the House of Commons, when he was called to the Senate. In November 1897 he was appointed to his present post. Address: Government House, Victoria, B.C.

Masterman). Dr. McIntosh is Neill Gold Medallist, Royal Society of Edinburgh; Gold Medallist, Edinburgh Fisheries Exhibition, 1882; Gold Medallist, International Fisheries Exhibition, London, 1883. He has written numerous medical papers. Of scientific papers (Zoological) he has published upwards of a hundred, some of them of considerable size, and the majority illustrated by original plates. He has made large additions to the Perth Museum and to the University Museum, St. Andrews; while the St. Andrews Marine Laboratory (1884) owes its existence to him, with the aid of the Government and the Fishery Board. By the munificence of Dr. C. H.

Gatty, there is now the Gatty Marine Laboratory of the University of St. Andrews. He is Captain of the University company of artillery. Addresses: 2 Abbotsford Crescent, St. Andrews; Barham, Springfield, Fife.

MacINTYRE, Margaret, prima donna, is a daughter of General MacIntyre, late of the Royal Artillery. She received her musical education at Dr. Wyld's branch of the London Academy of Music at Brighton, and subsequently studied under Signor Garcia at the London Academy of Music. She won the Bronze Medal of the Academy in 1883, the Silver Medal in 1884, the Gold Medal in 1885, and obtained an Associate's diploma. On the occasion of the late Abbé Liszt's visit to England, Miss Maggie MacIntyre sang the soprano music in that composer's oratorio of "St. Elizabeth," and won his warm approval. In May 1888 she appeared as Michaela in "Carmen," and won an instant success. At the Royal English Opera House she sang the part of Rebecca in "Ivanhoe," and in 1891 took part in the Handel Festival. She has also won great applause in Australia and the Colonies, and has sung as prima donna at La Scala and in St. Petersburg and Moscow. Address: 8 Pont Street, S.W.

McKINLAY, Mrs. John, nee Antoinette Sterling, by which name she is known professionally, was born at Sterlingville, Jefferson Co., in the State of New York, in 1850, and is the youngest daughter of James Sterling, of old New England descent. She was educated as a vocalist under Abella, Marchesi, Pauline Viardot, and Manuel Garcia. She made her début at one of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts in 1873, and at once became a general favourite for ballads and Scotch songs. Her rendering of "The Better Land" and "The Lost Chord" is celebrated. In 1875 she married Mr. John McKinlay. He died in 1893. She is a vice-president of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union. Address: 125 Ashley Gardens, S.W.

McKINLEY, Hon. William, twenty-fourth President of the United States, was born at Niles, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1843. He was educated at the public schools, and at the Poland (Ohio) Academy. In 1861, at the outbreak of the Civil War, he enlisted as a private in the Union army, and before its close had risen to the rank of captain and brevet major. In 1867 he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of the law at Canton, Ohio. He was chosen pro-secuting attorney of Stark Co., Ohio, in 1869, and in 1871 was elected a Representative in Congress, and was continuously re-elected until 1891. Mr. McKinley was Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that framed the Revenue Bill of 1890, and hence that measure has been known as "the McKinley tariff." He was elected Governor of Ohio in 1891, and re-elected by an increased plurality in 1893, serving until the close of 1895. As his name was closely connected in the minds of the people with the principles of a protective tariff, both these elections were contested on the national question of tariff policy, and this point was fully discussed by orators on both sides all over the country, so that when Mr. McKinley's election in 1893 was found to be more pronounced than it had been in 1891, it was considered an indication that he would be the candidate of his party for the Presidential election in 1896. This nomination took place at a Convention of Delegates from the party in all parts of the country, which was held at St. Louis, Missouri, in June 1896. Soon after (July 7, 1896) the Democratic Convention was held in Chicago, and selected as their candidate Wm. Jennings Bryan, with a platform of principles advocating the unlimited coinage of silver, a low tariff, and the non-interference of the Federal authorities in local affairs, even when national interests were involved. In the ensuing election (November 1896) Mr. McKinley received the votes of many who were Democrats with reference to the tariff, while his opponent received many Republican votes in the west and south because of his views concerning silver. The tariff question was discussed during the canvass, but it did not take the pre-eminent place it had before occupied, and as a result the old party lines were much broken up. Mr. McKinley received a plurality over Mr. Bryan of over 600,000 votes, and was inducted into office Mar. 4, 1897. As the tariff of 1894, shorn of the income-tax feature, did not produce sufficient revenue for the support of the Government, an extra session of Congress was called to meet Mar. 15, 1897, and a new tariff, with strongly protective features (known from the name of the chairman of the committee in which it originated as "the Dingley Bill"), was agreed upon. In the meantime relations between the United States and Spain were becoming more and more strained because of the sympathy of the Americans with the sufferings of the people in Cuba, occasioned by the restrictions of the Spanish authorities growing in part out of the insurrection there. This tension was greatly increased by an explosion by which the U.S. battleship Maine was destroyed in the harbour of Havana on the night of Feb. 15, 1898, together with the lives of two of her officers and more than 200 of her crew. A careful investigation failed to show with certainty the cause of the explosion, but there were strong indications that it came from a point outside the ship, and other events occurring which increased the existing irritation, war was declared in April following. Within four months the power of Spain on the sea had been destroyed, her army in Eastern Cuba had surrendered, and lodgments by the American land forces had been effected in Porto Rico and in the Philippine Islands. Spain then sued for peace, and a protocol was signed August 12, stopping hostilities and providing for the appointment of Peace Commissioners to settle the details with reference to the Spanish islands in the Pacific, her army to be withdrawn entirely from her West Indian possessions, and Porto Rico to be ceded to the United States. During the war the President has enjoyed a vast popularity in the States.

M'LACHLAN, Robert, F.R.S., F.C.S. F.E.S., was born in London, April 10, 1837, and educated principally at Ilford, in Essex. His father, Hugh M'Lachlan, a native of Greenock, settled in London early in life, and was eminently successful as a chronometer maker. His mother, whose maiden name was Thompson, was from Northamptonshire. Robert, the youngest of five children, early showed a taste for natural history, which, as years sped on, concentrated itself upon botany, and subsequently upon entomology. A voyage to New South Wales and China in 1855-56, led to his collecting Australian plants; and on his return to England his desire to have them named led to his acquaintance with Robert Brown, then Keeper of the Botanical Department of the British Museum. Contact with this celebrated botanist had a distinct influence on his subsequent scientific career. In 1858 he was elected a Member of the Entomological Society of London, of which he became successively Secretary, Treasurer, and President, the latter in 1885-86, and is again Treasurer. He was elected, in 1862, a Fellow of the Linnean Society, and of the Royal Society in 1877, and is also a Fellow of the Zoological and of the Royal Horticultural Societies, and on the Honorary List of the New Zealand Institute, the Royal Society of Liège, the ological Societies of Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Sweden, Russia, &c. Attention has been directed to entomology in general, and he has, on several occasions, acted as scientific adviser to the Colonial Office. Repeated visits to the continent have kept him in frequent intercourse with the entomologists of other countries. Amongst his general works are the principal are the articles "Insects," in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and "The Entomological Results of the last Arctic Expedition," published in the Journal of the Entomological Society. As a specialist he has particularly attended to the Order Neuroptera, which his publications are very numerous, the principal separate work, a 3vo., of upwards of 600 pages, with plates, "Revision and Synopsis of the Neuroptera (or Caddis-flies) of the Euro-Asian Fauna, with Supplement," 1874-84, an attempt which has been made at going out exhaustively a special group of insects on characters based on certain peculiarities, and which has as a departure in the case of some of other groups. In 1893 came "Catalogue of the Library of the Entomological Society." Mr. MacLachlan is a frequent contributor to most Natural History Journals during his time and was for seventeen consecutive years contributor to the Zoological Record, and acted as an editor of the Entomological Monthly Magazine since its establishment in 1864. Address: 23 Clarendon Road, Lewisham, S.E.

MACLAGAN, Sir Douglas, eldest son of the late David MacLagan, M.D., F.R.S., Physician to the Forces, and Lecturer in Ordinary to the Queen in Scotland; born at Ayr, N.B., in 1812, and educated at the High School of Edinburgh and subsequently at the University of Edinburgh. He became Fellow of the College of Physicians, Edinburgh, and has been President of both the Royal College of Surgeons and of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, an honour held only by his father; he has been P.R.S.E., and City-Lieutenant of the City of Edinburgh.

He was Professor of Medical Jurisprudence and Public Health in the University of Edinburgh from 1862 to 1878. Sir D. MacLagan holds the following appointments: Surgeon-General of the Royal Army of Archers, the Queen's Body-Guard for Scotland; Brigade-Surgeon of the 1st Colonial Infantry Brigade; Medical Adviser to H.M. Prisons Commissioners for Scotland; and Superintendent in behalf of the Privy Council, of the Medical Examinations in Scotland. He is the author of "Nugæ Canoræ Medicæ," and of numerous papers on Medical Jurisprudence, and on Materia Medica and Therapeutics, in the medical journals. He was made Knight Bachelor in 1886. Address: 28 Heriot Row, Edinburgh.

MACLAGAN, Thomas John, M.D. Edinburgh, received his medical education at the University of Edinburgh, and in Paris, Munich, and Vienna. He was at one time Examiner in Medicine at the University of Aberdeen, and is a Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., member of various medical societies, and Physician in Ordinary to Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. He has contributed articles on Rheumatism, Cholera, &c., to the Lancet, a paper with the title "Is Typhoid Fever Contagious?" to the Nineteenth Century, 1879, and has published "The Germ Theory Applied to the Explanation of the Phenomena of Disease: the Specific Fevers," 1876; "Rheumatism: its Nature, its Pathology, and its Successful Treatment," 1881; "Fever, a Clinical Study," 1886; and a translation of Bouchard's "Cerebral Hæmorrhage." Address: 9 Cadogan Place, Belgrave Square, S.W.

MACLAGAN, The Right Hon. and Most Rev. William Dalrymple, D.D., D.C.L., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, brother of Sir Douglas MacLagan, born at Edinburgh in 1826, and educated there. In early life he served in the army in India, and retired with the rank of lieutenant in 1852. Then he went through the ordinary university course at St. Peter's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1856, M.A. 1860, D.D. jure dignatus 1878). He was ordained deacon in 1856, and priest in 1857. He served the curacies of St. Saviour, Paddington, and St. Stephen, Marylebone, till 1860, when he was appointed Secretary to the London Diocesan Church-Building Society. In 1865 he was appointed Curate-in-charge of Enfield, and in 1869 Lord Chancellor Hatherley gave him the Rectory of St. Mary, Newington. When Newington was transferred to Rochester, the Bishop of London, in order to retain Mr. MacLagan in his diocese, promoted him to the vicarage of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, where he remained till 1878, when he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the Bishopric of Lichfield, which had become vacant by the death of Dr. Selwyn. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, June 24, 1878. In 1891 he was translated to York. The same year he was made an Hon. Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and a D.C.L. of the University of Durham, the latter degree being conferred by diploma. In October 1894 he became President of the Church Sanitary Association, and of the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals. Dr. MacLagan has published one or two detached sermons; a Charge delivered to the Clergy and Churchwardens of his Diocese in 1880; and several other addresses to the Clergy, and Parochial Papers. In conjunction with Dr. Archibald Weir, he edited "The Church and the Age: Essays on the Principles and present Position of the Anglican Church," 1870; and in 1891 published his "Pastoral Letters and Synodal Charges." He married (1), in 1860, Sarah Kate, daughter of George Clapham; and (2), in 1878, Augusta, daughter of the 6th Viscount Barrington. Addresses: Bishopsthorpe, York; and Athenæum.

MACLAREN, Ian. See WATSON, THE REV. JOHN.

M'LAREN, Lord, John M'Laren, LL.D., D.L., J.P., Lord of Session, Scotland, was born in Edinburgh in 1831, and is the eldest son of Duncan M'Laren, M.P. He was educated at the University, Edinburgh, and became an Advocate in 1856. He was Sheriff of Chancery from 1869 to 1880, when he became Q.C. and Lord Advocate. He represented Wigtown District in Parliament in 1880, and was returned for Edinburgh in 1881. He was appointed Lord of Justiciary in 1885, and was raised to the Bench in 1881. He has published a "Treatise on the Law of Wills," and married the daughter of a German gentleman resident in Glasgow, in 1868. Address: 46 Moray Place, Edinburgh.

MACLEAN, James Mackenzie, M.P., President of the Institute of Journalists, is the son of Mr. Alexander Maclean, and was born near Edinburgh on Aug. 13, 1835. Intending to enter at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was, however, compelled by circumstances to forthwith earn his own livelihood, and he took up journalistic work. After working on the staff of the Newcastle Chronicle for a short time, he became its editor in 1855, and continued in that position until 1858. He then worked as leader-writer on the Manchester Guardian for nearly two years, and in 1859 went out to India as editor of the Bombay Gazette. Becoming in 1863 proprietor of that paper, he kept up his connection with it until 1879, when he effected a sale and left India for good. Whilst living at Bombay Mr. Maclean interested himself greatly in municipal matters; was one of the first members of the newly-created Corporation. for a time the office of Chairman of Town Council. In 1882 he became proprietor of the Western Mail and still continues to contribute. Mr. Maclean was elected Council member for Oldham in 1885, and he came out at the head of the largest vote given in the country; however, in 1892 he lost and remained out of Parliament years. Cardiff, which had been stronghold for forty years, was won by the Conservative Party by him in 1894. He is a Fellow of the University of London, and has been a member of the Council and a Vice-President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce in England. He was elected President of the Institute of Journalists in 1896. On the occasion of the visit of the Prince of Wales he published a "Guide to Bombay," which is a historical handbook for all who visit India from before the English came to the present day. He married Agnes Whitehead in 1867. Address: 10, Whitehead Square, Earl's Court, S.W.

MACLEOD, Mrs. Alick. See MRS. FREDERICK.

MACLEOD, The Very. Rev. D.D., one of the Queen's Chaplains in Scotland, and editor of Good Words, was born at Campsie, Stirlingshire, the son of the late Norman Macleod, first editor of Good Words, a name chiefly famous, in the opinion of the present generation, for the beauty of his illustrations in the sixties. He graduated at the University of Glasgow, travelled, after which he became minister of the parish of Lauder, and subsequently of Linlithgow. He was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1895-96, and since 1888 has been minister of the Home Mission Committee of the Kirk. He has for nearly thirty years been minister of the parish of Paisley, having been called thither by Dr. Macleod, is famous not only as a minister and man of letters, but as a leader of the Church and of the Home Mission work. Among his publications we may note his "Memoir of Dr. Macleod, D.D.," and his edition of the Bible in three volumes. Address: 10, Whitehead Square, Earl's Court, S.W.

MACLEOD, Fiona, authoress, born in the Hebrides, where she spent the greater part of her childhood. She of the leading spirits of that "Renaissance" which has done so much to revive interest of intelligent people in the literature and traditions of the Celts. His first book, "Pharais," published in 1894 at Derby, at once attracted the favourable attention of prominent men and women of letters. Her subsequent works have been: "The Mountain-Lovers," and "The Sin-Eater," 1895; "The Washer of the Ford," "Green Fire," and "From the Hills of Dream" (verse), 1896; "The Laughter of Peterkin, Old Celtic Tales Retold," and a collected edition of some of her more important works, 1897. Her most recent work is the "Dominion of Dreams," 1899. From internal evidence derived from the writings of Miss Fiona Macleod and Mr. William Sharp (q.v.), it has recently been conjectured (Jan. 1899) that they are one and the same person. This, however, is not the case. Address: c/o Miss Rea, The Columbia Literary Agency, 9 Mill Street, Conduit Street, W.

MACLURE, The Very Rev. Edward Craig, D.D., Dean of Manchester, eldest son of the late John MacLure, and eldest brother of Sir J. W. MacLure, Bart., M.P., was educated at the Manchester Grammar School, where he was the exhibitioner of his year. He graduated B.A., M.A., and D.D. at Brasenose College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar and Hulmeian Exhibitioner. After occupying curacies at St. John's, Ladywood, Birmingham, and St. Pancras, Middlesex, he became vicar of Habergham Eaves, Burnley, in 1863, where he remained for fourteen years Chairman of the Burnley School Board. On the death of Dr. Molesworth in 1877 he was appointed vicar of Rochdale by the late Bishop of Manchester. In 1878 he became Honorary Canon of Manchester, and in 1879 Rural Dean. In Rochdale, and previously at Burnley, he had carried out important works of church restoration and extension. Dean MacLure has always undertaken a very considerable share of diocesan work, having been honorary secretary of the Diocesan Conference and the Diocesan Board of Education. He is also honorary secretary to the Training College at Warrington. In 1888 he was one of the honorary secretaries of the Church Congress in Manchester, and was appointed Dean of Manchester in July 1890. He has twice been Chairman of the School Board, Manchester, and is Governor of Owens College, the Grammar School, and of Hulme's Trust and Chetham's Hospital, besides holding other public offices. He is also Chairman of the School Boards Association of England and Wales, and he is prominent in all educational matters. He married the eldest

MACLURE, Sir John William, Bart., M.P., D.L., J.P., F.R.G.S., was born in Manchester on April 22, 1835, and is the son of John MacLure, of Manchester, and Elizabeth, daughter of William Kearsley, of Kearsley. He was educated at Manchester Grammar School. He has been one of the most actively benevolent of Manchester public men. He founded, with the late Canon Richson, the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association, and has laboured from the first to improve the homes and the sanitation of large and overcrowded towns. He was founder of the Cotton Famine Fund, and was its Hon. Sec. from 1862 to 1866. With the then Premier, the late Lord Derby, and other influential men, he distributed more than a million and a half among the starving or distressed cotton operatives of the north. As Churchwarden of Manchester he raised nearly £50,000 towards the restoration of the ancient Parish Church at Manchester, which has since become the Cathedral. He is P.G. Deacon of Freemasons in England, a Knight of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem, Director of numerous public companies, Trustee and Treasurer of the Cotton Districts Convalescent Fund, F.R.G.S., F.S.S., J.P. for Lancashire and Manchester, has been Major of the 40th Lancashire Rifles, and was created a Baronet in 1898. Glasg., 1878; and was formerly House Surgeon in Alnwick Infirmary, late Professor of Physiology in Anderson's College, and subsequently Lecturer on the Practice of Medicine in the Western Extra-mural School, and Member of the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom. At the present time he is Extra Physician to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, and Professor of Clinical Medicine in St. Mungo's College, Glasgow. Dr. M'Vail is the author of various valuable contributions to medical literature, principally with reference to diseases of the respiratory organs, e.g., "The Mechanism of Respiration in Normal and Abnormal Conditions," Lancet, 1882; "The Wavy Respiratory Sound of Phthisis," British Medical Journal, 1882; "Pathology of Pulmonary Emphysema," Ibid. 1884, &c. He is widely known in connection with what may be termed academic politics. For the past decade he has been the acknowledged and energetic leader of the reform party in the University of Glasgow; and it is very largely to him, and to the movement in which he has taken so active a part, that the recent thoroughgoing Universities (Scotland) Act is due. The main plank of the reform platform has been the destruction of the practical monopoly of teaching, of examining, and of degree granting, enjoyed by the professors in the Scottish Universities, while the principal means urged for the accomplishment of this object have been an entire re-casting of the governing body of the Universities, the fuller recognition of extra-mural teaching, the prohibition of the degree-examination of candidates by their own teachers, and the affiliation of new colleges. Dr. M'Vail has also been the moving spirit in the erection and incorporation of St. Mungo's College, the medical faculty of which is in intimate connection with the Royal Infirmary of Glasgow. On the board of directors of the College he occupies a seat as one of the representatives chosen by the managers of the Royal Infirmary. He was elected in 1891 a member of the Court of Glasgow University, and in 1892 he was appointed by her Majesty to be Crown member for Scotland of the General Medical Council. Address: 3 St. James's Terrace, Glasgow.

MACWHIRTER, John, R.A., was born in 1839, at Slateford, near Edinburgh, and educated at Peebles. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1863. In the following year he came to London, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy on Jan 22, 1879, and R.A. in 1893. He was elected an Honorary Member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1882; elected member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, same year; exhibited in R.A. 1884, "The Windings of the Forth," "A Sermon by the Sea," and "Home of the Grizzly Bear"; 1885, "Track of the Hurricane," "Iona," "Loch Scavaig"; "The Three Witches," 1886. Mr. Macwhirter has painted "Loch Coruisk Skye," 1867; "A great while ago the world began, with hey ho, the wind and the rain," 1871; "Caledonia," 1873; "The Lady of the Woods," 1876; "The Three Graces," 1878; "The Valley by the Sea," 1879; "The Lord of the Glen," 1880; "Sunday in the Highlands," and "Mountain Tops," 1881; "A Highland Auction" and "Ossian's Grave," 1882; "Corrie, Isle of Arran," "Sunset Fires," "Nature's Mirror," "A Highland Harvest," 1883; and "Edinburgh from Salisbury Crag," 1887. More recently he has exhibited "A Highland Storm," and a set of three pictures, "The Shamrock," "The Rose," and "The Thistle," 1893; and "Subsiding Flood," "Nature's Archway" (diploma work, deposited on his election as an Academician), and three other pictures in 1894, since which date he has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy of his characteristic land scapes. His principal Highland pieces have been: "Glen Affric," 1895; "The Sleep that is among the Lonely Hills," and "Bonnie Scotland," 1896; "Affric Water" (two pictures), 1897; "Morning Isle of Arran," 1898; "Dark Loch Coruisk," and "The Silver Strand, Loch Katrine," 1899. He married, in 1872 Katherine, daughter of Professor Menzies, of Edinburgh University. Addresses: 1 Abbey Road, N.W.; and Athenæum.

MADDEN, Hon. Sir John, K.C.M.G., Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Victoria, was born in 1844, and educated at Melbourne University, where he graduated B.A. in 1863, and LL.D. in 1866. In the same year he was called to the Australian Bar, and in 1889 was appointed to his present post. He was created K.C.M.G. at the New Year 1899. He married, in 1872, Gertrude Frances, daughter of F. J.
Stephen. Address: Cloyne, St. Kilda, Melbourne.

MADDEN, Thomas More, M.D., was born in the island of Cuba, where his father, the late Dr. R. R. Madden, F.R.C.S.
Eng., then filled the office of British representative at the Havana, in the International Commission for the Abolition of the Slave-Trade, to which he was appointed by Lord Palmerston, and for which he had relinquished his practice as a London physician. Dr. Madden, senior, who died in 1886, was not only a prominent member of the anti-slavery party, but was also a prolific and well-known writer, having in the course of his long and varied life published more than forty volumes.
Amongst these we may here mention his "Travels in the East," "History of the United Irishmen," "Life and Correspondence of Lady Blessington," "Biography of Savonarola," "The Infirmities of Genius,"
"History of Periodical Literature," &c., Dr. More Madden entered on medical studies at the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to the late Mr. Cusack, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland. Shortly before the completion of pupillage, however, he was forced by symptoms of pulmonary disease to remove to a more genial climate, and the next few years he passed in the South of Spain, Italy, and France, completing his professional studies in Malaga and at the University of Montpellier. Having graduated as a physician, after he returned home in 1862 he became a member of the London College of Surgeons, and is also a Member of the Dublin College of Physicians, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. After a further period of health-travel in Southern Europe, Egypt, Africa, and Australia, he settled down in practice in Dublin. In 1868, having adopted obstetric and gynecological practice as a specialism, Dr. More Madden was appointed Assistant Physician to the Rotunda Lying-in Hospital. On retirement from that office three years later, he was accorded the special thanks of the governors for "zealous and efficient discharge of his duties, and uniform kindness to the patients." In 1872 he received the French bronze cross, in recognition of his services in connection with the organisation of the Irish Ambulance Corps employed during the Franco-Prussian War. In that year, being also Examiner in Obstetric Medicine in the Queen's University, he was appointed Physician to the newly-established Hospital for Sick Children, Dublin; and not long afterwards became Obstetric Physician and Gynecologist to the Mater Misericordiae Hospital. In addition to these appointments Dr. More Madden is Consultant to the National Lying-in Hospital, and other institutions. In 1878 he was elected Vice-President of the Dublin Obstetrical Society; in 1885 Vice-President of the British Gynecological Society; in 1886 President of the Obstetric Section of the Academy of Medicine; and more recently he held the office of President of the Obstetric Section of the British Medical Association. He received the degree of M.D. (honoris causa), from the Medical College of Galveston in 1890; and was accorded a Gold Medal by the Associazione dei Benemeriti Italiani. In 1892 he was Hon. President of the first International Congress of Obstetrics and Gynecology at Brussels. He has been also made Honorary or Corresponding Member or Fellow of many medical and scientific societies at home and abroad. In 1895 he received the degree of Master of Obstetrics (honoris causa), from the Royal University of Ireland. Besides a vast number of contributions to medical journals, and several articles in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," and other standard books, Dr. More Madden's writings include the last edition of "The Dublin Practice of Midwifery"; "Change of Climate in Chronic Disease," 3rd edit., 1876; "Spas of Germany, France, and Italy," 1874; "Contributinal Treatment of Chronic Uterine Disease," 1878; "Mental and Nervous Disorders peculiar to Women," 1883; "Child Culture—Mental, Moral, and Physical," 3rd edit., 1890; "On Uterine Tumours," 1887; "Treatment of Dysmenorrhœa and Sterility," London, 1889. In 1893 he edited "A Manual of Obstetric and Gynecological Nursing"; and in the same year was published in Philadelphia and in London his "Clinical Gynecology—a Handbook of Diseases of Women," profusely illustrated. Finally, in the list of this writer's works may be mentioned "The Health Resorts of Europe and Africa," 3rd edit., 1891. The latter work has been also republished in America. The latest publication of this writer on a professional subject is one on "The Special Hygiene and Management of Childhood and Youth," 1897. Besides these Dr. More Madden has also contributed to non-professional literature several works, amongst which are his "Memoirs from 1798 to 1886 of Dr. R. R. Madden, formerly Colonial Secretary of Western Australia," 1891; "Genealogical and Historical Records of the O'Maddens of B. Mary," 1894; "Episodes in Irish History," 1897; and "A New Edition of the Lives and Times of the United Irishmen of 1798 and 1803, by the late Dr. R. Madden," 1898. Dr. More Madden married the eldest daughter of the late Thomas McDonnell Caffrey, Esq. of Crosthwaite Park, Kingstown, by whom he has two sons and one daughter surviving. Of his sons the eldest, Dr. Richard R. More Madden, follows his father's profession in London, where he is one of the Visiting Physicians to the Infirmary for Consumption, Margaret Street, Cavendish Square, and the youngest, Captain T. McD. Madden, is an officer in the Wicklow Artillery. Address: 55 Merrion Square, Dublin.

MADGE. See HUMPHRY, Mrs.

MAETERLINCK, Maurice, Belgian dramatist and poet, was born at Ghent in 1864. At an early age he took to literature, and wrote what Mr. W. L. Courtney once called "some youthful absurdities," among which were "Serres Chaudes" and "La Princesse Maleine." The latter, a strange old-world invention, introduced Maeterlinck to England, and was translated by Mr. Alfred Sutro into English with a preface by Mr. Hall Caine, in 1892. "L'Intruse," "Les Sept Princesses," and "Pelléas et Mélisande" followed, suffused with an arresting mysticism, and widening considerably the author's sphere of influence. Miss Alma Tadema translated the last play in 1895. In June 1896 "Pelléas et Mélisande" was produced at the Lyceum Theatre by Mr. Forbes Robertson and Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and, albeit its run was short, special matinées were given during the "Macbeth" season in the following autumn. Naturally Mr. Forbes Robertson's venture attracted widespread attention, and curiously varying estimates were made of M. Maeterlinck's work. Succeeding contributions from M. Maeterlinck were received with much interest, especially his best-known book, "Le Trésor des Humbles" (1897), which threw a wholly new light on the author's aims. This was introduced to the British public by Mr. A. B. Walkley and translated by Mr. Sutro. The current notion of him as a kind of fantastic decadent gave place to a conception of a new and suggestive but modest seeker after the mystery of existence. Some of his prose essays, it was said, were "empty enough," and others were of "a sort of etherealised Emerson, tender, fascinating, and almost beautiful." "Aglaraine and Selysette" (1897) struck a deeper note, and many adverse comments appeared as a result. On Oct. 15, 1898, "Wisdom and Destiny" was published simultaneously in London, Paris, and New York, Mr. Sutro again being the translator, and was hailed with a round of approval. In fact M. Maeterlinck has undoubtedly laid the foundations of a growing contemporary reputation, and whilst it is too early to assert that he will make some contribution to "the stock of enduring wisdom," a surmise may be hazarded that "the Belgian Shakespeare," as he has been called, will in the coming century receive some commensurate measure of recognition.

MAGNUS, Sir Philip, J.P., second son of Jacob Magnus, was born in London on Oct. 7, 1842. He was educated at University College School from 1854 to 1858, and afterwards at University College, London, where he obtained the Andrews Scholarship for Mathematics. He graduated B.A. (first class with honours in Philosophy and Physiology) in 1863, and 3.Sc. (first class with honours) in 1864 at the University of London. In 1865-66 he was a student at the University of Berlin. During his residence in Germany he made inquiries into the German system of education, visited schools, and studied methods of teaching. He embodied the results of these inquiries in a paper first read to the members of a College Society and afterwards published. This was his earliest essay on educational subjects. On his return to England he was busily engaged in tutorial, literary, and examining work, and held for some years the Professorship of Applied Mathematics at the Catholic University College. As a result of his lectures in Physics there appeared, in 1875, the first edition of his "Lessons in Elementary Mechanics" (Longmans, Green & Co.), which he re-wrote in 1890, and of which more than 40,000 copies have been sold. Later he was associated with Professor Carey Foster in editing for the same publishers a series of Science Class-books, to which he contributed the volume on "Hydrostatics and Pneumatics." Subsequently he became editor for Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. of a series of books on educational topics, called the "Education Library," to which in 1888 he contributed a volume consisting of reprints of essays and addresses delivered at various times, under the title of "Industrial Education." Since then he has contributed to different periodicals articles and essays on Educational and Commercial Subjects. In 1880 Sir Philip (then Mr.) Magnus was appointed Organising Director and Secretary of the newly formed Association of Livery Companies, known as the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education. At that date little or nothing was known of technical education, and the wide development of that movement during recent years has followed pretty closely the lines laid down by those originally responsible for the organisation of the City Guilds Institute. In 1881 Mr. Magnus was a member of the Royal Commission on Technical Instruction. The Commission sat for three years, during which Mr. Magnus, together with his colleagues, devoted all the time he could spare from official duties to the inspection of schools and factories in France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, Austria, and England. In 1883 he was appointed Principal of the Finsbury Technical College, and delivered his inaugural address on Feb. 19 in that year. In 1884 he was Chairman of the Technical Section of the International Conference on Education held in London, and presided over by Lord Reay. In 1886 he received the honour of knighthood, and in the autumn of that year he represented this country at an Educational Conference held in Bordeaux. In 1890 Sir Philip Magnus was co-opted a member of the School Board for London, but did not seek re-election when the Board dissolved. In the same year he was elected by Convocation on the Senate of the University of London, to the work of which he had devoted considerable time. Sir Philip Magnus is a member of the Physical and Mathematical Societies, a Life Governor of University College, London, Honorary Fellow of College of Preceptors, Member of the Technical Education Board of London County Council, Representative of University of London on Joint Board for University Extension, and member of the governing body of more than one of the London polytechnics and other educational institutes. He is President of the National Association of Manual Training Teachers, and also of the Joint Scholarship Board, and Education Adviser to the London Polytechnic Council. He is J.P. for the county of Surrey. Sir Philip Magnus was married in 1870 to Katie, only daughter of the late Alderman E. Emanuel, J.P., of Southsea. Addresses: 16 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park; Tangley Hill, Chilworth, Surrey; Athenæum.

MAGRATH, The Rev. John Richard, D.D., late Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, son of Nicholas Magrath, Surgeon, R.N., of Manor House, Guernsey, was born in Guernsey, Jan. 29, 1839, and educated at Elizabeth College, before proceeding to Oxford, where he gained a Scholarship at Oriel College. At the University he obtained (1860) the Stanhope Prize for an essay on "The Fall of the Republic of Florence." He graduated B.A., with a first class in Lit. Hum. in 1860, was Johnson's Theological Scholar, 1861, and took his M.A. degree, 1863. From 1860 to 1878 he was Fellow of Queen's College; Chaplain from 1867 to 1878, and Bursar from 1874 to 1878. He was Select Preacher before the University in 1867-69, and Senior Proctor in 1877-78. In 1878 he was elected Provost of Queen's College, and he took the degrees of B.D. and D.D. Dr. Magrath has published "A Plea for the Study of Theology in the University of Oxford," 1868; "Selections from Aristotle's Organon," 1868 (2nd edit. 1877); "Two Papers on University Reform," 1876. He was Chairman of the Oxford Local Board from 1882-87. He is a Justice of the Peace for Oxfordshire, Alderman of the City of Oxford, Member of the Hebdomadal Council of the University since 1878, and was Vice-Chancellor from 1894 to 1898, when he was succeeded by Sir William Anson. He married, in 1887, Georgiana Isabella, daughter of the Ven. W. Jackson, D.D., formerly Archdeacon and Canon of Carlisle and Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, 1862-78. Address: Queen's College, Oxford.

MAHAFFY, Professor the Rev. John Pentland, D.D., seventh and youngest child of the Rev. Nathaniel B. Mahaffy and his wife Elizabeth Pentland, was born on Feb. 26, 1839, at Chapponnaire, near Vevay, on the Lake of Geneva, in Switzerland, and was never at school, being educated in Germany by his parents, till he entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1856. He was elected to a scholarship in 1858, and obtained two Senior Moderatorships (in Classics and in Philosophy) at his degree in 1859; gained his Fellowship (by competition) in 1864; was appointed Precentor of the Chapel, with control of the college choir in 1867; Professor of Ancient History, 1871 (which offices he now holds); and Donnellan lecturer in 1873. He received the degree of D.D. in 1886, Hon. Mus. D. in 1890, Hon. D.C.L. (Oxon.), 1892. He was decorated with the Gold Cross of the Order of the Saviour by the King of Greece in 1877, and was elected an Honorary Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1882, and a Corresponding Member of the Vienna Academy in 1896. MALABARI, Behramji Merwanji (né Mehta), an Indian poet, philanthropist, and national reformer, was born at Baroda in 1853, and is the son of Dhanjibhai Mehta, a poor Parsi clerk, who was in the service of the Gaekwar of Baroda, and died when his son was only two years of age. The child was adopted by a maternal relative, named Merwanji Nana-bhai Malabari, who subsequently became his stepfather, and whose name the orphan boy took, in lieu of Mehta. His mother, whose name was Bhikhibai, was a remarkable woman, possessing the rare qualities of irrepressible energy combined with great gentleness of disposition. Her largeness of heart and loving sympathy for the friendless proffered her her best-loved of all who had the happiness to know her. She died when her son was eleven years of age. To the unending influence of her character her son owes much of the traits which have made him the philanthropist that he is. One who has sacrificed his fortune and devoted his life to the amelioration of the condition of the girls and women of India; and who, in the name of God and of humanity has undertaken a noble crusade against infant marriages and enforced widowhood among the Hindu races. Malabari began life as a poet, and of his "Niti Vinod" it has been said that some of the poems will live as long as the vernaculars of Gujarat endure. He has likewise written English verse which has excited the admiration of Lord Tennyson, Professor Max Müller, and others. His critical works are "Niti Vinod," "Wilson Vinod," "Tared-i-Fatehag," and "The Indian Muse in an English Garb." He has also written "Gujarat and Gujaratis," which has passed into three editions, and is esteemed for its humorous and picturesque style. Mr. Malabari is editor and proprietor of the Indian Spectator, the leading native journal of India, which is known to have done most valuable service to the state and the country; and also of the Voice of India. He has written largely on important political and moral questions, and is the greatest social reformer in India, known to be in touch with high authorities and leading thinkers in this country. He visited England in 1890, and his "Appeal from the Daughters of India," with his eloquent pleadings on their behalf in the Times and other journals, created a profound impression in the highest circles. An influential committee was formed to aid his efforts. It consisted of former Secretaries of State for India, Viceroys, Governors, high legal and medical authorities, and prominent representatives of Church and State. Mr. Malabari visited this country again in 1891, and continued the agitation commenced in the previous year against infant marriage in his own country. By great personal exertions, and with the aid of influential persons here, whom he interested in the cause of the helpless Indian child-wife, he succeeded in moving the Government of India to take legislative action in the matter. The famous Age of Consent Bill, introduced by Sir Andrew Scoble, the legal member of the Viceroy's Council, as the direct outcome of Mr. Malabari's long and persistent crusade, became law, after bitter discussions. The Age of Consent Act, the practical outcome of Mr. Malabari's labours of a lifetime, will remain his best claim to the gratitude of the Indian people. By raising the consent from ten to twelve years to decrease the number of marriages and to improve the physical condition of Indian girls, the educative influence of the legislation is, however, its chief. The next generation will rise to higher with much less temptation. A few years later he urged the question of the Hindu Conjugal Rights, which had to slide in 1891 for a more proper opportunity. Sir Andrew Scoble and Sir Alexander Miller, it is said, will manage the measure of the law; but owing to the weakness of the new Government, introduced by Government, it was withdrawn. During the years Mr. Malabari has been in his pen again, and published literary works all of which have a cordial reception, both in this country and in England and America. "Indian Eye on English Life," in 1893, he has given his impressions and manners English in a humorous style. The book, through several editions in a year. Mr. Malabari has also written to and his two brochures, "The Problem" (London and Bombay) and "India in 1897" (London). Some of the most burning of the current Indian politics in a passionate manner, characteristic of a publicist. Nor has Mr. Malabari his poetic muse amid political and anthropic labours, all-engrossing have been. He has added to his works two volumes of verse in his tongue, Gujarati, "Anubhavitika," "periences of Life" (1894), and "his World" (1898), which have enhanced his fame as a genuine poet. Malabari has also interested himself in Miss Florence Nightingale's Indian Village Sanitation, for which he is doing much in a quiet manner. In the last two or three years of the disasters through which India has passed, Mr. Malabari has been busy in assisting the plague-stricken famine-stricken people in the remote provinces, and by long and tours he has kept himself in touch with the operations and measures started and worked by the officials throughout as a welcome intermediary between the people and their alien ther, Yacoub Khan, was one of the and most learned statesmen of . After receiving a careful training he under his father's immediate care, m Khan was, at the age of twelve, o Paris, where he successfully applied lf to the study of mathematics and sciences, literature, &c., and more ally to the study of the institutions rope as compared with those of .

When he returned to Persia he t once appointed Conseiller Intime, A.D.C. to the Shah at Teheran. At e of twenty-two Malcom Khan was o Europe with the special mission of ating and concluding treaties of ship and commerce with the Govnts of Europe and of the United of America. On his return to he ardently promoted the intro-m of reforms in the Persian adminis-a. To this end he had already n several pamphlets and books on y, religious, and political subjects cted with Persia. As an author he uced into the Persian language the ds and best style of European writers, ntirely transformed the diplomatic age of Persia. In 1860 the ideas of e Malcom Khan were found too ad-d for immediate realisation; he ore obtained leave of absence and to take up his residence at Constan-e, where he married, in 1865, the ss Dadian, by whom he has had children, three daughters, and a son as educated at Eton. In 1872 he asked to draw up a comprehensive amme of reforms to be carried out in t; and was recalled to Teheran and ied the post second to that of the l Vizier, in which position all the great and foreign affairs of the State d through his hands; and in conse-e of many important reforms realised his immediate direction, he was d Nazem ud Dowleh (Reformer of mpire), a title which ranks among ighest in the land. One of his best sses was to decide the Shah to under-his first journey to Europe in 1873. Prince was accordingly sent on an ordinary mission to all the Courts rope to prepare for the visit of his eign. After accompanying the Shah g his tour, Prince Malcom Khan, ling to return to Persia, remained in e as Persian Minister at the Courts ndon, Vienna, Berlin and other coun-

During the Shah's second visit to e. 1878, Prince Malcom Khan was to the Congress of Berlin as Persian potentiary, where he succeeded in ing the restitution by Turkey of a ted province, and on that occasion raised to the rank of Highness.

Prince Malcom Khan has constantly pro-moted various reforms; finding that the regeneration of Oriental countries could be effected only by radical religious trans-formations, and by a new system of public instruction, he devoted a large portion of his time and means to modify the Arabic alphabet. He recently published an edi-tion of the celebrated "Gulistan" and other works in his new phonetic system of Arabic writing. It is generally con-sidered that the improvement of the relations between Great Britain and Persia, and the success which attended the visit of the Shah to this country in 1889, are due mostly to Prince Malcom Khan. Upon his sovereign's return to Persia he resigned the Embassy of London, on account of personal differences with the acting Grand Vizier. In the early part of June 1890 the Shah offered him the Persian Embassy at Rome, but his Highness declined the appointment on the plea of his health. In February 1899 his appointment was announced as Persian Minister in Rome, in succession to General Neriman Khan.

MALET, The Right Hon. Sir Ed-ward Baldwin, G.C.M.G., G.C.B., born at the Hague, Oct. 10, 1837, is the son of Sir Alexander Malet, K.C.B., formerly British Minister at Frankfort. He was educated at Eton and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and entered the diplomatic service in 1854 as attaché at Frankfort. In 1858 he was transferred to Brussels, to Rio de Janeiro in 1861, and to Washington in 1862, where he was made Second Secretary. In 1865 he served at Lisbon and Constantinople; was appointed to act temporarily as a supernumerary Second Secretary at Paris, in July 1867, and was transferred to Paris in January 1868. During the Commune he was Chargé des Archives; was made a C.B. July 10, 1871, and promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Peking in August of the same year. From 1873 to 1875 he was acting Chargé d'Affaires at Athens, and then proceeded to Rome as Secretary of Embassy. In connection with the renewal of the treaty of commerce with Italy, Sir Edward Malet visited the manu-facturing districts, and was appointed with Mr. Kennedy to confer with the Italian Commissioner in November 1875 with respect to the renewal of the treaty of Aug. 6, 1863, between Great Britain and Italy. On April 29, 1878, he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Constantinople in the absence of the Am-bassador. The following year he went to Egypt as Agent-Consul-General, and as Minister Plenipotentiary in the diplomatic service. He was made a K.C.B. in 1881, and received the medal and Khedive's star for his services in Egypt in 1882. In August 1883 he was promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Brussels, and Ambassador at Berlin, Sept. 29, 1884. He was also accredited as Minister Plenipotentiary to Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Saxe-Weimar, Anhalt, Oldenburg, and Brunswick. In 1895 he retired on a pension. He was British Plenipotentiary at the Congo Conference in 1884-85, and at the Samoa Conference in 1889. Sir Edward Mahet was sworn a Privy Councillor in March 1885, and in June of the same year was made a G.C.M.G., and G.C.B. in February 1886. He married Lady Esmyntrude, daughter of the Duke of Bedford, in 1885. Addresses: 85 Eaton Square, S.W.; Wrest Wood, Bexhill.

MALLOCK, William Hurrell, son of the Rev. Roger Mallock, of Cockington Court, South Devon, was born in Devonshire in 1819. His mother is a daughter of the late Ven. R. Hurrell Froude, Archdeacon of Totnes, and sister of Mr. Anthony Froude, the historian. Mr. Mallock was educated by a private tutor, the Rev. W. B. Philpot, of Littlehampton, Sussex, and afterwards at Balliol College, Oxford, where in 1871 he gained the Newdigate Prize Poem, the subject being "The Isthmus of Suez." He took, at Oxford, a second class in the final classical schools. Mr. Mallock has never entered any profession, though at one time he contemplated the diplomatic service. "The New Republic," most of which he wrote when he was at Oxford, was published in 1876, having first appeared in a fragmentary form in Belgravia. A year later he published "The New Paul and Virginia." In 1879 he published "Is Life Worth Living?" which first appeared in fragments in the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. In 1880 he brought out a small edition of "Poems," written, most of them, many years previously. The following year he published, "A Romance of the Nineteenth Century"; and in 1882 "Social Equality: a Study in a Missing Science," the substance of which had already appeared in fragments in the Nineteenth Century and the Contemporary during the three previous years. In 1884 he published "Property and Progress," an examination of the theories of contemporary radical and socialistic agitation. This had been formerly published in the Quarterly Review in the shape of three essays. The year following he published "Atheism and the Value of Life, or Five Studies in Contemporary Literature," being criticisms of Professor Clifford, Lord Tennyson, George Eliot, the author of "Ecco Homo," and Herbert Spencer.

In 1886 he published "The Atlantic Changes," a novel which first appeared in the National Review. His other works are: "A Human Document," 1883, and "In an Enchanted Island," 1885. "Labour and the Popular Welfare," edition of the Letters and Remains of the 12th Duke of Somerset, and a third "Verse," 1893. In 1880 he gathered experiences in Cyprus, under the title "In an Enchanted Island." Moreover, he has written in the newspapers his most effective attacks being on doctrinaire doctrinairism. In 1896 he published "Classes and Masses," and in 1897 "Aristocracy and Evolution." In 1898 he became editor of the "British Weekly," a new weekly, now amalgamated with "National Observer." Address: Bexhill near Exeter.

MACLURE, THE VERY REV. EDWARD CRAIG.

MANCHESTER, Duke of William Angus Drogo Montagu, was born in London in 1877, and is the son of the Duke, and Consuelo, daughter of Don Antonio Yznaga de Valle, of Louisiana. He was educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and succeeded his father in 1890. He is a lieutenant in the 3rd Battalion of the King's Royal Rifles. Addresses: Kimbolton Castle, St. Neots; and 45 Portman Square, W., &c.

MANN, Horace, son of Thomas Mann, Esq., solicitor, and afterwards Chief Clerk in the General Register Office, was born Oct. 4, 1823, and educated privately at Mercers' School, London. He entered at Lincoln's Inn in 1842, and was called to the Bar in 1847, practising on the Home Circuit until, in October 1850, he was appointed Assistant-Commissioner for conducting the Census of 1851. In that capacity he wrote special Reports on "Education" and "Religious Worship." In June 1855 he was appointed Registrar, and in December 1875 Secretary to the Civil Service Commission, from which post he retired, on pension, 1887.

MANN, Tom, was born at Foleshill, Warwickshire, on April 15, 1856. As a lad he worked in a mine till he was fourteen years of age, when his people removed to Birmingham. In 1877 he came to London, and became connected with the Amalgamated Engineers. He was employed at Messrs. Thornycroft's, but in 1889, during the great dock strike, devoted himself to labour organisation among the dock labourers. He was elected President of the Dock, Wharf, Riverside, and General Labourers' Union, but retired from that position in September 1892. At the Bristol Conference of 1893 he accepted the position of Hon. President. In 1892 Mr. Mann became a member of the Royal Commission on Labour, and also gave evidence before the Commission. The London Reform Union being formed in 1893, he accepted the Secretaryship. In 1894 he became Secretary of the Independent Labour Party, which office he held for three years, resigning in order to devote himself more effectually to the International Federation of Ship, Dock, and River Workers, which came into existence in June 1896. For organising purposes Mr. Mann has visited France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Spain, but owing to the opposition of the authorities he has been expelled from France, Belgium, and Hamburg. He is now engaged in the organisation of the Workers' Union, which it is hoped will draw into the ranks of Trade Unionism large numbers of those who have up till now stood apart. Address: 34 Minford Gardens, West Kensington.

MANNS, August, well known as a musical conductor, was born on March 12, 1825, at Stolzenburg, in Prussia. He showed great ability in conducting at Krolls, in Berlin, from 1849 till 1851, and afterwards from 1851 till 1854 as Director of Herr von Roon's Regimental Band in Cologne, and was appointed in 1855 musical director of the Crystal Palace, where for nearly forty-three years he has wielded the baton at the famous winter and spring Saturday Concerts. During this long period he has done much to popularise certain French, German, and other foreign masters who would otherwise have remained comparatively unknown to the English music-loving public. It may be said that the liberal spirit in which musical art has been nursed by the concerts under his conductorship has prepared the way for that general progress of musical art in Great Britain which now gives so much enjoyment to lovers of good music in London, and in most of the large provincial towns. In 1883 he became conductor to the Handel Festival in succession to Sir Michael Costa, who retired owing to ill-health. He has conducted at all subsequent Handel Festivals. Address: Crystal Palace, S.E.

MAPLE, Sir John Blundell, Bart., M.P., Governor of Maple & Co., of the Tottenham Court Road, London, was born in 1845, and is the son of Mr. John Maple, upholsterer. He was educated at Cranford College and King's College School, and since 1887 has represented the Dulwich Division of Camberwell in the House of Commons, where he votes as a Conservative. He entered the London County Council for South St. Pancras in 1895, and has found the funds for rebuilding University College Hospital at a cost of £120,000, on ground rendered partially vacant by the demolition of some of his workshops. He was created Baronet at the Jubilee in 1897, having been previously knighted. He is very well known in the racing world. He married Emily, daughter of Mr. Merryweather, in 1874, and their only daughter was married to Baron von Eckhardstein of the German Embassy, in 1896. Addresses: 8 Clarence Terrace, N.W.; and Childwickbury, St. Albans.

MAPOTHER, Edward Dillon, born at Fairview, Dublin, Oct. 14, 1835, of a leading Roscommon family, and was educated in the Queen's University. Before he had attained his nineteenth year he was elected Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, and in 1867 became its Professor of Physiology, and afterwards filled the presidential chair in that institution. He was also President of the Statistical Society of Ireland. In 1888 he resigned his official position to practise in London, having purchased the residence of the eminent surgeon Quain, a house also interesting as having been the abode successively of three famous portrait-painters, Francis Cotes, R.A., George Romney, and Sir M. A. Shee, P.R.A. Dr. Mapother's writings include "A Manual of Physiology," 3rd edit., 1882; "Lectures on Public Health," 2nd edit., 1867; "Lectures on Skin Diseases"; "The Body and its Health" (six editions). By this primer a knowledge of Physiology and Hygiene has been diffused in the National Schools of Ireland and of most other English-speaking countries. He also gained the Carmichael Prize (£200) for an essay on Medical Education, and has contributed many medical biographical sketches and proposals for hospital reform. Address: 32 Cavendish Square, W.

MARCET, William, M.D. Edin., F.R.C.P. Lond., F.R.S., received his medical education at Edinburgh, and graduated M.D. in 1850. In 1859 he became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, London, and a Fellow of the Royal Society. He has been Assistant-Physician at the Brompton Hospital for Consumption, is Consulting Physician in London for the Invalid Ladies' Home at Cannes, and Assistant-Physician at the Westminster Hospital. He was president from 1888 to 1890 of the Royal Meteorological Society, and is President of the Edinburgh Medical Society and Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc. Perhaps his best-known book is the reprint of his Croonian Lectures, delivered at the Royal College of Physicians in 1895, and entitled "A Contribution to the History of the Respiration of Man." Addresses: Flowermead, Wimbledon Park, Surrey; and Athenæum.

MARCHAND, The Hon. Felix Gabriel, Canadian author and statesman, was born at St. John's, Lower Canada, in 1832. He studied law, and entered the Legislative Assembly of Quebec in 1867. In 1878 he became Provincial Secretary, and for a short while was Commissioner of Crown Lands. In 1887 he was Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. He has been a constant writer in most of the French-Canadian papers, notably Le Franco-Canadien, which he founded. He has also written comedies for the stage, such as "Erreur n'est pas Compte," and "Un Bonheur en Attire un Autre." In 1879 he received the decoration of Officier de l'Instruction Publique from the French Government.

MARCHAND, Major Thomas, French explorer and "emissary of civilisation," is the son of a carpenter of Thoissey, in the department of the Saône-et-Loire, and was born in 1863. He was educated at the local college, and for five years served as a clerc de notaire. At eighteen he wished to volunteer for the army, but gave way before his mother's entreaties. However, in 1883 he served his regulation time, and having re-engaged himself, he soon gained a commission. In 1896 he joined the staff of M. Liotard, the Commissioner of the Upper Congo, and reached Loango in July of that year. He left Brazzaville, the capital of the French Congo, in March 1897, and steamed up the M'bomo River, hauling his boats through forests and over the mountains between the Congo and Nile Basins. In September 1897 he reached M'bima on the Boku River, the extremity of the Congo basin and the limit of the French Congo Protectorate. He then despatched Captain Baratier to reconnoitre the Sueh River, a tributary of the Bahr-el-Ghazal, one of the heads of the Nile. This river having been mapped out, he made a road 100 miles long by 16 feet wide, over which he carried his loads, two gunboats and ten steel boats. By November he reached the Sueh, and then worked his way down to the Bahr-el-Ghazal and so on to the Nile, establishing himself at Fashoda by July 1898. After the battle of Omdurman on Sept. 2, Lord Kitchener steamed up the Nile, and warned Major Marchand that he was Egyptian territory. The Major refused to move until he had received orders from the French Government. He sent Captain Baratier with his report to Paris to the Nile, and himself left Fashoda to report that report in October 1898. The Government having given him orders to leave Fashoda, he marched through the desert to Djibouti, arriving at Tona May 1899, where he was received with great enthusiasm. His reception in London was phenomenal.

MARCONI, William, electrical engineer and inventor of "wireless telegraphy," was born at Marzabotto, Bologna, in 1875, his father being Italian but his mother English. He was educated at Livorno under Professor Rosa and at Bologna under Professor Righi, who first attracted public attention with his system of wireless telegraphy. He visited England in 1896, and became acquainted with the labours of Mr. W. Preece, C.B., F.R.S., Engineer-in-Chief of the Post Office, Signor Marconi was asked for advice, and his apparatus was tested between Penarth and Weston, a completely favourable result. Return to Italy, he secured support from the Italian Minister of Marine, and experiments were carried out, firstly at Rapallo and subsequently at Spezzia, where messages were sent from the shore to an island ten miles away. His most important experiments, however, have been recently undertaken at Dublin in Kingstown Harbour, with the object of sending messages from the yacht races from the harbour to the offices of the Dublin Daily Express, whose editor, Mr. T. P. Gill, organised the trial. Signor Marconi, with the aid of a transmitter, a receiver, an ordinary Morse tapping machine, and two batteries attached to a width of wire-netting stretched to the top of an improvised mast, succeeded in signalling to a distance of more than ten miles. The use of this system is applicable to lighthouses in foggy weather and to armies in the field can be easily applied. Signor Marconi has a permanent installation working over a distance of 144 miles between Bournemouth and Alum Bay on the Isle of Wight, and another between Dover and Cape Grisnez.

MARGOLIOUTH, Professor D. Samuel, Laudian Professor of Arabic at the University of Oxford, son of El Margoliouth, was born in London on 17, 1858, and educated at the Harewood Collegiate School; afterwards he was a scholar of Winchester College, 1872

He has translated and edited twenty works for the Hakluyt Society, and has contributed numerous papers to the Royal Geographical Society's Journal. He also wrote the reports on the Moral and National Progress of India for 1871-72 and 1872-73; and the Peruvian chapters for Winkor's "History of America." Sir C. Markham was editor of the Geographical Magazine, 1872-78. In 1857 he married Minna, daughter of the Rev. J. H. Chichester, Rector of Arlington, co. Devon. Addresses: 21 Eccleston Square, S.W.; and Athenaeum.

MARKHAM, Lieut.-General Sir Edwin, K.C.B., Inspector-General of Ordnance at Headquarters, is the son of W. Markham, Esq., of Becca Hall, Yorkshire, and was born in March 1833. He entered the army as a Lieutenant of the Royal Artillery in Dec. 1850, and was promoted Captain in Nov. 1857. Major in 1872, and Colonel, by brevet, in Jan. 1881. He first saw war service in the Crimea, and was present at the battles of Alma and Inkerman, and also at the siege of Sebastopol. He took part in the capture of the sortie of the 26th Oct. For his services he was created a Companion of the Legion of Honour, and received a Crimean medal with three clasps and a Turkish medal. In 1856 he arrived in India during the Mutiny, and took part in the action of Secundra. For several years he was Assistant-Adjutant-General at Woolwich, and was appointed Colonel of the Staff in command of the Royal Artillery at Gibraltar in November 1882. In April 1885 he became Director of Artillery Studies at Woolwich, which appointment he gave up on being selected Deputy-Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery at Headquarters. Colonel Markham was promoted Major-General in April 1890, and went to Jersey in 1892 as Lieut.-Governor and Commander of the Troops. He was promoted a supernumerary Lieut.-General on taking over his present appointment in March 1895. Sir Edwin Markham was created a K.C.B. in 1897. He married, in 1877, Evelyn, a daughter of Admiral the Hon. Sir Montague Stopford. Address 68 Chester Square, S.W.

MARKS, Harry Hananel, M.P. J.P., is the fifth son of the Rev. Professor Marks and Cecilia, daughter of the Mosely Wolff, of Liverpool. He was born on April 9, 1855, and educated at University College, London, and the Athénée Royale, Brussels. After considerable journalistic experience in the United States he returned to London in 1884 and founded the Financial News, of which he is editor and chief proprietor. He initiated in the columns of that journal the Metropolitan Board of Works exposures, which led, in the first place, to the appointment of a Royal Commission, whose report was followed by the abolition of the Board of Works and the establishment of the London County Council. Mr. Marks took a leading part in the conduct of the inquiry before the Commission, and one indirect consequence of his labours was the passing of Lord Randolph Churchill's Act for the prevention and punishment of the acceptance of bribes by officers of municipal bodies. In 1889, largely as a consequence of his action with reference to the Metropolitan Board of Works, Mr. Marks was elected to the London County Council for East Marylebone. In 1892 he unsuccessfully contested North-East Bethnal Green in the Unionist interest. In March 1895 he was elected to the London County council for St. George's-in-the-East, and in the following July was returned to Parliament for the same constituency, defeating Mr. J. W. Benn, the Vice-Chairman of the London County Council. A petition against his return was unsuccessful.

On the London County Council Mr. Marks was largely instrumental in securing payment for coroner's jurymen. He is J.P. for Kent. Addresses: 6 Cavendish Square, W.; Callis Court, St. Peter's, Farnham.

MARLBOROUGH, Duke of, Charles Richard John Spencer-Churchill, was born at Simla on Nov. 10, 1871, and is the son of the 8th Duke of Marlborough, and of the 1st Duke of Abercorn, K.G. He succeeded his father in 1892, was appointed Chancellor of the Primrose League in 1897, and in February 1899, Paymaster-General. He married Consuelo, the daughter of the millionaire, Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, in 1895. Address: Blenheim, Oxfordshire.

MARRIOTT, The Right Hon. Sir William Thackeray, Q.C., M.P., son of the late Mr. Christopher Marriott, of Drumpsall, and of Jane Dorothea, daughter of John Poole, Esq., Cornbrook Hall, near Manchester, was born in 1834. He took his degree at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1858, and the same year he was ordained a Deacon, and appointed to the curacy of St. George's Church, Hulme. The population amidst which he worked was composed chiefly of the working classes, and in 1860 he published a pamphlet, which had a wide circulation, on "Some Real Wants of the Working Classes," in which he advocated the formation of parks, playgrounds, gymnasiums, and clubs for the people. He started what is believed to be the first working-men's club in 1859, called the "Hulme Athæneum," which consisted entirely of working-men, and was managed by themselves, and there was a gymnasium, with rooms for fencing and boxing, and rooms for cards and bagatelle and dominoes. When the time came for him to take priest's orders he hesitated and eventually declined, and gave his reasons in the preface to his farewell sermon, entitled "What is Christianity?" which was published in 1862. He then studied for the Bar, and was called at Lincoln's Inn in 1864, became a Queen's Counsel in 1877, and was made a Bencher of his Inn in 1879. He first entered Parliament in 1880 as Liberal member for Brighton, acknowledging Lord Hartington as his leader, and not Mr. Gladstone. When Mr. Gladstone again took the leadership, and became Prime Minister and formed his Cabinet, he soon began to show signs of dissatisfaction with his post, and in 1882 he moved the amendment against the Government on the Clôture question. In 1883 he published a pamphlet, condemning strongly the revolutionary radicalism of Mr. Chamberlain, and in 1884 differed so from the Ministry in their policy in Egypt and the Soudan, that he took the "Chiltern Hundreds," and offered himself to his constituency as a supporter of Lord Salisbury. He was returned by a majority of 1457, and again in 1886 and 1892. In Lord Salisbury's first administration he held the post of Judge-Advocate-General, and was made a Privy Councillor, whilst he received the same appointment in Lord Salisbury's second administration, holding it from 1886 to 1892. In 1887 and 1888 he acted for the Khedive Ismail Pasha and other members of his family in settling their claim against the Egyptian Government, and in the latter year he received the honour of knighthood. In 1893 he resigned his seat in the House of Commons, but he still continues to be an active supporter of the Unionist party and the Primrose League. In his younger days, as student and barrister, he was a frequent contributor to the daily and weekly press, and occasionally now articles by him appear in the monthly magazines. He is married to Charlotte, daughter of Captain Tennant. Addresses: 56 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.; and 6 Crown Office Row, E.C.

MARRYAT, Florence (Mrs. Francis Lean), sixth daughter and tenth child of the late Captain Frederick Marryat, R.N., C.B., F.R.S., and Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Stephen Shairp of Houston, Linlithgowshire, was born at Brighton, in Sussex, and educated at home. She began to write in 1865, when her first novel, "Love's Conflict," was published, since which time she has written some seventy-five novels, most of which have been republished in America and Germany and translated into French, German, Russian, Flemish, and Swedish. She was appointed editor of London Society in 1872, and has been a constant contributor to magazines and newspapers. She is known on the stage as an operatic singer and high-class comedy actress, and has been most successful as an entertainer and lecturer. Several of her works deal with spiritualism, in which she takes much interest. The last-named are: "There is no Death," 1891, of which several editions have been published; "The Risen Dead," a novel, 1893; "The Spirit World," 1894; and "A Soul on Fire." Permanent address: Langham Lodge, 26 Abercorn Place, N.W.

MARSDEN, Alexander, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.A.S., Consulting and Senior Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, London, is the son of the late William Marsden, M.D., founder of the above institutions. He was born Sept. 22, 1832, and educated at Wimbledon School and King's College, London. He entered the army in 1854, and served at the General Hospital, Scutari. Early in 1855 he was appointed Surgeon to the Ambulance Corps before Sebastopol, was engaged in several actions with the enemy, and remained on active service till the end of the Crimean War, when he received the Crimean and Turkish War Medals. On his return home in 1856 he had the honour of being presented to her Majesty the Queen by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. He was also appointed full Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, and subsequently Curator of the Museum and General Superintendent of the former institution. For fifteen years Dr. Marsden worked at these two hospitals, seeing as many as 300 patients a week at the Royal Free, and about 70 to 80 at the Cancer. During the last twenty years he has devoted himself to the latter institution only. He is the author of "A New and Successful Mode of Treating Certain Forms of Cancer," "Cancer Quacks and Cancer Curers," "The Treatment of Cancer by Chlor Turpentine and all other Methods," "Our Present Means of Successfully Treating or Alleviating Cancer and Tumours of the Breast, Tongue, Lip," &c. He is editor of the fourth edition of the late Dr. W. Marsden's "Treatise on the Nature and Treatment of Cholera," and is the author of numerous other papers. Address: Coombe, Nightingale Lane, S.W.

MARSDEN, The Right Rev. Samuel Edward, D.D., is the son of Thomas Marsden, merchant, of Sydney, N.S.W., and grandson of the Rev. Samuel Marsden, known as the Apostle of New Zealand, for many years Principal Chaplain of N.S.W. Bishop Marsden was born in Sydney, and educated at private schools and at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). He was Curate of St. Peter's, Hereford, from 1855 to 1858, Curate of Lilleshall, Salop, 1858 to 1861, Vicar of Bergerwick, Worcestershire, 1861 to 1869, and Inspector of Schools for Rural Deanery of Evesham. He was appointed Bishop of Bathurst, N.S.W., in 1869, and consecrated by Archbishop Tait and other Prelates, Bishop Selwyn preaching the sermon on the occasion. Bishop Marsden took part in the formalities of the General Synod of the Church of England in Australia and Tasmania. He resigned his See at the end of 1885 in consequence of ill-health. He was appointed in 1892 Assistant of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, and was Administrator of the Diocese of Bristol during vacancy of the See. He is now Assistant Bishop of the Diocese of Gloucester, married an Australian lady in 1870, was present at the Lambeth Conference, 1897. Address: Clifton Park, Clifton, Bristol.

MARSH, Miss Catherine, youngest daughter of the late R. Marsh, Rector of Beddington, Surrey, died in 1864. Her best-known works are "English Hearts and English Homes," "Memorials of Captain Hedley," the "Life of the Rev. William Marsh," a volume of songs and hymns, "Memory's Pictures," and "Light and Line; or, the Story of Thomas the Railway Workman," also "Brief Life of the late Earl Cairns." Miss Marsh resided for some time at Beckenham, Kent, to the then rector of which her sister is married. During the prevalence of cholera in 1866, whilst watching sufferers from that disease in the wards of the London Hospital, she founded the valescent Hospital at Blackrock, which has since been established as a permanent institution.

MARSH, Howard, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Eng., in 1866. He is a member of Council and of the Court of Examiners of the College, and in July 1898 was appointed Vice-President of the College. Hunterian Professor of Pathology and Surgery he lectured in 1889 on "Cholera in some of its Surgical Aspects." He is Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge, Surgeon and Lecturer in Surgery at St. Bart's., and Consultant at the Hospital for Sick Children, besides being a Fellow of the Royal Society, and member of various societies. He has published a work on "Joints and Spine," 1895, has edited the first and second editions of Sir Paget's "Clinical Lectures and Demonstrations," besides contributing articles on "Dislocation of joints, fractures, &c., to the various medical journals and manuals. Address: 30 Bruton Street, Berkeley Square.

MARSHALL, Professor M.A. Camb., Hon. LL.D., Educated in London on July 26, 1842, vacated at Merchant Taylors' School, he obtained the title to a professorial fellowship at St. John's College, Oxford, awarded for classical attainments but preferring mathematical studies he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge. He was Second Wrangler selected Fellow of his College in the year, and Lecturer on Moral in 1868. He held this position, when he was appointed Principal of University College, Bristol. In the same year he married Miss Mary Paley, daughter of Rev. Thomas Paley, and in conjunction with her he published in 1879 the Principles of Industry. His health broken down, he resigned his post and went abroad. In 1883 he was elected Lecturer on Political Economy of University College, Oxford, and in 1884 he became a Fellow of that College. In the year he was elected to the Chair of Political Economy at his old University, by Professor Fawcett's untimely death, and in the following year he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1889 he delivered the opening address at the Co-operative Congress in London; and was President of Section B of the British Association for 1890. He was a member of the Royal Commission on the Poor Law, 1891. In 1896 he was made an honorary Fellow of Balliol and a Foreign Member of the Accademia Reale dei Lincei. He published the first volume of his "Principles of Economics" in 1890, and an abridgement of the second edition of that in 1892, under the title "Elements of Economics of Industry." A list of his writings may be found in the "Handbuch der Staatswissenschaften" in his name. Address: Balliol Croft, Cambridge.

MARSHALL, George William, F.S.A., genealogist, born at Ward End, co. Warwick, April 19, 1833, is the son of George Marshall of Ward End, Eliza Henshaw, youngest daughter of Comberbach. He was educated at Balliol College, Radley, under private tuition, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1860, and as LL.D.

He became a Barrister of the Temple in 1865, is a J.P. for co. Warwick, a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and an Honorary Member of the American Antiquarian Societies; was Croix Pursuivant of Arms in 1877. He is probably best known as compiler of "The Genealogist's Handbook," a work which contains between 100 and eighty thousand references to names, and which has passed through three editions, the first having been issued in 1879. Permanent addresses: Sarnesfield Court, Weobley, R.S.O.; and Herald's College, E.C.

MARSHALL, Herbert Menzies, R.W.S., youngest son of the late Mr. T. H. Marshall, Judge of the County Court, Leeds, was born at Leeds, Aug. 1, 1841, and educated at Westminster School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1864 second class in the Natural Science Tripos. In the same year he went to Paris for the purpose of studying architecture, and entered the atelier of M. Questel, architect to the Château of Versailles. On his return from Paris, 1867, he became a student of the Royal Academy, and in the following year obtained there the Travelling Studentship in architecture. The result of travelling in Italy and of constant sketching under a bright sun was to weaken his eyesight so much that he was obliged to give up all work for two years, and especially any architectural drawing. This accident induced him to turn his attention to water-colour painting as being less trying to the eyes, and in 1871 he exhibited his first drawing at the Dudley Gallery. In 1879 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and became full Member in 1882. Mr. Marshall has held two exhibitions, in 1886 and in 1890, at the galleries of the Fine Art Society, illustrating the scenery of London, his special aim being to show how beautiful and mysterious is the common life of the streets and on the river when seen under the atmospheric effects which are found only in London. Address: 1 Victoria Mansions, Westminster, S.W.

MARSHALL, John, LL.D. Edinburgh, Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh, was born in that city on March 9, 1845, and is the eldest son of P. Marshall of Edinburgh. He was educated at Newington School, Edinburgh, and at the Training College, Moray House, Edinburgh, where he qualified as a certificated teacher of the first class. At Edinburgh University he gained class medals and other distinctions in every department, and on graduating with first-class honours in Classics in 1869, was awarded the Greek Travelling Fellowship as first graduate of his year. He proceeded to the University of Halle, in Saxony, where he attended lectures on classical subjects by Bernhardy, Keil, and others. In the autumn of the same year he gained the Ferguson Classical Scholarship open to all Scottish graduates, and was admitted a Foundation Exhibitioner at Balliol College, Oxford. In the following year (1870)

MARTIN, Sir Theodore, K.C.B., V.O., LL.D., J.P., son of the late James Martin, Esq., solicitor, of Edinburgh, was born there on Sept. 16, 1816, and received his education at the High School and at the University of his native city, of which he is an honorary LL.D. After practising as a solicitor in Edinburgh for several years he came, in 1845, to London, where he established himself with great success as a parliamentary agent. He first became known as an author by his contributions to Fraser's Magazine and Tait's Magazine, under the signature of "Bon Gaultier," and in conjunction with the late Prof. Aytoun he composed the "Book of Ballads," which bears that pseudonym, and a volume of translations of the "Poems and Ballads of Goethe," 1858. He prepared a translation of the Danish poet Henrik Hertz's lyrical drama, "King René's Daughter," the principal character, Iolanthe, being played by Miss Helen Faucit, who in 1851 became Sir T. Martin's wife. She died in 1898. His translations of Ehlen's dramas, "Coriolanus," and "Aladdin, or the Wonderful Lamp," published in 1854 and 1857, have made these masterpieces of the Danish poet's genius familiar to a large circle of English readers. His metrical translation of the "Odes of Horace" appeared in 1860, and was immediately republished in the United States. It was followed, ten years later, by a critical essay on Horace's Life and Writings, the Ancient Classics for English Readers. In 1882 Sir T. Martin completed his Horatian labours in a translation of Horace's whole works, with a life and notes, in 2 vols. His poetical translation of Catullus, 1861 (2nd edit., 1875), was followed by a privately printed volume of Poems, Original and Translated, 1863, a translation of the "Vita Nuova" of Dante, and a translation of the first part of Goethe's "Faust." In 1866 he published a metrical version of the second part of "Faust." In 1867 he published a memoir of Professor Aytoun. It was while he was engaged on this biography that he was requested by the Queen to write the "Life of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," the first volume of which appeared in 1874. His metrical version of Heine's "Poems and Ballads" appeared in 1878. The fifth and concluding volume of the "Life of the Prince Consort" was published on March 15, 1880, and five days afterwards the author received from the hands of the Queen the honour of knighthood, and was invested with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath. On Nov. 25, 1880, he was elected Rector of the University of St. Andrews. In 1883 he published a "Life of Lord Lyndhurst," founded on papers furnished by his lordship's widow and family. His last published works are "The Song of the Bell, and other Translations from Schiller, Goethe, Uhland, and others," 1889; "Madonna Pia, and other Dramas," 1894; and a translation of "The Æneid of Virgil, Books i.-vi.," 1896. He is a J.P. for Denbighshire, where he has considerable property, and he resides at Bryntysilio, near Llangollen, during the summer months. Addresses: 31 Onslow Square; Bryntysilio, near Llangollen; and Athenæum.

MARTIN, Sir Thos. Acquin, Agent-General to the Government of Afghanistan, was born in 1850, and was educated at the Oratory at Birmingham. He is the head of the firm of Martin & Co., civil engineers, of Calcutta and London, and was appointed to his present post in 1895. He received the honour of knighthood at the New Year, 1896. Addresses: 3 Esplanade, Calcutta; Silverlands, Eridge, Sussex.

MARTINEAU, James, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., Litt.D., younger brother of the late Miss Harriet Martineau, was born at Norwich, April 21, 1805, and educated at the Norwich Grammar School, Dr. Lant Carpenter's School at Bristol, and Manchester New College, York. He was appointed second minister of Eustace Street Presbyterian Meeting-House, Dublin, in 1828; second minister of Paradise Street Chapel, Liverpool, in 1832; sole minister three or four years after; Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Manchester New College in 1840; removed to London, 1857; was minister of Little Portland Street Chapel, 1859-72; and was appointed Principal of Manchester New College, London, in 1869. Dr. Martineau is the author of "The Rationale of Religious Inquiry," published 1836; "Lectures in the Liverpool Controversy," 1839; "Hymns for the Christian Church and Home," 1840; "Endeavours after the Christian Life," vol. i. 1843, vol. ii. 1847; "Miscellanies," 1852; "Studies of Christianity," 1858; "Essays Philosophical and Theological," 2 vols., 1868; "Hymns of Praise and Prayer," 1874; and "Religion

1877. He was Canon of Truro from 1877 to 1884, and Vicar of All Hallows, Barking, from 1884 to 1895, when he was appointed Canon of Canterbury and Lady Margaret Professor. He has published: "The Persecution of Diocletian," 1875; "The Faith in the Gospel," 1887; "The Relation of Confirmation to Baptism," 1893; "The Conditions of Our Lord's Life upon Earth," 1896; "Thomas Cranmer," 1898. MASPERO, Gaston Camille Charles, Egyptologist, was born at Paris, June 24, 1846, and after a brilliant course of study at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, he entered the École Normale in 1865. Devoted early to erudite studies, he was appointed Teacher and Professor of Egyptian Archaeology and Philology, first at the School of High Studies in June 1869, then at the Collège of France, Feb. 4, 1874. He is Docteur-ès-Lettres since 1873. He is the author of "Essai sur l'Inscription Dédicatoire au Temple d'Abydos," 1869; "Une Enquête Judiciaire à Thèbes au Temps de la XX^e. Dynastie," 1872; "De Carchemis oppidi situ et Historiâ Antiquissimâ," 1873; "Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Orient," 1875; "De Quelques Navigations des Égyptiens sur les Côtes de la Mer Érythrée," 1879; "Les Contes Populaires de l'Égypte Ancienne," 1881; "Guide du Visiteur au Musée de Boulaq," 1883; "The Royal Mummies of Deir-el-Bahari," 1886; "Egyptian Archaeology," 1887; "Lectures Historiques," 1889, and a large number of important memoirs in the Revue Archéologique, Journal Asiatique, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology. He has been since 1878 the editor of the Recueil de Travaux relatif à la Philologie et l'Archéologie Égyptienne et Assyrienne. He has also edited works left in manuscript by Champollion and by Mariette Bey, and is directing the publication of the "Bibliothèque Égyptiologique," which contains the scattered and hitherto unpublished works of French Egyptologists. Among his recent publications should be mentioned "Études de Mythologie et Archéologie Égyptienne," and an enlarged edition of his "Histoire Ancienne," in three large volumes, the first and the second of which appeared 1894-96, and have been translated into English. On the death of Mariette Bey, Prof. Maspero was appointed Keeper of the Boulak Museum, and till his retirement in June 1886 he did much to promote archaeological discovery in Egypt. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour, Jan. 15, 1879, and promoted Commander Dec. 20, 1895. He was elected a Member of the Academy of Inscriptions in 1883; Hon. Fellow of Queen's College, and D.C.L. Oxon. in 1887. Permanent address: 4

MASSENET, Jules Émile Frédéric, a French composer, born at Montaud, May 12, 1842, is the youngest of twenty-one children of an engineer officer of the First Empire, who established himself as a blacksmith near Saint Étienne. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire under Laurent, Reber, Savard, and Ambroise Thomas, obtained the first prize for piano-forte in 1859, the first for fugue, and the Prix de Rome for his cantata, "David Rizzio," in 1863. He travelled through Italy and Germany, and made his début at the Opéra Comique, Paris, in 1868, with "La Grand-Tante." In 1878 he was appointed Professor of Composition at the Conservatoire, and elected a member of the Académie des Beaux Arts. He is the author of "Poème d'Avril," 1868; "Suite d'Orchestre," played at the Padeloup Concerts, 1868; "Poème du Souvenir," 1860; "Don César de Bazan," produced at the Opéra Comique in 1873; "Les Erinnyes," a tragedy by Leconte de Lisle, and "Marie-Madeleine," a sacred drama produced at the Odéon the same year; "Eve," an oratorio performed under the direction of M. Lamoureux at his concerts at the Sacred Harmony, 1874; "The Roi de Lahore," an opera, 1877; "The Virgin," a sacred legend performed at the Historical Concerts of the Académie Nationale de Musique, 1880; "Herodiade," an opera first performed at the Monnaie of Brussels, 1881, and in Paris at the Italian Opera in 1883; "Manon," an opéra comique, with the late Mme. Heilbronn in the principal part, 1883; "Le Cid," an opera, from Corneille's tragedy, 1885; "Esclarmonde," a romantic opera which had a run of 100 representations without interruption, 1889; and a large number of melodies which are now popular, pieces for the pianoforte, and a series of seven "Suites d'Orchestre," amongst which: "Scènes Pittoresques," "Scènes Alsaciennes," "Scènes Hongroises," "Scènes de Féerie," and "Scènes Napolitaines," and two cantatas, "Narcisse" and "Biblia." He has written also some entr'acts and stage music for Sardou's dramas "Theodora" and the "Crocodile." "Le Mage," a new opera of his, the words by Jean Richepin, was produced at the Grand Opéra in Paris; and a drama lyrique, adapted from Goethe's "Werther," was first performed in 1891. His opera, "Thais," was performed at the Paris Opera, Mar. 16, 1894, the libretto having been adapted from the novel of Anatole France; while in May of the same year a short one-act piece, "Le Portrait de Manon," was performed at the Opéra

Lombard. In 1865 he wrote the music for Chatterton's La Navarraise, which was produced at the Opera Comique.

MARSHY THOMAS GERRARD, better known as "Gerrard Marshy," was born of very poor parents in Jamaica Plain near Trinity in Westminister, Jan. 29, 1825, and received a scanty education at the British and Foreign School. At eight years of age he was working twelve hours a day in a coal-mining office. At the age of sixteen he went to London and found work as an errand-boy. At twenty-one he became editor of the Quarterly Review. The following year he was one of the secretaries of the "Christian Bazaar" and a personal friend of Charles Dickens and J. F. Maurice. In 1846 he published "The Labour of Love," translated and other poems, which entered its third edition at the end of the year. He then joined the staff of the Advertiser, and for ten years wrote a considerable number of its reviews. For several years he wrote on literary subjects in the Quarterly Review, at which in 1861 Mr. Marshy began to write a great number of numerous contributions on literary subjects and he has since delivered many lectures on such matters both in London and abroad. He has written a thorough American Anthology and the Advertiser twice from New York to San Francisco, where he is better known and more highly thought of than in England. Of late years he has written very little poetry, but has recently published his "Selected Poems," in 1 vol., under the title of "My Lyrical Life." He has also re-written his work in the "Secret Drama of Shakespeare's Sonnets," 1864-1866. His principal works are "Voices of Freedom and Lyrics of Love," 1851; "The Labour of Love," translated, Aug. 1854; "War Wreath," 1855; "Grafton Castle," 1856; "Havelock's March," Aug. 1856; "A Tale of Eternity, and other Poems," 1859; "Concerning Spiritualism," 1872; "A Book of the Beginnings," 1872; "The Natural Genesis," 1884; "My Lyrical Life," 1889; besides numerous contributions to English and American periodicals literature. Address: Alry, Norwood S.E.

MASSINGHAM, Henry William, editor of the Daily Chronicle, son of John Massingham, was born at old Catton, Norwich in 1826, and was educated under Dr. Jessopp at Norwich Grammar School, of which he was head boy when he left. He entered journalism as a member of the staff of the Norfolk News and of the Daily Press, Norwich, coming to London as one of the editors of the National Press Agency. He became assistant editor of the Star upon its foundation, and eventually succeeded

Mr. T. F. O'Connor as editor of the Star. Mr. Massingham joined the staff of the Daily Chronicle as a reader. He became successively literary editor, assistant-editor. He was the special representative of the Chronicle in the House of Commons from 1862 to 1868, when he was appointed editor of the paper. Massingham has contributed many reviews, and is author of a book on "London Daily Press." He is a member of the Order of the Merit, and three Daily Chronicle Office Presses.

MASSON, David, LL.D., LL.B., Historiographer-Royal, for Scotland, was Professor of Rhetoric and Literature in the University of Edinburgh was born Dec. 5, 1800. He studied at Marischal College in 1817 and in the University of Edinburgh. He began his literary career at the appointment as editor of a Scotch review newspaper, and remaining in 1821 in Edinburgh, where he remained about a year, contributed to Fraser's Magazine and other periodicals. He established himself in Edinburgh for two or three years as a writer for periodical publications, being having special engagements with the Masson Chambers, but returned to London in 1827, where he resided for the next years, editing and contributing largely to North's Magazine from 1828 to 1833 and was appointed to the Chair of English Language and Literature at Trinity College, London, on the resignation of the late Professor Clough in 1833. He retired from his post in October 1840, having been appointed Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh, a post from which he retired in 1850. He contributed numerous articles to the Quarterly National British Quarterly, and North British Review, to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and the "English Cyclopædia." His papers on Carlyle, "Latter-Day Pamphlets," "Dickens and Thackeray," "Rabelais," "Literature and the Labour Question," "Pre-Raphaelism in Art and Literature," "Theories of Poetry," "Shakespeare and Goethe," "Hugh Miller," and "De Quincey and Prose-writing," are the best known. His "Essays, Biographical and Critical; chiefly on English Poets," appeared in 1856, and have been reprinted, with additions, in 3 vols., 1874, one being entitled specially, "Chatterton: a Story of the Year 1770"; his classic "Life of John Milton, narrated in connection with the Political, Ecclesiastical, and Literary History of his Time," vol. i. was published in 1858, vol. ii. in 1871, vol. iii. in 1873, and vols. iv. and v. in 1878. MATHESON, Rev. George, D.D., F.R.S.E., was born at Glasgow, March 27, 1842, and educated at Glasgow Academy and the University of Glasgow. He lost his sight in youth by a gradual process of internal inflammation, beginning at the age of 18 months and recurring intermit- tently until his twentieth year, from which time he has been practically blind. Dur- ing this gradual decline he was able with his own eyes to acquire a knowledge of Latin, Greek, French, and German, and to learn penmanship. At the Glasgow Aca- demy he carried off the first prizes in every department. He then entered the Uni- versity of Glasgow in preparation for the ministry, and took a leading place in Classics, Philosophy, and Theology; car- ried off the first prize in the senior division of Logic, and the prize essay for the best specimen of Socratic dialogue in 1860; took the first prize for Moral Philosophy in 1861; graduated M.A. with honours in Philosophy in 1862, and B.D. in 1866. He was licensed to the ministry of the Church of Scotland in 1866; appointed assistant to Dr. Macduff of Sandyford Church, Glasgow, in 1867; chosen by popular election parish minister of Innellan in 1868; received in 1880 a unanimous call to succeed Dr. Cumming, London, but declined it; and was appointed Baird Lecturer for 1881, and one of the St. Giles' lecturers for 1882. His ministry in Innellan was highly popular, the summer visitors flocking to his church in great numbers. His preaching is in expression purely extemporaneous, though he keeps in his mind a carefully studied train of thought. In 1886 he was translated to the parish of St. Bernard's, Edinburgh. In 1879 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D.D. In 1890 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In 1886 he preached before the Queen at Balmoral with such acceptance that he was requested by Her Majesty to forward a printed copy of his sermon. On that occasion the Queen, taking into account his inability to appreciate a portrait, presented him with a small bust of herself. In Edinburgh he is known as the Poet-Preacher; and he has gathered round him a congregation from all parts. He is extremely popular with all denominations. As an instance of this, the first year after his translation to Edinburgh he was invited to deliver the inaugural address to the theological students of three different colleges—the Edinburgh University, the United Presbyterian Hall, and the Free Church College of Glasgow. He is a representative of the Broad-Church party, and the uniform aim of his teaching has been to discover a basis for the reconciliation of the conflicting creeds of Christendom. In 1897, through the pressure of accumulating work and the desire for more literary leisure, he associated with himself a colleague in the ministry of St. Bernard's, his duties in that sphere being now limited to the services of the pulpit. In 1892 he acquired a knowledge of the Braille system for the blind, which he has found of inestimable value. In preparing for the press his practice is to write each day in Braille what he deems an adequate amount, and on the following day to read off this in dictation to his secretary. In 1874 he published "Aids to the Study of German Theology"; in 1877, "Growth of the Spirit of Christianity," 2 vols.; in 1881, "Natural Elements of Revealed Theology" (Baird lecture); in 1882, "Confucianism" (in the St. Giles' lectures—"Faiths of the World"); and a devotional volume, "My Aspirations" (translated into German); in 1884, "Moments on the Mount," also a devotional volume, and in the same year a paper on "The Religious Bearings of the Doctrine of Evolution" (delivered at the Pan-Presbyterian Council, Belfast, and published in its Transactions); in 1885, "Can the Old Faith Live with the New?" or the problem of evolution and revelation; in 1887, "The Psalmist and the Scientist," or the modern value of the religious sentiment; in 1888, "Landmarks of New Testament Morality," and another devotional volume, entitled "Voices of the Spirit"; in 1890, a volume of hymns, entitled "Sacred Songs"; in 1891, "Spiritual Development of St. Paul"; in 1892, "Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions"; in 1895, "Searchings in the Silence"; in 1896, "Words by the Wayside" (translated into German, and greatly admired by the Queen of Roumania); and "Lady Ecclesia" (a religious allegory depicting the early history of the Church). In 1898, "Sidelights from Paine" the course of 1897 he contributed the biographies to the volume issued by Dr. Lyman Abbot of New York, "Prophets of the Christian Faith." Dr. Mathew has contributed to the Conte. British Quarterly, Modern Review, Review, Interpreter, Expositor, Good Sunday Magazine, and Sunday School (Philadelphia). His article in the temporary Review, entitled "The Order of the Character of Christ," has been printed in the United States; it has recently been translated into French and has also contributed to the revision of the "Scottish Hymnal" the beginning "O Love that wilt not let for the use of which he has received applications from all parts of the Address: 19 St. Bernard's Crescent, Edinburgh.

MATHEW, The Hon. Sir Charles, LL.D., Judge of the High Court of Justice, is son of Charles Mathew, Esq., of Lehenagh House, Cork, by Mary, daughter of James Hackett, of Cork. He was born at Lehenagh House, July 10, 1833, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was senior wrangler and gold medalist in 1860. He went to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in the first Term, 1854, having in the previous year obtained an open studentship. Mathew was a Member of the Eastern Circuit, when in March 1861 he was appointed by the Crown a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the Court of Justice. Shortly before this time he had acted as a member of a Committee on the subject of Costs Proceedings. His appointment to the Bench is one of the few instances in which a member of the Junior Bar became a Judge. He was knighted on his promotion, and was created LL.D., honoris causa, by the University of Dublin. He was a Catholic Judge appointed in England after the Catholic Emancipation, the two others being Mr. Justice ShEE and Mr. Justice HAYES. In 1892 Sir James Mathew presided, at Dublin, over the Tenants' Commission, which held its sittings on November 8. Against the proceedings of this Commission Mr. Mathew, Q.C., as representative of Lord Cairns, continuously protested, and ordered to withdraw by Sir James Mathew refused to hear counsel or to admit the methods of legal procedure in the Commission of witnesses. In this case he was generally supported by the other lawyers. In 1895 he was appointed commercial Court, which was justly by City men. He married, in 1861, h, eldest daughter of the Rev. Biron, vicar of Lympe, Kent. es: 46 Queen's Gate Gardens, nd Athenæum.

HEWS, George Ballard, M.A., eldest son of George and Harriet Mathews, was born in London, he was educated at Ludlow Grammar-school, University College, London, John's College, Cambridge. He a Professor of Mathematics in the ity College of N. Wales, 1884-96, published Part I. of a "Treatise Theory of Numbers," and, in con- with Professor A. Gray, a "Trea- Bessel Functions and their Appli- to Physics." He has contributed papers on mathematical subjects Messenger of Mathematics, the Quar- journal of Mathematics, and the Pro- of the London Mathematical Society. : 10 Menai View Terrace, Upper N. Wales.

HILDE, Princess Mathilde a Wilhelmine Bonaparte, or of the ex-King Jerome and Catherine of Wurtemberg, and to Napoleon III., was born at May 27, 1820, and married at e, Oct. 10, 1841, to the Russian Anatole Demidoff. This union was py, and in 1845 they separated by consent, her husband being com- py the Czar to allow the Princess ity of 200,000 roubles. From 1849 marriage of Napoleon III. she did ours at the palace of the President, the re-establishment of the Empire nprised amongst the members of erial family of France, and received e of Highness. After the war she ook up her residence in Paris, and ed giving the artistic and literary ons which have made her salon. The Princess, who was a pupil of ud, is an accomplished artist, and ibited some of her pictures upon occasions at the Salon de Peinture. ained honourable mention in 1861.

TTHEWS, Charles Willie, is son of the late Charles Mathews, don, comedian, and was born at ork on Oct. 16, 1850. He was d at Eton, and was called to the the Middle Temple in 1872. He is Western Circuit, and was appointed er of Salisbury in 1893. Address : Court Temple, E.C.

TTHEWS, The Right Hon. : See LLANDAFF, VISCOUNT.

MATTINSON, Miles Walker, is the son of Thomas Mattinson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and he entered as a student at Gray's Inn in 1874; he obtained the Bacon Scholarship in 1874, a first class Student-ship in 1875, a certificate of Honour in 1876, and was called to the Bar in 1877. He practices on the Northern Circuit, and was appointed Recorder of Black- burn in 1886. Mr. Mattinson is the author of "Law of Corrupt Practices at Elections," and "Selection of Precedents in Pleading." Address: 1 Garden Court, Temple, E.C.

MAUDE, Cyril, actor, was born in London on April 24, 1862. He is the son of Captain Charles Henry Maude, formerly of the 14th Madras Infantry, grandson of Viscount Hawarden, and the Hon. Mrs. Maude, daughter of the third Baron Sudeley. He was educated by Charles King- siey's great friend, Cowley Powles, and afterwards at Charterhouse, Godalming. He first went on the stage in the spring of 1883, playing at Denver, Colorado. He continued acting in the American and English provinces until the autumn of 1867, when he made his first London success in a play called "Racing," at the Grand Theatre, Islington. Shortly after- wards he distinguished himself in a play by Hamilton and Quinton called "Hand- fast." He was a member of the Gaiety Company during the autumn and winter of 1887. He joined the Vaudeville Com- pany in 1888, remaining there for three consecutive seasons. He then joined Mr. Wyndham's forces at the Criterion, and after shorter seasons with Henry Arthur Jones at the Avenue, with Mrs. Langtry at the Haymarket, at the Shaftesbury, and with Mr. Alexander in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" at the St. James's, he played for three years at the Comedy Theatre under Mr. Comyns Carr's management. He then played at the Lyceum, and in 1896, together with Mr. Frederick Harrison, he started in management at the Haymarket Theatre, and has up to the present date most successfully produced "Under the Red Robe," "A Marriage of Convenience," and "The Little Minister," the last-named piece breaking all the previous histori- cally successful Haymarket records. Mr. Maude is chiefly, and justly, famous for his impersonations of old men, which remind one of the most finished French acting. He was married in 1888 to Miss Winifred Emery (q.v.), and has two daughters, Mar- gery, born in 1889, and Pamela, born in 1893. Address: 33 Egerton Crescent, S.W.

MAUDSLEY, Henry, M.D., F.R.C.P., LL.D., third son of the late Thomas Maudsley, was born near Giggleswick, Settle, Yorkshire, Feb. 5, 1835, and educated at Giggleswick School and University College, London. He studied medicine at University College, and graduated M.D. at the University of London in 1857. Dr. Maudsley was Physician to the Manchester Royal Lunatic Hospital, 1859-62; was made Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1863; and was appointed Griston Lecturer to the College in 1870. He is a Fellow of University College, London; was lately Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in University College, and is Consulting Physician to the West London Hospital; and an honorary member of various learned societies in Paris, Vienna, Italy, and America. He has been President of the Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland, and was editor of the Journal of Mental Science. Dr. Maudsley is the author of "The Physiology of Mind," "The Pathology of Mind," "Body and Mind," "Body and Will," "Responsibility in Mental Disease," and "Natural Causes and Supernatural Seemings" (3rd edit., 1897). He is married to Ann Caroline, youngest daughter of the late John Conolly, M.D., D.C.L., Lawn House, Hanwell. Addresses: 12 Queen Street, Mayfair; and Heathbourne House, Bushey Heath, Herts.

MAUREL, Victor, French singer, was born at Marseilles, July 12, 1848. His father being an architect, he first studied painting, together with music, but he soon devoted himself entirely to the latter. He studied at the Conservatoire of his native town, and in Paris, where he carried off the two chief prizes in 1867. The next year he was engaged at the Opéra as understudy for the chief baritone singers. He preferred, however, Italian opera, and in 1869 he went to the Scala at Milan, to which he has often returned. Subsequently he travelled in America, Egypt, and Russia, returning to Italy in 1873, where he made a great success in Marchetti's "Ruy Blas" and Gomez's "Fosca." At the end of 1879 he was singing again at the Paris Opéra, and appeared in "Hamlet" and "Don Juan," 1880. The same year he created the part of Amonasro in Verdi's "Aida," and he is acknowledged to be one of the best interpreters of that composer's music. In 1883 he attempted to restore Italian opera in Paris, and took the Théâtre des Nations, where he was assisted by the best European singers. He produced there "Simon Boccanegra," by Verdi, Massenet's "Hérodiade," Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," and other classical works: but the enterprise was a ruinous one, and he was compelled to desist at the end of 1884. Mr. Maxwell known at Covent Garden, and he appeared in Verdi's "Falstaff," creating the part of the Scabard. He has recently lectured on musical operatic history, illustrated by songs of song. His Paris address is 1, Lesueur.

MAXIM, Hiram Stevens, C.E. born in the town of Bangor, Maine, U.S.A., on Feb. 5, 1840. His parents were also born in the State of Maine, his grandparents were born in the State of Mass., and were of English Puritan descent, and were among the early settlers of Bangor, Maine. He attended the common schools in the State of Maine, which only gave him the foundation of education, since which time he has been engaged in educating himself in the different branches of science with his work, which has brought him in contact with the best minds of the age. He always had a great liking for machinery, and while still a mere boy was operating almost any kind of machinery, and doing very good work. Before the twenty-one years he had served an apprenticeship and had also been foreman of the age of twenty-four he was in the machine works of his uncle, Levi S. at Fitchburg, Mass. Later on he became a mechanical draughtsman in Boston, also acted as foreman in the manufacture of gas machines and philosophical instruments. At twenty-eight he became draughtsman in a large steam engineering establishment in New York, where shortly after this he invented a gas locomotive headlight, which was of general use. He also did much for the manufacture of automatic gas machines for private houses out of the reach of gas. These machines were of large use, and are still being made in great quantities. In 1877 he took up the question of electricity, and was among the first to make dynamo-electric machines and electric lamps in the U.S.A. He was the first to make incandescent lamps by the process known as "Maxim," that is, a process of building up a lamp by welding and standardising the carbon electrically heating them in an atmosphere of hydro-carbon vapours. This process which rendered it possible to make incandescent lamps which would stand. Unfortunately for Mr. Maxim, this process, which is much used, has become common property. In 1881 he was at Paris the first electrical current transformer ever made for electric lamps, and a regulator maintained a constant power of current quite irrespective of the lamps in the circuit, and for this he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour by President Grévy. At the same time he took out a great many patents on electrical machinery, including incandescent lamps, search lamps, dynamo-electric machines, chemical cells relating to electricity, &c. In 1875 he took up the question of automatic

He believed that the recoil energy of a gun, which was only a disturbing element in firing, could be turned to use, and that the energy was always sufficient to perform all the necessary operations of loading and firing. Accordingly he made a species of a dynamometer with which he was able to measure the force of the recoil, the duration of the recoil, and everything relating to loading and firing a gun. This gave him the necessary data, and he made the first automatic gun in Hatton Garden in 1884. It was a nine days' wonder in London.

People at first would not believe it was possible for a gun to load and fire itself without any one touching it, and they could not see the gun, from the remotest of Wales downwards. Competitive trials with other guns operated by hand were made, and he exhibited his automatic gun in various countries, and received very large orders. The amalgamation with the Nordenfelt Company followed, and the management of the company was passed into the hands of a board of directors. Mr. Maxim writes characteristically of the guns: "I think it is now proved that these automatic guns have proved themselves superior to all others. In the late war with the Matabele they were used without a hitch, and it was these that saved the British column from annihilation. I have received many testimonials from the officers in command, and all attribute their wonderful success to the remarkable killing power of these guns, and they say that no soldier, no matter how brave, could stand up before

Six hundred rounds a minute from the barrel is rather too deadly a fire to stand up against; in fact, the slaughter was so great that the matter was seriously discussed in Parliament as to whether the British were justified in slaughtering the Matabele in such numbers." The French Government has adopted the fully automatic Maxim gun, using a barrel of 1½-inch bore and cast-iron explosive projectiles, and the British officers, in describing the fire, say it was literally a rain of iron. When the question of smokeless powder came to Europe Mr. Maxim was among the first to go to England to commence experiments, and he found that very excellent results could be obtained by combining gunpowder of the highest degree of nitration

—commonly called tri-nitrocellulose—and nitro-glycerine with a small percentage of a suitable oil. He found that the violence of the nitro-glycerine could be modified to any extent in this way, and with such a compound detonation was absolutely impossible. After a large number of experiments he produced most excellent results. The powder was found to be a stable compound not affected by heat and moisture, and to give very high muzzle velocities and low pressures without any smoke at all. This was the first compound of the kind ever made. About nine years ago he took up the question of aerial navigation, and made a large number of experiments with a view of ascertaining exactly how much power was required to perform artificial flight on the aeroplane system, the aeroplane being propelled by screws. The experimental apparatus was placed on the end of a very long rotating arm, so that the apparatus passed around a circle, the circumference of which was 200 feet. After this he commenced experiments on a very much larger machine to run in a straight line on a railway track; but it was first necessary to produce some kind of motive power which should be much lighter and stronger than anything else in existence, and this he has succeeded in doing. He has, he avers, been able to get a horse-power out of every 10 lbs. of motor, a result which, he thinks, has never been attained before. His large machine is driven by twin screws, and the thrust of these screws is over 2100 lbs. when the engines are running at full speed. The machine is provided with all sorts of instruments and tachometers, so as to measure the thrust of the screw, the speed and the lifting power of the aeroplane as the machine runs on the railway track. An inverted rail is provided on each side of the machine to prevent it from leaving the track. These are the first experiments that have ever been tried with a machine running in a straight line, and it is the first time that any considerable weight has been lifted by an aerial apparatus not provided with a gas bag. Mr. Maxim is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, Member of the Society of Arts, Member of the English Society of Mechanical Engineers, Member of the London Chamber of Commerce, Member of the Bridgeport Scientific Society, and has lately been decorated by the Sultan of Turkey with the Grand Order of the Medjidieh.

MAX-MÜLLER, The Right Hon. Professor Friedrich, K. M., LL. D., D.C.L., son of Wilhelm Müller, the German poet, was born at Dessau, Dec. 6, 1823. In 1850 he took one of his Christian

names as his surname. He was educated at the public schools of Dessau and Leipzig, attended lectures in the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin, and took his degree in 1843. He studied Arabic and Persian under Professor Fleischer; Sanskrit and comparative Philology under Professors Brockhaus, Bopp, and Ruckert; philosophy under Drobisch, Weisse, and Schelling. He published, in 1844, his first work, a translation of "The Hitopadesa," a collection of Sanskrit fables; and then proceeded to Berlin, to examine the collection of Sanskrit MSS. there. In 1845 he went to Paris to continue his studies under Eugène Burnouf, at whose suggestion he began to collect materials for an edition of the "Rig-Veda," the Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans, and the Commentary of Sāyanachārya. After copying and collating some of the MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris, he repaired to England in June 1846, in order to collate some more MSS. at the East-India House and the Bodleian Library. When he was on the point of returning to Germany he made the acquaintance of the late Baron Bunsen, then Prussian Minister in London, who persuaded him to stay in England, and on his and the late Professor Wilson's recommendation the East-India Company engaged him to publish the first edition of the "Rig-Veda" at their expense. In 1848 he settled at Oxford, where his work was to be printed, and the first volume of 1000 pages quarto appeared in 1849. He was invited by the University to give some courses of lectures on Comparative Philology, as Deputy Taylorian Professor, in 1850; was made honorary M.A. and member of Christ Church in 1851; was elected Taylorian Professor, and received the full degree of M.A. by decree of Convocation in 1851; was made a curator of the Bodleian Library in 1856; and elected a Fellow of All Souls' College in 1858. He was in 1860 an unsuccessful candidate for the Professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford, being opposed by a coalition of theological parties. From 1865 to 1867 he was Oriental Librarian at the Bodleian Library. In 1868 the University founded a new Professorship of Comparative Philology, and the statute of foundation named him as the first Professor. In 1872 he was invited to lecture in the reconstituted University of Strassburg as Professor of Sanskrit. He declined the appointment, but gave some courses of lectures there in 1872. As he refused to accept any salary, the University of Strassburg founded a triennial prize for Sanskrit scholarship in memory of his services. On Dec. 3, 1873, at the invitation of Dean Stanley, he delivered in Westminster Abbey a lecture on the

"Religions of the World," the only address ever delivered by a layman within the Abbey. In 1875 he wished to resign the Professorship at Oxford, intending to return to Germany, but the University requested him to remain at Oxford, and entrusted him with the editing of a series of translations of the "Sacred Books of the East," appointing at the same time a Deputy-Professor, Mr. Sayce. Fifteen volumes of this series have been published, of which the first contains Max Müller's translation of the "Upanishads" (1879), and the tenth his translation of the Dhammapada from Pali, 1881. In 1877 he delivered in the Chapter-House at Westminster a course of lectures on "The Origin and Growth of Religion, as Illustrated by the Religions of India" (3rd edition, 1891). These lectures were the first of those delivered under a bequest made by the late Mr. Hibbert. On Nov. 13, 1877, Professor Max-Müller was elected a delegate of the University Press. On Oct. 28, 1881, he was re-elected Curator of the Bodleian Library in place of the late Professor Rolleston. In 1882 he was invited by the University of Cambridge to give a course of lectures in India, specially intended for the candidates for the Indian Civil Service. These lectures were published in 1882, under the title of "India: What can it teach us?" In addition to the "Hitopadesa," he published at Königsberg, in 1847, "Meghadūta, an Indian Elegy," translated from the Sanskrit, with notes in German; in the Reports of the British Association, 1847, an "Essay on Bengali and its Relation to the Aryan Languages"; in 1853, an "Essay on Indian Logic," in "Archbishop Thompson's Laws of Thought"; in 1854, "Proposals for a Uniform Missionary Alphabet" and "Suggestions on the Learning of the Languages of the Seat of War in the East, with Linguistic Map," republished in 1855 under the title of "A Survey of Languages." In 1854 appeared his "Letter to Chevalier Bunsen on the Classification of the Turanian Languages" in Bunsen's "Christianity and Mankind"; in 1857, at Leipzig, "The Hymns of the Rig-Veda, together with text and translation of the Prātisākhya, an ancient work on Sanskrit Grammar and Pronunciation," in German; and "Buddhism and Buddhist Pilgrims"; in 1858, "The German Classics from the Fourth to the Nineteenth Century" (new edition, 1886), and "Essay on Comparative Mythology," in the Oxford Essays, translated into French by Ernest Renan; in 1859, "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature" (2nd edition, 1860), and "Lectures on the Science of Language," two series, delivered at the Royal stitution (last edition, 1888); a thoroughly revised edition of this work was published in 1891, under the title "The Science of Language, founded on Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution." He published a "Sanskrit Grammar for Beginners" (2nd edition, 1870). In 1868 he delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, "On the Stratification of Languages," and in 1870 a course of lectures "On the Science of Religion" at the Royal Institution, published in 1873 under the title of "Introduction to the Science of Religion," with "Two Essays on False Analogies and the Philosophy of Mythology" (last edition, 1882). In 1873 he gave another course of lectures at the Royal Institution on Darwin's Philosophy of Language, published in Fraser's Magazine. Most of his essays have been collected in "Chips from a German Workshop," 4 vols., 1868-75:—vol. i., Essays on the Science of Religion; vol. ii., Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs; vol. iii., Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities; vol. iv., Essays on the Science of Language. A selection of them was published under the title of "Selected Essays," 2 vols., 1882, followed by a later edition of four volumes. In 1869 he published, as a specimen, the first volume of his translation of the Rig-Veda "Hymns to the Gods, or the Storm-Gods." In 1873 appeared his edition of the two texts of the Rig-Veda (2nd edition, 1877), and in 1874 the sixth and concluding volume of large edition of the Rig-Veda with Max Müller's Commentary. A new edition of this work in four volumes, published at the expense of the Maharajah of Vizianagram, appeared in 1891. Since the year 1879 Professor Max-Müller devoted himself to the teaching of several Buddhist priests who had been sent to him from Japan to learn Sanskrit. This led him to the discovery that the oldest Sanskrit MSS. existed in Japan. With the help of these Japanese MSS. he published the Sanskrit originals of several Buddhist texts, such as the Sukhāvatīyūha (Journ. Roy. Asiatic Soc., 1880), the Vajracchedikā, in the Anecdota Bononiensis, 1881, while one of his pupils, Bunyiu Nanjio, compiled a complete catalogue of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists in China and Japan, published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1883. In 1881, in commemoration of the centenary of its first publication, he brought out a new translation of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, preceded by a historical introduction by Professor L. Noiré. Of the "Critique" done a second edition was published in 1897. In 1884 he published a volume of "Biographical Essays"; in 1887, "The Science of Thought"; in 1888, "Biographies of Words and the Home of the Aryas." In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer in Natural Religion in the University of Glasgow, and his first course of lectures was published in 1889, under the title of "Natural Religion"; the second course, "Physical Religion," in 1891; the third volume of lectures in 1892, "Anthropological Religion"; the fourth in 1893, "Theosophy, or Psychological Religion." He was re-elected Gifford Lecturer in 1891. Professor Max-Müller, who has contributed numerous articles to the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, the Times, and various literary journals of England, America, Germany, and France, is one of the eight foreign members of the Institute of France, one of the thirty Knights of the Ordre pour le Mérite, one of the ten foreign members of the Reale Accademia dei Lincei of Rome, and has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws and Philosophy at Cambridge, Dublin, Edinburgh, Bologna, and Budapest. In 1889 he was elected First President of the Aryan Section at the International Congress of Orientalists held in Stockholm and Christiania, and received the Northern Star (first class) from the King of Sweden. In 1892 he was chosen President of the International Congress of Orientalists held in London; in 1894 President of the Ethnological Section of the British Association. In 1893 he visited Constantinople, and was decorated by the Sultan with the Turkish Ordre pour le Mérite (Liakat) and the Star of the Medjidieh. On the fiftieth anniversary of his Doctorate (September 1893) the University of Leipzig presented him with an honorary Diploma, and on his seventieth birthday (Dec. 6, 1893) he received numerous addresses from academics and learned societies to which he belongs. In May 1896 he was made a member of the Privy Council, and in the autumn of the same year received the insignia of a Knight Com. of the Légion d'Honneur. He is also Knight Com. of the Corone d'Italia and of Albrecht the Bear. Professor Max-Müller published in February 1898 a volume of reminiscences, "Auld Lang Syne," which has passed through several editions. Permanent addresses: All Souls' College; and 7 Norham Gardens, Oxford.

MAXWELL, The Right Hon. Sir Herbert Eustace, 7th Bart., M.P., F.R.S., of Monreith, only surviving son of Sir William Maxwell by his wife Helenora, daughter of Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, 5th Baronet of Ardgowan, Lord-Lieutenant of Renfrewshire, was born on Jan. 8, 1845, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, which he left without taking a degree.

After leaving college he joined the Militia, and served for twenty-one years, finally retiring as a Major and Lieut.-Colonel. He succeeded his father in 1877, and was elected (Conservative) Member for Wigtownshire at the General Election of 1880, which county he continues to represent. He was a Lord of the Treasury in 1886-92. He has made friendly societies and provident insurance a special subject of study, and was Chairman of the Select Committee on Provident Insurance in 1885-87, and of the Select Committee on Friendly Societies in 1888-89. He has also presided over inquiries into Scottish Salmon Fisheries, Solway Fishings, and the Vole Plague in Scotland. In 1893 he was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on the Aged Poor, and in 1896-97 he was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1897. He is the author of numerous papers on Archæology and Natural History, besides miscellaneous essays and reviews; has written regularly for the following journals: Saturday Review, National Observer, Outlook, Literature, and Pall Mall Gazette; and has published the following books: "Studies in the Topography of Galloway," 1887; "Passages in the Life of Sir Lucian Elphin," a novel in two vols., 1889; "The Art of Love," a novel, 1890; "The Letter of the Law," a novel, 1891; "Meridiana—Noontide Essays," 1892; "Life and Times of the Right Hon. W. H. Smith (2 vols.), 1893; "Scottish Land Names," 1894; "Post Meridiana—Afternoon Essays," 1895; "A Duke of Britain: a Romance," 1895; "Rainy Days in a Library," 1896; "Robert the Bruce" (Heroes of the Nation Series), 1897; "Sixty Years a Queen," 1897; "Memories of the Months," 1897; "The Hon. Sir Charles Murray: a Memoir," 1898; "Salmon and Sea-Trout," 1898. He was appointed Rhind Lecturer in Archæology (Edinburgh, 1893), and is Director of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway and of London and Provincial Bank. He married, in 1869, Mary, daughter of Henry Fletcher Campbell of Boquhan, Stirlingshire, and has issue. Addresses: Monreith, Wigtownshire; 49 Lennox Gardens, S.W.

MAXWELL, Mrs. John, née Mary Elizabeth Braddon, daughter of Henry Braddon, solicitor (a younger son of a family long established in North Cornwall), and widow of John Maxwell, publisher, was born in Soho Square, London, in 1837, and, after a home education, became at an early age a contributor to periodical literature, writing sentimental verses, political squibs, and parodies for the poet's corner of provincial newspapers.

Miss Braddon has written a large number of novels, amongst which are Audley's Secret, "Aurora Fagonor's Victory," "John Marchmont's Legacy," "Henry Dunbar," "The Wife," "Only a Clod," "Sir Tenant," "The Lady's Mile," "Godwin," and "Run to Earth." Braddon conducted Belgravia, a magazine, to which she contributed the following novels: "Birds of Prey," "The Inheritance," "Dead S," "Fenton's Quest," and a variety of tales and novelettes. Her works are: "To the Bitter End," "Lucius Davoring," "Stranger grims," "Griselda," a drama in three acts, brought out at the Princess's Theatre, November 1873; "The Missing," "Lost for Love," and "Take Flood," 1874; "Hostages to Fortune," 1875; "Dead Men's Shoes" and "Haggart's Daughter," 1876; "Verdict," 1878; "The Cloven Hoof," 1879; "Just as I am," 1880; "Story of Barbara," 1880; "1881; "Mount Royal," 1882; "The Weed," "Ishmael," "Wyllard," "Mohawks," 1886; "Like and Unlike," "The Fatal Three," "The Day of Wrath," 1889; "One Life, One Love," "Gerard," 1891; "The Venetian," "All Along the River" and "Thomas Hirelings," 1893; "The Man," 1894; "Sons of Fire," "London Pride," 1896; "The Rule," 1897; "In High Places," "Rough Justice," 1898. Address: Field House, Richmond-on-Thames, near the New Forest.

MAY, Phil, who is now enabled to be able to earn as much as his father by his drawings, was born at Leeds, April 22, 1864, and is the second son of Philip May, engineer. He was educated at St. George's School, Leeds, and began his artistic career when he was twelve years old, at which time the Great Exhibition of 1862 was opened in Leeds, and he became acquainted with the son of the local scene painter and helped to mix the distemper. Mr. May used to sketch sections of the people's designs of costumes, and usually he designed comic dresses. This brought him many commissions for portraits, and after a year or two he was engaged by Frederick Stimpson to design the small parts and do six sketches for advertisement window bills. He was engaged to design the dresses for the Leeds pantomime in 1882, but declined to come to London as his finances at the time cost him twenty shillings. An aunt had been an actor there, and he sought his uncle he was next day despatched in to Leeds, but he left the train and walked back to London. Then ensued a season of great privation, and the first turn of good fortune he had was when he met the owner of a photograph shop, who took the drawing of Irving, Bancroft, and Toole, and published it. At last a drawing by one of Mr. Bancroft in Society brought him to the notice of the St. Stephen's Review, where he was set the task of designing a cartoon, illustrations, cover and so on for a Christmas number. A week was given him to do this in. He worked night and day and finished the whole in a week. He was employed on the illustrations of the Review till an agent came to Sydney to secure an artist. He went to the Colonies, and in fine air has found what he is, but he says the trials of his early days made him an artist. He has three years on the Sydney Bulletin. He is now an artist on the staffs of the Illustrated and Punch, for both which journals he continues to do notable and characteristic work. He has travelled for the Illustrated in America. Since 1892 he has published "Phil May's Annual," and has been given to the world "The Parson and the Painter," 1891; "Phil May's Gutter-press," "Phil May's Sketchbook," 1896. Address: Holland Park Road, Kensington, W.

MAY, William Charles, was born in London early in the fifties. After reading at South Kensington he proceeded to the Royal Academy Schools, where he gained a silver medal and honorable mention for the historical gold medal which that year was won by Mr. Thornycroft. For some time Mr. May was the pupil and assistant of the Signor Monti, sculptor of the celebrated group, "The Sleep of Sorrow and the Dawn of Joy," which attracted so much attention at the Great Exhibition of 1862. He has been more particularly successful as a portrait sculptor, but has executed a large quantity of ideal work. His finest work in marble was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1877, and is entitled "The Death of Panthea." An exceptional good engraving of it was published in Art Journal in 1884, and attracted much attention. A beautiful monument in Kensal Green Churchyard, Henley-on-Avon, illustrative of the words "He will give His angels charge over thee," was set up by this artist to the memory of the late R. A. Cosier, a well-known art patron, who was greatly admired on a representation of it being published in the Builder in 1886. Mr. May was the sculptor of the memorial subscribed for by the nation, erected on Plymouth Hoe in 1892, in commemoration of the tercentenary of the defeat of the Armada. His only son, Mr. Charles Albert Victor May, is also a sculptor.

MAYER, Michael Leopold, born Nov. 6, 1832, is a naturalised Englishman of Franco-German descent. With the exception of his boyhood, he has spent all his life in London, where, for the last quarter of a century, he has been one of the central figures of the theatrical world. Formerly a journalist, he became the lessee of the Princess's Theatre in 1875, and produced "Round the World in 80 Days," an adaptation by himself from Jules Verne's popular romance and play, "Le Tour du Monde en 80 Jours." It was a great success, and was followed by "Heartsease," an adaptation by James Mortimer of "La Dame aux Camélias," by the younger Dumas. It is, however, as the founder of a regular season of French plays that Mr. Mayer is best known to the present generation. After introducing to London the leading artists of the French stage, he, by arrangement with Mr. John Hollingshead, the then lessee of the Gaiety Theatre, brought over the whole company of the Théâtre Français for a season of six weeks, during which they performed about sixty of their most successful plays, both classic and modern. This was the first introduction to London of Madame Sarah Bernhardt. Since 1879 there has been a season of French plays every summer, and in some years a winter season too. All the leading French actors and actresses, including Mesdames Sarah Bernhardt, Hading, Bartet, and Chaumont; MM. Coquelin, Mounet-Sully, Got, Delaunay, &c., have performed in London under Mr. Mayer's management, and have at various times occupied the boards of the Lyceum, Gaiety, Adelphi, Comedy, Daly's, Royalty, Opera Comique, and the old Her Majesty's theatres. At the last-named, Mr. Mayer also gave a season of French grand opera; and at the Lyceum, about eight years ago, he gave a season of Italian opera, introducing to London for the first time Verdi's "Otello," with the whole of the famous orchestra and chorus of La Scala, Milan, under their late eminent conductor, Signor Faccio.

MAYNARD, Constance Louisa, was born in London on Feb. 19, 1849, her father belonging to the family of the Viscounts Maynard, and her mother being of French Huguenot origin. She was educated at home, with the exception of one year at Belstead, Mrs. Umphelby's School, near Ipswich, and entered Girton College, Cambridge, in 1872, where she successfully passed the Moral Sciences the Paris Exhibition of that year. From 1855 to 1870 he was a frequent contributor to the Daily News, Household Words, and All the Year Round. From 1866 to 1870 he was editor of the Weekly Register. In 1870 he went abroad as special correspondent of the New York Herald with the French Army. After Sedan he accepted an offer from the Daily Telegraph, and remained in France as special correspondent of that paper until the end of the war, and afterwards, for two years, as correspondent for the same journal at Paris and Versailles. He joined the staff of the Hour in 1873. In 1865 he published "The Bubbles of Finance," and in 1866 "The Profits of Panics," both being descriptions from life of the joint-stock windles of the day. In 1868 he published a small volume on "Turf Frauds"; in 1875, "Three Months after Date, and other tales"; and in 1886, "Sir William's Speculations." He has contributed to the Month, the Dublin Review, Belgravia, Fraser, Macmillan, the Whitehall Review, and other periodicals.

MEATH, Bishop of. See KEENE, THE MOST REV. JAMES BENNETT.

MEATH, Earl of, The Right Hon. Reginald Brabazon, P.C., was born in London on July 31, 1831, and is the son of the 11th Earl, whom he succeeded in 1887, and of Harriet, daughter of the late Sir Richard Brooke, of Norton Priory, Cheshire. He was educated at Eton and in Germany, and entered the Foreign Office, after competitive examination, in 1863. Five years later he exchanged into the diplomatic service, and was successively at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Berlin, The Hague, and Paris until 1873. For many years Lord Meath has been exceedingly busy as a public benefactor. As Lord Brabazon, in 1874, he became first Hon. Secretary of the Hospital Saturday Fund; in 1879 he was first Chairman of the Young Men's Friendly Society. In 1882 he founded and became first Chairman of the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association, which has for its object the acquisition and laying-out of open spaces, such as disused burial-grounds, the planting of trees, the provision of seats, the supply of children's gymnasiums, protection of commons and existing open spaces &c. He was first President of the British College of Physical Education, and of the Church Reform Association. His work on the London County Council, of which he was for some years an Alderman, has been important. He was first Chairman of the Parks Committee. Latterly he has turned his attention to Dublin city and county, of which he has been since 1898 Lord-

Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum. He is Hon. Colonel of the 5th Batt. R.D. Fusiliers. He married, in 1868, the only surviving daughter of the 11th Earl of Lauderdale. Addresses: 83 Lancaster Gate, W.; and Kilruddery, Bray, Ireland.

MECKLENBURG-STRELITZ, Grand-Duke of, Frederick William Charles George Ernest Adolphus Gustavus, a Lieut.-General in the Prussian army, born Oct. 17, 1819; married, June 28, 1843, the Princess Augusta Caroline Charlotte Elizabeth Maria Sophia Louisa of Cambridge, daughter of the late Duke of Cambridge. He succeeded his father, Sept. 6, 1860, and has one son, George Adolphus Frederick Augustus Victor Ernest Gustavus William Wellington, born July 22, 1848, who married a Princess of Anhalt in 1877, his son, Adolphus Frederick George, being born in June 1882.

MEDING, Johann Ferdinand Martin Oskar, novelist (Gregor Samarrow), was born April 11, 1829, at Königsberg, being the son of the Governor of East Prussia. He studied law in his native town, at Heidelberg, and at Berlin, from 1848 till 1851, when he became an advocate (Auskultator) at Marienwerder. At a later period he was employed in the magistracy and administration; and in 1859 he quitted the public service of Prussia and joined that of Hanover. He was sent on several confidential missions by the King of Hanover, George V., and was concerned as a Councillor of State in the passing of various religious and political measures. In 1863 he accompanied the King to Frankfort on the occasion of a Congress of the reigning Princes of Germany being held in that city. In 1866 he was sent on a mission to the Elector of Hesse, and subsequently went to Vienna with the deposed King of Hanover. He went to Paris in 1867 as the representative of the interests of the deposed King. In 1870 he gave in his adhesion to the Prussian Government, and, after residing two years in Switzerland and at Stuttgart, he settled in Berlin, where, keeping wholly aloof from politics, he began to write his personal reminiscences, in the form of novels, under the pseudonym of "Gregor Samarrow." His works include: "For Sceptres and Crown," a romance in five parts, 1872-76; subsequently "The Roman Expedition of the Epigoni," 1873; "The Dying Salutation of the Legions," 1874; "Heights and Depths," 20 vols., 1879-80; "Queen Elizabeth," 6 vols., 1881; "The Merchant's House," 1882; "A Difficult Choice," 1883; "Die Saxoborussen,"

1885; "Gippel und Abgrund," 1888; "Feenschloss," 1890; and "Der Weisse Adler," 1891. Under his own name Medding has published "Memoirs of Contemporary History" ("Memorien zur Zeitgeschichte"), vol. i., 1881; "A Biography of William I. of Germany, with additions and corrections by the Emperor himself."

MEDLICOTT, Henry Benedict, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., was born on Aug. 3, 1829, at Loughrea, co. Galway, Ireland, and is the second son of the Rev. Samuel Medlicott, Rector of Loughrea, and Charlotte, daughter of Colonel H. B. Dolphin, C.B. He was educated in France, Guernsey, and Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. at Trinity College in 1850, with diploma and honours in the School of Civil Engineering; and the M.A. degree in 1870. He became a Fellow of the Geological Society of London, 1856; of the Royal Society in 1877; and received the Wollaston Medal in 1888. He is honorary and corresponding member of several foreign societies; and was awarded the Indian Mutiny Medal for special service as a Volunteer. He was appointed to the Geological Survey of Ireland, 1851; transferred to the English Survey, 1853; to the Indian Geological Survey and as Professor of Geology at the Roorkee College of Civil Engineers, 1854; Director of the Geological Survey of India, 1876-87, when he retired. He has published "A Manual of the Geology of India" (in part, 1879); scientific papers in the Journal of the Geological Society, 1868; five "memoirs" and forty-four "records" of the Geological Survey of India series, 1860-87; and pamphlets entitled "Agnosticism and Faith," 1888, and "Evolution of Mind in Man," 1892. He married Louisa, second daughter of the Rev. D. H. Maunsell. Address: c/o H. S. King & Co., 65 Cornhill, E.C.

MELBA, Madame Nellie, prima donna (Mrs. Armstrong), was born in one of the Australian Colonies on May 19, 1865. As a little child of six she sang ballads to her own accompaniment at a public concert. Subsequently she was sent to Europe, and studied under Madame Marchesi in Paris. She first appeared on the stage in October 1887, singing in "Rigoletto" at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels. The year after she appeared before a London audience as Lucia at Covent Garden Opera House. She played Ophelia at the Paris Grand Opera in 1889, and also appeared as Juliet in London. Bemberg specially wrote "Elaine" for her, and she appeared in this opera in London in 1892. In 1893 she achieved great success in "Pagliacci" at Covent Garden. In 1894 she sang at Handel Festival, and has been much in the public in principal parts during operatic seasons. Address: Rue de St. Paris.

MELBOURNE, Bishop of. See THE RIGHT REV. FIELD FLOWERS.

MELDOLA, Professor J. F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the City and Guilds Technical College, City and Guilds London Institute, was born July 19, 1847, in Annette Crescent, Essex Road, Islington. His father, Samuel Meldola, was a proselyte and his grandfather, the Rev. Dr. Nap Meldola, Chief Rabbi of the Congregation of Spanish and Portuguese Jews in London (1805-28). An obituary notice of Chief Rabbi, who was widely esteemed for his scholarship by all denominations, appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine in 1828. The history of the family can be traced back without a break through eleven generations to Rabbi Isaiah Meldola described in the pedigree as "one of the sages of Castile," who died as head of the college at Mantua in 1340. Many members of the family have been distinguished divines, physicians, scholars, and writers on various subjects. Professor Meldola received his early education in private schools, first at Bristol, where his mother's family resided, and afterwards at Exeter and Bayswater. He received his scientific training at the Royal College of Chemistry in Oxford Street, having entered as a student under Dr. Edward Frankland in 1866. His first appointment was as Junior Assistant in the laboratory of the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., where he imbibed the taste for organic chemistry which he has since cultivated. From the laboratory in Pentonville Professor Meldola transferred his services to a firm of colour manufacturers at Brentford, where he acquired his first experience as a technologist, and in 1872 he again entered the Royal College of Chemistry, then transferred to the South Kensington establishment, in the capacity of Demonstrator under Dr. Frankland. In 1874 he became associated with Mr. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S., and assisted this well-known investigator in many of his researches in Spectrum Analysis. While in the laboratory of Mr. Lockyer, Professor Meldola was sent out by the Royal Society in charge of the Nicobar Island branch of the expedition commissioned to make observation on the total eclipse of April 5, 1875. Two years after his return to England he again gave his services to chemical technology, having accepted in 1887 the post of scientific chemist in one of the leading coal-tar colour factories in this country. In the laboratory of this firm at Hackney Wick worked at chemical research for eight years, and made many discoveries of scientific and technical importance which are associated with his name. He was appointed to the professorship which he now holds in 1885. The list of chemical papers embodying the results of original investigations carried out by Professor Meldola, alone, or by him in conjunction with his assistants and students, is a very long one, numbering about seventy memoirs and notes contributed to the recognised scientific periodicals in England and Germany. Although his work has been chiefly in the domain of chemistry, he is also an enthusiastic naturalist and geologist, and much of his early work was in connection with the application of the Darwinian theory to the problems of animal coloration. His first published scientific papers were on biological subjects, and he has contributed about thirty entomological notes to various natural history journals. He is still warmly interested in the subject, and devotes most of his leisure time to collecting and observing in the field. English biologists owe to Professor Meldola the translation of Weismann's "Studies in the Theory of Descent" (1881-82), a work which first brought into notoriety in this country the eminent German biologist, and which also embodied in the form of notes many of the translator's own observations. In 1886 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and he belongs to most of the scientific societies in London and to many foreign societies. He is one of the original Fellows of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Physical Society, and an Hon. Member of the Institute of Brewing. He has been Secretary, three times Vice-President, and was President of the Entomological Society, 1896-97; he is also Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, a Member of Council of the Royal Society and of the British Association, and was President of the Chemical Section for the Ipswich Meeting in 1895. In connection with the British Association he has done much in helping to promote and consolidate the work of the local scientific societies throughout the country, and is Chairman of the Corresponding Societies Committee of the Association. His tastes as a field naturalist led him to take an active part in 1880 in the formation of the Essex Field Club, of which he was the first President, and has since been a warm supporter. In addition to his official addresses and scientific papers published by the Club, he (in conjunction with Mr. W. White) drew up an exhaustive "Report on the East Anglian Earthquake of 1884," which forms the first volume of the Club's Special Memoirs. His experience as a technologist as well as a scientific teacher has enabled Professor Meldola to take an active part, outside his immediate professional duties, in the Technical Education Movement. In 1886 he read a paper on "The Scientific Development of the Coal-Tar Colour Industry" before the Society of Arts, for which he was awarded a silver medal. In 1891 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures on Photographic Chemistry before the Society of Arts. Professor Meldola's name has long been familiar as a reviewer in the pages of Nature and other journals, although much of his writing in this category is anonymous. For many years he was associated with Land and Water as natural-history correspondent in the time of Frank Buckland and John Keast Lord. He has contributed articles on special subjects to the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," to "Watt's Dictionary of Chemistry" by Morley and Muir, and to "Thorpe's Dictionary of Applied Chemistry." He is the author of a little manual of "Inorganic Chemistry," Murby, 1874; the "Chemistry of Photography," Macmillan, 1889; and "Coal, and what we get from it," published by the S.P.C.K. in 1891. Prof. Meldola has acted as an Examiner for the University of Cambridge. He was the recipient of a Jubilee Medal from the Queen in 1897. Professor Meldola married, in 1866, Ella Frederica, daughter of Dr. Maurice Davis, J.P. Permanent address: 6 Brunswick Square, W.C.

MELDRUM, Charles, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., was educated at Aberdeen University, and entered the Bombay Educational Department in 1846. He was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the Royal College, Mauritius, in 1848, was in 1851 Secretary and one of the Founders of the Meteorological Society of that colony, and in 1862 was appointed Government Meteorological Observer and in 1875 Director of the Royal Alfred Observatory. In 1876 he was elected F.R.S. For ten years he was Member of Council of the Government of Mauritius. He is an authority on sun-spots and rainfall, and these form the subject-matter of several reports made by him to the British Association and to Nature. Address: 25 South Parade, Southsea.

MÉLINE, M., French statesman, was born in the Vosges in 1838. After a distinguished career as a student he was called to the Paris Bar, and espoused journalism as a writer for the Opposition newspapers under the Empire. He entered the Chamber in 1876, and held the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture in the Ferry Cabinet from 1883 to 1885. He was elected President of the Chamber in 1889, and became best known as a Protectionist leader, and by taking a prominent part in opposing the income-tax scheme of the Bourgeois Ministry. In 1896, on the fall of M. Bourgeois, M. Méline succeeded, after several vain attempts by other statesmen, in forming a Cabinet composed wholly of Moderates. The Ministry's declaration of policy expressed a desire to re-establish the indispensable harmony of the two Houses, promised fiscal reforms, agricultural legislation, and announced that the various labour bills would be at once pushed forward. During 1896 M. Méline received a deputation on tariffs, and stated his views with regard to Agricultural Depression, Free Trade and Protection, Bimetallism, Sugar Bounties, and on Rentes Taxation. In October 1897 the Premier made an important statement on his policy, which he defined as being "neither revolution nor reaction." "The best way," he said, "of combating Socialism was to do all that was practicable for the amelioration of the lot of the masses, who would soon judge between empty flatterers and sincere friends." On the General Elections, which were held on Sunday, May 9, 1898, M. Méline's Government was returned by a majority of from 12 to 15, but this support was anything but certain, as was shown by the narrow election to the temporary Presidency of M. Deschanel (q.v.), the Government's nominee. We cannot enter here into the Dreyfus imbroglio, in which the Cabinet became involved, as so many points were thereby raised, but suffice it to say that during his whole period of office the War Minister, General Billot (q.v.), supported the action of his predecessor, General Mercier, and refused to allow the case to be re-opened. The Government was short-lived, for soon after the inaugural address of M. Deschanel, who had previously been definitely elected Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies, M. Méline resigned office, notwithstanding the urgent representations which the President made against that decision. After some delay M. Brisson (q.v.) succeeded in the task of forming a combination of a distinctly Radical tinge.

MELLOR, Right Hon. John William, M.P., D.L., Q.C., is the eldest son of the late Right Hon. Sir J. Mellor, and was born on July 26, 1835. He completed his education at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and in 1857, when he took his B.A. degree, was eighth Senior Optime (M.A. 1860). In 1860 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and went on the Midland Circuit. He took silk in 1875, and became a Bencher in 1877. He was Recorder of Grantham from 1872 to 1874, which he subsequently represented in Parliament from 1880 to 1886; the latter year became Judge-Advocate-General. He was sworn of the Privy Council in the same year. In July 1882 he was elected Member of Parliament for the Gladstonian Liberal interest for the Sowerby Division of Yorkshire, in 1885 was appointed Chairman of Committees of the House of Commons, and subsequently, until 1895, presided over many of the contentious discussions which arose out of the Home Rule Bill debates. In 1895 he was re-elected Liberal Member for the Sowerby Division of Yorkshire. He is a J.P. and D.L. for the county of Somerset, and J.P. for Devon. He married, in 1860, Caroline, daughter of the late Charles Paget, M.P., of Ruddington Grange, Notts. Addresses: 68 St. George's Square, S.W.; Culmhead, Pitminster, Somerset.

MELVILLE, George Wallace, American naval officer, was born in New York City, Jan. 10, 1841. He was educated in his native city, and entered the United States Navy as third assistant-engineer in July 1861, with rank of midshipman, and has passed through all the intermediate grades to that of Chief Engineer, with the rank of Lieut.-Commander, which he attained in 1881. He was engineer of the Jeannette, which sailed from San Francisco, July 8, 1879, under command of Lieutenant George W. de Long, on a voyage of polar exploration. After the sinking of the Jeannette, on June 13, 1881, Engineer Melville accompanied De Long over the ice to Bennett Island, and, after the party had divided, he commanded one of the Jeannette's boats on the passage to one of the mouths of the Lena delta, which was reached Sept. 17, 1881. He now searched for Lieutenant de Long and his party, and obtained from the natives some of his records; in the following spring he explored the delta thoroughly for traces of the missing party, and about the end of March the remains of de Long and his eleven companions were found. On his return to the United States he was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineers with the rank of Commodore, Aug. 8, 1887, and Engineer-in-Chief of the U.S. Navy. He published "In the Lena Delta," 1885; and has had an important part in constructing the modernised U.S. Navy.

MENDELÉEF, Dmitri Ivanovich, Russian chemist, was born at Tobolsk, Feb. 7, 1834. He was educated at the Pedagogic Institute at St. Petersburg, and then came to Paris, where he was one of the most brilliant pupils of Wurtz. He then studied the chemical properties of petroleum in the mines of Caucasia and ylvania. In 1866 he became Professor of Chemistry in the University of Petersburg. He may be said to have a wide reputation, and to be familiar with every section of chemical science; his law of chemical combination his name is chiefly known. This is led to the discovery of more than one chemical element. His "Principles of Chemistry" was published in Russian in 1860, and was translated into English in 1862. He is a D.C.L. of the University of Oxford, and a member of the Académie des Sciences, of Paris. Address: Université, Petersburg.

MENDÈS, Catulle, a French author, born at Bordeaux on May 22, 1841. He established in Paris La Revue poétique, in which he published "Le d'une Nuit," a drama in verse, resulted in the author being condemned to two months' imprisonment and of 500 francs, although he was still a young man. At that time he belonged to the group of artistic poets called "Les Symbolistes," whose aim was the careful selection of words and the introduction of new rhythmic innovations. His works include: "Philomèle," a volume of poems, 1864; "Hesperus," a poem, "La Colère d'un Franc-tireur," "Lettre Guerrière," 1871; "Contes," "Les Soirs Moroses," "Le de Minuit" (poésies), 1872, republished in 1876 under the title of "Poésies"; 11 novels, "Les Folies Amoureuses," "Les Mères Ennemies," 1880; "La Adventure," 1881, in conjunction with Jules Leclercq; "Le Rose et le Noir," "Le Roi vierge," "Zo' har," "La re Maitresse," reckoned his masterpiece in realistic fiction; "Méphisto," 1890; "Le Chemin du Cœur," and various pieces for the theatre, as "Le Capitaine Fracasse," 1870, Gauthier's romance; "Le Châti-ment," 1887; and "Fiammette," 1889. In 1898 Madame Bernhardt produced a version of "Medea" at the Renaissance.

M. Mendès has been described as good second in almost every department of literature, but first in none. In style he has written after the manner of Victor Hugo, Le Conte de Lisle, Théodore de Banville, and Verlaine, and only just falls below the level of each of these masters. His short stories are only inferior to those of the others, although a good deal better; his realistic novels only below those of the society scandals only below those of the others. He turns out an enormous quantity of work yearly. On Dec. 6, 1898, his play "Fiammette" was produced with success at the Odéon. It had previously been seen at Antoine's Théâtre Libre, and had been refused by the Français. In 1866 he married Mlle. Judith Gautier, from whom he has since been legally separated as the result of a somewhat famous trial. Address: 44 Rue Lafayette, Paris.

MENELEK II, Emperor of Abyssinia and King of Shoa, G.C.M.G., was born in 1843. He succeeded to the throne on the death of Johannes II., with whom he had been constantly at war. In 1877, as King of Shoa, Menelek was totally defeated in a great battle, and it was currently reported that he had been killed by Johannes. Upon the death of the latter in 1889, Menelek assumed the chief power in Abyssinia, and was crowned in November as Negus Negusti, or King of Kings in Ethiopia. For some time after his accession many attempts were made by various chiefs to overthrow him, but he defeated all their efforts. In the first year of his reign Menelek concluded a treaty with Humbert, King of Italy, which practically placed Abyssinia under the protection of the Italians, who, at the same time, agreed to lend him 4,000,000 francs. In consequence of disputes in connection with this treaty, known as the Ucciali Treaty, and the continual encroachments of the Italians, especially from the direction of Erythraea, war broke out in 1895. Menelek raised a large army and inflicted a serious reverse upon the advance-guard of the Italian forces at Ambalagi in December. Many minor engagements followed, with the result that the Negus made propositions for peace, which, however, the Italian Government declared were such as they could not accept. They included a demand for the retirement of the Italians from positions recently occupied by them, and a modification in the Treaty of Ucciali. On Feb. 24, 1896, Menelek concentrated his forces near Adowa, where he was at once pursued by the Italian troops under the command of General Baratieri (q.v.). A general advance upon the Abyssinian position was made on the 29th, the Italians attacking in three columns; but the difficulties of the ground enabled Menelek to concentrate his forces on the left column, and the other columns being unable, owing to the hills and to bad generalship, to succour it, a terrible defeat was sustained by the whole force. The Italians lost in killed and wounded over 7000 officers and men. After this reverse, which caused the fall of the Italian Ministry under Crispien, the idea of an Italian Protectorate over the country was abandoned, and in May General Valles was appointed with full powers to treat with the Emperor Menelek for the settlement of all questions at issue between Italy and Abyssinia, with the result that a treaty was signed recognising the absolute independence of the latter country. The defeat inflicted by the Abyssinian monarch upon a European Power greatly increased his prestige, and he at once renewed his negotiations with France, which had lapsed since 1891, in which year he had presented President Carnot with a decoration and two tame lions. He also sent a mission to St. Petersburg to obtain the Czar's sympathy for the Abyssinian Christians. In February 1897 he concluded a commercial treaty with the French, who despatched a Mission under M. Lagarde to Menelek in the following March. The Mission was very cordially received. In the early part of 1898 a Mission under Sir Rennell Rodd was sent to Abyssinia to negotiate a treaty between Menelek and England, with very successful results. The British Mission met with a handsome reception, 20,000 warriors being present and several Europeans, among whom were Colonel Léontieff, the head of a Russian mission, and Prince Henri d'Orléans, who were endeavouring to induce Menelek to thwart British efforts in the Soudan. By a curious coincidence the average height of the officials composing the British Mission was over 6 feet, and their striking appearance made a great impression. The more important points of the treaty, which was ratified by the Queen in July, were the settlement of the frontiers of the British Somali Protectorate; the keeping open to British commerce the caravan route between Zeila and Harar, and the prevention of the transit through Abyssinia of arms and ammunition to the Mahdists, whom Menelek declared to be the enemies of his country. In a letter to the Queen he expressed the following sentiment: "The treaty of peace which is now between your Government and our Government, we hope it will increase in firmness and last for ever." In April Lieutenant Harrington was sent to the Emperor's capital as Diplomatic Agent. During October 1898 it was reported that Ras Mangascia, Governor of Tigre, had shown signs of rebellion against Menelek's supreme authority. A large expedition was sent against the Ras, but upon negotiations being opened the difficulty was amicably arranged. The etiquette of the Abyssinian Court is very minute in its regulations, and among other usages distasteful to Europeans is that of kissing the ground on approaching the royal presence. Menelek, however, is careful not to offend foreign susceptibilities, and he never requires a stranger to go through any ceremony to which he objects. He is gifted with a capacious memory, and is very energetic, rising at 3 A.M., and devoting the first hour of the day to prayer. From four to six he works with his grand-uncle, who is practically his only minister, and publicly administers justice to all the affairs of State personally. He is very kind to his people and to all. Since his accession to the throne he has done much to consolidate his empire and has very largely promoted commerce. Menelek claims to be a direct descendant of Solomon by the Queen of Sheba, descent is recorded on the coins he had struck at the Paris mint some years ago. The large silver piece bearing the name of Menelek, with the inscription "Kings of Ethiopia, 1887." The Emperor has a lion crowned and the words "Lion of the House of Judah conquered," this being the motto of the House of David. On the edge of the coin are the words, "Ethiopia stretches her hands to God alone." His Queen Taitou.

MENPES, Mortimer, artist, born in South Australia, where, at the age of nineteen, he came to London to follow his father. He chose the career of an artist and studied at South Kensington, under Poynter and Sparkes, winning the Poynter prize for the best drawing done at the English art school. He then spent three years in picturesque Britain, and in 1880 exhibited etchings at the Royal Academy, which were much praised for their excellence. In 1885 he became a member of the Society of British Artists, and in 1887 went out to Japan, where he returned with that unique collection of brilliant Japanese views for which he is famous. These were exhibited at the Royal Academy, well's in 1888. Mr. Mortimer Menpes also twice visited India, and has been in Venice, exhibiting the results of his artistic studies and appreciating the notable exhibitions, held respectively in 1891 and 1892. In the Academy he exhibited, in the Black and White Room, "Osaka, Japan," and in 1899 a water-colour and three pictures in black and white. He has written in the Magazine of Art. Address, 10, St. James's Gardens, S.W.1.

MENZEL, Adolf Friedrich, German historical painter, born Dec. 8, 1815, at Breslau, died Dec. 26, 1890. He studied art at the Academy in Berlin. After his father's death he had to support himself and first began by selling his drawings. In 1836 he made an attempt in oil painting, "The Players," followed by several other pictures; but from 1839 to 1842 he devoted himself to illustrations to Kugler's "History of Frederick the Great." Since celebrated as a painter of life-like and accurate scenes of Frederick; his first work of the period was the "Frederick the Great," by the "Flute Concert at 1852; "Frederick's Reception," and "Frederick at the church," 1856; "Blücher on at Waterloo," 1858; and

All these paintings are of strong realism, great characterisation, and for the with which every detail is between 1861 and 1865. Menning at the "Coronation of in 1871 he completed the statue from Berlin"; and 1875 he worked at "Modern representing a scene from the 18th, and one of the most and remarkable of all his is later works are the excursions to Kleist's "Broken d a clever Society picture, Supper," besides a large pen-and-ink drawings and

He has been since 1856 in the Berlin Academy, and is a member of the Academies of Vienna and London. Member of the English Academy, the Royal Water-Colour Society, the Académie des Beaux-Arts of Paris. In 1855 a successful exhibition of his works was held in Paris. His illustrations of Frederick the Great published in 2 vols. 4to. He was knighted of the Legion of Honour, and his eightieth birthday celebrated at Berlin in 1895 with rejoicing.

Marius Jean Antonin, a sculptor, was born at Toulouse, France. He was a pupil of Falguère and studied at the École des Beaux-Arts. In 1868 he obtained the first prize, and the same year he exhibited a medallion at the Salon. In 1870 he went to Rome a plaster statue of "Delilah," a bust; and in 1871 "The Fictitious," a group in bronze, attracted attention, and was purchased by the Government. "The Genius of France," intended for the grand staircase of the Louvre, was exhibited in 1875 as a plaster model of the bas-relief of the tomb of Michelet in Père Lachaise; and a statue of Napoleon III. in 1880. Besides these he has executed portrait busts, including of medallions. M. Mercié was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1874, and made a Commander in 1889. In 1887 the Institut voted him their biennial prize of 20,000 francs, and the Académie des Beaux-Arts elected him one of their members in 1891. He is Professor of Drawing and Sculpture at the Beaux-Arts. His Paris address is 15 Avenue de l'Observatoire.

MERCIER, Auguste, French general, and former Minister of War, was born at Arras, Dec. 8, 1833. He entered the École Polytechnique in 1852, and came out second two years after. He entered the Artillery, and by successive promotions attained the rank of General of Division in 1889. He was distinguished during the campaign of Mexico for his bravery at the siege of Puebla, for which he was decorated with the Legion of Honour. During the Franco-Prussian War he took part in the battles round Metz, and was made prisoner after the capitulation of that city. After the conclusion of peace he took part in the battles of the Communes, and subsequently was appointed to the command of the artillery at Angoulême. In 1888 M. de Freycinet called him to the War Office, and in 1889 he took a conspicuous part in the manoeuvres around Beauvais. Mercier being appointed to the command of the 18th Corps d'Armée at Bordeaux in 1893, the Prime Minister, M. Casimir-Perier, offered him the Ministry of War in December of the same year, which he accepted, and kept throughout the Dupuy Ministry. His tenure of office was distinguished for indefatigable work and firm decision. This was noted in his attitude with regard to M. Mirman, who was, at one and the same time, a soldier and a member of Parliament. He absolutely refused to treat him differently to other soldiers. But a much more famous case was that of Captain Dreyfus, in which he asserted the absolute guilt of the accused, and in spite of all outside influence retained his obstinate opinion and dragged him before the Council of War, which condemned him to life-long penal servitude and to public degradation from his rank (Dec. 22, 1894). On the fall of the Dupuy Cabinet in January 1895 General Mercier was appointed to the command of the 4th Corps d'Armée at Le Mans, in place of General Zurlinden. In 1895 he was promoted a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.

MEREDITH, George, novelist and poet, born in Hampshire on Feb. 12, 1828, and educated partly in Germany, was brought up to the law, which he quitted for literature. He has written "Poems," 1851; "The Shaving of Shagpat, an

Arabian Entertainment," a burlesque prose poem, 1855; "Farina, a Legend of Cologne," 1857; "The Ordeal of Richard Feverel," a philosophical novel, bearing upon the more serious questions of moral education, 1859; "Evan Harrington," a serial tale of modern life, first printed in Once a Week, and republished in a separate form, 1861; "Modern Love: Poems and Ballads," 1862; "Emilia in England," 1864; "Rhoda Fleming," 1865; "Vittoria," 1866; "The Adventures of Harry Richmond," 1871; "The Egoist," a novel, 3 vols., 1879; "The Tragic Comedians," 2 vols., 1881, a novel founded on the life and tragic fate of Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Socialist; "Poems and Lyrics of the Joy of Earth," 1883; "Diann of the Crossways," 1885; "Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life," 1887; and "A Reading of Earth," 1888. His novel, "One of Our Conquerors," was published in the Fortnightly Review in 1890, and "Lord Ormont and his Ancestress" appeared in the summer of 1894. This was followed in 1895 by "The Ann-ty Marriage," which is supposed to introduce as hero the late Robert Louis Stevenson; "The Case of General Opie and Lady Cowper," "The Tale of Chloë," and "The House on the Bench"; and in 1897 by "Comedy, and the Uses of the Comedie Spirit," recently translated into French by M. Henry Havray. In 1892 appeared the "Empty Purse," a volume of poems, and in the autumn of that year Mr. Meredith was elected President of the Incorporated Society of Authors in succession to Lord Tennyson. A style of much obscurity and an excess of epigram have long prevented Mr. Meredith's works from becoming popular with the average novel-reading public, but among the cultured and critical few he has always been regarded as the first of our living novelists. Strong expression was given to this sentiment of admiration on Feb. 12, 1898, when he completed his seventieth year, and was presented with a letter of congratulation signed by thirty of the first of English men and women of letters. The letter ran as follows: "Some comrades in letters who have long valued your work send you a cordial greeting upon your seventieth birthday. You have attained the first rank in literature after many years of inadequate recognition. From first to last you have been true to yourself, and have always aimed at the highest mark. We are rejoiced to know that merits once perceived by only a few are now appreciated by a wide and steadily growing circle. We wish you many years of life, during which you may continue to do good work, cheered by the consciousness of good work already achieved, and encouraged by the prospect of a hearty welcome from the sympathetic readers." Addressed at Surrey.

MERIVALE, Herman Charles of the late Herman Merivale, Under-Secretary of State for India, and afterwards for India, was born at London, Jan. 27, 1809, and died at Harrow and at Bampton, Devon, where he graduated B.A. in 1831, was called to the Bar at the Temple in 1834, and served the Western Circuit and Evesham. He afterwards practised at the Council on Indian Affairs. He was late Lord Beaconsfield's Secretary, served on the Boundary Commission for North Wales. From 1871 to 1873 he was editor of the Annual Register. Following to ill-health, was called up the legal profession. Since then has occupied himself with literature for a time with politics. His plays are the plays "All for Her," "The me Not," 1879; "The Queen," "Fédora" (from Sardou, 1881), and "Joan," 1885 (written in conjunction with his wife, Mrs. Merivale, as to the comedies of "The British Don," and "The Whip-Hand," "Faucit of Balliol," 1882; "The Blues," a fairy tale, 1884; "The grim, and other Poems," 1883; and other Poems," 1884; besides other dramas and various essays, verse, &c., in All the Year Round, Charles Dickens), and in weekly and monthly magazines. "Ravens blank-verse tragedy, played by Mr. on the subject of Scott's novel, The Bride of Lammermoor," was produced 1891. Address: Society of Authors.

MERRIMAN, Henry Seton SCOTT, HUGH S.

MERRIMAN, The Hon Xavier, the son of the Bishop of C. town, was born in 1841, at Street, S. shire, and was educated at Roi Diocesan College and Radley. He went out to the Cape in 1849, and upon a political career in 1869, a member of the Molteno Ministry 1875 to 1878, and in 1881, an missionary of Crown Lands, Cape Hope, from 1875 to 1878, and from 1884 to 1884. In 1890 he was the T. General of the Colony, and retained office till 1893. He was a member of the Cape Jameson Raid Committee, married to Agnes Vincent, sister of Vincent, of the Cape Legislature. Shellenbosch District, The Cape.

MERRITT, Wesley, American soldier, born in New York in 1836, and graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1860, when he entered the service as a brevet Second Lieutenant of the 1st Cavalry. In 1862 he became Captain of the 1st Cavalry; was on the staff of General Sherman when he made the raid on Petersburg, Va., in April 1863, and in the same year he was promoted Brigadier-General of Volunteers. From 1863 to 1864 he commanded a division of cavalry in Central Virginia, and then General Sheridan, becoming General of Volunteers and also receiving promotions on the roster of the Regular Army. At the battle of Five Forks and other engagements, and at Appomattox, he greatly distinguished himself. He became Lieutenant-Colonel in the Regular Army on July 1, 1866, and has since served in various parts of the country, chiefly against the Indians. He was made Colonel, July 1, 1887; Brigadier-General, April 16, 1887; Major-General, April 25, 1895. In 1898 he was sent to San Francisco to raise a force with which to operate against the Spanish in the Philippine Islands, and in August, shortly after his departure, received the surrender of Manila. He was appointed Governor of the Islands.

MERRY, The Rev. William Walter, rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, the late Walter Merry, Esq., and son of William Merry, Esq., for many years Deputy-Secretary for War, and of Elizabeth Mary Byrch, was born in Cheltenham, whence he proceeded to Oxford, scholar of Balliol, in 1853. Dr. Merry received in the first class in Classical Studies in 1854, and in the second in Lit. Humaniores in 1856. He received the Chancellor's Prize for the Latin in 1858; and in the next year he was elected Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, an appointment which he held until his election in 1884 to the place of rector of that society, in succession to Mark Pattison. In 1861 he was elected to the Vicarage of All Saints, City of Oxford, in the patronage of the college. In 1880 Dr. Merry was elected to the office of Public Orator of the University of Oxford, and was elected one of the Select Preachers, 1889-90; and in 1883-84 he was elected by the Bishop of London as one of the preachers in the Chapel Royal, all. Dr. Merry has taken a prominent part in teaching and examining at the University, having frequently filled the post of Classical Moderator. The editions of classical authors which he has undertaken for the Clarendon Press are well known and widely circulated; the principal ones are "Homer, Odyssey," i.-xii., 2nd edit., 1886; the same for Schools, 50th thousand; and a series of the plays of Aristophanes. In 1891 he published "Selected Fragments of Early Roman Poetry." In 1862 he married Alice Elizabeth, only daughter of the late Joseph Collings, Jurat at the Royal Court of Guernsey. Address: Lincoln College, Oxford.

MÉTÉNER, Oscar, French journalist, was born at Sannois, Jan. 17, 1859. He was educated by the Jesuits, and at eighteen entered the Artillery. After his term of service had expired he became Secretary to one of the Commissaires de Police in Paris, where for six years he collected valuable materials for his subsequent tales and articles. He retired from this in 1889, and took up journalism, becoming a contributor to the Gil Blas, the Journal, and other popular Parisian prints. He has published several of his short stories in volume form, and has written a biography of the singer Aristide Bruant (q.v.). His Paris address is 55 Avenue de Neuilly.

METHUEN, Lord, Lieut.-General Paul Sanford Methuen, K.C.V.O., C.B., C.M.G., J.P., 3rd Baron, son of the 2nd Baron and of Anna, daughter of the Rev. John Sanford, was born at Corsham Court on Sept. 1, 1845. He was educated at Eton, and in 1862 was appointed Cornet in the Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry. He entered the army as a Lieutenant in the Scots Fusilier Guards in 1864, becoming Captain in 1867 and Adjutant to his regiment, and in 1881 he was promoted Colonel. In 1873 he was sent on special service to the Gold Coast, and the following year was appointed Brigade-Major of the Home District. Lord Methuen served in the second phase of the Ashanti War of 1874, and was present at the battle of Amoaful, being awarded a medal with clasp. In 1877 he was appointed Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, and during the same year was chosen to be Military Attaché at Berlin. He held that office until 1881, when he returned to England, and became Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Home District. In the Egyptian War his Lordship served on the staff, and was also Commandant of the Troops at Headquarters. He was present at the engagements of Tel-el-Mahuta and Kassassin, and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was mentioned in despatches and was awarded a C.B. and the Osmanieh of the third class. In 1884 he served with the Bechuanaland Field Force under Sir Charles Warren, in command of Methuen's Horse, obtaining a C.M.G. and mention in despatches. For several years after he was Adjutant-General in South Africa. He was promoted Major-General, 1890, and held the command of the Home District until 1897. In 1897 he accompanied the Tirah Expedition on the Indian Frontier as Press Censor, and was present at the actions against the Afridis and Orakzais. General Lord Methuen succeeded to the title and estates in 1891. He is the Hon. Colonel of the Third Battalion of the Duke of Edinburgh's Wiltshire Regiment, and J.P. for Wilts. Lord Methuen is co-heir to the Earldom of Scarsdale. He married, in 1884, Mary, daughter of William A. Sanford, Esq., of Nynehead Court, Somerset, and has issue, his heir being the Hon. Paul Sanford, born September 1886. Addresses: 32 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Corsham Court, Chippenham.

METSCHNIKOFF, Elias, F.R.S., Russian zoologist and embryologist, was born in the province of Kharkoff, May 15, 1845. He was educated at Kharkoff, Giessen, and Munich, and was appointed Professor of Zoology at Odessa in 1870. He resigned this post in 1882, in order to devote himself to private researches into the anatomy of the invertebrates. His chief studies have been published either in the Bulletins of the Academy of St. Petersburg, or in German scientific journals. His chief books are: "Embryologische Studien an Insecten," 1866; "Über die Metamorphosen einiger Seethiere," 1869; "Zur Entwickelungsgeschichte der Kalkschwämme," 1874; "Embryologie der Doppelfüssigen Myriapoden," 1875. Address: Institut Pasteur, Paris.

MEURICE, François Paul, French novelist and dramatist, and brother of the famous jeweller, was born at Paris in February 1820. He had a brilliant career at the Collège Charlemagne, and one of its most momentous episodes was a resolve to play Victor Hugo's then new drama, "Hernani," at the annual school festival. The late Auguste Vacquerie and himself went as delegates to the poet to beg for permission to play his drama. The interview made such an impression on Meurice that ever afterwards he remained the fidus Achates of the great man, and more or less sacrificed his future to serve him. In 1842 his first play, "Falstaff," in collaboration with Gautier and Vacquerie, was represented at the Théâtre Français, and in 1848, a one-act piece, equally from Shakespeare, entitled "Le Cq Paroles," and an imitation of the "gone" of Sophocles. His best collaboration, however, is that of a translation of "Hamlet," still the best acting version of it in French. In 1848 he became of the Evenement, Hugo's democratic and in 1851 he was imprisoned months for a famous article by Victor Hugo on the death penalty appeared in that journal. In founded, with others, the Rapport, a journal of the Hugo family; he contributed chiefly the literary dramatic criticisms. To him as Hugo intrusted the publication of the definitive edition of his works appeared from 1880 to 1885, in 46. In addition to the plays named has written, "Fanfan la Tulipe," "Beaux Messieurs de Bois-Dore," "La Brésilienne," "Quatre Vingt 1881; "Le Songe d'une Nuit after Shakespeare, which was re at the Odéon in 1886. In Oct M. Meurice achieved a great producing at the Théâtre Français called "Struensee," which was unaided composition of his play theatre, although he was nearly the time. His Paris address Fortuny.

Dogmatic Necessity," 1883, to the National Churches series, "History of the Church in Spain," 1892, and has been editor for twenty-one years of the Foreign Church Chronicle and Review. During the year 1886-87 he was Principal of Codrington College, Barbados. He married Marion, daughter of G. Danvers, in 1853. Address: Blething Rectory, Aylsham, Norfolk.

MEZIERES, Alfred Jean Francois.

French writer and politician, was born at Henon, in the department of the Moselle, Nov. 18, 1820, and is the son of Professor Louis Mezieres, who died in 1871. He was educated at the College of Metz, and at Sainte Barbe, in Paris, and entered the Ecole Normale in 1845. In 1850 he went to Athens, and on his return became a Professor in the Lycee of Toulouse in 1851, in which year he took his degree of Doctor of Letters. In 1854 he became Professor of Foreign Literature at Nancy, from which he was promoted to a similar post at the Sorbonne in 1862. He represented the University of France at the Jubilee of Shakespeare in 1864, and of that of Dante in the next year. During the Revolution of 1848 he had taken part in the repression of the rebels, and had been afterwards in General Bress's and in the Franco-Prussian War he served in a engineering regiment. In 1874 he was elected a member of the French Academy, in succession to Saint Marc Girardin. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Chamber for the department of the Meurthe-et-Moselle. As a politician, his chief work was to advise the Government concerning International Conventions on Literary and Artistic property. His chief works were: "Etude sur les Œuvres Politiques de Paul Paruta," 1855; "Shakespeare, ses Œuvres et ses Critiques," 1861, which was crowned by the French Academy; "Préfaceurs et Contemporains de Shakespeare," 1864; "Dante et l'Italie Nouvelle," 1865; "Petrarque," 1867; "Goethe, les Œuvres expliquées par la Vie," 1872-73; and "Vie de Mirabeau," 1891. He is also a collaborator of the Temps and the Revue des Deux Mondes. He was promoted an Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1877. His Paris address is 4 Rue Cambon.

MIALL, Louis C., F.R.S., Professor of Biology in the Yorkshire College, was born at Bradford in 1841, and is the late Rev. J. G. Mial, who died in 1891, and was one of the outermost ministers in England. He was in 1871 Curator and Secretary of the Philosophical and Literary Society. In 1876 became Professor of Zoology in the Yorkshire College. He has written memoirs and papers on many subjects, including: "On the Paleontology of the Labyrinthodonts," Naturalist, 1877-78. "Anatomy of the Ear with F. Greenwood," 1879. "The Acc. of the Cockroach," with F. M. 1886. He has also published papers on Insect Anatomy, and is author of "Lessons from Nature," "History of Aquatic Insects," "Last Year," "Thirty Years of Science," various educational articles, especially with elementary science, admitted to the Royal Society in 1891. He is Examiner in Biology and Zoology in the Science and Art Department. He was President of the Zoological Society of the British Association at Leeds, married to Emily, daughter of Peureux. Address: Craig Road, Leeds.

MICHAEL, Grand-Duke Y

vitch, brother of the late late Emperor of Russia, and fourth son of late Czar Nicholas I., was born 27th, 1832. He is a General in the Russian Army, and was in the Caucasus and head of several regiments of artillery, cavalry, and in the war between Russia and Turkey. Grand-Duke Michael had the command of the army of the Caucasus under III. afterwards appointed President of the Council of State, married, in August 1857, Olga F. formerly Cecilia Augusta, daughter of the late Leopold, Grand-Duke of Saxe. She died in April 1891. Their children are the Grand-Duke Nicholas, born in 1859.

MICHEL, Louise, a French

revolutionary leader, was born at Valenciennes in 1830, and first distinguished her political and musical talents, was recognised and encouraged by Victor Hugo. In 1856 she opened a singing school in the Quartier Montmartre. Paris. In 1870 took an active part with the Commune, and was made a member, and though she eloquently defended herself before the judges, she was sentenced to transportation for life. On the outbreak of the Commune in 1880 she returned to Paris; and, continuing to take part in Communist assemblies, she was

-d in 1883, and again in 1886. She resided in London for some years, making regularly in Hyde Park and at Anarchist Club off Tottenham Court Rd, where she can always be heard. She is regarded now as the leader of the all party of English Anarchists, and variably uses opportunities of preaching gospel on the occasion of any public demonstration in the Parks or Trafalgar Square. A forcible, eloquent, and striking speaker, she has also published her "Memoirs," and written a novel with the originally characteristic title of "The Robes of Society."

MICKLETHWAITE, T., born at Thirfield in 1843, of an old Yorkshire family long settled at Hopton, near Mirfield, was educated privately and at King's College, London. He was articled to the architect Gilbert Scott in 1862, and commenced practice in 1869 with Mr. James Stirling, a fellow-pupil, and since then he has been largely employed, chiefly upon church work and on private houses. In 1885 he was appointed Architect to Westminster Abbey. He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1870, and on the Council first in 1880, and now Vice-President. He is author of "Modern Parish Churches, their Plan, Design, and Furniture," 1874; and of many papers on archaeological and antiquarian subjects printed in Archæologia, Archæological Journal, and elsewhere. Address: 15 Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MIDDLETON, Viscount, William, 1st Viscount, D.L., J.P., eldest son of the late William John Brodrick, Dean of Exeter, and afterwards 7th Viscount Middleton, and his second wife Harriet, daughter of the fourth Viscount Middleton, was born at Castle Rising, Norfolk, Jan. 1830, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851, and M.A. 1857. He was called to the Bar in 1855, and was re-elected as member for Mid-Surrey in 1868. He was High Steward of Kingston-on-Thames, 1874-93, and is J.P. and D.L. for Surrey, and J.P. for Cork. In 1876 he was selected on the Royal Commission to inquire into Noxious Gases, and in 1878 on the Commission of the Sale and Exchange of Lands. Lord Middleton has for many years been known as a prominent member of the Conservative party in the House of Lords and was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Surrey in 1896. He married, in 1853, Augusta, third daughter of the 1st Baron de Launceston in 1853. Addresses: Peper Harrow, Godalming; 18 Eaton Square, W.; The Grange, Middleton, Ireland.

MIERS, Henry Alexander, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.C.S., Waynflete Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, was born May 25, 1858, at Rio de Janeiro, being the son of Francis Charles Miers, C.E., and Susan Mary, née Fry. He was educated at Eton College, where he was a King's Scholar from 1872 to 1877, and Geographical Society's Gold Medalist in 1875; and at Trinity College, Oxford, of which foundation he was a Classical Scholar from 1877 to 1881. After serving as a first-class assistant in the Mineral Department of the British Museum from 1882 to 1895; and as Instructor in Crystallography in the Central Technical College, S. Kensington, 1886-95; he was elected Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, and Fellow of Magdalen College in December 1895. He became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1896; he is also a member of the Mineralogical Society, of the Society of Arts, of the Mineralogical Society of France, and of the Geological Society of Sweden. He is editor of the Mineralogical Magazine; Recorder of the Geological Section of the British Association; and a member of Council of the Geological Society. He has published numerous memoirs and articles on mineralogical subjects, and, in conjunction with Dr. R. Crosskey, a small book on "The Soil in Relation to Health." Address: Magdalen College, Oxford.

MILAN (OBRENOVITCH) I., ex-King of Servia, grandson of Ephraim Obrenovitch, brother of Milos, and consequently second cousin of Prince Michael, who is noticed in previous editions of this work, was born Aug. 10, 1854, at Jassy, of a Moldavian mother, who had married the only son of Prince Ephraim. He was adopted by Prince Michael, who had no children by his marriage with Julia Hunyadi, and was sent by him, in 1864, to Paris to be educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. The youth's studies were interrupted by the events of 1868, and the assassination of Michael Obrenovitch. Hastening to Servia, he was proclaimed Prince in July of that year, the government of the country being entrusted, during his minority, to a Council of Regency, consisting of Messrs. Blaznavatz, Ristic, and Garrilovics, three able and patriotic men, who continued the liberal and reforming policy begun by Michael III. Their regency terminated with the coronation of Prince Milan IV.; but M. Ristic continued to possess the confidence of the Prince, who was only eighteen years of age when he was crowned in Belgrade cathedral, Aug. 22, 1872. On Jan. 12, 1876, Prince Milan issued a proclamation stating that "the instruction in the Turkish province has found its way to the frontier of Serbia and along the whole boundary by an oral band" which had suspended him "to place the people under arms." Shortly afterwards (June 29) he sent what may be called a threatening letter to the Grand Viceroy, and then he formally proclaimed (June 30) that he intended to put his arms to repose of Bosnia and Herzegovina in order to secure the liberation of the Slavonic Christians from the yoke of the Porte. On July 2 a joint declaration of war was sent by the Prince of Serbia and the Hospodar of Moldavia to the Turkish Government, their troops crossing the frontier at the same time. The Prince departed from Belgrade July 24 to assume the command of the Serbian troops in the field; but he soon returned to his capital August 15, and appointed the Russian general, Tchernayeff, to the command of the Serbian forces. On September 1, an important battle under the walls of Alexinatz resulted in the complete defeat of the Serbian army. The Great Powers then intervened, but the negotiations for the suspension of hostilities were delayed by an ill-advised step which Prince Milan, at the instigation of General Tchernayeff, was induced to take. On September 16 he was proclaimed King of Serbia at Deligrad, although upon the general expression of disapproval which followed, his Highness appeared disposed to disclaim any active share in the performance. War broke out again, and the Serbian army, though largely reinforced by Russian volunteers—men as well as officers—was ignominiously beaten. On Oct. 31, the Turks captured the town of Alexinatz, and on the following day Deligrad was captured, thus leaving the road to Belgrade completely open. A peace was then concluded between Turkey and Serbia on favourable terms to the latter. When, however, Russia made war upon Turkey, Prince Milan saw an opportunity of gaining complete independence, and a proclamation of the Serbian Government, dated Dec. 14, 1877, made known that the Serbian army was immediately to cross the Turkish frontier, which they did on the following day, under the command of Generals Lesjanin and Benitzki. After the close of the war the independence of Serbia was recognised, and its boundaries defined by the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878). Prince Milan married, Oct. 17, 1875, Natalie, daughter of the late Russian Colonel Keschko, by his wife Pulcheria, Princess of Stourdza. Serbia was proclaimed a kingdom under King Milan I., on March 6, 1882. On October 23, in that year, as the King and Queen were entering the cathedral of Belgrade, Natalie, widow of Lieut.-Colonel Marko who had been shot for a conspiracy five years previously, shot Majesty, missing him and striking the thigh a woman who was not. The attempted assassination took place just after the King's return from his winter he had gone to visit the ruler of Bulgaria. Uninterrupted friendly intercourse did not last long. King Milan declared war on Prince Alexander on the ground of the unlawful union of Bulgaria and Rumania. His army had some success first, but within a fortnight was back, defeated and crossed the Serbian frontier. Prince Alexander lived like a hero; but it is not that King Milan ever exposed himself under fire. King Milan has a Crown Prince Alexander, born Oct. 1874, in whose favour he abdicated March 6, 1889, in consequence of troubles arising out of his quarrel with Queen Natalie. In January 1890 that he had become reconciled Natalie caused much rejoicing. The young King of Serbia recalled Milan to Belgrade in January 1891, and him govern his subjects, who, for whole of that year, were torn by dissensions. Milan, despite his age, to the contrary, arrived at Belgrade January 21. In March the divorce between the ex-King and Natalie was annulled, and in April Alexander stored his father and mother, and to their constitutional members of the royal house. The decree of Cassation, on May 17, declared the divorce null and void, but on May 17 the Court itself was done away with. Constitution of 1888 suspended of that of 1869.

MILLS, Professor Edmund James, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.I.C., F.C.S., son of Charles Frederick and Mary Anne Mills, and a lineal descendant of the Osmonds of Lowmandale (Upwouman, Devonshire), was born in London, on Dec. 8, 1840. When he was a year old his parents removed to Cheltenham, and it was at the ancient Grammar School of that town that he received his early education, which was partly classical and partly scientific in character. It was doubtless at this school that he imbibed his strong predilection for chemistry. In 1858 he was elected to a provincial scholarship at the Royal School of Mines, London, where he studied his favourite science under the late Prof. A. W. von Hofmann. In due course (1861) he took the Technical Diploma of the School. In the same year he became assistant to the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., for whom he conducted various investigations in connection with organic chemistry. He was appointed in the following year to the newly-established chemical tutorship at Glasgow University, and remained there about three years, teaching and investigating. On his return to London he held an assistantship in the Laboratory of University College, 1866. He next accepted, 1867, the superintendence of the private laboratory of the late Sir Charles Taylor, Bart., where he remained seven years, busy with preparations and original investigations. In 1875 he was appointed to the Chair of Technical Chemistry founded in connection with the then Anderson's University, Glasgow, by the late Mr. James Young, F.R.S. of Kelly; this position he still retains. He took the degree of B.Sc. (first division) Lond. in 1863, and D.Sc. in 1865. At one time he held the post of Assistant Chemical Examiner in the London University. He was elected F.C.S. in 1862; F.R.S. in 1874; was one of the founders of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Physical Society of London; and is a Member of the Athenæum Club. Dr. Mills is the author of a long series of original memoirs, the first of which was published in 1860. Their general drift has been towards the dynamical, rather than the material, aspect of chemistry; and in putting to one side the atomic theory, he has deliberately adopted a position among the minority of living scientists. Of his leading memoirs may be mentioned a group upon Nitro-compounds, and another relating to Statical and Dynamical Ideas in Chemistry; an investigation of Electrostriction and Chemical Repulsion, of the fundamental phenomena of which he has been the discoverer; a theory of boiling-point and melting-point which has led to very simple and accurate mathematical expressions connecting these phenomena with chemical composition; and a theory, equally simple in character, of the formation and numerics of the elementary bodies. As a chemical technologist he has also published a variety of researches clearing up doubtful issues, adding new points of view, and, in general, demonstrating that chemical technology is a science of measurement. "Destructive Distillation," a little book first published in 1877, is now, in its fourth edition; "Fuel and its Applications" (of which Mr. F. J. Rowan is joint-author), a very exhaustive and copious work, appeared in 1889. In 1867 Dr. Mills married Amelia, daughter of the late Mr. William Burnett, of London, by whom he had sole issue in 1869, Edith Mary, who died in 1884. A volume of poems in his child's memory appeared in 1895. Permanent address: 60 John Street, Glasgow; and Athenæum.

MILNE, John, F.R.S., F.G.S., Hon. Fellow of King's College, London, Order of the Rising Sun, Japan, &c., was born in Liverpool on Dec. 30, 1850, his father being John Milne, of Milnrow, and his mother Emma Twycross, daughter of James Twycross, of Wokingham. He was educated in Rochdale; at the Collegiate College, Liverpool; King's College, London; and at the School of Mines. He is a Fellow of the Geological, Geographical, Physical, and other learned societies in England, and an Honorary or Corresponding Member of several Societies in Europe, and in 1877 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. For services rendered to the Japanese Government in 1895 he received the Third Class Order of the Rising Sun. After working with mining engineers in Cornwall and Lancashire, Mr. Milne spent a short time at the Mining School in Freiberg, from which he visited mining districts in Central Europe, on behalf of Cyrus Field, Sir James Arrol, and others, two summers were employed in collecting information respecting mineral resources in Newfoundland. Labrador was visited, and at Funk Island Milne was successful in finding and bringing to this country one of the largest collections of skeletons of the Great Auk which have hitherto been made. In 1874 he accompanied Dr. Beke's expedition to North Arabia, the objects of which were the verification of certain points in Biblical geography, and to determine the position of Mount Sinai. In 1875 he was employed as a mining engineer and geologist in the Japanese Government. After travelling slowly across Russian Siberia, Mongolia, and some 1000 miles of China, to visit mines and other objects of interest on his journey, he reached Japan in 1878. He has given much attention to the earthquakes and volcanoes, the study of which has been numerous in Japan. A Seismological Society was established which issued 20 volumes in 1881. A chair of Seismology was founded at the Imperial University of that country, and a bureau to control some 968 existing observing stations, and a Geological Committee for the investigation of earthquakes and volcanic phenomena. A practical result of this work has been the establishment of rules and formulæ in connection with construction, the objects of which are to mitigate the effects of earthquakes, and it is satisfactory to note that these have been adopted in Japan and other countries. It having been established that the vibrations resulting from earthquakes originate in any one point on our globe can be recorded at any portion of the same, Mr. Milne, as Secretary of a British Association, is now engaged in establishing a network of globe the necessary instrument for observations. In the Isle of Wight records about seventy earthquakes, some of which have occurred recently. This novel departure in seismological investigation is already throwing light on the physical character of the interior of our globe. By it the foci of subterranean disturbances which sometimes interrupt telegraph cables, are being located, and generally it promises to add greatly to our knowledge of the globe we live on. He has published: "Earthquake and Seismology," 1888; "The Mining Book," 1894; "Crystallography," about 150 papers on Seismology, Mineralogy, Mining (Transactions of the Seismological Society, British Reports, Transactions of the Royal Society). In addition to the countries mentioned, Mr. Milne has visited Iceland,

: Kuriel Islands, North Korea, Arneo, the Australian Colonies, New Zealand, and various parts of the United States and Canada. Adde Hill House, Newport, Isle of

MILNER, Sir Alfred, G.C.M.G., Governor of Cape Colony and High Commissioner for South Africa, is the only son of Charles Milner, M.D., of Giessen, and Mary, daughter of Major-General Eady, Governor of the Isle of Wight. He was born in 1854, and was educated in Germany, at King's College, and at Balliol College, Oxford, matriculated in February 1873. His distinguished scholastic career, as a distinguished Exhibitioner in 1875, successively Hertford, Craven, Derby scholar. He obtained a B.A. in Lit. Hum. when he took his degree in 1877. He was also elected a Fellow of New College. After his appointment to the Bar at the Inner Temple, he was for some years engaged in legal work, chiefly as a member of the Pall Mall Gazette. In 1880 he unsuccessfully contested the Liberal interest. He was appointed Private Secretary to the Marquis of Salisbury, Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1887, but relinquished that office in 1889 to become Under-Secretary of Finance in Egypt in succession to Sir Elwin Palmer who had been Financial Adviser to the Khedive Ismail. He succeeded Sir Edgar Vincent, Recorder of London, and Lord Cromer he had opposed for the four years that he held office in Egypt to study the influence of which English influence has been exercised in that portion of Africa. He resigned his post in the Egyptian service, and upon his return to England was appointed Chairman of the Inland Revenue. In the year 1890 he published his great work, "Egypt," which much increased his reputation, and is admittedly the best con-tribution upon the subject. In 1897 Sir Alfred Milner was appointed to succeed Lord Rosmead as Governor of the Cape, and at the same time was created a G.C.M.G. The appointment received with universal satisfaction was felt that the judgment and ability of Sir Alfred had shown in the various positions he had occupied made him a man likely to deal with the questions of South Africa with ability and success. He arrived in Cape Town in May and was very cordially received, and in the following month made a Colonial tour. At the end of June 1899 he met President

Kruger in conference at Bloemfontein, the chief subjects of discussion being the position of the Transvaal Uitlanders.

MILTON, Viscount, William Charles de Mure Wentworth Fitzwilliam, J.P., M.P., was born in Canada in 1872, and is the eldest son of the late Viscount Milton, M.P., and Laura, daughter of the late Lord Charles Beauclerk. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge. Subsequently he became a Lieutenant, and is now Captain in the 4th Battalion of the Oxfordshire Militia Light Infantry. He was Aide-de-Camp to the Marquis of Lansdowne, Viceroy of India, from 1892 to 1893, and has travelled extensively in India. He was returned as Liberal Unionist member for Wakefield in 1895, and is the youngest member of the House of Commons then elected. He hunts his own pack of hounds, is a trustee of the Ascot Grand Stand Fund, and takes considerable interest in mining engineering. He is J.P. for West Yorkshire and co. Wicklow, Lord Milton is next heir to Earl Fitzwilliam. He married, in 1896, Maud Dundas, daughter of the Marquis of Zetland. Addresses: 46 Eaton Square, S.W.; Carnew Castle, Wicklow.

MILVAIN, Thomas, Q.C., LL.M., Chancellor of the County Palatine of Durham and Sudbury, son of the late Henry Milvain, North Elswick Hall, Northumberland, was born on May 4, 1844, and educated at Durham School and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. He took his degree of LL.B. in 1866, and of LL.M. in 1873, and was called to the Bar in June 1869. He joined the Northern Circuit in 1870, and when that was divided in 1876, elected to go the North-Eastern Circuit, of which he is now one of the leaders. He was made a Queen's Counsel in 1888. At the General Election of 1885 he succeeded in gaining the representation of the City of Durham in the Conservative interest, and was till the next General Election the only Conservative representative of the county in Parliament. He again sat for the same constituency from 1886 till 1892, when he was defeated. In 1892 he was appointed Recorder of Bradford, and also Chancellor of the County Palatine of Durham and Sudbury. While in Parliament in 1889 he introduced the Corporal Punishment Bill, which passed its second reading by a majority of 194 against 126, but owing to the pressure of other business could not be further proceeded with. He was afterwards more successful with a Bill for remedying the grave injustice of the law of slander in reference to imputations on the chastity of women, when he succeeded in obtaining the passing of the Slander of Women Act, 1881. He seconded the Address to the Throne in 1892. He unsuccessfully contested Cockermouth in 1895. He married Mary, third daughter of John Henderson, Durham. Addresses: 3 Plowden Buildings, Temple, E.C.; 17 Rutland Gate, S.W.; and East Bolton, Alnwick.

MINTO, Earl of, Gilbert John Murray Kynynmond Elliot, G.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., was born on July 9, 1845, and is the son of the 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1891, and Emma, daughter of General Sir Thomas Hislop, Bart., G.C.B. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A.), and entered the Scots Guards in 1867, retiring in 1870 with the rank of Lieutenant. He was for ten years Brigadier-General in command of the South of Scotland Infantry (1888-98), and has had a varied and distinguished military career, having served with the Turkish army in 1877, and in the Afghan war in 1879. In 1881 he was Private Secretary to General Lord Roberts at the Cape, and from 1883 to 1885 Military Secretary to the Governor-General of Canada, the Marquis of Lansdowne. In the North-West Canadian Rebellion of 1885 he was Chief of Staff. In August 1898 he was appointed to succeed the Earl of Aberdeen as Governor-General of Canada, and started to take up his new duties in November 1898, when also he was created K.C.M.G., and later G.M.C.G. In April 1899 he received the honour of the Hon. LL.D. of Queen's University, Kingston. He married, in 1883, Mary, daughter of General the Hon. Charles Grey. Home addresses: 6 Audley Square, S.W., and Minto Castle, Hawick.

MIRANDA, Countess de, née Christina Nilsson, is the daughter of a labouring man, and was born at Wederslöf, near Wexjö, in Sweden, Aug. 3, 1843. At an early age she evinced great taste for music. She became quite proficient on the violin, learned the flute, and attended fairs and other places of public resort, at which she sang, accompanying herself on the violin. While performing in this manner at a fair at Ljungby, in June 1857, her extraordinary powers attracted the attention of Mr. F. G. Tornérhjelm, a gentleman of influence, who rescued her from her vagrant life, and placed her at school first at Halmstad, and afterwards at Stockholm, where she was instructed by M. Franz Berwald. She made her first appearance at Stockholm in 1860, went to Paris, continued her musical education under Masset and Wurtel, and came out at the Théâtre Lyrique, October 27, as Violetta "Traviata," with such success that she was engaged for three years. She made her first appearance in London at Majesty's Theatre in 1867, proving a great operatic attraction at that establishment during the season, and since performed here with constant increasing success. She paid a visit to the United States (1870), where, in less than a year, she is said to have cleared £30,000. After a Transatlantic trip of two years she reappeared at the Lane Theatre, May 28, 1872, in "Traviata." After this date she occasionally made her appearance for periods at Brussels and St. Petersburg. She was married at Westminster, Aug. 27, 1872, to M. Auguste B. the son of an eminent French musician. He died at Paris, Feb. 22, 1882. In 1887 she married, in Paris, Count Miranda.

MIRBEAU, Octave, French, was born at Trévirères, February 1, 1817, and early in life took to journalism, coming in 1874 to the dramatic and editorial staff of L'Ordre. After a short experience in administrative life he returned to journalism in 1877, writing for the Revue and the Figaro. A letter that he wrote in the latter in 1882, violently opposing the decoration of actors, gave rise to a heated discussion. Soon after he founded two short-lived newspapers, Le Peuple and Les Grimaces, in which he opposed the Republic with much violence, and the methods of Rochefort during the Commune. This led to his fighting duels. He has been a contrarian to nearly all the higher-class newspapers of Paris, to which he contributed short stories and artistic criticisms. In his reply to the decoration of actor M. Coquelin's reply, have been under the title of "Le Comédien." Other works of his are: "Lettre à Chaumière," 1886; "Le Calvaire," 1886; and "Sébastien Roch," 1890.

MITCHELL, Sir Charles Hugh, G.C.M.G., Governor of the Straits Settlements, High Commissioner of the Malay Peninsula, was born in 1836, and is the eldest son of Hugh Mitchell. He was educated at the Royal Naval School, and entered the Marines in 1852. During the Crimean war he was attached to the Baltic fleet and was mentioned in despatches for commanding the rocket detachment at the bombardment of Sveaborg. He was Colonial Secretary of British Hong Kong in 1868; Colonial Secretary of Natal in 1878; and acting as Colonial Commandant at ring the Zulu War; Governor of Fiji; Governor of Natal in 1889; and pointed to his present post in 1893. s: Government House, Singapore.

MITCHELL, Donald Grant, LL.D., born at Norwich, Connecticut, in 1822. He graduated at Yale College, travelled in Europe, and in 1847 ed "Fresh Gleanings, or a New from the Old Fields of Continental," under the pseudonym of "Ik." In 1848 he was again in Europe, and, under his former pseudonym, Battle Summer, 1849. Returning to New York, he published, anonymously, Lorgnette, a series of satirical sketches of society, 1850. In the same year appeared "The Reveries of a Bachelor," followed in 1851 by "Dream Life." In 1852 he was appointed United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America, he purchased a farm, known as Wood, near Newhaven, Connecticut, where he now resides. In 1873 he was appointed States Commissioner at the Paris Exposition. He has published: "My Farm and Wood," 1863; "Wet Days at Edge-wood," 1864; "Seven Stories with Basement and Attic," 1864; "Dr. Johns," 1867 (subsequently under the title of "Out of Town"); "About old Story-Tellers," 1867; "Bound Together," 1885; and in 1890 two volumes of "English Lands, and Kings." In 1895 a third was published, and in 1897 a fourth, on the same lines and under the same title. He has also edited (1883) an etymological "Woodbridge Record," which has been one of the Council of the School of Fine Arts since 1865, and has lectured there and elsewhere on art and art topics. With strong rural sympathies (illustrated by many of his books), he has been associated in an advisory way with the laying out of many public parks and grounds in Newhaven and other places.

MITCHELL, The Hon. Peter, a statesman, was born Jan. 4, 1824, at Newcastle, New Brunswick, and was educated at the same place. He was admitted to the Bar in 1848, and in 1856 was elected a representative for his native county to serve in the Provincial Parliament. After serving for five years he was elected Life Member of the Legislature, and was a member of the Executive Council of New Brunswick from 1865, when his Government was dissolved on the question of the confederation of the British American provinces. He was three times appointed delegate to the Convention at London, with the view of securing the construction of the intercolonial railway from Halifax to Quebec, and the confederation of the provinces. In 1865 he formed, in connection with the Hon. R. D. Wilmot, an administration to test the province on confederation, and was appointed President of the Executive Committee. Having dissolved, they were sustained by a majority of thirty-three to eight, and confederation was carried. Mr. Mitchell, who was an ardent advocate of union, did much by his writings and speeches in and out of Parliament to promote British connection. On the organization of the Dominion Government in July 1867, Mr. Mitchell was called to the Cabinet as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which post he held until the resignation of the Macdonald administration in 1873. He took an active part in the settlement of the Fisheries dispute between the Dominion of Canada and the Government of the United States in 1874, and, later, gave important aid in operations connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. From 1882 to 1891 he was a representative in the Dominion Parliament for Northumberland County, New Brunswick. In 1897 he was appointed Inspector of Fisheries for the Atlantic Provinces. He bought the Montreal Herald in 1885, and is now President of the Herald Publishing Company. In 1870 he published "A Review of President Grant's Message to the United States Congress relative to the Canadian Fisheries."

MITCHINSON, The Right Rev. John, D.C.L., Master of Pembroke College, Oxford, son of the late John Mitchinson, a master-mariner trading with the East Indies, and Louisa, his wife (who died in 1896, in her 97th year), was born Sept. 23, 1833, and was educated at Durham School, whence, in December 1850, he was elected to a scholarship at Pembroke College, Oxford. There he obtained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1853, a first in Lit. Hum. in 1854, and a first in Natural Science in 1855, when he graduated B.A., proceeding in due course to M.A., which he commuted for B.C.L., and proceeded D.C.L. in 1864. On graduating B.A. he was elected Fellow of his College, and held the fellowship till he was presented in 1881 to the Rectory of Sibstone, in Leicestershire; he was made an Honorary Fellow in 1883. After residing as Fellow for a short time he became an assistant-master in Merchant Taylors' School, and was in 1858 ordained deacon by Bishop Tait in St. Paul's Cathedral, and licensed to the curacy of St. Philip's, Clerkenwell. In 1859 he was appointed head-master of the King's School, Canterbury, and was ordained priest by the Archbishop (Sumner) of Canterbury in has had serious and valuable diplomatic experience. He was for about seven years Persian Consul-General in India, and then afterwards in the same capacity for some time at Baghdad, whence he became Governor of Resht; for the eight years previous to 1890 he was Persian Consul-General at Tiflis (Caucasus), the Shah having, on this promotion, raised him to the highest rank in the empire—namely, "Alia-us-Saltaneh." Address: 30 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.

MOLESWORTH, Sir Guildford Lindsey, K.C.I.E., Consulting Engineer to the Government of India for State Railways. Fellow of the University of Calcutta, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, is the son of the Rev. John Edward Nassau Molesworth, D.D., vicar of Rochdale, and was born at Millbrook, Hants, on May 3, 1828. He was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and at the College of Civil Engineers, Putney; afterwards he served an apprenticeship to civil engineering under Mr. Dockray on the London and North-Western Railway, and also in mechanical engineering under Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester. Subsequently he was employed in various railway and other engineering works in connection with ironworks in South Wales. In 1852 he was chief assistant-engineer on the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, which he left in order to superintend the construction of buildings and machinery in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich during the Crimean war. Afterwards he practised as a Consulting Engineer in London for some years. In 1858 the Institution of Civil Engineers awarded to him the Watt Medal and the Manby premium, for a paper read before the Institution on the subject of "Conversion of Wood by Machinery." In 1859 he went out to the Ceylon Railway as Mechanical and Locomotive Engineer, and he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Ceylon Government Railway in 1862; Director-General of the railway in 1865; Director of Public Works in 1867; and Consulting Engineer to the Government of India in 1871. His "Pocket-Book of Engineering Formulae" passed through six editions in the first year, and is now a standard work in the profession. He originated and was mainly instrumental in introducing the system of Decimal Coinage adopted in Ceylon. His services in the enemy's country with the army in the field in time of war gained for him the Afghan War Medal, as well as the Burma War Medal and clasp, and in 1881 he received the thanks of her Majesty for excellent services rendered during the Afghan War. He retired from the service of the Indian Government in 1889, and represented the Government of India as their delegate in the International Monetary Conference at Brussels. He is author of various publications, which may be named: "Proposed Establishment of a Decimal Coinage in Ceylon," 1868; and in India, "Reports on Public Works in Ceylon," "Light Railways in Ceylon," "Lancashire Railway," 1871; "State of India," 1872; "Gauge of Railways in India," 1873; "Graphic Diagrams," "Metrical Tables," 1879; "Dams," 1883; "Madras Harbour," "Iron Manufacture in India," "Establishment of an Engineer's Corps in India," and "Imperial India," 1885; "Text-book of Bridge Building," "Land as Property," "Bimetallism," "The Silver Question," "Abt System," and "Instincts in Ants," 1886; "Silver and Gold," 1891; and "Indian Coinage," 1894. He was made Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire in 1885, Knight Commander of the Order of the Indian Empire in 1894. Sir G. L. Molesworth married Maria Elizabeth, daughter of J. L. Esq., of St. Nicholas Court, the granddaughter of Sir Robert A. Address: The Manor House, Be-

He has written numerous learned works, has edited a magnificent work on Latin inscriptions, published by the Prussian Academy of Sciences, and a work on Roman Coins, and is best known in England by his "Earliest Inhabitants of Italy," of which a translation by Robertson appeared in London in 1858, and "History of Rome," translated by W. P. Dickson, and published in London in 1862-63. In 1878 the King of Italy conferred on him the Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In 1880 Professor Mommsen's library was destroyed by fire; and a number of his English admirers had the happy idea of presenting him with a selection of classical and historical books, printed in England, to compensate him for some portion of his loss. On the occasion of his seventieth birthday, in November 1887, a congratulatory address, signed by sixty-two Dons, was sent to him by members of the University of Oxford. Other works of his are: "The Oscan and other Italic Dialects," 1845; "Roman Coins," 1850; "Roman Constitutional Law," 1871; and an edition of Justinian's "Pandects," 1866-70. MONACO, Albert Prince of, was born in Paris, Nov. 13, 1848, and succeeded his father in 1889. He married (1) Lady Mary Douglas-Hamilton in 1869 (this marriage was annulled in 1880), and (2) Alice, Dowager-Duchesse de Richelieu, in 1889. His heir is Prince Louis, who was born in 1870, and who is serving in the French army. The Principality consists mainly of the towns of Monaco, Monte Carlo, and Condamine; is Italian in language, but is under the control of France. The sum of £60,000 is paid annually to Prince Albert for the concession to "play" in the Casino; and in March 1896 the Prince granted a fresh concession for fifty years on condition that his annuity should be raised to £80,000. Prince Albert is interested in scientific questions, and has done some useful work in the way of deep-sea dredging, to effect which he has taken several long cruises in his steam yacht.

MONCKTON, Sir John Braddick, F.S.A., Town-Clerk of the City of London, is the son of the late Mr. John Monckton, of Maidstone, and was born in 1832. He received his education at Rugby, and was afterwards admitted a solicitor. He practised the law for a number of years, and in 1873 was elected Town-Clerk of the City. He has been annually reappointed ever since. He has been one of her Majesty's Lieutenants for the City of London, a Grand Warden of Freemasons of England, and Commissioner of Lieutenancy for London. He has been the recipient of various foreign decorations, such as the Belgian Order of Leopold, the Saviour of Greece, the Lion and Sun of Persia, and the Golden Lion of Nassau. He married, in 1858, Maria, daughter of P. B. Long (see MONCKTON, LADY). Address: The Guildhall, E.C.

MONCKTON, Lady, wife of Sir John Braddick Monckton, née Maria Louisa Long, is the second daughter of Peter Bartholomew Long, of Ipswich, and Hannah Justina, daughter of Admiral Richard Falkland. She was educated at home and in Brussels under Mme. Becker, wife of the Protestant German Chaplain of Leopold I. She early showed promise as an amateur actress, and in 1866 appeared on the stage at the Haymarket in "Jim the Penman." She created the part of Jim the Penman's wife, and became famous in the rôle. Subsequently Lady Monckton played in "The Red Lamp," "Captain Swift," "The Crusaders," "The Idler," and other dramas. She was married to Sir John Monckton in 1858. Address: 28 Montpelier Square, Knightsbridge, S.W.

MONCRIEFF, Colonel Sir Alexander, K.C.B., F.R.S., J.P., born in Scotland on April 17, 1829, is the eldest son of the late Captain Matthew Moncrieff of Culfargie, Perthshire, of the Madras Cavalry. He was educated at the High School and at the Universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen; he entered the office of Messrs. Miller & Grainger, Civil Engineers, in Edinburgh, where he served his time as a Civil Engineer. Colonel Moncrieff did not follow the profession, but obtained a commission in the Forfarshire Artillery Militia, and afterwards in the Edinburgh or 3rd Brigade Scotch Division Royal Artillery, of which he rose to be Colonel Commandant. He travelled extensively in Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, and received the thanks of her Majesty's Government for topographical information given to the Colonial Office in London at the particular request of the Governor-General of Canada. During the Crimean War Sir Alexander Moncrieff, then a Lieutenant in the Forfarshire Militia, went to the seat of war, and received the permission of the Commander-in-Chief to visit the siege works, and to be present at the operations as a Militia officer during the first and second bombardments of Sebastopol. It was then that the idea of the invention with which his name is associated occurred to his mind; but it was some years before it matured into a practical form. It was first submitted by Captain Moncrieff to General Sir Richard Dacres, Commandant of the Royal Artillery in Ireland, and in 1857, and it was some years more before the authorities were induced to give it a trial, after which Captain Moncrieff was engaged for eight years in the Arsenal attached to the Department of the Director of Artillery. The Moncrieff System of Mounting Artillery, or protected barbette system, is sometimes called the Disappearing System, because firing the gun recoils into shelter from sight of the enemy, and the energy of the recoil is stored up so as to raise the gun into the firing position when loaded. At the first instance this was effected by means of a counterweight; and the position of a moving fulcrum (the first time employed in practical mechanism) enabled the sudden impetus of the charge to be utilised without damage to the carriage. Another method by which the same end is accomplished, and is applicable to sea service and to land service, in which the direct force of gravity is unwieldy or unsuitable for application, is Moncrieff's Hydro-pneumatic System. In this case the recoil of the gun is taken up by a piston, which forces water into a vessel of compressed air, and the compression of the air stores up the energy of the recoil to raise the gun into the firing position when required. The system is now largely and increasingly used in the British Service, both on land and at sea; and it is used also by other Governments. Sir A. Moncrieff is the author of a series of papers, extending over twenty years, illustrating and explaining the importance of increasing the dispersion of heavy guns, and the advantages of parapets with their superior slopes, en glacis, which are the chief characteristics of his system, and which are said to be the converse of the old system, in which the embrasures were visible, and the works in which they stood were conspicuous. Sir A. Moncrieff is a J.P. for Forfarshire, a Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Fellow of the Royal Society, was created a C.B. in 1880, and in 1890, and is a Knight of the Order of the Rose of Brazil, which was given to him by the Emperor of Brazil in one of his journeys in search of information, he was made acquainted with Sir A. Moncrieff's invention, and recognised its originality and importance. He married Harriet, only daughter of Sir Rimington Wilson, of Broomfield, Yorkshire. Addresses: 15 Vicars'

ND, Ludwig, Ph.D., F.R.S., born 7, 1839, at Hessen-Cassel in Prussia, was the eldest son of Mr. M. L., a merchant of that town, and of Henriette, née Levinsohn, a woman of rare attainments, who greatly influenced her son's career. He was educated at the Real-School, and subsequently at the Polytechnic School of Cassel, and thence proceeded to Darmstadt, where he studied Chemistry under Hermann Kolbe, and afterwards to Göttingen, where he became the pupil of the celebrated Robert Bunsen. After leaving University he held several appointments as chemical works in Germany. He came to England in 1862 with a view of introducing his well-known process for the recovery of sulphur from waste, and became connected with James Hutchinson of Widnes, at whose works he worked out and perfected his process.

In 1864 he returned to the Continent to undertake the erection and management of a Leblanc Alkali Works at Rotterdam in Holland. In 1867, shortly after his marriage with his cousin, Miss Frida Schmalz, he settled definitely in this country and installed his sulphur recovery process at a number of British and Foreign chemical works. In the course of his travels abroad in 1872 Mr. Ernest Solvay of Belgium, who had carried out successfully, at near Charleroi, a new process of production for the manufacture of soda by the intervention of ammonia, which had become famous as the Solvay process.

Mr. Solvay gave him the fullest opportunity to examine his process, and Mr. Mond was so struck with its prospects, that he once entered into an agreement with Mr. Solvay for its introduction into the United Kingdom, although the process was only in its infancy, working on a small scale and requiring many improvements before it could be expected to rival the old-established process of Leblanc.

In conjunction with Mr. now known as T. Brunner, he established in 1873 the firm of Brunner, Mond, & Co., Limited, at Winnington, near Manchester, in Cheshire, for carrying out the Solvay process, which have grown to have become the largest alkali works in the world. In 1881 this firm was reorganised into a Limited Liability Co.

Mr. Mond is still a Managing Director. The best years of his life he has devoted to improving and perfecting the process as he had taken in hand, and the energy and thought he has put into this task are evidenced by the numerous patents he has taken out in connection with the ammonia soda manufacture, and its by-products, among which his process for the production of chlorine from ammonium chloride requires special notice, as it converts the ammonia soda process into a complete cycle, leaving no waste product of any kind. But the fertility of his inventive faculty has been by no means exhausted by his work in this direction. He has made and patented many inventions of great scientific and commercial importance in allied and other branches of applied Chemistry. From an early date in his technical career, Mr. Mond's attention has been called to the great problems of the economical consumption of coal, and also of the recovery of ammonia from nitrogenous substances. Since 1883 he has taken out a number of patents for methods and appliances, which combine these two problems by utilising the coal in the form of gas, and recovering at the same time the nitrogen contained in it in the form of ammonia. The results of his work in this direction formed the subject of his presidential address to the Society of Chemical Industry, which aroused considerable public interest at the time. Since then Mr. Mond has effected further important improvements in the solution of these problems, and has given particular attention to the use of the gas produced by his methods for the direct production of power by means of gas-engines, and to the utilisation of the large amount of heat up to now lost in hot exhaust gases from such engines, with the result, that he has succeeded in obtaining fully double the amount of power from a given quantity of coal (and that of the very commonest and cheapest) than it can yield by the use of the very best steam-engines. With the view of utilising the gas obtained by him from coal for the direct production of electricity, Mr. Mond worked out in conjunction with his assistant, Dr. Carl Langer, a new form of gas battery, which he communicated to the Royal Society in 1889, and which is still the most perfect appliance for solving this highly important problem. In the course of their investigations of this subject Mr. Mond and his assistants, Dr. Langer and Dr. Quincke, discovered a new series of chemical compounds of very peculiar properties composed of metals and carbon monoxide, now known as metallic carbonyls, the chemical and physical properties of which they submitted to very full investigations, and their results, which excited great interest in scientific circles, were communicated in several papers to the Royal Society, and the Chemical Society, and formed the subject of a lecture given by Mr. Mond at the Royal Institution in June 1892. The further study of one of these compounds, the nickel-carbonyl, has led Mr. Mond to devise and work out an entirely new process for obtaining nickel from its ores, which promises to revolutionise the metallurgy of that metal. Mr. Mond is a member of many learned and scientific societies, he is a Fellow of the Royal Society, a Vice-President of the Royal Institution and of the Chemical Society, Past President of the Society of Chemical Industry, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, Member of the Physical Society, the German Chemical Society, &c. He is also on the Council of the British Association, and the British Institute of Preventive Medicine. The Universities of Heidelberg and Padua have conferred upon him the degree of Ph.D. honoris causa. Mr. Mond, who is a naturalised British subject, has always taken the warmest interest in all efforts for the advancement of science in this country. To promote this object he has founded, endowed, and given to the Royal Institution, the Davy Faraday Research Laboratory in Albemarle Street, opened by the Prince of Wales on Dec. 22, 1896, which is devoted to scientific research in pure and physical chemistry, and provides all the facilities required for investigations in these branches of science by a number of independent investigators. Mr. Ludwig Mond was elected to the Athenæum under Rule 2 in 1898. Addresses: The Poplars, 20 Avenue Road, Regent's Park, N.W.; Winnington Hall, near Northwich; Palazzo Zuccari, Rome; and Athenæum.

MONK, Charles James, J.P., D.L., M.P., was born on Nov. 30, 1824, and is the son of the late Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which University he is M.A., having graduated B.A. with honours in 1847. In 1845 he gained Sir William Browne's medal, and was Members' Prizeman for Undergraduates in 1846, and for B.A.s the year following. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1850, and was Chancellor of Bristol, 1855-85, and of Gloucester, 1859-85. From 1881 to 1884 he was President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, was appointed a director of the Suez Canal Company in 1884, and is J.P. and D.L. for Gloucestershire. He stood for Cricklade in 1857, was returned as Liberal member for Gloucester in April 1859, and sat until August, when he was unseated on petition. He was re-elected for Gloucester in 1865, and at successive Parliamentary elections until 1880, and retired in 1885. He again contested Gloucester in 1892, and was elected for that borough as a Liberal Unionist in 1895. It is to him that we owe the Revenue Officers' Disfranchisement Act of 1868, which gave civil servants in the Post Office and Excise. Addresses: Bedford Hatfield, Herts; and 5 Buckingham S.W.

MONKSWELL, Lord. 1 Collier, eldest son of Robert Perrier, 1st Baron, who was Solicitor-General 1863-66, Attorney-General 1866-71, from 1871 to his death in 1890, member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, by Isabel, daughter of William Rose of Weobley near Rugby, was born in 1845. Educated at Eton, where he won the junior mathematical prize, and was in the select for the school proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge, graduated in 1866 in the first class Law Tripos, and was called to the Inner Temple in 1869. In 1871 appointed Conveyancing Counsel Treasury; and in 1885 he was one of the official examiners of the Court of Justice, an office he vacated on his accession to the peerage in the following year. Lord Monkswell is a Liberal, and he unsuccessfully contested Launceston against the Hallsbury in 1877 and 1880, and in 1885, against Sir John Gorst Gladstone's administration he was in-Waiting to the Queen from 1894, and was Under-Secretary for War in that of Lord Rose January to June 1895. He has been a London County Council from its formation in 1889 as a Progressive for the St. George's Division of Shoreditch. He was on Lord Dunraven's Committee on the Sweating System, on Lord St. Aldwyn's Committee on Metropolitan Housing, on Lord Hobhouse's Committee on the Law of Copyhold. He has passed the House of Lords a Bill to amend the law of libel and the Public Library Bill, while in 1891 he carried the second reading of a Bill to amend the Law of Copyright, and he passed through the Lords a select right Bill, and took the chair of a Committee to which it was referred some years he was chairman of a Committee of Management of the Industrial School. He is married to the third daughter of J. A. Harcourt. Address: Monkswell House, Chesham, Bucks, S.W.; and Athenæum.

MONRO, David Binning Hon. LL.D. of Glasgow, Hon. Member of the House of Commons, Dublin, Provost of Oriel College, was born in Edinburgh, Nov. 1824, and is the eldest son of A. Binning

Anchenbowie, Stirlingshire. He was educated at Glasgow University, and, at age of seventeen, matriculated at Senose College, Oxford, where he had a scholarship. Shortly afterwards became a Scholar of Balliol (1854-59). was in the first class in Classical and Mathematical Moderations in 1856, and the Ireland Scholarship in 1858, obtained a first class in Lit. Hum. and second class in the Final School of Mathematics in 1858. In 1859 he won the Essay (B.A. 1858, M.A. 1862). He was Fellow of Oriel from 1859 to 1882, and from 1863 to 1873, Vice-Provost from 1874 to 1882, Classical Moderator in 1876, and Classical Examiner in 1871. In 1882 he became Professor of Oriel, and is besides Delegate of Press and of the University Museum Perpetual Delegate of Privileges. He read at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and is LL.D. of Glasgow (1883), and Hon. D.D. of Dublin (1892). Addresses: Balliol College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

MONRO, James, C.B., son of the late George Monro, Esq., S.S.C., Edinburgh, born in Edinburgh, Nov. 25, 1838, and educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh University, and Berlin University. He entered her Majesty's Bengal Civil Service in 1857, being third on the list of competitors; and held in Bengal the appointments of Magistrate, District and Sessions Judge, Secretary to Board of Revenue, Commissioner of the Presidency Division, and Inspector-General of Police. On several occasions Mr. Monro received the thanks of the Bengal Government for his services. He retired from the Bengal Civil Service in 1884, and in that year was appointed Assistant-Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police in charge of the Criminal Investigation Department. In 1888 he was appointed Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, and retired from the office which he had filled with so much efficiency in 1890. He was created C.B. 1888.

MONROE, The Right Hon. John, L.D., Judge of the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division), Ireland, was born in 1839. He is the eldest son of the late John Monroe, Esq., of Hunter's Hall, Co. Wick, by Jane, daughter of the late Rev. James Harvey, of Armagh. He was educated by the Rev. James Mulligan of Co. Wick, and entered Queen's College, Galway, in 1854. He took the degrees of A.B., M.A., and LL.B. in the Queen's University in Ireland, obtaining gold medals with each. The honorary degree LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1880. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1863, and went the North-East Circuit. He took silk in 1877. He was Law Adviser to the Irish Government in 1878-80; became a Bencher of the King's Inns, 1884; Solicitor-General, 1884-85; Judge of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division, 1885; and was created a Privy Councillor in 1886. He married, in 1867, Lizzie, daughter of J. W. Moule, Esq., of Elmley-Lovel, Worcestershire. Address: Bartra, Dalkey, co. Dublin.

MONSON, The Right Hon. Sir Edmund John, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., D.C.L., M.A., British Ambassador in Paris, is the third son of the 6th Baron Monson, by Eliza, daughter of Edmund Larken. He was born at Chart Lodge, Kent, on Oct. 6, 1834, and was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, and obtained a first class in Law and Modern History in 1855 (M.A.). In 1858 he was elected Fellow of All Souls, and in 1868 became Examiner in modern languages for the Taylorian Scholarships. On Mar. 26, 1856, he was nominated Attaché, passed an examination in June, and was appointed to Paris. After two years in the French capital he was transferred to Florence, and in December 1858 went to Washington. From that date he was private secretary to the late Lord Lyons until August 1863, when he became Attaché at Hanover. He passed the second examination for the diplomatic service in 1863, was promoted to be third secretary, was transferred to Brussels, but resigned in 1865. In July of 1865 he unsuccessfully contested Reigate. In May 1869 he was appointed Consul in the Azores, to reside at St. Michael's; and in December of 1872 was promoted to the post of Consul-General for the Kingdom of Hungary, to reside at Pest. He was employed on special service in Dalmatia and Montenegro from February 1876 to May 1877. He received the C.B. in January 1878. On June 21, 1879, he was appointed Minister Resident and Consul-General to Uruguay, and in January 1884 became Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine, and Minister Plenipotentiary to Paraguay. At the close of 1884 he was chosen for the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Denmark, and in February 1888 to the King of the Hellenes. In 1886 the honour of K.C.M.G. was conferred upon him. Under the Convention of Dec. 6, 1888, he acted as Arbitrator between Denmark and the United States in the matter of the "Butterfield Claim," and gave his award on Jan. 22, 1890. In January 1892 he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of the Belgians, and in July 1893 became Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Austria. On August 14, 1896, he was appointed H.M. Ambassador at Paris on the retirement of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, K.P. His speech at the dinner of the English Chamber of Commerce in Paris in December 1898 contained a statement of the recent disagreements between England and France over Fashoda, &c., and caused great offence in many quarters in Paris. Some journals went so far as to urge his recall. Sir Edward Monson's diplomacy has, however, been conciliatory on the whole, and that during a most trying period in the relations of the two countries. He was made a G.C.M.G. in August 1892, and was sworn of the Privy Council in July 1893. He married, in 1881, Eleanor Catherine Mary, daughter of the late Major Munro, H.M. Consul-General at Monte Video. Address: British Embassy, Paris.

MONTAGU, The Right Hon. Lord Robert, second son of the 6th Duke of Manchester, born Jan. 24, 1825, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1848, was returned in April 1859 one of the members, in the Conservative interest, for Huntingdoushire, which county he represented till February 1874, when he was returned for the county of Westmeath, as a "Conservative, but in favour of Home Rule." The Home Rule he professed was, however, essentially different from that of the Irish Party. He withdrew from the Home Rule organisation in June 1877; and ceased to be a member of Parliament in March 1880. He was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, sworn a Privy Councillor and nominated First Charity Commissioner in March 1867, and held these offices till December 1868. He joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1870, and renounced it on June 11, 1882. Lord Robert Montagu has written "Naval Architecture and Treatise on Shipbuilding," 1852; "Mirror in America," 1861; "Words on Garibaldi," 1861; "Four Experiments in Church and State, and the Conflict of Churches," 1864; "Sewage Utilisation," 1866; "What is Education?" 1869; a "Lecture to Workingmen," 1870; "Arbitration instead of War, and a Defence of the Commune," 1872; "Register, Register, Register," in 1873; "Some popular Errors concerning Politics and Religion," 1874, forming vol. MONTAGU, Sir Samuel.
SAMUEL-MONTAGU, SIR MONTAGU.

MONTALBA Clara, the painter of Venice, is the eldest of four sisters, whom the three younger have attained high distinction in art. Her sister was for a time students in the Kensington Slade Schools, but Miss Clara Montalba received no special training, and, in her own words, "drifted into" the career. While still a girl her parents were that time resident in London; during several summers to Dieppe, from time to time she was privileged to submit her studies and sketches to Isabey, the famous Impressionist marine painter. Her father, Miss Montalba's promise of genius, taught her the rules of his art, and her colour was her earliest medium of large and luminous effects soon attracted attention. In 1876 she was elected a member of the Royal Water Colour Society, being one of the first admitted thereto. A few years afterwards she was elected a member of the Water-Colour Society of the H. of the Royal Water-Colour Society of Brussels, and subsequently of the Academy of Rome. She enjoys the sign of having been asked to send a portrait, painted by herself, to Among her most famous pictures are "Festival of St. John" and her "The German Emperor," both scenes. She has also painted in Holland and on the Thames. In years she has exhibited at the Academy "Salt-boats, Venice," Miss Hilda Montalba is best known by her figure paintings, the subjects are Venetian. She sees Venice in a tranquil light than her eldest sister, and her lovers of Venice fail to recognise. Miss Helen MONTEAGLE OF BRANDON, as Spring-Rice, K.P., D.L., May 31, 1849, and is the son Stephen Edmund Spring-Rice ter of the late Mr. Serjeant was educated at Harrow and e, where he took honours as ne in 1872. In 1866 he suc- grandfater, the first Lord, being raised to the peerage, guished minister, the Hon. Spring-Rice. In 1875 he married ughter of Bishop Butcher. 21 Carlyle Mansions, Cheyne ; and Mount Trenchard, America.

MONTEFIORE, Sir Joseph Sebag.
MONTEFIORE, SIR JOSEPH.

MONTEIN, Xavier Aymon de, er, was born at Apremont, 24, made himself conspicuous olutionary journalist in 1848, 'anard, Le Pamphlet, and Le since then has devoted him- ture. His novels and plays, sensational and melodramatic eadly numerous. Amongst vn novels are "Les Chevaliers et," 1847; "Confessions d'un 19; "Les Viveurs de Paris," es Marionnettes du Diable," Tragédies de Paris," 1874; s du Mariage," 1878; "Le Folles," 1879. Of his plays oned: "Pauline," 1850; "La Sirène de Paris," 1860; "Le Médecin des Pauvres," 1865; "Les Enfers de Paris," 1865; "La Fille du Meurtrier," 1866; "La Femme de Paillasse," 1874, &c., &c. Among his most recent works are: "La Tireuse de Cartes" and "La Fille du Fou," 1890; and "La Dame aux Éme-raudes" and "La Perle du Palais-Royal," 1891.

MONTGOMERY, Florence, author- ess, was born in 1847, and is the daughter of Sir Alexander Montgomery, Bart. At the age of twenty she brought out her first story by the advice of Whyte-Melville, the novelist. Her works are as follows: "A Very Simple Story," 1867; "Misunder- stood," 1869; "Thrown Together," 1872; "Thwarted, or Duck's Eggs in a Hen's Nest," 1874; "Wild Mike and his Victim," 1875; "Seaforth," 1878; "Peggy, and other Tales," 1880; "The Blue Veil," 1883, and "Transformed," 1886; "The Fisherman's Daughter," 1888; "Colonel," 1895; "Tony," 1897. Address: 8 New Burlington Street, W.

MONTRESOR, Miss F. F., novelist, is the fourth daughter of Admiral F. B. Montresor. Her first book, "Into the Highways and Hedges," brought her fame in 1895, since which she has published "The One who Looked On," 1895; "Worth While," and "False Coin or True," 1896; and "At the Cross Roads," 1897. Address: 15 Elvaston Place, S.W.

MONTROSE, Duke of, The Right Hon. Douglas Beresford Malise Ronald Graham, K.T., A.D.C., was born on Nov. 7, 1852, and is the son of the 4th Duke, whom he succeeded in 1874. He was educated at Eton, joined the Coldstream Guards in 1872, was transferred to the 5th Lancers in 1874, and retired as Lieutenant in 1878. He is Hon. Colonel commanding the 3rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Hereditary Sheriff of Dumbar-tonshire, was appointed Lord Clerk Register of Scotland in 1890, and A.D.C. to the Queen in 1897. He is a very large land-owner, and Lord-Lieutenant of Stirling-shire. Created K.T. in 1879. In 1876 he married Violet Hermione, daughter of Sir Frederick U. Graham, 3rd Bart. Ad- dresses: 27 Pont Street, S.W.; and Buchanan Castle, Glasgow.

MOODY, Dwight Lyman, American evangelist, was born at Northfield, Massa- chusetts, Feb. 5, 1837. He worked on a farm until the age of seventeen, when he became a clerk in a shoe-store in Boston.

in 1930 he went to Shanghai and while engaged there in business entered membership in the Chinese Communist Party among the foreign masses. During the Civil War he was in the service of the National Government in the Chongqing area and was a member of the Young Men's Christian Association in Shanghai. In 1937, accompanying the Communist as effective support to National England and the Y.M.C.A. during a series of years of religious service was attracted to the anti-Christianism of the Communist Party and returned to America in 1941 where they organized similar meetings at Los Angeles. The agent visited England in 1941 in addition to the many visits he made. The meetings at Los Angeles were headed by Mr. Young and consisted of "Heavenly Bodies" Series of lectures. With John and Elva of Los Angeles, Notes from my Travel in Europe and Africa in 1942, Cuba, Africa, Europe and Russia in 1943, Cuba, Africa, Europe and Russia in 1944, and The Awakening East and West Series in 1945. He went to jail in North Carolina.

MOORE, Frank Frankfort, a writer and dramatist, born in Missouri, May 15, 1855, was educated at the Royal Academic Institution, Belfast, and by private tuition. He published in 1874 a volume of verses entitled "Flung from a Saddle," and subsequently the following novels and books of adventure: "Soldiers Together," "Where the Rail Runs," "Told by the Sea," "Babruin," "Maze of the Juncos," "The Fate of the Black Swan," "The Mystery of the Abyss," "Will's Voyages," "The Great Orion," "Under Hatches," "Highways and High Seas," "Slaver of Zanzibar," "Fireflies and Mosquitoes," "Coral and Cocoa-nut," "Sailing and Sealing," "The Ice Prison," "From the Bush to the Breakers," "The Two Clippers," "Tre, Poi, and Pen," "I Forbid the Banns," "A Gray Eye or So," "A Journalist's Notebook," "One Fair Daughter," "They Call It Love," "The Secret of the Court," "The Sale of a Soul," "Dr. Koomadhi of Ashantee," "Phyllis of Philistia," "Two in the Bush," "In our Hours of Ease," "The Impudent Comedian," "The Jessamy Bride," "The Mildonaries." "The beautiful plays are "A Man, A Myth, A Feat." "Moby and Faint." "The Queen's Lullaby." "The Smith." "The Man who was." "Neil Gwynne." "The Fall of." He has travelled in South America and Burma. He married the daughter of Colonel Bannockburn, a well known Road Kensington V.

MOORE, George (1832-1912), a French-born, English-educated, and French-speaking writer, was born in Paris, where he studied law for French art and literature. His disapprobation of Flaubert's Saint has not been understood, having constantly been read of the leading bookshelves of the taste of the public. Moore's George Moore has been the champion of what might be called freedom of fiction. He wrote "Flowers of Passion," "Poems," 1881; "A Woman's Life," "A Munster's Wife," 1882; "A Nurse," 1883; "A Frenchman," 1884; "Paradise," 1885; "More Accidents," 1887; "The Story of a Young Man's Life," 1888; "The French Impressions and Opinions," 1889; "The Strike at Arlington," 1890; "The Waters," with the "Wife," his best-known work, "Celestine," 1890. His last "Evening Lines," 1890. He is a frequent contributor to the Fortnightly. His article usually founds phase of his controversy with others.

MOORE, Sir John Voice of London for 1898-99, is the late Mr. James Moore, merchant, Leicester, and London, was born at Stockport in 1825, head of the firm of Messrs. J. & Co. tea merchants, and entered the City as a member of the Court Council for Candlewick Ward, serving subsequently in the City of the important Committee of the City Commission of Sewers, he contested a seat in the Common for Bridge Ward with Knill, but was defeated. In the death of Sir Thomas Dakin, he was unanimously elected Alderman of the Ward. He served the office of Alderman for 1894, and with his colleague Dimdale, received the honour of knighthood in joint celebration of the Tower Bridge and the birth of the Throne in the direct Prince Edward of York. He is of the Loriners' Company, a Conservative. He married, Eliza, daughter of Mr. Philip Norwich, but was left a widower ago. His only daughter, Mrs. Farlow, is the Lady Mayoress. Address: 28 Russell Square, W.C.

5. Mary, actress, youngest daughter of the late Charles Moore, Parliamentarian, was born in London, and had a taste for the stage. She acted at Warwick Hall, Maidstone, and gained prizes for acting in English plays. At the age of 18 she was married to Mr. James Playwright, through whom he acquired acquaintance of London. None of them, however, would her aspirations towards the theatre. At length Mr. Wyndham, aided by Mrs. Bronson Howard, secured for her a place as understudy in "Candidate" Company. Her husband came, and she played her part as Dorothy so well that she was cast for the part and for Lady Oldacre. Subsequently Miss Oldacre was married to Mr. Wyndham, and in October 1885 began her career in that part and others as actress at the Criterion Theatre.

Moore's great successes have been "Lady Amaranth in Wild Oats," 1886, and her "Ada, the Avid Garrick," in which, with her own in the title rôle, she won great applause both here and in America. Latterly she has played as Mrs. Mildmay in "Run Deep," as Lotty in her husband's "Two Roses," in "The Shop," 1893; "Rebellious Heart," "Home Secretary," 1895; "The Three Dames," and as Dorothy in "Rosemary," &c. He was of Paddington and Rural Dean in 1868; Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen in 1874; Prebendary of St. Dunstons in 1875. He was appointed Bishop of Manchester in succession to Dr. Perry, on the death of Dr. Fraser, in 1881, and appointed by Lord Salisbury to the Bishopric of Manchester. He is the author of "Nature and Revelation," four sermons preached before the University of Cambridge, 1861; "Our Lord Jesus Christ the Subject of Growth in Wisdom," being the Hulsean Lectures for 1865; "Jacob," three sermons before the University of Cambridge; Charge at Primary Visitation, July 1889; "Christ and his Surroundings," October 1889; various single sermons; "Dangers of the Apostolic Age," 1890; and "The Teaching of Christ, 1891. He is married to a daughter of Canon Sale, Vicar of Sheffield. Addresses: Bishop's Court, Manchester, and Athenæum.

MORAN, His Eminence Cardinal Patrick Francis, D.D., Cardinal Archbishop of Sydney, born at Leghlinbridge, co. Carlow, Ireland, Sept. 16, 1830, was educated at the Irish College of St. Agatha, Rome. He is a nephew of another well-known Irish ecclesiastic, Cardinal Cullen. He was appointed Vice-President of the College in 1856, and Professor of Hebrew in the College of Propaganda, Rome. Returning to Ireland in 1866, he was Private Secretary to his Eminence Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin; was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Ossory on March 5, 1872, and succeeded, a few months later, to that See. He was translated to the Archiepiscopal See of Sydney in Australia on March 21, 1884; and was made Cardinal, July 27, 1885. Besides publishing many pastoral letters, addressed to the clergy and laity of his diocese, he has laboured a great deal to promote the study of Irish history and antiquities. Among other works he has published: "Mémorial of the Most Rev. Oliver Plunkett," 1861; "Essays on the Origin, &c., of the Early Irish Church," and "History of the Catholic Archbishops of Dublin," 1864; "Historical Sketch of the Persecutions, &c., under Cromwell and the Puritans," 1865; "Acta S. Brendani," 1872; "Monasticon Hibernicum," 1873; "Spicilegium Ossoriense, being a Collection of Documents to illustrate the History of the Irish Church from the Reformation to the year 1800," 3 vols., 4to, 1874; "Irish Saints in Great Britain," Dublin, 1879; and "Letters on the Anglican Reformation," and "Occasional Papers," 1890; &c. Address: Sydney.

MOREAS, Jean, French poet, was born at Athens, April 15, 1856, and early in life settled at Marseille, where he spent several years, and after travelling in Italy, Germany, and Greece he finally settled in nd of Muemillan's Magazine from 1883 to 1885. He unsuccessfully contested the borough of Blackburn in 1869, in the Liberal interest, and the city of Westminster in 1880; but in February 1883, at by-election, he was returned as an advanced Liberal by the borough of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, defeating his Conservative opponent, Mr. Gainsford Bruce, by a majority of 2256 (9443 votes against 7187). Mr. Morley presided over the great Conference of Liberals held at Leeds in October 1883. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's "Home Rule" Cabinet, February 1886, Mr. Morley was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland; and throughout the debate on the Bill (for which he was in a great measure responsible), he was the Prime Minister's right-hand man. As almost the only cabinet minister who had been a consistent Home Ruler for many years, Mr. Morley was regarded with respect even by his most thoroughgoing opponents. He is one of the five Liberals who met in January 1887 for the purpose of discovering a modus vivendi for the re-union of the Liberal party. He was returned at the head of the poll for Newcastle, July 1886, and by a narrow majority, July 1892, and was appointed Irish Secretary in August, when he again fought the seat, the contest arousing great interest. His antagonist was Mr. Ralli, who was supported by a section of the Labour Party, headed by Messrs. Champion and Keir Hardie, M.P. Mr. Ralli gave a qualified adherence to an Eight Hours Bill, and thus won the suffrages of the working-men, while Mr. Morley entirely refused to support it. Polling took place on August 25, 1892, and Mr. Morley was returned by a majority of 1739. At the general election of 1895 he was defeated, although his Irish administration had been most successful. He had held the Newcastle seat for twelve years. In the same year he became a candidate for the Montrose Burghs, and was returned in 1896. His works are: "Edmund Burke, an Historical Study," 1867; "Critical Miscellanies," 1871, 2nd series, 1877; "Voltaire," 1872; "On Compromise," 1874; "Rousseau," 1876; "Diderot and the Encyclopædists," 2 vols., 1878; "Life of Richard Cobden," 1881; "Walpole," 1889, in the Twelve English Statesmen Series; "Studies in Literature," 1891; "The Study of Literature," 1894, and several recent speeches which have been reprinted. He is the editor of the English Men of Letters series. Mr. Morley is an Honorary D.C.L. of Oxford, LL.D. of Cambridge and Glasgow, and a Trustee of the British Museum. He was elected a member of the Athenæum Club in 1874. Addresses: 57 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

MORRIS, Henry, F.R.C.S., M.A., &c., received his medical education at Guy's, and afterwards graduated M.A. in 1870 at the University of London, obtaining high distinction in philosophy. He had previously taken the M.B. degree in 1867. He became F.R.C.S. in 1873, and is a Member of Council and Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. He is Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery and Anatomy at the Middlesex Hospital, Examiner in Anatomy at the University of London, and is or has been an Examiner in Anatomy at the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons and at Durham University. He delivered the "Cavendish Lecture" in 1893, and has contributed important articles to Holmes's "System of Surgery," Ashurst's "Encyclopædia of Surgery," and to the leading medical journals. He is editor of "Morris's System of Anatomy," a work to which a number of experts contributed, and author of "The Anatomy of the Joints of Man," "Surgical Diseases of the Kidneys," &c. Address: 8 Cavendish Square, W.

MORRIS, Sir Lewis, J.P., was born in Carmarthen in January 1833, being the eldest son of the late L. E. Williams Morris, of Carmarthen, formerly of Blannant, Breconshire, by Sophia, daughter of the late John Hughes, of Carmarthen. He was educated at Cowbridge, and Sherborne Schools and Jesus College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1855 as first class in Classics and Chancellor's Prizeman; M.A. 1858; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in November 1861, when he obtained a Certificate of Honour of the first class; practised chiefly as a conveyancing counsel until 1880; was elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College in 1877. In 1879 he was appointed a Knight of the Order of the Saviour (of Greece). In the same year he accepted the office of Honorary Secretary of the University College of Wales, of which he was afterwards treasurer. In 1880 he was appointed on the Departmental Committee charged by the Government to inquire into Intermediate and Higher Education in Wales, and in the same year was made a Justice of the Peace for Carmarthenshire. He was appointed Vice-Chairman of the Political Committee of the Reform Club, in the place of the late Mr. W. P. Adam, M.P.; and was a candidate, in December 1881, for the Carmarthen burghs, but retired; in 1886 he was Gladstonian candidate for Pembroke and Haverfordwest, but was defeated. In 1891, on the retirement of Sir C. P. Stepney, he was again a candidate for his native borough, but retired at the request of Mr. Gladstone, in order not to endanger the seat. It is

MORRISON, Arthur, novelist, was born in Kent on Nov. 1, 1863. He was educated at various private schools, and was a clerk in a public office in 1883. A few years later he resigned, and took a secretaryship. At this time he was a zealous cyclist, and was well known among the comparative few who then practised the sport. For his amusement he contributed many facetious verses and articles to the cycling press of that time, and afterward began in the same way to make contributions to newspapers and magazines of the ordinary and more important sort. This led to the resignation of his secretaryship in 1890, in order to join the staff of a daily paper, and soon he became a contributor to many periodicals. In particular he became connected with the National Observer, at that time under the editorship of Mr. W. E. Henley. Before he became a journalist the business of his secretaryship and other matters had called him much into the East End of London, and he made himself intimate with the various aspects of life in that part. He had published several studies and sketches of that life before his connection with the National Observer, notably the sketch "A Street" which forms the introduction to "Tales of Mean Streets." The suggestions of Mr. W. E. Henley, however, confirmed him in an intention, already formed, to write a complete series of stories of East End life, and in consequence the greater part of the numbers afterwards printed in his first book appeared in the National Observer during the years 1892, 1893, and 1894. Gathered in a volume, and published in November 1894, with the title "Tales of Mean Streets," they attracted instant attention, and made a notable success. In the meantime Mr. Morrison had entered into a contract to produce four volumes of detective stories, one a year, for serial as well as for ordinary publication, and the first of these volumes appeared at about the same time as the "Tales," the remainder following at the agreed intervals. In the autumn of 1896 his first novel, "A Child of the Jago," appeared, with even more success than had attended "Tales of Mean Streets." An essay on these two books is included in the second volume of "Ecrivains Étrangers," by M. Teodor de Wyzewa, the eminent French critic. Mr. Morrison is also known for his large collection of prints and drawings by the old Japanese masters. His published works in their order are: "Tales of Mean Streets," 1894; "Martin Hewitt, Investigator," 1894; "Chronicles of Martin Hewitt," 1895; "Adventures of Martin Hewitt," 1896; "A Child of the Jago," 1896; "The Dorrington Deed-Box," 1897; and "To London Town," 1898. Address: Savage Club, Adelphi Terrace, London.

MORRISON, George Ernest, M.D., F.R.G.S., Times Correspondent at Peking, was born at Geelong, Victoria, on Feb. 4, 1862. He was educated at Geelong College and Edinburgh University, and graduated M.D. of the latter in 1895 (M.S. in 1887). His travels have been numerous and daring. He walked across Australia from the Gulf of Carpentaria to Melbourne in 1882-83. In October 1883 he was speared by the natives in New Guinea, and for nearly a year carried the spear-head in his body until it was extracted in Edinburgh. In 1894 he crossed overland from Shanghai to Rangoon. As Special Correspondent for the Times he has undertaken some important travels in China and Siberia (1896-97), and during the recent period of diplomatic tension in China (1898) has frequently sent home messages to his paper from which even the Government have been glad to draw their information. His overland journey of 1894 has been described by him in his volume "An Australian in China." Address: Peking.

MORTEN, Miss Honnor, Member for City Division of the London School Board since 1897, born at Cheam in 1863, is a daughter of a solicitor, and niece of William Black. She was educated at Bedford College for Women, and was for many years engaged in nursing and journalism, and helped to found the Nurses' Co-operation and the Association of Asylum Workers. She lectured on health and nursing subjects under the Home Office, the Technical Education Board, and other bodies, and is at present Lecturer on Sick-Nursing at the Borough Polytechnic. She is Warden of the Hoxton Settlement, and represents Hackney on the London School Board. She published "Sketches of Hospital Life," "The Nurse's Dictionary," "How to become a Nurse," "How to Treat Accidents and Illnesses," and has edited "The Complete System of Nursing," 1898. Addresses: Ivy Hall, Richmond, Surrey; and 280 Blegton Buildings, Nile Street, Hoxton, N.

MORTON, The Hon. Levi Parsons, LL.D., American banker and statesman, was born at Shoreham, Vermont, May 16, 1824. He entered mercantile life at an early age, and soon showed a remarkable aptitude for business. In 1850 he became a partner in a Boston firm of merchants and in 1854 removed to New York, where he established the firm of Morton & Kennell. He founded, in 1863, the first law houses of Morton, Bliss, & Co. at New York, and Morton, Rose, & Co. in London, the latter serving as fiscal agents of the U.S. Government from 1873 to 1880. Both these houses were active in the syndicates that negotiated U.S. loans, and in the payments of the General Loan of $15,500,000 and the Halifax Loan of $5,600,000. Mr. Morton was an Honorary Commissioner to the Centennial Exposition of 1876, and in the same year was elected a Republican Member of the House of Representatives, and re-elected in 1880. He declined a nomination for the Vice-Presidency in 1880, but accepted the mission to France which was tendered him by President Grant. During his occupancy of that post he secured the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of American goods and obtained a legal status for American corporations in France. In 1884 he accepted the nomination for the Vice-Presidency again offered him by the Republican party, and was duly elected in November of that year for the term expiring Nov. 4, 1893. In 1894, he was elected Governor of the State of New York. The degree LL.D. was conferred upon him by Yale College in 1881.

MOSS, The Rev. Henry White M.A., Head-master of Shrewsbury School, was born in Lincoln on June 23, 1818, is the eldest son of the late Henry White of Lincoln. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was thrice successively Porson Prizeman, Craven University Scholar in 1862, Browne's Medallist, and Senior Classic in 1864. In 1864 he was appointed Fellow and Lecturer at St. John's College, and in 1866 present head-mastership. He has frequently on the Committee of the University of Cambridge, and was a Speaker at Church Congresses in 1876 and 1896. He is married to Mary, daughter of the Rev. W. A. B. Address: The Schools, Shrewsbury.

He was time Lecturer in Physiology at the Cross Hospital Medical School, engaged in investigating the pathology of Insanity. He is author of several contributions in medical literature, recent text-books of medical original papers relating to the Proceedings and Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, &c. He married Georgiana, the late G. T. Soley. Address: Nottingham Place, W.; and is, Bucks.

Herr Felix, was born at Bielefeld, and studied at Lemberg and the Vienna Conservatorium. He first came to notice as conductor of the company of the Richard Wagner Verein, and was stage conductor under the direction of the Bayreuth performance of Wagner's tetralogy. Subsequently he became conductor of the Grand Opera House at Karlsruhe, and inducted "Tristan und Isolde." He first appeared in London in 1880, and his lovers of good music now look upon his concerts as one of the pleasures of the musical season. "Agnes Bernauer," was prominent in 1880.

[TAR-PACHA, Ghazi] was direct from a family of the Broussa in Asia Minor. His father, Hadji Halil Agha, died young, and Moukhtar, who was born Oct. 18, 1851, was brought up by his grandfather. He entered the preparatory school of his native city, and showed a remarkable aptitude for studies, and at the expiration of his studies passed from the school first of entering the Military Academy at Constantinople, he remained four years, and in consequence of his progress, while still pursuing his studies, he was promoted to the grade of lieutenant. When he left, as a further reward he was made captain on the staff, and in 1860 joined the corps of the Serder Ekrem Omar in Montenegro, where, with a mere captain's rank, he dashed at an almost fatal pass, and rendered such services that he was decorated on the spot with the Medjidieh of the fifth class. After this Moukhtar returned to the Military Academy, where he was appointed to the post of Professor of Astronomy, Military Tactics, and Fortifications. In this somewhat mixed capacity he remained until 1863, when he was sent as binbashi, or major and chief of the staff of the division of Islaheye—a division of organisation—at Alexandretta, under the command of Dervish Pacha, now mushir at Batoum. At the end of 1864 the young soldier was appointed caimakam, or lieutenant-colonel, and tutor to Prince Yousouf Issedin, the eldest son of Sultan Abdul Aziz. In this capacity he travelled over the greater part of Europe, and received the Legion of Honour, the Red Eagle, and the Crown of Iron among other decorations, and in 1867 returned to Constantinople. At that time Prince Yousouf became Colonel of the Imperial Guard, and Ahmed Moukhtar was appointed one of the commissioners for regulating the frontier of Montenegro, in which capacity he served until 1869, by his policy saving to Turkey the strategical point of Veli Malou Berdu, between Spitz and Podgoritzza, while as the ex-Professor of Fortifications he made the tête du pont of Vezir Keupri. For these services he was promoted to the third class of the Medjidieh, and returning to Stamboul was made a member of the Council of War. Three months later he was nominated General of Brigade, under Redif Pacha, then commanding the Yemen expedition against the Arabs, 20,000 of whom were in insurrection. Soon after Moukhtar's arrival Redif fell ill, and the command fell into the hands of the young liwa, or Major-General. He took the city of Yedy, and was promoted for that achievement to the grade of ferik, or General of division, and chief of all the corps in Yemen, Redif becoming Governor, until he was superseded, on the ground of illness, by Essad Pacha. When Ali Pacha, the Minister of War, died, Essad Pacha became seraskier, and Moukhtar was promoted to mushir, or full General, and the Governorship of Yemen, in 1871, at the age of thirty-three. He also received the Osmanli of the first class in brilliants. After the taking of Sana he was further decorated with the first class of the Medjidieh. In 1873 he returned to Stamboul, where he was appointed Minister of Public Works, but he did not take up the post, as a few days afterwards he was named Governor of Crete. He was not destined, however, to occupy the post, for the command of the Shumla army corps fell vacant, and it was conferred on the young mushir. He remained at Shumla for 13½ months, during which time he constructed the existing fortifications. Next, appointed Governor and Military Commandant at Erzeroum, he served in the Armenian capital for tive of Clapham. He became a Liberal candidate for the election of Nottingham, but was defeated by a majority of 83 in the election in March 1894, however, he was elected to Parliament, after a close contest for South Hackney, from the constituency of which Lord (then Lord) had just retired. In 1898 he was elected as a Liberal member for the 1st Division of Cornwall. He was elected an Alderman by the London City Council in 1893. In the discussion on the conditions under which the Union of London should be reorganised with a view to footings, a discussion which is still active at the present time, he has taken a leading part as in favour of the cause of non-resident members.

Notwithstanding professional and social preoccupations, Mr. Moulton has in the time made contributions to scientific discussion, and in 1879 he wrote, in conjunction with the late Dr. William Crookes, at that time President of the Royal Society, two elaborate papers on the discharge of Electricity through gases, or, to speak more popularly, in tubes. The merit of these papers was at once recognised in the scientific circles, and Mr. Moulton was, in 1880, elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. Again, in 1881, he took part in the Congress of Electricians, during that year in Paris, and his session was decorated with the Légion d'Honneur. He married, in 1875, Clara, the widow of the late Sir James Clark of Edinburgh; she died in 1894. Addresses: 57 Onslow Square, W. 11 King's Bench Walk.

ET, Jean Sully, known to the world of France as Mounet-Sully, a tragedian, was born at Bergerac, on Feb. 27, 1841. He showed an early love of the drama, and the career, and met with opposition early. At the age of twenty-five, he undertook his own management, entered the Conservatoire, was praised by Bressant. In 1861 he won a first prize for tragic acting, and made his modest début at the Odéon in 1862. During the war of 1870 he was in the company of mobiles; and for a while, thought of giving up the stage, but in 1872 he was at length given the opportunity at the Théâtre Français. In 1873 he won his laurels, and in eighteen years' service as a tragedian won recognition as sociétaire to the first world. He has remained successful since, and has become famous for the energy and nervous intensity of his acting and the beauty of his voice. His most celebrated parts are Achilles in "Iphigénie," Xipharses in "Mithridate," Hippolytus in "Phèdre," and Orosmanes in "Zaire." In 1888 he surpassed himself as Edipus Rex in the Sophoclean tragedy of that name, which was acted amid the ruins of the Roman theatre at Orange. He is also famous for his impersonation of Hamlet, and of various modern rôles such as the King in "Le Roi s'Amuse," Fabrice in "L'Aventurière," and Saint Megrin in "Henri III. et sa Cour." He was elected a Knight of the Legion of Honour in 1889. He has himself written a drama in five acts, "La Buveuse de Larmes." When the Comédie Française visited London in 1894 Mounet-Sully was one of the chief attractions. His Hamlet especially was contrasted with that of Sir H. Irving and that of Mr. Tree. He may be described as a fine French classical actor of the old school. His brother, Jean Paul Mounet, is also an actor of some eminence. He was born in 1847, and in 1889 entered the Théâtre Français.

MOUNT-EDGECUMBE, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Henry Edgumbe, D.C.L., D.L., was born on Nov. 5, 1832, and is the son of the 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1861, and Caroline, daughter of Rear-Admiral Charles Fielding. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took honours in the final Mathematical School in 1853 (M.A.). In 1858 he was appointed Equerry to the Prince of Wales, and, as Viscount Valletort, represented Plymouth in Parliament from 1859 till 1861. From 1862 to 1866 he was Lord of the Bedchamber to the Prince of Wales, from 1879 to 1880 Lord Chamberlain of the Queen's Household, and from 1885 to 1886 and 1886 to 1892 Lord Steward. He was A.D.C. to the Queen from 1881 to 1897, has been Lord-Lieutenant of Cornwall from 1877 onwards, and in 1889 was appointed Hon. Colonel of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion of the Devonshire Regiment. He married, in 1858, Katherine, daughter of the 1st Duke of Abercorn, K.G. She died in 1874. Addresses: 5 Victoria Square, S.W.; and Mount-Edgumbe House, Plymouth, &c.

MOUNTFORD, Edward William, is the son of Edward Mountford, and was born at Shipston-on-Stour, Worcestershire, on Sept. 22, 1855. Educated privately, he was articled in 1872 to Messrs. Habershon & Pite, architects, and began to practise as an architect in 1881. Amongst the various buildings, which have been erected from his designs, there may be mentioned: The Sheffield Town Hall, 1890; Battersea Town Hall, Battersea Polytechnic, St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark; Northampton Institute, Clerkenwell; Museum and Technical School at Liverpool. Mr. Mountford is a Member of Council of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and he was President of the Architectural Association from 1893 to 1895. Address: 17 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

MOUNT-STEPHEN, Lord, George Stephen, Bart., was born at Dufftown, Scotland, on June 5, 1829. He emigrated to Canada in 1850 and became a merchant in Montreal. In 1872 he was elected a Director of the Bank of Montreal, of which he was made President in 1878. In 1879 he became President of the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba Railway Company, and in 1881 President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. In 1887 as a memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee, he and Sir Donald Smith (now Lord Strathcarron) gave £200,000 to found the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal, and in 1896 they gave £200,000 more to provide a permanent endowment fund. In 1886 he was created a Baronet for his public services in connection with the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in 1891 was raised to the Peerage under the title of Lord Mount-Stephen. He married (1) Charlotte, daughter of Benjamin Kane (died 1896), and (2), in 1897, Gian, daughter of the late Commander Robert George Tufnell. Addresses: Brocket Hall, Hatfield; 16 James Street, Buckingham Street, S.W.; and Grand Metis, Quebec.

MOWAT, The Hon. Sir Oliver, G.C.M.G., Q.C., LL.D., Canadian statesman, was born at Kingston, July 22, 1820, and is the eldest son of the late John Mowat, of Canisby, Caithness. He was called to the Bar of Upper Canada in November 1841, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1856, and a Bench of the Law Society for the Province in the same year. From 1856 to 1857 he was a Commissioner for consolidating the Public General Statutes of Canada and Upper Canada. He entered political life in 1857, as representative of South Ontario, and was Provincial Secretary in the following year in the Brown-Dorion Government, which, however, lasted but a few days. He was Postmaster-General in 1863-64; and from November 1864 until October 1872 was one of the Vice-Chancellors of Ontario. He left the Bench at the latter period to form a new administration in Ontario, and became Premier and Attorney-General for the Province, and representative of North Oxford in the Legislature, positions which he held till his resignation, in July. He entered Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Cabinet as Minister of Justice. He was made Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, Nov. 1895. He is the author of many important legislative measures in the Provincial Parliament, and is a Liberal in politics. A degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by Queen's College, Kingston, in 1887, and by the University of Toronto in 1892. In 1892 he was made K.C.M.G., and in 1893 he was promoted to be a Knight of the Cross of the same order. He married Jane, second daughter of the late Sir Ewart, of Toronto, in 1846. See 1893. Address: Toronto.

MUDFORD, William H., editor of the Standard, was born in Kent, and is the son of the proprietor of the Kentish Observer and the Canterbury Mercury. He became manager of the Standard in 1873, and editor in 1876. It is the success of that important paper, mainly due to the ability and energy of its present editor, who communicates with his staff by telegraph from his house at Sandgate, Kent. Address: 63 Cornhill, E.C.

MUIR, Matthew Moncrief, son, was born at Glasgow on Nov. 18, 1820, and educated at the High School of Glasgow and the University of Glasgow. He studied chemistry under the Rev. James Penny at Anderson's College, and under Professor Fittig at the University of Tübingen. He was Demonstrator in Chemistry in Anderson's College, 1844; Assistant Lecturer and Demonstrator in Chemistry in the Owens College, Manchester, 1874-77; and was appointed Lecturer in Chemistry at Gonville College, Cambridge, 1877. He received a degree of M.A., honoris causa, from the University of Cambridge in 1880, and was elected a Fellow of Gonville College, 1881. He was Editor of Chemistry in the Natural Sciences (Cambridge) 1884 and 1885, and author of "Qualitative Analytical Laboratory Practice," with T. M. Lowry, 1874 (several editions published); "Chemistry for Medical Students," 1881; "Chemists" in "Heroes of Science," 1883; "A Treatise on the Principles of Chemistry," 1884; 1889; "Elements of Thermal Chemistry," 1885; "Elementary Chemistry" (Chas. Slater), 1887; "Practical Chemistry" (with D. J. Carnegie), 1887; and of a new edition of Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry, 1888; and author of Chemistry of Fire, 1893; "Thermal Analysis and the Chemical Industry," 1894; "The Story of the Che-

MULLINGER, James Bass, M.A., was born at Bishop Stortford, Herts, being the second son of John Morse Mullinger, and Mary, second daughter of the Rev. James Bass, of Halstead, Essex. He studied at University College, London, in the classes of the late Professors De Morgan and Malden. In 1862 he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; graduated B.A. in 1866 in double honours, third class in Classics, and second class in Moral Sciences, and was Le Bas, Hulsean, and Kaye University Prizeman. He was for two years Lecturer on History at Bedford College, London, and is at the present time Cambridge University Lecturer on History and Lecturer and Librarian to St. John's College. He was Birkbeck Lecturer on Ecclesiastical History to Trinity College, 1890-94, and Lecturer on History of Education to Teachers' Training Syndicate at Cambridge from 1885 to 1895. He was President of the Cambridge Anti-quarian Society for the year 1896-97. Mr. Mullinger is the author of "Cambridge Characteristics in the Seventeenth Century," 1867; "The Ancient African Church," 1869; "The New Reformation," a narrative of the Old Catholic movement, published under the nom de guerre of "Theodorus," 1875; "The University of Cambridge, from the Earliest Times to the Accession of Charles I.," 2 vols., 1873-84 (on the third volume of which he is at the present time engaged); "The Schools of Charles the Great," 1877; and joint-author, with Dr. S. R. Gardiner, of "An Introduction to English History," which has gone through several editions. He has written also various historical articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Antiquities"; and is the author of those on "The Popedom," "The Reformation," and "Universities" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He has been a frequent contributor to the Academy, the Revue Historique, the Contemporary Review, and the "Dictionary of National Biography." Address: St. John's College, Cambridge.

MUN, Adrien Albert Marie, Comte de. French politician and philosopher, was born at Lunigny, Feb. 23, 1841, and is the great-grandson of the celebrated materialist philosopher, Helvetius. Before taking to politics, he was in the army, and rose to be a Captain of Cuirassiers. However, he left the service in 1875, owing to his devotion to the cause of Roman Catholicism, which he furthered by founding workmen's clubs throughout France. In 1876 he was elected Deputy for Pontivy, once a centre of the Breton Chouans, and sat among the Extreme Right in the Chamber, where he rendered himself famous by his clerical and anti-Republican notions. During the Boulanger agitation he kept outside all strife, and in 1892, when Leo XIII. invited the French monarchists to give in their adhesion to the Republic, the Comte de Mun formally renounced politics, and devoted himself to the task of reconciling Church and State. In 1897 he was elected a member of the French Academy to the seat lately occupied by Jules Simon, and formerly by Massillon. His speech at his election in praise of his predecessor was greatly admired, for he is in the front rank of French orators. His Paris address is 5 Avenue de l'Alma.

MUNKACSY, Michael von, or Michael Lieb, Hungarian painter, was born near Munkacs, Oct. 10, 1846. His parents were poor, and he was apprenticed to a carpenter, but his genius for painting soon manifested itself, and he left the bench for the easel, gaining a prize of eighty florins from the Pesth Art Union, which enabled him to study in the Vienna Art Galleries and afterwards at Munich and Düsseldorf. His picture, "The Last Day of a Condemned Prisoner," was exhibited in the Paris Salon in 1870, and at once established his reputation. This was followed by "An Episode of the Hungarian War of 1849," "The Night Prowlers," "The Studio," "The Two Families," "Milton Dictating 'Paradise Lost' to his Daughters," 1878; "Christ before Pilate," 1882; "Christ on Calvary," 1884; "The Last Moments of Mozart," 1886; "Allegory of the Italian Renaissance," a fresco, 1890; "The Favourite Air," 1891; and three portraits of ladies, 1890-92. He was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1890, and has obtained medals at successive Exhibitions in Paris, and a grand prize in 1889. He is famous for his fine colouring, surprising effects of light and air, and daring originality, but his canvases are occasionally too crowded with figures. In 1896 he returned to Hungary permanently from Paris, where he had lived since the early seventies, but in

MUNRO, Robert, M.A., M.D. Secretary to Lord Rosebery and Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, was born in Rosebank, Glasgow, Feb. 21, 1835, and married St. John Dr. Munro received his early education at the parish of Kilmearn, Rosebank, where he was sent for a couple of years to the Royal Academy preparatory to the University of Edinburgh, after completing his studies at that University he graduated both in Arts and Medicine, and settled as a medical practitioner in the town of Kilmarnock, Ayrshire. Afterwards he had an opportunity of trying an early acquired taste for travel by making a tour through Egypt and Palestine. During his residence in Kilmarnock some remarkable excavations of Lake Dwellings were made in the south of Scotland in which he became interested, and these ultimately furnished him with materials for his work, "Ancient Scottish Lake Dwellings." In 1885 he was President of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Branch of the Medical Association, when he delivered an address on "The Scientific Basis of Medicine." Retiring from the medical profession in 1886, he has since devoted himself to anthropological and archaeological pursuits. In 1888 he was appointed a member of the Council of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, and in 1890 he was elected Lecturer in Archaeology for that year, the subject assigned being "The Lake Dwellings of Scotland." These lectures formed the nucleus of an exhaustive work on that subject which appeared in 1890. In 1893 he was elected a member of the Anthropological Section of the British Association Meeting at Nottingham. He was invited by the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina to attend a special Congress held at Sarajevo in 1894 for the purpose of discussing very remarkable discoveries recently made in that country. The outcome of this journey was the publication of his "Rambles and Studies in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Dalmatia," the only work in English language which gives a full account of the great neolithic station and of the early Iron-Age Celtic sites at Glasinac and Tezerine. In June 1897 Munro delivered a course of two lectures on "Lake Dwellings" at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. His last lecture, "Prehistoric Problems," 1897, among other subjects his much-estimated essay on the influence of the environment on the intellectual development of the human brain. Dr. Munro has also contributed largely to the journals of Scientific and Archæological Societies. He is (and honoris) Member of the Royal Irish Academy, Fellow of the R. Soc. of Antiquaries, Member of the R. Society of Northern Antiquaries, Corr. Member of Anthropological Societies of Berlin, Vienna, &c. During his travels he visited North America, China and India, Egypt, and all the principal ological centres in Europe. His residence is 48 Manor Place, Edinburgh.

MUNRO-FERGUSON, Ronald M.P., J.P., D.L., is the eldest of the late Colonel R. Munro-Ferguson, M.P. He was born in 1860, and educated at Sandhurst. He was for a Lieutenant in the Grenadier Guards. He was Liberal representative in the House of Commons of Ross and Cromarty from 1885, and since 1886 has represented the Leith Burghs. In 1894 he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury, going out of office in June 1895. He was Private Secretary in 1886 and again in 1892-94. He is J.P. and D.L. for Fifeshire, D.L. for Fifeshire, and in 1885 became Captain of the 1st Fife Light Horse Rifle Volunteers. In 1889 he married Helen, daughter of the Marquis of Dufferin. Addresses: Raith House, Kirkcaldy, &c.; and 46 Cadogan Square, S.W.

MÜNSTER-LEDENBURG, Georg Herbert, Count, German Diplomatist and Ambassador in Paris, was born in London, Dec. 23, 1820, and is the son of the famous Hanoverian statesman. He was educated at the Universities of Bonn, Heidelberg, and Göttingen, and sat by hereditary right in the Hanoverian Upper House. From 1856 to 1864 he was on an Extraordinary Mission to St. Petersburg; on the annexation of Hanover he became a Member of the Upper House of Prussia, and afterwards of the North German Confederation, and finally of the Imperial Reichstag. He was appointed Ambassador to England in 1873, and to Paris in 1885. His services were rewarded by the Order of the Black Eagle in 1889, and in 1898 he celebrated his twenty-fifth year of ambassadorial rank. The German Embassy is situated at 78 Rue de Lille, Paris.

MURAVIEFF, Count, Russian Foreign Minister, was born in 1845 of a distinguished Russian family. He was educated at Poltava and Heidelberg, and entered the Russian Diplomatic Service. In 1864 he was attached to the Russian Embassy at Berlin, and was afterwards at Stockholm and Stuttgart. In 1874 he became Secretary at the Hague, and from 1880 to 1884 he was at Paris. In 1893 he was promoted to be Minister to Denmark, where he created a favourable impression on the Dowager-Empress, who is a daughter of the King. Probably this led to his being chosen to succeed Prince Lobanoff as the Czar's Minister for Foreign Affairs in January 1897. This post he has held with conspicuous success ever since, and in August 1898 he was the channel through which the Czar's wishes for a Peace Congress were made known to the Great Powers.

MURRAY, Alexander Stuart, LL.D., F.S.A., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum, was born near Arbroath, Jan. 8, 1841, and is the eldest son of George Murray. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, the University of Edinburgh, and the University of Berlin. He was appointed Assistant in the British Museum in 1867, and Keeper in 1886, in succession to Sir C. T. Newton, K.C.B., retired. He is best known by a work on the History of Greek Sculpture, 2 vols., 1880 and 1883; and a Handbook of Greek Archaeology, 1892. He has also contributed numerous articles to the Nineteenth Century, Contemporary Review, Revue Archéologique, and Journal of Hellenic Studies, &c. He is an active and prominent member of the Hellenic Society. Addresses: British Museum, and Athenæum.

MURRAY, Alma, actress, was born in London, and is a daughter of Leigh Murray, the actor. She was educated privately, and first appeared on the stage at the Olympic whilst still a little girl. Since 1879 she has played at the Lyceum, and all the principal London theatres. In 1897 she played Rosalind, her first appearance in the part, at the Metropole Theatre, Camberwell. The Shelley and the Browning Societies have chosen her as the interpreter of the chief female characters in their arduous revivals. Thus in the daring revival by the Shelley Society of "The Cenci," she took the part of Beatrice. She is well-known for her recitations. Her husband is Mr. Alfred Forman, the Wagnerian. Address: 49 Comeragh Road, West Kensington, W.

MURRAY, The Right Hon. Andrew Graham, Q.C., M.P., Lord Advocate of Scotland, was born in Edinburgh on Nov. 21, 1849, and is the only child of the late T. Graham Murray, W.S., of Stenton. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar (M.A. 1875). He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1874; was Advocate Depute from 1888 to 1890; Sheriff of Perthshire from 1890 to 1891; Solicitor-General for Scotland for two periods, viz., from 1891 to 1892, and 1895-

96, and in 1896 was appointed Lord Advocate. Since 1891 he has been Conservative member for Bute. He became Q.C. in 1891, and was sworn of the Privy Council in 1896. London address: Kensington Palace Mansions, S.W.

MURRAY, David, A.R.A., A.R.S.A., A.R.W.S., R.S.W., was born in Glasgow on Jan. 29, 1849, and is the eldest son of James Murray of that city. He was educated at Glasgow, entered upon a commercial career, and after more than ten years chose the profession of art. He lived for a time in a hut in Skye, studying landscape. His landscapes include Highland views, a series of pictures of Picardy and of Hampstead Heath, and views on the Kennet and Avon, &c. Since 1875 he has been a constant exhibitor in the Royal Academy. Address: 1 Langham Chambers, Portland Place, W.

MURRAY, David Christie, was born at West Bromwich, Staffordshire, April 13, 1847, and educated at a private school there. He began press life as a reporter on the Birmingham Morning News, under the editorship of his friend George Dawson; came to London in 1873, served on the Daily News, and was on the staff of the World. He acted as special correspondent of the Scotsman and the Times in the Russo-Turkish War. On his return he abandoned journalism for fiction. In 1879 he published his first long work of fiction in Chambers's Journal—"A Life's Atonement." "Joseph's Coat" appeared in 1880; "Val Strange" and "Coals of Fire," "A Collection of Short Stories," in 1881; "Hearts" and "By the Gate of the Sea," in 1882, the latter being the latest serial published in the original series of the Cornhill Magazine. In 1883 Mr. Murray published "The Way of the World," and in 1886 "Aunt Rachel," which appeared first in the English Illustrated Magazine; "Old Blazer's Hero," 1887; "A Dangerous Catspaw" (written in connection with Mr. Henry Murray); and "Wild Darrie," 1889; "Bob Martin's Little Girl," 1892; "A Wasted Crime," 1893; "In Direst Peril," "The Great War of 189—" (in conjunction with P. Colomb), "The Making of a Novelist," "Mount Despair," and "A Gospel o' Nails," 1894; "The Bishop's Amazement," and "A Rogue's Conscience," 1896; "This Little World," and "My Contemporaries in Fiction," 1897; "Tales in Prose and Verse," "The Cockney Columbus," and "A Race for Millions," 1898; and in collaboration with the late Henry Herman, "Our Travellers Returned," "The Bishop's Bible," and "Paul Jones's Alias." During the earlier part of the year 1898 Mr. Christie Murray was in Paris, where he had constant intercourse with M. Zola, and warmly espoused his cause. He delivered lectures on the celebrated Dreyfus imbroglio, employed aid of the magic lantern to demonstrate the merits of the famous "bordereaux." Address: Clan y don, Penarth, Abergele.

MURRAY, Professor George Albert Aimé, was born in Sydney, 1866, and is the third son of the late T. A. Murray, who was the first Secretary in the Legislative Council of New South Wales, and for ten years its President. G. A. Murray was educated at the Merchant Taylors' School, and at St. John's College, Oxford, where, in his first year, he carried off the Hertford and the Clarendon Scholarships, and subsequently every year a scholarship and prize of the University, and was elected to a Fellowship in St. John's College. In 1889, at the age of twenty-three, he became Professor of Greek at the University of Glasgow. He published in 1890, "Gobi or Saka Story of Three Songs"; "Hispania: Ancient Greek Literature," 1891. He has written much on Hellenic subjects in the Speaker, the Journal of Education, and the Göttingen Philologus. In November 1889 he married the Hon. Lady Howard, eldest daughter of the Earl of Carlisle. Address: 5 The College, Glasgow.

MURRAY, The Hon. Henry, Q.C., Premier and 1st Secretary of Nova Scotia, was born at Grand Narrows, N.S., June 7, 1841, was educated at Boston University, was called to the Bar in 1863, practised at North Sydney, and was elected to the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia in 1889, and in 1896 unsuccessfully contested Cape Breton for Sir Charles Tupper (q.v.) for the representation of Cape Breton. In the same year he succeeded Mr. F. J. Macdonald as Premier of Nova Scotia, and was returned to the Dominion of Nova Scotia for Victoria. He was made a Q.C. by Lord Aberdeen. Address: 10 N.S.

MURRAY, Sir George, K.C.B., the eldest son of the late T. A. Murray, late Rector of South Devon, was born in 1849. He began his career as a clerk in the Foreign Office, and acted as Secretary to the Comptroller negotiating a new commercial treaty with France. In 1880 he was appointed Secretary to Sir Charles Dilke, and the same year was transferred to a post in the Treasury, where he remained from the beginning of 1897, being

Society of Antiquaries, and of the Royal Geographical Society. He has edited Gibbon's "Autobiography," and other works. Mr. Murray is married to the daughter of William Leslie of Wasthill, Aberdeenshire. Address: 50 Albemarle Street, W.; and Athenæum.

MURRAY, Sir John, K.C.B., F.R.SS. London and Edinburgh, D.Sc. Camb., LL.D. Edin., Ph.D. Jena, Knight of the Royal Prussian Order pour le Mérite, Scientific Member of the Fishery Board for Scotland, one of the Secretaries of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, Editor and Director of the "Challenger Expedition" publications, was born at Coburg, Ontario, Canada, on March 3, 1841, and is the second son of the late Robert Murray, accountant. He received his early education at the Public School and Professor McAuley's Educational Establishment, London, Ontario, and at Victoria College, Coburg, Ontario. He removed to Bridge of Allan, Scotland, in 1858, where his education was continued under private tuition, and at the High School, Stirling, and at the University of Edinburgh. He studied also in France, Germany, and Belgium. For several years he assisted his relative, the late John Macfarlane, Esq., of Coney Hill, in the formation of a large Natural History Museum at Bridge of Allan. In 1868 he visited Spitzbergen and the Arctic regions as naturalist on board a whaler. In 1872 he was appointed one of the naturalists of H.M.S. Challenger, during her circumnavigating voyage for the exploration of the physical and biological conditions of the great ocean basins, 1872-76. In 1876 he became first assistant on the staff appointed by the Government to undertake the publication of the scientific results of the Challenger Expedition, and on the death of Sir Wyville Thomson, in 1882, became editor and director of the Challenger publications. In 1880 and in 1882 he took part in the Knight Errant and Triton expedition for the exploration of the Faroe Channel. In 1883 he was mainly instrumental in procuring funds for the establishment of a permanent meteorological observatory on the top of Ben Nevis, and has ever since been one of the directors of that institution. Between 1882 and 1894 he conducted many observations in his steam yacht Medusa on the physical and biological conditions of the lochs and seas of Scotland, and founded and maintained marine stations for scientific research at Granton, near Edinburgh, and at Millport, on the west coast of Scotland. He has travelled in nearly all parts of the world. The Reports on the Scientific Results of the Challenger Expedition, published by

Her Majesty's Stationery Office in 12 royal quarto volumes, were complete in 1896, and form the most extensive of the kind ever issued from the Press. These reports consist of 3 volumes of Narrative of the Cruise, 2 of Physical Chemistry, 1 of Deep-Sea Deposits, 1 of Botany, 40 of Zoology, and 2 of Statistics of Results. Besides editing these, he wrote the "Summary of Results" and was joint-author of the "Narrative of the Cruise" and of the "Report on Deep-Sea Deposits." He has thus been engaged over a quarter of a century, and he bore a considerable part of the work of the Challenger Expedition connected with the completion of Government publications. He has published papers on the "Structure and Origin of Coral Reefs and Islands"; "Marine Deposits from many parts of the World"; on the "Height of the Land and Depth of the Ocean"; on the "Annual Rainfall on the Land and the Globe"; on the "Exploration of Antarctic Regions"; on the "Fauna of the Kerguelen Region of Southern Ocean"; on the "Manganese Oxides and Manganese Nodules in Deep-Sea Deposits"; on the "Geology of the West of America"; "Effects of Winds on the Distribution of Temperature in the Sea and Fresh Water Lochs of the West of Scotland"; "Bipolarity in the Distribution of Organisms"; and on many other subjects connected with geography, oceanography, and marine biology. In recognition of his scientific work he has been elected corresponding Member and Honorary Member of a large number of British and Foreign Academies and Scientific Societies, been awarded the Cuvier Prize and the Médaille de France; the Gold Medal of the Gesellschaft für Naturkunde zu Berlin; the Royal Medal of the Royal Society; the Founders' Medal of the Geographical Society; the Neill Dougall-Brisbane Medals of the Society of Edinburgh. He was knighted in 1898. He married, in 1884, Isabel, daughter of the late James Henderson, Esq., shipowner, of Glasgow. Addresses: Challenger Lodge, Edinburgh; and Athenæum.

MURPHY, The Right Hon. B.A., LL.D. Dublin, is the fourth son of the late Jeremiah Murphy, of Limerick, born in 1826. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and was called to the Bar in 1849. He became a Q.C. in 1853 and was in 1883 appointed an Exchequer in the High Court of Justice in Ireland. In the following year he was sworn of the Irish Privy Council. He HITO, The Mikado, or Japan, was born Nov. 3, 1852, to the Japanese calendar ascended the throne Feb. 3, 1871, succeeding his father Osa-hito. He is distinguished by great reforms conceived in a liberal spirit, resulting in abolishing the feudal system which has impeded the progress of the country. He has introduced a Parliamentary Constitution on the example of Europe. He has in fact inaugurated a new era in Japan, which, during his reign, has become unprecedentedly prospering. The recent Chino-Japanese war has shown himself a true leader in making many public appearances, controlling and rewarding his subjects in the fashion of an "emperor" of the eighteenth century. Unlike most Oriental monarchs he is not self-indulgent, but endeavours to improve his mind. He is present at the meetings of the Privy Council, and has surrounded himself with statesmen who have raised the country to its present prosperous condition. The Prince Imperial, born Aug. 31, 1879.

FER-ED-DIN, Shah of Persia, a son of Nasr-ed-Din, the late Shah, was born March 20, 1853, his father giving him the "Royal Wife." His father giving him his prescriptive right to the throne, nominated him as his successor, though he was only the second son of at least five sons and daughters. He was Governor of the province of Azerbaijan, his elder brother, a dangerous Governor of Ispahan. On May 26, 1896, the late Shah was assassinated, and Fer-ed-Din came to the throne. He was vested with sovereign power at June 8, 1896. Viscount Curzon presented him a prince of good sense and amiable intentions.

Frederic W. H., was born 1823, at Keswick, Cumberland, eldest son of the Rev. Frederic W. H. of St. John's, Keswick. Educated at Cheltenham and at Trinity College, Cambridge; M.A., 1864; B.A., 1865, and was appointed Inspector of Schools in 1872. He died in 1867: "St. Paul" (poem); and later, "Essays, Classical and Modern," "Science and a Future Life, and other Essays," "Life of Wordsworth" in English Men of Letters Series, &c.; "The Renewal of Youth" (poems). He collaborated with Edmund Gurney and Frank Podmore in "Phantasms of the Living" (1886), and has written much in the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, 1882-99, of which society he is Hon. Secretary. He married, in 1880, Evelleen, youngest daughter of Charles Tennant, Esq., of Cadoxton. Address: Leckhampton House, Cambridge.

MYLNE, The Right Rev. Louis George, D.D., Bishop of Bombay, son of Major Charles David Mylne, H.E.I.C.S., was born in Paris in 1843, and educated at Merchiston Castle School, Edinburgh, at the University of St. Andrews, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A. first class in Lit. Hum., 1866; M.A. 1870; D.D. 1876). He was curate of North Moreton, Berkshire, from 1867 to 1870, and senior tutor of Keble College from 1870 to 1876; was appointed Bishop of Bombay in succession to the late Dr. Douglas, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, May 1, 1876. He resigned the See of Bombay in 1897, and was appointed Vicar of St. Mary's, Marlborough, in the same year. He is author of several Charges to the Church in India, and of two volumes of sermons, one of which was published in India. The titles of his works are as follows: "English Church Life in India," 1884; "Corporate Life of the Church in India," 1888; "Counsels and Principles of the Lambeth Conference of 1888"; "Churchmen and the Higher Criticism," 1893. Dr. Mylne married, in 1879, Amy Frederica, daughter of D. W. Moultrie, Esq., and has six children. Address: c/o Messrs. Grindlay & Co., 55 Parliament Street, S.W.

NANSEN, Fridtjof, Sc.D., Ph.D., LL.D., D.C.L., was born near Christiania on Oct. 10, 1861. He went to the University of Christiania in 1880, and decided upon studying zoology; therefore, to study animal life in high latitudes he, in March 1882, went out in a Norwegian sealing ship to the Jan Mayen and Spitzbergen seas, and afterwards to the sea between Iceland and Greenland. He returned from this expedition in July 1882, and later in the same year was appointed curator in the Natural History Museum at Bergen (Norway). In 1888 he took his degree as Doctor of Philosophy, and in May of that year started on his

In May 1896 the dreary winter came to an end, and the journey south west to Spitzbergen was resumed. historic meeting with Mr. Jackson, explorer, was made on this southern ice, and at last, "after fifteen months' literary struggling with ice, and water, darkness, and cold, begrimed with a dirt," the two weary but uncomplaining travellers plunged into civilisation and comfort. The scientific results of Dr. Nansen's expedition are of considerable value. Briefly put, his achievements are follows: (1) he has succeeded in getting within 250 statute miles of the North Pole, some 200 miles nearer than the highest previous attainment; (2) he has established the essential truth of the theory to polar currents; and (3) he has accumulated a mass of evidence bearing on polar navigation of the highest scientific importance. On Feb. 8, 1897, Dr. Nansen delivered a lecture on "Some Results of the Norwegian Arctic Expedition" before meeting of the Royal Geographical Society at the Albert Hall, Kensington. The President of the Society (Sir Clements Markham) occupied the chair, and was supported by the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York, the audience including many persons of distinction. At the conclusion of the lecture the Prince of Wales, on behalf of the Society, presented Dr. Nansen with a medal specially struck in his honour. During the same month (February 1897) Dr. Nansen's great work, "Farthest North," was published. The full title of this book, which, in importance, takes high rank in the scientific literature of the century, is: "Fridtjof Nansen's 'Farthest North,' being the Narrative of the Voyage and Exploration of the Fram, 1893-96, and the Fifteen Months' Sledge Expedition. By Dr. Nansen and Lieutenant Johansen, with an Appendix by Otto Sverdrup." After a short rest of a few months in his native land, Dr. Nansen started on a lecturing tour through Europe. He married, in September 1899, Mdlle. Eva Sars, an eminent singer, the youngest daughter of the late M. Sars, Professor of Zoology in Christiania University. Address: Lysaker, near Christiania.

NAOROJI, Dadabhai, late M.P. for Central Finsbury, is the first native of India who has represented a British constituency in Parliament. He is the son of a Parsee priest, and was born in Bombay on Sept. 4, 1825. When only four years old he lost his father, his early education thus devolving on his mother, who brought him up with great diligence and care. In India the opportunities of receiving an English education could hardly be said to have existed in the thirties, and young Naoroji was put into the only Government school that Bombay could boast at the time, being a seminary which ultimately developed into the Elphinstone Institution. Here his career was one of uniform success. From the first he showed an unusual predilection for mathematics, and carried away almost all the prizes and exhibitions for proficiency in his favourite study, as well as for political economy and natural philosophy. His highest academical reward came when he was elected to the Chair of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in his own college, the first Professorship ever held by an Indian in any prominent college in his country. Mr. Naoroji became famous as a reformer. Whatever could conduce to the regeneration of his countrymen, politically, socially, and morally, whether it was the abolition of child marriage and re-marriage of widows, whether the educating and cultivating of public opinion in the community, the institution of schools, libraries, and gymnasiums, Mr. Naoroji was in the centre of each movement. Such institutions as the Students' Literary and Scientific Society, the Dyan Prasarak Society, the Rahnumaya Mazdyasna Sabha, the Iranee Fund, the Bombay Gymnasium, the Framjee Cowasjee Institute, the Native General Library, the Victoria Museum, the Rast Goftai newspaper, an independent organ of native opinion, all owe their existence to his initiative or co-operation. He first left Bombay for England in 1855 as a partner in the firm of Messrs. Cama and Co., the first Indian house established in London and Liverpool, and has resided here, off and on, since then. After his arrival he lost no time in rousing a deep sympathy for his country and a high regard for his integrity and ability in such noted friends of India as the late John Bright and Henry Fawcett, and succeeded in furnishing most of them with effective briefs for fighting the battles of India in England. The question of holding examinations simultaneously in India and England for admission to the Indian Civil Service was then present in his mind, and he succeeded, through the kindness of the late Sir Erskine Perry, an early friend and patron, in unearthing a minute of a Committee of the Council of the Secretary of State for India which, so long ago as 1860, had recommended a step which only the other day found a confirmation in a resolution of the present House of Commons, viz. to hold examina-

and decided to present Mr. Naoroji with his portrait and a purse. Mr. Naoroji contributed largely to the appointment of the Select Committee to inquire into the finances of India (1873). His appointment, in 1874, as Prime Minister of the Prince of Baroda called forth his highest faculties as a statesman; and Sir Lewis Pelly, the British Resident at the Court, stated in recognition of his services, "that until purged by Mr. Dadabhai, the criminal and civil administration of justice was notoriously venal and corrupt." He was a member of the Corporation and Municipal Council of Bombay; as such he discovered the inaccuracy that had crept into the mode of calculating the instalment of principal and interest payable on account of the Vehar Waterworks, which had caused a loss to the Municipal Treasury to the extent of over £600,000 sterling. About this time came out his treatise, called the "Poverty of India," containing conclusions in which Major Baring (now Lord Cromer) subsequently concurred. Other works of Mr. Naoroji are: "England's Duties to India," and "Mysore," 1867; "The Expenses of the Abyssinian War" "Reply to Lord

Mr. Naoroji moved a motion for an inquiry and, on the occasion the distinction of speech—nearly two hours. Mr. Naoroji's perseverance, by the appointment of a second motion on the subject to the Address, and Mr. Naoroji joined it. Mr. Naoroji's colleagues on that statements, expanding in the House of Commons presented himself as Inquiry. He is intention of the great task mission is devoting the suffrages of the people he may have an opportunity in Parliament of calling issue those suggested he has largely been initiating.

NAPOLEON, Victor Jerome Frederick, son of Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clotilde, was born July 18, 1832. On the death of the Prince Imperial in 1879, when his father held the position of head of the House of Bonaparte, the claim was disputed by M. Paul Cassagnac and several other Imperial-ists, who put forward the young Prince Victor as his father's rival. But this move was not encouraged by the son, though the matter, it is understood, was nominated in the Prince Imperial's will as his successor.
During the last years of his father's lifetime he was put forward by ardent followers as head of the "Victorians," who at one time were fiercely opposed to the "Jerômistes," but Prince Victor is said to have denied that he was in any way opposed to his father's policy, and even accompanied him on a visit to the ex-Empress in England in 1883. In 1884, however, he put himself at the head of a new Bonapartist faction, and left his father's house, having been urged to this step by the Bonaparte paper Le Pays. At the same time a revenue of 40,000 francs
a year was left him, which further accentuated his independence. When the Expulsion Bill of 1886 became law the Prince and his father were exiled from France, but while the latter took up his abode in Switzerland, the son went to Brussels.
Nor did he again see his father till the latter lay dying in Rome, in March 1891.
In 1889 he issued a manifesto previous to the general election of that year. He is now head of the French Bonapartist party, and has made several ineffectual attempts to stir up French opinion in his favour.
In 1898 there was a rumour that the small remnant of French Bonapartists were dissatisfied at his lack of initiative, and that, in consequence, he had resigned his titular leadership to his younger brother, Prince Louis Napoleon, who is a Colonel in the Russian cavalry, and reported to be made of far sterner stuff than his elder brother.

NARES, Vice-Admiral Sir George
Strong, K.C.B., F.R.S., is a son of the late Captain William Henry Nares, R.N., of Danestown, Aberdeen, by his marriage with a daughter of Mr. E. G. Dodd, and a great-grandson of Sir George Nares, formerly one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas. He was born in 1831, and was educated at the Royal Naval College, New Cross, where he gained the naval cadetship which is given annually to the most promising pupil by the Lords of the Admiralty. He saw some service in H.M.S.
Canopus forming part of the Channel Squadron, and afterwards in H.M.S.
Havannah on the Australian station. He was a mate on board the Resolute in the Arctic Expedition of 1852-54, when he took an active share in the winter amusements, and did his part manfully as a sledge-traveller. He acted in the theatricals, and gave a series of lectures to the men on winds and on the laws of mechanics. In the spring of 1853 he was auxiliary to Lieut. Meham, and travelled over 665 miles in sixty-nine days. In 1854

he started in the intense cold of March, and went over 586 miles in fifty-six days.
On the return of this Arctic Expedition he served in H.M.S. Glatton during the last year of the Crimean war; afterwards in H.M.S. Conqueror on the Mediterranean station. On the inauguration of the present system of training for naval cadets,
he served as Lieutenant in charge of cadets under the late Captain Robert Harris, in H.M. ships Illustrious and Britannia. In 1854 he was promoted to the rank of Commander, being attached also to the training-ship Boscawen. In 1866-67 we find him employed at the Antipodes in command of the Salamander, engaged in supporting the original settlement of Royal Marines at Somerset, Torres Strait, North Australia, and in surveying the eastern and northeastern coasts of Australia. In 1869 he was sent in H.M.S. Shearwater to survey and report upon the Gulf of Suez. From 1872 down to the end of 1874 Captain Nares was in command of H.M.S. Challenger, employed in deep-sea exploration round the world. He was then ordered home, and appointed to the command of the Arctic Expedition. The two ships composing the expedition, H.M.S. Alert and H.M.S. Discovery, commanded respectively
by Captains Nares and Stephenson, left England in May 1875, with the hope of reaching the North Pole via Smith's Sound.
The expedition reached the mouth of Lady
Franklin Bay on August 27. Here Captain Nares left the Discovery to take up her quarters for the winter, while the Alert
shore of Robeson Channel. This course she held until, on September 1, the Alert herself attained the then highest latitude, and was made fast to some grounded bergs
of ice, within 100 yards of a tolerably level beach in lat. 82° 27' and long. 61° 22'.
Lieut. Rawson, of the Discovery, with his sledge-crew of eight men, had accompanied the advance ship with the object of returning to the Discovery during the autumn with news of the Alert's progress. This journey, however, he was never able to accomplish, the snow being too deep, and the ice too treacherous and too frequently in motion, to render sledge-travelling possible for a distance of seventy to eighty miles at so late a period of the year. The Discovery therefore knew nothing of her consort's position until the ensuing spring.

On Oct. 12 the sun finally disappeared, leaving the Alert in total or partial darkness for 142 days, and the Discovery for almost the same period. After the return of daylight, sledge expeditions were arranged. A party, numbering in the aggregate fifty-three persons, led by Commander Markham and Lieut. Parr, made a very gallant attempt to reach the Pole. They were absent seventy-two days from the ship, and on May 12 succeeded in planting the British flag in lat. 83° 10' 26" N. From this position there was no appearance of land to the northward, but curiously enough, the depth of water was found to be only 72 fathoms. The men suffered intensely from the extreme cold, many were attacked by scurvy, and it was with great difficulty that the sieging party made their way back to the ship. Captain Nares now resolved to return home, as with the whole resources of the expedition he could not hope to advance more than about 50 miles beyond the positions already attained. The expedition arrived at Valentia, Oct. 27, 1876. In reward for his services Captain Nares was appointed a K.C.B., December 1. He was afterwards again placed in command of the Alert, which sailed from Portsmouth, Sept. 24, 1878, to survey Magellan Strait, South America. From 1879 to 1897 he was engaged at the Board of Trade as Professional Officer of the Harbour Department, and is now Acting Conservator of the river Mersey. He retired from the navy in 1886, and was made a Vice-Admiral in March 1892. He is the author of "The Naval Cadet's Guide, or Seaman's Companion; containing complete Illustrations of all the Standing Riggings, the Knots in Use, &c.," 1860, afterwards published under the title of "Seamanship," 2nd edit., 1862; 3rd edit., 1865; 4th edit., 1868; "Reports on Ocean Soundings and Temperature" (in the Challenger), printed by direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, 6 parts, 1874-75; "The Official Report of the Arctic Expedition," 1876; and "Narrative of a Voyage to the Polar Sea during 1875-76 in H.M. ships Alert and Discovery," 2 vols., 1878. He married, in 1858, Mary, daughter of the late Mr. W. G. Grant, of Portsmouth. Address: Claremont Road, Surbiton.

NAST, Thomas, American illustrator, was born at Landau in Bavaria, on Sept. 27, 1840. He went to America with his parents in 1846, his father, a musician in the Bavarian army, being advised to leave Germany, as his opinions were too Radical for the times. Young Thomas soon exhibited a preference for an artistic career, and at an early age, with very little instruction, began to furnish sketches for

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and other periodicals. He was sent in 1860, to make illustrations of the fight between Heenan and Sayers, in New York Illustrated News. That year he joined General Medici in the cause in which Garibaldi freed Sicily, and created the united Kingdom of Italy. While in Italy he furnished sketches of various English, French, and American papers. Returning to America in February 1861, just before the breaking-out of the Civil War, he found the material that made his reputation as the patriotic artist of the war, and he produced from week those powerful pictures which won the citizen and cheered the soldier. During the period of corruption which followed the war, he made his best-remembered hits against the Tammany Ring in New York City. He is regarded as the greatest of American caricature, and it is generally conceded that to him is largely due the development of this branch of art in America. He has also found time to illustrate a number of books and make designs for panoramas, as well as to paint one completely. In 1873 he made his first appearance as a lecturer, illustrating in the presence of the audience. He began with crayon sketches and advanced by degrees to oil paintings, possessing wonderful celerity of execution. He has since lectured in 1885 and 1888. He has also executed a number of oil paintings, the largest of which is now in the possession of the 7th Regiment of New York, and hangs in the Colonel's room, in their armory. It represents the departure of the regiment for the war, April 19, 1861. He is a veteran member of the New York Regiment, and served with his company during the riot of July 12, 1871. His home is at Morristown, N.J.

NATALIE, Queen of Serbia, is the daughter of Pierre Ivanovitch Kechin and was born May 2, 1859, and married at Belgrade to Milan I., ex-King of Serbia, Oct. 17, 1875; and was divorced from him in October 1888. Her son, Alexander I., who was born at Belgrade, Aug. 14, 1876, is now king. The validity of the divorce of the Queen, as conducted by the aged Metropolitan Theodosius alone, at the request of the king, was disputed by her Majesty; and in reply to a letter addressed by her to the Metropolitan Michael, she received a letter signed not only by him, but also by two members of the Synod, stating that the decree of the Metropolitan Theodosius is null and void, having been granted without consultation with the Synod, and without the Queen having been heard in her own defence. Therefore there can be no doubt that the divorce was illegal. It was granted to the prelate who was almost in his dotage as it has since transpired, and who retired into a monastery. It was contrary to the ecclesiastical law of the Holy See which alone has jurisdiction in such cases, and it was rendered invalid by the Holy Synod. In 1891 King Milan engaged to absent himself from Serbia till his son's coming on condition that the Queen should be allowed to reside in the country. Accordingly, on May 18, 1891, Queen Olga was expelled from the private residence at Belgrade where she had resided since her divorce, but in January 1893 she reconciled to the ex-king.

NEILSON, Madame Antonio, née Antoinette Anderson, an American actress, was born at Sacramento, California, July 28, 1859. Her parents emigrated to Kentucky when she was only thirteen months old, and her home was at Lexington in that State until she went on stage in her seventeenth year. Her first presentation was as Juliet, November 1, which met with a marked success. After travelling for a few years in the east and west, she made her appearance before eastern audiences in the large cities in 1880, where she was as well received as she had previously in smaller places. Her career from that time was one of unchecked prosperity, and actresses have met with more favour than has Miss Anderson. Her first visit to England (1879) was for only a few months, but on her return (1884-85) she appeared at the Lyceum Theatre, during Mr. Barrett's absence in America. It was his second visit that the Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon was opened. Miss Anderson as Rosalind in "As You Like It" and her portrait in that character was one of the panels in the theatre. Her principal parts have been Juliet, "Fazio," Julia in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Meg Merrilies, Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons," Galatea, Clarice in "The Lady and the Tragedy," Parthenia, and so on. From 1885 to 1889 she had engagements both in Great Britain and America, but a prolonged illness in 1889 compelled a temporary retirement from the stage, and early in 1890 she announced her withdrawal from the profession; shortly afterwards she married in London to M. Antonio de Viana, a citizen of New York.

Address: The Court Farm, Broadway, Worcestershire.

NEILSON, Julia (Mrs. Fred Terry), was born in London in 1868, and spent the first twelve years of her life there, when with her family she went to live in Wiesbaden. Here she developed a musical talent, and in 1883, on the return of her family to London, was entered as a student at the Royal Academy of Music, and from the age of sixteen onwards studied her art, chiefly under Mr. Randegger, winning such academic distinctions as the Llewellyn-Thomas Gold Medal for declamatory singing (1885), the Sainton-Dolby Prize, and the Westmoreland Scholarship. During her three years at the college she also took lessons in elocution from Mr. Walter Lacy, and sang several times in public at the Royal Albert Hall and at other concerts, winning the suffrages of critics and public alike. In the autumn of 1887 she acted in some amateur dramatic performances, ending by an appearance in W. S. Gilbert's "Pygmalion and Galatea" at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, which made so marked an impression on her audience that Mr. Randegger and Sir Joseph Barnby, who were present, urged her to take up the dramatic, as opposed to the purely musical, career. Mr. Barnby introduced her to Mr. Gilbert, who soon perceived her true dramatic gift. At a Lyceum matinée, in March 1888, Miss Julia Neilson made her début professionally as Cynisca in "Pygmalion and Galatea." Miss Mary Anderson acted Galatea, and the audience was considerable and cultivated. Soon after this, her first success, she appeared at a Savoy matinée as Galatea. Her next part was Lady Hilda in Gilbert's "Broken Heart," and in "The Wicked World," revived for her benefit, she played Selene with increasing acceptance. Mr. Rutland Barrington was thus led to offer her the post of leading lady at the St. James's, where she appeared with him in "Brantingham Hall," which was especially written for her by W. S. Gilbert. Afterwards she was engaged by Mr. Tree to play Stella Darbyshire, Mrs. Tree's part, in "Captain Swift." She toured for some months in this part, steadily improving her talent, and returning to the Haymarket, played "Julie de Noirville" in "A Man's Shadow," and the title-roles in "The Dancing Girl" and "Hypatia," two parts for which her statuesque presence eminently fitted her. Her last notable appearance was as Rosalind, at the St. James's, when "As You Like It" had the longest recorded run in London. In 1898 Miss Julia Neilson played the Gipsy heroine in the "Gipsy Earl" at the Adelphi. She

of Ulundi (Medal with clasp, and C.B.). He was placed on the Retired List in June 1892, was made a K.C.B. in May 1894, and appointed to the Colonelcy of the Devonshire Regiment, May 24, 1897. He married, in 1858, Anne Emily, second daughter of the Very Rev. Thomas Garnier, Dean of Lincoln, and Lady Caroline, daughter of 4th Earl of Albemarle, and succeeded to the Arbury and Astley estates in Warwickshire, and Harefield in Middlesex, on the death of his cousin, the Right Hon. Charles Newdigate-Newdegate in April 1837. In accordance with the will of the above he took the additional surname of Newdegate by royal license in 1888. Lieut.-General Newdigate-Newdegate is a J.P. for Warwickshire. Address: Stoke, Coventry.

NEWNES, Sir George, Bart., J.P., was born on March 13, 1851, is the son of the Rev. T. M. Newnes, late of Matlock, and was educated at Silwates, Yorkshire, and at the City of London School. From what are understood to have been small beginnings financially, an old Fleet Street rumour being to the effect that the now famous Tit-Bits was started on a tiny capital, he has risen to be one of the largest and most successful newspaper proprietors in the world. Sir George Newnes makes his especial appeal to that huge and increasing class which, educated since 1870 in primary schools, is gradually awakening to an intelligent interest in popular literature. He is founder of George Newnes & Co., Limited, a company owning Tit-Bits, the Strand Magazine, the Wide World, an illustrated monthly under the editorship of Mr. Fitzgerald, and other papers. He and his company are also proprietors of the Westminster Gazette. From 1885 to 1895 he represented the Newmarket Division of Cambridgeshire in Parliament. In politics he is a Liberal. He was created a Baronet in 1895. As a public man he is interested in many objects, and has been a benefactor of Lynton and Lynmouth, North Devon. He married, in 1875, Priscilla, daughter of the Rev. J. Hillyard, of Leicester. Address: Wildcroft, Putney Heath, S.W., &c.

NEWTON, Professor Alfred, M.A., F.R.S., born at Geneva, June 11, 1829, is the fifth son of William Newton, of Elveden (formerly M.P. for Ipswich, and Lieut.-Colonel of West Suffolk Militia), by Elizabeth, a daughter of Richard Slater Milnes, of Fryston (formerly M.P. for York). He entered Magdalene College, Cambridge, and graduated B.A. in being afterwards chosen Travelling Fellow of that College, in which capacity visited Lapland, Iceland, the West Indies, North America, and other countries. 1864 he accompanied Sir Edward Birkbeck to Spitzbergen, and was elected by the University of Cambridge to the Professorship of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy on its establishment in 1866. In 1870 was re-elected Fellow of Magdalene College. Prof. Newton has published "Zoology of Ancient Europe," "Ootheca Wolleyana," 1864; and "The Ibis," second series; "Zoology Record," 1871-73; and the 4th edit. Yarrell's "British Birds." He is author of "Zoology," published by S.P.C.K., of "A Dictionary of Birds" (1896), of numerous papers in papers of the Zoological, Linnean, Royal, and other learned societies, as also of contributions to scientific journals, and the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 9th ed. He was President in 1888, and has been many times Vice-President of Section of the British Association, of the Entomological and Zoological Societies, and of the Medical Biological Association, and is Honorary Corresponding Member of various foreign and colonial societies. He has taken an active part in all questions relating to legislative protection of birds. Address: Magdalene College, Cambridge.

NEWTON, Ernest, born in London on Sept. 12, 1856, was educated at Barchinthe, and at Uppingham School, and was articled to Mr. R. Norman Shaw, the well-known architect, in 1873. Elected Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1890, he resigned that position in 1892. He published a "Book of Country Houses" in 1882; and another "Book of Houses" in 1890, and he contributed in 1892 one of a number of essays in the volume entitled "Architecture, Profession or an Art," edited by R. Norman Shaw, R.A., and J. G. Jackson, R.A. He is a member of the Art Workers' Guild; President of the Raymond Art Society, and has exhibited at the Royal Academy since 1881. Amongst his chief architectural works there may be mentioned The Sisterhood and Chapel built at Redbourne; Bullerswood; Glebelands, Haslemere; Broome Hall, Wokingham; St. Swinburn's Church, Lewisham; about 100 houses in different parts of England have moreover been designed by him. He is now bringing out a series of illustrated articles in "Modern English Domestic Architecture" in Kunst und Kunsthandwerk, an Austrian art magazine published in Vienna. Mr. Newton, in 1881, married Antoinette Hoyack, of Rotterdam, grand-son of Sir James Turing, Bart., Consul. Address: 4 Raymond's, Gray's Inn, W.C.; and 13 Earl's Kensington, W.

TON, Robert Milnes, M.A., Metropolitan Police Magistrate, born in London, July 2, 1821, being second son of William Newton, Esq., of Suffolk, by Elizabeth, the daughter of Richard Slater Milnes, Esq., of Yorkshire. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and graduated M.A. in 1867. After the law, he was called to the Bar at Gray's Inn, in May 1847. He was called from Cambridge from 1858 to 1866, and appointed a Commissioner to sit in the Lancaster Election of 1866. In November of that year he became a Metropolitan Police Magistrate at Great Marlborough Street, where he resigned in December 1896. He now resides at 18 Seymour Street, W.

NICHOLAS I., the Hospodar of Moldavia, was born Oct. 7, 1814; was educated at Trieste and in Paris; and died his uncle, who had been deposed, Aug. 25, 1860. He is Colonel of the 1st Russian infantry regiment. In 1890 the twentieth anniversary of his accession to the throne was celebrated, and during the bicentenary of his dynasty. In 1861 the Queen of England decorated him with the Grand Cross of the Royal Order. In 1869 he married Princess Milna, daughter of Voyvode of Scotland, and has nine children. His son, Prince Danilo-Alexander, was born on June 29, 1871. His daughter, Princess Helen, is married to Prince of Naples, the Italian heir, and Princess Anne, another daughter, is the wife of Prince Francis of Battenberg.

NICHOLAS II., Czar of all the Russias, was born at St. Petersburg on May 18, 1868, his father being the late Czar Alexander II., and his mother, the Princess Alexandra, a daughter of the King of Denmark and sister of the Princess of Wales. His education was conducted on modern lines, the express wish of the late Czar, and he is instructed in modern languages, history, in constitutional history, economics, and the law and administration of the Empire. He is a fluent linguist, and can speak French, German, Italian, and English. He is familiar with our literature and authors. He has travelled in the East, visited India. While in Japan a great stock was made on his life by a fanatical policeman, and on that occasion he displayed personal courage of a high order. During the Russian famine of 1891 he asked to be made President of the Committee of Succour, and as such displayed great energy. He succeeded his father Alexander III. on Nov. 1, 1894, and on the 26th of the same month was married, in accordance with the late Czar's dying wish, to Princess Alix of Hesse-Darmstadt, daughter of the late Princess Alice. Previously to the Czar's death this Princess had been summoned to the sick man's bedside at Livadia, and for some time it was supposed that the marriage would be solemnised during his lifetime. In a manifesto issued on the occasion of his marriage, Nicholas II. said, "Solicitous for the destinies of our new reign, we have deemed it well not to delay the fulfilment of our heart's wish, the legacy, so sacred to us, of our father, now resting in God; nor to defer the realisation of the joyful expectation of our whole people that our marriage, hallowed by the benediction of our parents, should be blessed by the Sacrament of our Holy Church." The Imperial Manifesto proper announced the granting of certain pecuniary alleviations to the classes connected with agriculture, and contained the following notable passage: "We, in this sad but solemn hour, when ascending the ancestral throne of the Russian Empire and of the Czarism of Poland and the Grand-Duchy of Finland, indissolubly connected with it, remember the legacy left to us by our departed father, and inspired by it, we, in the presence of the Most High, record the solemn vow always to make our sole aim the peaceful development of the power and glory of our beloved Russia and the happiness of all our faithful subjects." The new Emperor has also proved himself favourable to the principle of religious toleration, and of the freedom, to a limited extent, of the press, so far as it concerns the censorship of foreign newspapers imported into Russia. But though he was known to be an amiable and not unenlightened Prince, Europe was not prepared to find in him an idealism worthy of Tolstoi himself. In the summer of 1894 (August 24), when the German Emperor was on the eve of his pilgrimage to the Holy Land, the Czar startled Europe by issuing, through Count Muravieff, the now famous rescript or circular which proposed a conference of the Powers for the preservation of the general peace by disarmament. The rescript called forth universal expressions of admiration, and many sympathetic replies from official quarters have been sent to Russia. Before he came to the throne, Nicholas II. held several mands, and was Colonel of the Préobrajensky Regiment. In 1893 the Order of the Garter was conferred upon him. In November 1895 the Czarina gave birth to a daughter, the Princess Olga, and in June 1897 a second daughter was born to the Imperial couple. His coronation was celebrated with all the grandeur and pomp of the Orthodox Church, at Moscow, in May 1896. In the following August he set out on a series of important visits to the Emperors of Germany and Austria, the King of Denmark, and Queen Victoria. He was entertained by the latter at Balmoral, and on the conclusion of his visit he crossed the Channel to Cherbourg, where he was received with great honours by the President of the French Republic. His stay in Paris was marked by many brilliant displays and ceremonies, and was regarded by the French people as accentuating the entente cordiale, or alliance, as we may now call it, between France and Russia. In the summer of 1897 President Faure paid a visit to St. Petersburg, and it was on this occasion that the alliance was definitely announced.

NICHOLLS, Harry, comedian, was born in London in 1852, and educated at the City of London School. Primarily intended, like Horace of old, for the vocation of an auctioneer, he chose the dramatic calling, and made his first appearance at the Theatre Royal, Windsor, played largely in every kind of part in the provinces, and in 1874 was engaged by Mr. William Holland at the Surrey, and then played at the Grecian. For fourteen years, from July 1880, he was the popular and vivacious low comedian, both in drama and pantomime, at Drury Lane Theatre, and during the last five years has acted comic parts at the Adelphi. He has written a number of pantomimes, some of which have been acted at Drury Lane, and is part author of "Jane," "A Runaway Girl," &c. Address: Rupert Cottage, Bedford Park, W.

NICHOLLS, Henry Alfred Alford, C.M.G., M.D., F.L.S., was born in London on Sept. 27, 1851, and studied medicine at St. Bartholomew's Hospital and at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated with honours as Master in Surgery, and Bachelor of Medicine in 1873. In the same year he gained the membership of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, since which time he has resided in Dominica, W.I., as Government Medical Officer. Here Dr. Nicholls has for a number of years carried on investigations into the nature of the disease known as Yaws. His articles on this malady in the Medical Times and Gazette, and his Official Reports as the Medical Superintendent of the Dominica Yaws Hospitals, have him the chief authority on the subject. He has established a reputation as a naturalist, and has published some treatises on tropical agriculture. In 1883 he gained the premium of £100 offered by the Government of Jamaica for the best book on tropical agriculture, for the use of the schools and colleges of that colony. In 1891 he was appointed Special Commissioner, by the Home Government, to inquire into the various matters relating to the spread of Yaws in the colonies of Tobago, Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, and the Leeward Islands. His report on the mission, addressed to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, has been published as a blue-book under the title of "Report on Yaws in Tobago, Grenada, &c., 1891." He has contributed numerous papers on Yaws and other tropical diseases to the leading medical journals, and papers a natural history to the Kew Bulletin, Nature, &c. He edited vols. i. and ii. of the Leeward Islands Medical Journal. He is a Fellow of the Linnean Society, a Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London, of the New York Academy of Sciences, of the Jamaica Institute, and of the Chamber of Agriculture of the French colony of Guadeloupe, and he is also an Honorary Member of the Royal Agricultural Society of British Guiana. He has been decorated for his services in Dominica, W.I. Address: Roseau, Dominica, West Indies.

NICHOLSON, Sir Charles, Bart. J.P., D.C.L., LL.D., born Nov. 23, 1808, was educated in Edinburgh, where he graduated M.D. 1833. He became a resident in New South Wales in 1834, and was one of the original representative members for Port Phillip (now the Colony of Victoria) in the first Legislative Council established in New South Wales in 1843, of which body he became Chairman of Committees, and subsequently Speaker from 1846 to 1856. He filled the post of Vice-Provost and subsequently that of Chancellor of the University of Sydney, and received the honour of Knighthood in 1852, and that of Baronet in 1859. He received also the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. He is the author of various official papers and reports connected with Colonial, Economic, and Educational affairs, and has also written articles in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature (of which he is Vice-President), containing an account of exploration in Upper Egypt, and at Memphis, with descriptions of remains of "Disk Worshippers," now deposited in the Museum of the University of Sydney. NICOL, Erskine, A.R.A., R.S.A., eldest son of James Main Nicol, was born at Leith, Scotland, on July 3, 1825, and received his art education in the Trustees' Academy, Edinburgh, under Sir William Allan and Mr. Thomas Duncan. In 1846 he went to reside in Ireland, where he remained three or four years. It was this residence in the sister Isle which decided the painter's choice of his peculiar field of representation, for most of his subsequent pictures have been Irish in subject. From Ireland he returned to Edinburgh, and after exhibiting for some time, he was ultimately elected a Member of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1862 he settled in London, and after that date contributed regularly to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in June 1866. His principal pictures are: "Notice to Quit," 1862;

"Renewal of the Lease Refused," 1863;
"Among the Old Masters," and "Waiting for the Train," 1864; "A Deputation," 1865; "Both Puzzled," "Paying the Rent," and "Missed It," 1866; "A Country Booking-Office," and "Kiss an'
make it up," 1867; "A China Merchant," and "Waiting at the Cross-roads," 1868;
"A Disputed Boundary," 1869; "How it was she was delayed," "On the Look-Out," "The Fisher's Knot," and "The Children's Fairing," 1871; "His Bā-bees,"
"The Play Hour," and "Bothered," 1872;
"Pro Bono Publico," "Steady, Johnnie," and "Past Work," 1873; "A Dander after the Rain," and "When there's nothing else to do," 1874; "The New Vintage,"
"Always Tell the Truth," and "The Sabbath Day," 1875; "A Storm at Sea," and
"Looking Out for a Safe Investment," 1876; "His Legal Adviser," and "Unwillingly to School," 1877; "A Colorado Beetle," "The Lonely Tenant of the Glen,"
"Under a Cloud," and "The Missing Boat," 1878; and "Interviewing their Member," 1879. Mr. Nicol entered on the Retired List of the Royal Academy in 1885, on account of ill-health. Address:

NICOLL, William Robertson, LL.D., was born at the Free Church Manse, Auchindoir, Aberdeenshire, on Oct. 10, 1851. He was educated at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated as M.A.
in 1870, and at the Free Church College, Aberdeen, where he stayed till 1874. In the latter year he was ordained minister of the Free Church at Dufftown, and in 1877 was transferred to the Free Church at Kelso. In 1884 he succeeded Dr.
Samuel Cox as editor of the Expositor, and in 1886 he came to London and started the British Weekly. In October 1891 he started the Bookman, a monthly literary journal, and in 1893 the Woman at Home was largely founded by him. Dr. Nicoll is the author of many theological works, as well as of a "Life of James Macdonald of the Times," 1889, and a "Memoir of Professor Elmslie." In 1897 he published several theological works. He is joint-editor of "Literary Anecdotes of the Nineteenth Century," of which two volumes were published in 1895-96. He has been for long engaged on "The Victorian Era of English Literature: a Biographical and Critical History," and has originated and edited the "Expositor's Bible," "The NICOLSON Sir Arthur, K.C.I.E., A. G. Law, Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Morocco was born Sept. 11, 1841, and is the only surviving son of Admiral Sir Frederick W. L. Nicolson, 10th Baronet. He was educated at Rugby and Brasenose College, Oxford, and was appointed to a clerkship in the Foreign Office Aug. 20, 1870. He was Assistant Private Secretary to the late Earl Granville from 1872 to 1875, and having held posts at Berlin, Peking, and Constantinople, he was appointed Superintendent of Student Internships in Turkey in 1879. In 1882 he accompanied the Marquis of Dufferin to Egypt, and then became Chargé d'Affaires at Athens in 1884. In 1888 he was Consul-General for Hungary and in 1894 British Agent in Bulgaria, whence he exchanged for his present post in the next year. He married in 1892, Mary, daughter of A. Rowland Hamilton, Esq., of Killybeggs Castle, co. Down. Address: British Legation, Tangiers.

NIETZSCHE Friedrich Wilhelm, philosopher, is by descent a Pole, and was born Oct. 15, 1844, at Rostock, near Lützchen in Saxony. As a child he was obstinate and passionate, but at an early age he acquired strong self-control, and even, it is said, on one occasion deliberately burnt his hand to show that Mucius Scaevola's act was but a trifling matter. At school he had little to do with his fellows, although he is represented to have been a well-developed, vigorous boy with loved games of various kinds, especially those of his own invention. He was afterwards sent to a school where the discipline was of military strictness, and while there, first became acquainted with the music of Wagner, which not only stimulated his artistic instincts, but influenced his moral and intellectual life. He left Bonn and Leipzig Universities a man of extraordinary width of knowledge, and at the early age of twenty-two was appointed a Professor of Philosophy at Basel. While at Basel he became intimately acquainted with Wagner, of whose music Nietzsche founded the scheme of philosophy. The Wagnerian, however, was but a passing phase. In 1874 while attending the Bayreuth Festival, an entire change came over his views with regard to Wagner, and it has been thought that at this point Nietzsche's tragic mental malady first revealed itself. His favourite sister, however, thought that the disease began in the terrible year of 1871. "He had six wounded young brothers to look after, and the strain produced in him some depressive physical symptoms—traces of somnia, and their cause in the perilous remedy of drugs. It had did his physical condition that the professors had to be done. For nine months the stricken philosopher wandered in Europe, visiting various health and fighting desperately against the mental disease. Meanwhile his literary output was abundant, and he increased in each succeeding year the publication of "Thus spoke Zarathustra," he exclaimed, "I have met the deepest book that passed 1889 the end came, and he fell in 'outer darkness' of hopeless death this day he has given no sign of reason. His works expound a radical philosophy, denouncing all religion and treating all moral laws as a part of Christian superstition. His ideas are developed by giving substance to the struggle for existence as pleasure only, and despising any translation of his works into English began in 1886, but met with no success. Nordau, etc. has a special taste for him, and the literary elite of the two philosophers have died Europe.

NIGHTINGALE, Florence, whose name has been rendered famous by her philanthropic efforts in alleviating the sufferings of our wounded soldiers in the Crimean War, is younger daughter of William L. Nightingale, of Exeter, Hampshire, and Lea Hurst, Leeds. She was born at Florence in 1820. She enjoyed all the advantages available to the lot of the children of the rich and refined, and her command of languages and other branches of "liberal education" stood instead in her after career. It was before her philanthropic activities commenced among the poorer neighbors of English home led her to the study of the ameliorative work of physical and moral distress. Not with studying the working of schools, hospitals, and reformatories, she examined similar work abroad in the same spirit and spent some months in at first Protestant Sisters of Mercy at Basle on the Rhine. Before long she presented herself for applying the lessons she there learned for how that the Government Sanitation Street languished for the war, vision and support, she generously lent her personal energies and means to its restoration and the sanitation. This work had great ed when, before Miss Nightingale, time to recover her overtaxed new demands were made upon self-sacrifice. The inefficiency of our military hospital management in the Crimea led to an outburst of feeling. Various plans of help were the most popular of which was forth a select band of ladies. The request of the late Lord Herbert, Secretary of War (whose letter crossed Miss Nightingale offering to go), took the organisation and conduct. No eulogy can do justice to her energy, and devotion she con- played in her self-imposed task- ing order where confusion had ned, and by affording care and she alleviated the sufferings d the lives of many, and earned gs of the sick and wounded, as a gratitude of her country. NIGRA, Count Constantino, an Italian diplomatist, born at Castellemonite, June 12, 1827, studied law at the University of Turin, and took part as a volunteer in the war against Austria in 1848. Being severely wounded at the battle of Rivoli he abandoned the military career, entered the Diplomatic Service, and acted as Secretary to Count Cavour at the Congress of Paris in 1856. He took part in the negotiations between Piedmont and France which preceded the war of 1859, at which he was present with the general staff of Napoleon III. He was Secretary to the Italian Plenipotentiaries at the Zurich Congress, after which he was nominated, on Cavour's recommendation, Minister Plenipotentiary, first of Sardinia, and afterwards of the kingdom of Italy in Paris. On the war of 1870 breaking out he was among those who made real efforts to prevent it, and then showed himself to the end, at least personally, devoted to the Emperor and Empress. He was one of the few persons who, on Sept. 4, were by the side of the menaced and fugitive sovereigns. After having represented Italy in Paris for fifteen years as Minister Plenipotentiary, he was in May 1876 appointed to fill the same post at St. Petersburg. He was nominated Italian Ambassador in London in November 1882, on which occasion King Humbert conferred upon him the title of Count, in attestation of his Majesty's recognition of the eminent services he had rendered to his country. Count Nigra has published several works on the dialects and popular poetry of Italy. In 1885 he resigned the embassy in London, and was succeeded by Count Corti. He was afterwards sent as Italian Ambassador to Vienna. He is a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.

NENSKIÖLD, Baron Adolf Swedish naturalist and explorer, in Helsingfors, the capital of ov. 18, 1832. Descended from family long eminent in scientific pursuits, he had his inherent tastes developed alike by his surroundings at his home at Frugård, which contained an extensive mineral and natural history collection, and by his journeys with his father, Nils Gustaf, who was chief of the Finland Mining Department. Thus the lad cared more for practical than for theoretical learning when he first went to the Gymnasium at Borgo, and on entering the University of Helsingfors in 1849 devoted himself almost entirely to scientific studies, spending his vacations in excursions to the rich mineral localities of Finland. He soon became eminent in this particular branch of science, and was nominated to several appointments, but he unluckily incurred the suspicion of the Russian authorities by participation in various students' meetings, and time after time lost his appointments, and was obliged to leave the country. Indeed, at last, for some years he was unable to obtain a passport to return to Finland. He therefore settled in Sweden, and in 1858 first entered on his Arctic travels by accompanying Torell to Spitzbergen. On his return to Stockholm, Nordenskiöld was nominated Director of the Mineralogical Department of the various geographical and scientific researches, and for making a preliminary reconnoitring for the measurement of an arc of the meridian. The work was not then finished, and accordingly, three years later, Nordenskiöld headed an expedition which successfully completed the reconnoitring, and marked the southern part of Spitzbergen. The explorers, however, met with some shipwrecked walrus-hunters, and were obliged to return, their provisions being inadequate to maintain so large an addition to the party. Thus disappointed, Nordenskiöld now endeavoured to organise a fresh expedition, and he eventually started in 1868 in the Government steamer Sofla, which managed to attain the high latitude of 81° 42'—a latitude exceeded only by Hall's American and Parry's and Nares's British Arctic Expeditions, and never exceeded by a sailing vessel in the old hemisphere. This success convinced Nordenskiöld that he could reach a much higher latitude by wintering in Spitzbergen and utilising sledges. Accordingly, after an interval—during which he sat in the Swedish Diet, and travelled in Greenland to ascertain the respective value of dogs and reindeer as beasts of burden for sledge journeys—Nordenskiöld sailed in 1872 to Spitzbergen in the Polhem, accompanied by two tenders. He made during this voyage the first serious attempt to penetrate on the inland ice in the interior, and discovered at Ovivak the largest known blocks of native iron, and brought home collections of fossil plants of great importance to the history of climatology during former geological epochs. The winter was unusually early, and the ice shut in the tenders, which were to have returned home, thereby straitening the provisions through extra mouths; the reindeer were lost, and the men suffered greatly from scurvy. Nevertheless Nordenskiöld and Lieutenant Palander successfully surveyed part of North-East Land, and in the following July the vessels were extricated from their winter quarters, Mussel Bay, on the north coast of Spitzbergen, and returned home richly laden with important scientific collections. Nordenskiöld now turned his attention to Siberian exploration, and in 1875 sailed through the Kara Sea to the Yenissei, and ascended the river in a small boat, returning home overland. It was the first time that any ship had succeeded in penetrating from the Atlantic to the great Siberian rivers. He introduced in the following year, after a flying visit to the Philadelphia Exhibition, the first merchandises by sea to Siberia, returning in the autumn with his steamer via Kara Sea and Matotschkim Sound. These experiences gave Nordenskiöld a reasonable hope of accomplishing the North-East Passage. The King of Sweden, Mr. Oscar Dickson, and Mr. Sibiriakoff at once lent their aid to the project, and in July 1878 Professor Nordenskiöld started in the Vega. She was the first vessel to double the most northern point of the Old World, Cape Tchelyuskin; she wintered near Behring's Strait; and once more free in July 1879, reached Japan on Sept. 2. On his arrival in Europe Nordenskiöld was enthusiastically welcomed and laden with honours. He was created a Baron (April 1880), and appointed a Commander of the "Nordstjerne Order" (Order of North Star). In 1883 Nordenskiöld made his second voyage to the interior of Greenland, and succeeded in penetrating with a ship through the dangerous ice-barrier along the east coast of that country south of the polar circle, a feat in vain attempted during 300 years by different Arctic expeditions. He has also busied himself with a project for an expedition to the South Pole. He has written mineralogical memoirs: "The Voyage of the Vega round Asia," 1881; "The Second Swedish Expedition to Greenland," 1885; "Facsimile Atlas to the Early History of Cartography," 1889; and "Periplus," 1897. His letters, written during some of his earlier explorations, have been translated into French (1880).

NORFOLK, Duke of, His the Most Noble Henry I Howard, P.C., K.G., J.P., Earl of Surrey, and Norfolk, and Baron of Clun, Oswaldestre, and Maitravers. Duke and Earl, Knight of the Hereditary Earl-Marshal, and Chief of England, is the eldest son of the Duke, by his wife Augusta Mary Catharine, second daughter of the 1st Lord Lyons. He was born in Terrace, London, Dec. 27, 1847, succeeded to the peerage on the death of his father, Nov. 25, 1860. His Grace is a Roman Catholic, takes great interest in all matters relating to his Church. President of the Catholic Union of Britain. It was to the Duke of Norfolk that Dr. Newman addressed in reply to Mr. Gladstone's "Political postulation." The Duke of Norfolk took a prominent part, about the time of the general election of 1886, in the opposition to Mr. Gladstone's Home measure, thus bringing himself into collision with the Irish hierarchy. In 1890 the Duke was Her Majesty's Speech with presents and congratulations to Pope on his jubilee, and in 1893 a special band of English pilgrims were present at the state celebration of Peter's. From 1892 to 1895 he was Mayor of the City of London on the London Council. In 1895 he was appointed Master-General, and has organised the Penny Postage in the face of the difficulties. From 1895 to 1898 he was Mayor of Sheffield, and from 1898 (1897) onwards has been first Lord of Sheffield. He takes great interest in the Volunteer movement, and in 1864 has been Hon. Colonel of the West Riding (Yorks.) Volunteer Battalion. In 1891 Major, with the rank of Colonel, in the 2nd Volunteer Infantry of the Royal Sussex Regiment. He is the Oratory, Brompton, on Nov. 1, 1891. Lady Flora Hastings, eldest daughter of Charles Frederick Abney Hall, Lord Donnington, of Donnington, Leicestershire, and the late Countess of London. Her Grace died on Nov. 1, 1887. Their son, Philip, the Duke of Arundel and Surrey, was born on Nov. 1, 1887. Addresses: Norfolk House, Strand, S.W.; and Arundel Castle, Sussex, &c.

NORMAN, Canon Alfred M.A. Oxon., D.C.L. Hon., D.L.D. St. Andrews, F.R.S., F.R.S. youngest son of John Norman, of the county of Somerset, of Woodbury, and Claverham House, that county. He was born on Nov. 1, 1847, where his father was at that time

As soon as he could walk, he was taken to his eldest brother, Hon. John Paxton Norman, afterwards Officiating Chaplain, and was assassinated when entering, in his robes, the Court of Justice at Calcutta, in 1871. When about ten years old he went to the Grammar School at Winchester, and during the four years he made a collection of the fossils of that neighbourhood. In 1848 he matriculated at Winchester College, and at Winchester he took up the study of geology.

In 1848 he matriculated at Winchester, Oxford, taking the B.A. in 1852, and that of M.A. in 1859. At Winchester University he studied and collected the inland mollusca of Oxfordshire, and also collected the fossils of the Oxford strata. In 1854-55 he was in the family of the Dowager Duchess of Glasgow, at Cumbræ, on the Clyde. Here, with every facility for land and boats, he commenced the study of the marine fauna of the Clyde, and to this branch of geology he gave his spare time. In 1855-56 he was at Theological College, Leicestershire. In the latter year he was ordained Deacon by the Bishop of Leicester, and Priest in 1857, being at that time at Kibworth, Leicestershire. He accepted the curacy of the parish of the county of Durham, and of Houghton-le-Spring. In 1858 he was presented by the Crown to the newly formed parish of Ear Fence Houses, co. Durham. In 1859, on the presentation of the Bishop of Durham, became Rector of Houghton-le-Spring, which living he resigned. From 1867 to 1879 he was Chaplain to the late Earl of Durham, and was made Honorary Canon of Durham Cathedral. For twenty years he was Secretary of the Durham Diocesan Conference, and Secretary for Schoolmasters, and years Honorary Secretary of the Diocesan Conference. He was elected F.R.S. in 1880, and F.R.S. in 1881. Norman has received the medal of France, conferred upon him by special invitation of the Government, he was associated with the mission of French Savants in 1881, in the surveying steamer Albatross. In 1883 he was Chairman of the Fisheries Exhibition, London. Vice-President of the Marine Biological Association of Great Britain, of the Naturalists' Field Club (President in 1865 and 1880), and of the Conchological Society of Great Britain (President, 1892); President of the Museums Association in 1895; Honorary Member of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and of many of the leading Natural History Societies of the kingdom. His collection of the invertebrate fauna of the North Atlantic and Arctic Oceans is probably the most extensive in the world, embracing not only the products of his own dredgings, carried on during his summer holidays of almost every year since 1854, on all parts of the British coast, as well as during five summers in Norway and Finmark and others in the Mediterranean and Madeira, but also all such specimens as could be purchased, and the contributions both of private friends and from the spolia of almost all the Government deep-sea dredging expeditions which have been sent out from the countries of Europe, as well as by the United States. A catalogue of the collection is in course of publication, under the title "Museum Normanianum." An arrangement has been made with the Trustees of the British Museum, by which a portion of Dr. Norman's collections has already found a place in that institution, and the remainder will become the property of the nation at his death. As a boy and young man Dr. Norman used to contribute to the Zoologist. He is the author of numerous memoirs and papers, chiefly on Marine Zoology, in Proc. Roy. Soc.; Proc. Roy. Soc. Edin.; Trans. Roy. Soc. Dublin; Trans. Linn. Soc.; and other learned periodicals. He was editor and part author of Bowerbank's "Monograph on British Spongiadae," vol. iv. (Roy. Soc.).

NORMAN, Henry, author, journalist, and traveller, was born at Leicester on Sept. 19, 1858, and is the son of Henry and Sarah Norman. He received his education privately in France, and afterwards at Harvard University, of which he is B.A., and at Leipzig University. After graduating, he inaugurated the public agitation for the national preservation of the Niagara Falls, which resulted in their subsequent purchase by the State of New York. He contributed to the Fortnightly Review and the Spectator, and in 1886 joined the editorial staff of the Pall Mall Gazette, for which journal he made a tour of the world, 1889-92. He has visited the whole of the United States and Canada, and travelled and explored in Japan, Siberia, Korea, China, Siam, the Malay Peninsula (in which he went through a tract of country hitherto unexplored), and Egypt. In 1892 he joined the Daily Chronicle, and became literary editor, the famous "literary page" of that journal being under his management. For the Chronicle, of which he was appointed assistant-editor in 1895, Mr. Norman travelled in the Balkans in 1895, interviewing the Prince of Montenegro, Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria, and other high personages. At the beginning of 1896 he was sent to Washington during the Anglo-American dispute concerning the Venezuela Boundary. His labours in the cause of arbitration were recognised by President Cleveland's personal thanks. His despatches from Athens in 1897, where he represented his journal during the negotiations preceding the Turco-Greek War, again attracted much attention in England, and the King of Greece conferred on him the Order of the Saviour. In Feb. 1899 it was announced that Mr. Henry Norman had severed his connection with the Daily Chronicle in order to devote himself to literary work. He contributes frequently to the Contemporary and regularly to Cosmopolis, is a member of the Council and Management Committee of the Society of Authors, and President of the Omar Khayyam Club, 1898. His publications are: "The Preservation of Niagara Falls," 1881; "Bodyke: a Chapter in the History of Irish Landlordism," 1887; "The Real Japan," 1892; "Peoples and Politics of the Far East," 1895; and "The Near East," 1898. He married M^{rs}. Muriel Dowie (see NORMAN, Mrs. HENRY), author of "A Girl in the Karpathians," &c., in 1891. Address: The Savile Club, London.

NORMAN, Mrs. Henry, née M^{rs}. Muriel Dowie, was born in Liverpool on July 15, 1867, and is the second daughter of Muir Dowie, and of a daughter of the well-known Robert Chambers of Edinburgh. She was educated in Liverpool, and in Stuttgart and France, and acquired her love of open-air life in the Highlands of Scotland, where her father hired shootings at different times. She first made her mark as a reciter, and in 1890 travelled and sojourned in the Karpathian Mountains, where she lived, a solitary English girl, protected in her walks only by a peasant attendant. Her twenty-third birthday, she tells us, found her engaged in revolver practice, for she was in a land where wild cats, bears, and wolves might be encountered at any moment. She conformed to the simple habits of the people, eating no meat and drinking neither wine nor beer. Her costume consisted of knickerbockers and leggings worn beneath a lady's ordinary skirt. The latter was so contrived as to be easily detached to permit of Miss Dowie riding en cavalier when it was necessary to go long distances. A full account of the journey, with all its picturesque and entertaining adventures, appeared after the Fortnightly Review under the title "In Ruthenia," and was subsequently embodied in her now famous book "A Girl in the Karpathians," 1891, which created a considerable stir at the time of its publication. Other works from Mrs. Norman are a novel, "Gallia," 1890; "Whims of Fate," 1896; and "The Bough," 1898, besides which she has written much in her husband's newspaper and elsewhere on social and domestic matters, particularly as they affect

NORMAN, General Sir W. Wylie, G.C.B. (Military Division), G.C.M.G., C.S.I., is the son of Norman, Esq., and was born in London on Dec. 2, 1826. KOFF, Madame Olga ("O. K.") eff, journalist and foreign cor- nt, was born in Russia in 1841, god-daughter of the late Emperor

The only daughter of a Russian f high rank, her girlhood was eventfully, being lived chiefly in round of Moscow society. She ted to her two brothers, Alexan- Nicholas Kiréeff, and on their upon active service in the Russo- war, Olga first gave her attention ource of public events. In the ys of the war, the marvellous of a young unknown volunteer, adgi Grey, created widespread and Olga Kiréeff pressed her for news of this mysterious chief- few days later, the 18th July death of Hadgi Grey was an- and the young admirer learned brave volunteer was none other beloved brother Nicholas. This to a brilliant career supplied to as she afterwards came to be her life-motive, and, convinced Russia and England been on erno no volunteers such as her hers would have been needed in ans, she determined to devote o the bringing about of an entente between this country and her nd. She had previously married ished Russian soldier and scholar, neral Novikoff, whose brother then Russian Ambassador at She first appealed to her coun- through the columns of the Mos- tte, and the Slavophile organ, Having already made the ac- e of Mr. Gladstone on a previous England, she wrote to him and 'William Harcourt, and other men , telling them of her brother's ad reiterating that the sacrifice of his life would never have been made had Mr. Gladstone held the reins of power. The days which followed immediately upon the despatch of her letter to Hawar- den—Mr. Gladstone had temporarily re- tired from public life—brought many hours of poignant sorrow, relieved by ex- pectancy, and, on receiving no reply from the statesman, letter after letter, "en- treaties, adjurations, and remonstrances," as they have been termed, "rained on Hawarden." The last of these, the bitter cry of a sister for a martyred brother's cause, brought a few words of sympathy from Mrs. Gladstone, ending mysteriously, "Mr. Gladstone will send an answer next week." A few days after she received in Italy, whither she had gone with her mother, a missive from England—her answer. It was Gladstone's famous pam- phlet, "The Bulgarian Horrors." The encouragement of Gladstone's personal appeal to Europe made Madame Novikoff redouble her efforts. She commenced to contribute to the Northern Star, then edited by Mr. W. T. Stead, a series of articles on the Bulgarian Question. These communications were signed "O. K.," the initials of her maiden name, so as not to throw suspicion on her husband's brother, who, it has been said, was Russian Am- bassador at Vienna. Carlyle thought much of these early labours, and sug- gested their republication in volume form. Indeed, he offered to write the preface him- self, "and then, with a kind of despair, holding out his trembling hands, he said, 'No, I cannot do so, my writing days are over; but here,' he added, pointing to Froude, 'here is a young man who will be glad to do it for you.'" In this scene was born that famous volume, "Is Russia Wrong?" which was followed by "Russia and England," reviewed by Mr. Glad- stone himself in the Nineteenth Century. "O. K.," notwithstanding her isolation in London, made many friends, and those, too, of distinction, numbering Carlyle, Froude, Gladstone, Kinglake, Lord Hough- ton, and others. She introduced, in the seventies, Ivan Aksakoff, the Russian orator and reformer, to the English people, and played a great part in the subsequent agitations which clamoured for the libera- tion of Bulgaria. She followed up her lead in England by writings in the Russian press, and became of considerable influ- ence in political and diplomatic circles. "Friends or Foes?" and "Skobéeff and the Slavonic Cause," were published in quick succession, and a career of literary activity commenced which has kept its course since for twenty years. She has made frequent contributions of political articles to the Times, Nouvelle Revue, Nine- teenth Century, Contemporary Review, Pall

Mail, London Daily News, Westminster Gazette, and other papers. She has now long been regarded by some people as the Russian Government's agent in London. This last suspicion has caused her considerable amusement, which would appear to be justified somewhat by the presence in London of a Russian Embassy. Undoubtedly, Madame Norton is one of the few remarkable women of our time, although her energies have been exerted mainly in the previous generation. Her home in Cambridge Square became historic many years ago, and crowds of statesmen and notabilities have been visitors there. She gave the rooms up in 1890, and now resides, when in London at No. 4 Portman Mansions, W. Since the death of her husband, General Norton, in 1881, she has spent most of her time in Russia, on her son's estates near Moscow.

NUNEZ DE ARCE, Don Gaspar, was born at Villavieja August 4, 1864. He studied at Toledo, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He has written, among other works, "Comedia de Empedocle de Marfisa," a comedy in one act, and in verse, 1904; "Ni tanto al tanto," a comedy in three acts, 1904; "Discurso leído ante la Real Academia Española," 1906; "El Lac de Letón," a drama in five acts, 1905; "Las Mujeres del Evangelio," 1904. His lyric poems have gained him the name of "The Tennyson of Spain." He has been a member of the Cortes since 1905, and was Colonial Minister in the Sagasta Cabinet, 1903-04, and in 1905 became President of the Section of Commerce, Agriculture, and the Interior in the Council of State.

NUTTALL, The Most Reverend Enos, D.D., Archbishop of the West Indies, was born about 1840, became Bishop of Jamaica in 1880, and attained his present post in 1897. He has written "The Churchman's Manual." Address: Kingstown, Jamaica.

OAKELEY, Emeritus Professor Sir Herbert Stanley, Mus.D., D.C.L., LL.D., second son of the late Sir Herbert Oakeley, Bart., was born at Ealing, Middlesex, on July 22, 1830. His mother, Atholi Murray, the third Lady Oakeley, was daughter of the Right Hon. Lord Charles Murray, youngest son of John, third Duke of Atholl. He was educated at Rugby School, and at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1853, M.A. 1855), and, after having graduated, went abroad to pursue studies in music for which, from earliest childhood, he had shown a predilection, and at accurate naming any note struck with the keyboard. At Leipzig he studied pianoforte-playing under the Moscheles and Pleyel, and also organ-playing under Dr. Franz Professor of Music in that University later under the great organist Dr. Schneider of Dresden. He spent years as musical critic in a London periodical, and still on occasional notices of musical art home and abroad. In 1860 he was elected, in Rome, as member of the "Quintus." In 1865, on the 12th Professor Donaldson, he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh; and in 1870 he received as Primate his earliest degree—De Musica. In recognition of his services for Scotland, the honour of knighthood was conferred on him by the Queen at Holyrood in August 1870. In 1870, at the University of Oxford, gave him the degree of Mus. Doct. honoris causa. In 1881 that of LL.D. was presented by the University of Aberdeen; the same year he was appointed to her Majesty in Scotland. In 1882 received from Trinity College, the degree of D.C.L.; and in 1883, the Mus. Doct. from the University of Berlin, and Mus. Doct. from the University of St. Andrews. On his return to the Edinburgh Chair of Music in 1883, the degree of LL.D. was conferred on that University, as "Emeritus," and in 1886 that of Mus. Doct. University. He has composed anthems, a full "service," and for organ, or pianoforte, a "Lyric" (1887), and an Album dedicated to H.M. the Queen, and "A Golden Reign," "Dawn and Tide 1837-1897," and various other instrumental works. To Sir Oakeley's influence may be in great measure attributed the increase in appreciation of the organ and of the orchestra has taken place in Scotland at his appointment at Edinburgh; and the foundation of a Students' Choral Union at each of the four Scottish universities. He is or was Hon. Pres. of the University Musical Society, Edinburgh, and Vice-President of Edinburgh and Aberdeen, and of the Choral Union; Hon. Visitor of the Diocesan Choral Association, Hon. President of Cheltenham Festival, Member of London Philharmonic V.P. and Hon. Licentiate and Exam. Music at Trinity College, London:

appointed Inspector-General of Police, Mauritius; Poor-Law Commissioner and Governor of Orphan Asylum, 1870; and was Equerry to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh during his visit to the Colony in 1870. He was nominated Governor of Heligoland, 1881; and of Newfoundland, 1888. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1887. He married, in 1853, the youngest daughter of the late Captain Eastgate, H.E.I.C.S.; she died in 1867; and he married, secondly, in 1880, the widow of Colonel J. W. Fane, late M.P., Oxon. He is a Past Officer of the Grand Lodge and of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England. Address: 88 Eccleston Square, S.W.

O'BRIEN, Lucius Richard, first President of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, was born at the family residence on Lake Simcoe, Ontario, Canada, in 1832, and educated at Upper Canada College, Toronto. At an early age he developed a taste for art. In 1872 he took an active part in founding the Art School of the Ontario Society of Artists, and for six years he held the Vice-Presidency of that Institution. In 1880 the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts was founded, and Mr. O'Brien was elected its President, a position which he held for ten years, retiring in 1890; he has been a constant contributor to its exhibitions. He superintended the illustration of "Picturesque Canada," 2 vols., Toronto, 1884, for which he supplied a large number of the drawings. He is represented in the Royal Collections at Windsor and Osborne, and has frequently contributed to the English Water-Colour Exhibitions. Seven of his pictures were exhibited in the Art Gallery of the World's Fair in Chicago, 1893. In 1895 he was elected President of the newly formed Provincial Guild of Sculpture at Toronto. In 1897 he disposed by auction of his whole collection of water-colour drawings and pictures. His diploma picture, "Sunrise on the Saguenay," is in the art gallery at Ottawa. He painted two pictures of Quebec by command of her Majesty the Queen, and he has likewise executed several commissions for the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise.

He is Assistant-Editor of the New Irish Library, of which Sir C. Gavan Duffy is editor. Address: 100 Sinclair Road, West Kensington Park, W.

O'BRIEN, William, ex-M.P., son of the late Mr. James O'Brien of Mallow, and of Kate, daughter of James Nagh, was born Oct. 2, 1852, and was educated at the Cloyne Diocesan College and the Queen's College, Cork. He represented Mallow from January 1883 until its extinction as a borough under the Redistribution Act, 1885, and in the Parliament of 1885 was Member for South Tyrone, defeating Captain the Hon. Somerset Maxwell, Conservative, by a majority of 55. At the general election of 1886 he was defeated by Mr. T. W. Russell, Unionist Liberal, who gained the seat by a majority of 99, but he was returned for North-East Cork unopposed. In 1892 he was returned for Cork City, and was also elected for North-East Cork. Mr. O'Brien is one of the foremost members of the Nationalist party, and was the founder and editor of United Ireland until the Parnellite disruption of 1890. He was a "suspect" under Mr. Forster's Coercion Act, and has been a leader in the councils of the National League. He was a delegate of this body to the Chicago Convention, in 1886. In Parliament he was a belligerent speaker, and has once been "suspended" for a breach of the rules of the House. He has been four times imprisoned under the Coercion Act, for which he regards as protests against the curtailment of public liberty, and claims to have effected the abandonment of the rules in so far as they sought to control political offenders with criminal prisoners. He is the author of "When we were written in prison, and of the historical romance, "A Queen of Men," 1888. O'Brien, in company with Mr. Dillon, having been liberated on bail, pending political trial, in November 1890, forfeited the bail, and escaped to the United States to raise funds for the Irish evicted tenants. On his return, he was arrested in Ireland and again sent to prison. He and Mr. Dillon met Mr. Parnell, M.P., in Paris January 1891, for a friendly consultation about his retirement from the leadership of the Irish Parliamentary Party. O'Brien subsequently stood for Parliament on the platform of the majority of the Irish Party, and was elected for Cork City and for the North-East Division of Cork. In 1895 he retired from Parliament in consequence of internal dissensions in the Irish Party, and has since lived at Mallow Cottage, Westport, co. Mayo, but still takes an active part in the National movement. He married, in 1890, Sophia, daughter of Hermann Raffalovich, of Paris. Address: Mallow Cottage, Westport, co. Mayo.

O'BRIEN, The Right Hon. William, is the son of John O'Brien, of Bloomfield, co. Cork, and was born in 1832. He was educated at Midleton School, and was called to the Irish Bar in 1855. He was appointed a Q.C. in 1872, and in 1883 he became a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland. Address: 79 Merrion Square, Dublin.

O'CONNOR, Arthur, M.P., was born on Oct. 1, 1844, and is the eldest son of William O'Connor, M.D., of Kerry and London. He was educated at Ushaw. Elected Nationalist member for Queen's County in 1880, he represented that constituency until 1885. He was returned for East Donegal in 1885, and continues to represent it. He was at one time a clerk in the War Office, was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1883, and went on the South-Eastern Circuit. Unlike most Irish Nationalist members, he has frequently held responsible positions in the House of Commons. He is a Public Works Loan Commissioner (since 1890), of the Deputy Chairmen of Committee of the House, and one of the panel chairmen of Standing Committees. In 1896, 1897, and 1898 he was Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. He has also served on the Royal Commissions on Trade Depression, that on Civil Service Establishments, and that on the Incidence of Local Taxation, and others. Addresses: 10, Cowan Road, Hammersmith; and 5 Essex Court, Temple, E.C.

O'CONNOR, Thomas Power, M.P., born at Athlone, co. Roscommon, on Oct. 1848, is the eldest son of Thomas O'Connor and Theresa Power. He was educated first at the College of the Immaculate Conception, Athlone, and afterwards at the Queen's College, where he graduated in the degrees of B.A. and M.A. He adopted journalism as a profession, and after three years' connection with the Dublin press, came to London in 1870. He first obtained an engagement on the Daily Telegraph, and was afterwards employed on several other London journals. He published in 1876 the first volume of a biography of the late Lord Beaconsfield, under the title of "Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield," but afterwards, changing the method, brought out a complete Life of the then Premier, in a single volume, entitled "Lord Beaconsfield, a Biography." The work received general praise for its literary merits and research, but, as it took a very unfavourable view of the Conservative leader, its conclusions met with a widely different reception from Liberal and Conservative critics. Mr. O'Connor was elected member for the town of Galway at the general election of 1880, and soon became one of the most active and prominent members of the party led by Mr. Parnell. He was one of the Executive of the Land League, both in England and Ireland. In October 1881 he set out for the United States, and lectured on the Irish cause to large gatherings in nearly all the great cities, during a tour which extended over seven months, and raised a large sum of money. In 1883 he was elected President of the "Irish National League of Great Britain," and has been re-elected to the position every year for several years in succession. In 1885 he stood for the Scotland division of Liverpool and defeated Mr. Woodward, the Liberal candidate, by a majority of 1350. He was returned at the same time for Galway, but elected to take the seat at Liverpool. In 1886 he defeated Mr. Earle, a Unionist Liberal, by 1480, and has since represented the division in Parliament. He has edited a "Cabinet of Irish Literature," and has written a large number of tales, essays, and magazine articles. In 1885 he published what is, till now, his principal work, "The Parnell Movement." Other works from his pen are: "Gladstone's House of Commons," "Some Old Love Stories," and "Napoleon." In 1887 he started the Star newspaper, but resigned his interest in it in July 1890. He has since founded the Sun and the Weekly Sun, of both of which journals he is editor. His full-page article on a "Book of the Week" in the Weekly Sun is one of the features of modern English journalism. His latest journalistic venture, a gossiping biographical record of the sayings and doings of contemporaries, is called M.A.P. ("Mainly about People," the title of the personal column originally edited by him in the Star). Address: Oakley Lodge, Chelsea, S.W.

O'CONOR, The Right Hon. Sir Nicholas Roderick, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Ambassador to Constantinople, was born in Ireland, July 3, 1843, and is the son of P. H. O'Connor, of Dundermott, and Jane, daughter of C. French, of Frenchlawn. He was educated at Stonyhurst, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1866. After serving in the junior branches at Berlin, Washington, Madrid, and Paris, he was appointed Secretary of Legation at Peking in 1883. On the death of Sir Harry Parkes, he was for nearly eighteen months Chargé-d'Affaires, during which period he settled the frontier questions of Upper Burma and Thibet. In 1886 he became Diplomatic Agent at Sofia, until 1892, when he returned to Peking as Minister. For three years he exercised great control at the Chinese Court, but could not induce it to institute those reforms which would have rendered the Japanese war less humiliating. As a reward for his unremitting perseverance in furthering the legitimate development of British trade and enterprise, he was transferred to St. Petersburg in 1895, and created K.C.B. He was present at the marriage of the Czar in 1896, in which year he became a G.C.M.G. In 1898 he was transferred to his present post.

O'CONOR DON, The Right Hon. Charles Owen O'Connor, LL.D., known as "The O'Connor Don," in virtue of his being an "Ancient Knight," was born on May 7, 1838, and is the eldest son of Denis O'Connor Don and Mary, daughter of Major Blake, of Towerhill. He was educated at St. Gregory's College, Downside, and has a London University degree. In 1860 he was elected to represent co. Roscommon in the House of Commons in the Liberal interest, and represented that constituency for twenty years, during which he was mainly instrumental in passing the Irish Industrial Schools Act in 1868, and the Irish Sunday Closing Act in 1879. He has been a member of many important commissions, including the Factories and Workshops Commission in 1875, and the Land Law (Bessborough) Commission in 1880. In 1896 he was appointed Chairman of the Financial Relations Commission. He is Lord-Lieutenant of co. Roscommon, of which he was High Sheriff in 1884. He was sworn of the Irish Privy Council in 1881. He has published works on the O'Connors of Connaught, and on Irish questions. In 1879 he married (2) Ellen, daughter of John More O'Ferrall, of Lisard. Addresses: Clonalis, Castlereagh, co. Roscommon, &c.; and Athenaeum.

ODGERS, William Blake, M.A., LL.D., Q.C., was born at Plymouth on May 15, 1849, and is the third son of the late Rev. William James Odgers. He received his education at King Edward's School, Bath, at University College, London, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, of which latter College he was successively Exhibitioner, Scholar, and Law Student. He graduated at Cambridge in 1871, having obtained a place among the Wranglers, and also in Classical Honours. In the same year he won the Member's Prize. He became a B.A. of London in 1871. In 1873 he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, and joined the Western Circuit. He became LL.D. of Cambridge in 1879, and between the years 1881 and 1883 was Examiner for the Law Tripos of that University. From 1892 to 1897 he was Examiner in Common Law at the University of London. He now examines for the Inns of Court in the Bar examination. He was made a Queen's Counsel, July 14, 1893. He was appointed Recorder of Winchester, July 6, 1897. He is author of two standard works, "A Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander," and "The Principles of Pleading," both of which are in their third editions. In 1885 Dr. Blake Odgers unsuccessfully contested Brixton at the general election. He married, in 1877, Frances, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Hudson, formerly Coroner of Stockport, and has five children. Addresses: 4 Elm Court, Temple, E.C.; and the Garth, Woodside Park, North Finchley, N.W.

ODLING, Professor William, M.B., F.R.S., born Sept. 5, 1829, in Southwark, was educated at private schools, and for the medical profession at Guy's Hospital. He graduated M.B. of the University of London in 1851; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, in 1859; and President of the Chemical Society in 1858. He was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at Guy's Hospital in 1850; Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in 1863; Fullerian Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Institution in 1864; Waynflete Professor of Chemistry in the University of Oxford, June 17, 1872; and elected a Fellow of Worcester College the following day. Dr. Odling, who is highly distinguished as a scientific chemist, is the author of a "Manual of Chemistry," 1861; "Lectures on Animal Chemistry," 1866; "Course of Practical Chemistry," 1876; "Chemistry," a Science Series, 1882; "Laurent's Chemical Method; of various scientific memoirs, especially on chemical theory. The University of Leyden conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Mathematics in Physics in February 1875. He was British Judge of Awards for Chemical Exhibitions of the Philadelphia International Exhibition of 1876, and is one of the analysts employed to test the water supplied to London. Addresses: The Natural Museum; and 15 Norham Gardens, Oxford.

O'DONOVAN, Denis, CMG, F.R.S.L., &c., was born at Kinsale, Ireland, Aug. 23, 1846, and was educated in Ireland and France. He arrived in England in 1874, and was appointed Elementary Librarian. Mr. O'Donovan has previously filled the positions of Professor of Modern Languages in the Collège de Hautes Études, afterwards the Collège de la Sorbonne, and of Lecturer in the Collège de la Sorbonne of the University of France. At this time he acquired considerable distinction as a Hellenist. He was one of the editors of the Ami de la Religion, and is the author of "Memories of Rome," and some minor works. He is well known in Melbourne as a writer on literary and artistic subjects. Some of his lectures on art and architecture, delivered at the Public Library in that city, were published by the Technological Commission of Victoria. He was a warm advocate of the establishment of schools of design in that colony, giving them considerable support in the press and on the platform. His latest work is his Analytical Catalogue of the Queensland Parliamentary Library. It is the fruit of many years' labour in the colony, and of a deep study of bibliography, to which he devoted himself during his long residence in the principal countries of Europe, where he became intimately acquainted with the management of all the great libraries of the Old World. He has received from the Parliament of Queensland special and substantial grants in recognition of the thought labour bestowed on the compilation of the Catalogue of the Parliamentary Library. Mr. O'Donovan was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, the Royal Society of Literature, of the Incorporated Society of Authors, a member of the Society of Arts, and of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, Corresponding Member honoris causa of the Société de Géographie Commerciale of Paris and Havre, and honorary member of the Société d'Anthropologie of Paris. He was one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Library Conference held in London in 1897. He has also been created Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (1893), an Officier de l'Instruction Publique (1896), and a Knight of the Legion of Honour (1897).

OGILVY, Gavin. See BARRIE, J. M.

OGLE, William, M.A. and M.D. Oxon., R.C.P. London, was born in 1827 at Oxford, his father being the Regius Professor of Medicine in that University. He was educated at Rugby and at Corpus Christi College, of which latter he afterwards became a Fellow. He graduated in medical honours, and took the degree of M.A. and M.D. at Oxford. His medical education was received at St. George's Hospital, where he became Lecturer on Physiology and Assistant-Physician. After practising for a few years in London, he accepted the office of Medical Officer of Health for East Hertfordshire; and held this post until, on the retirement of Dr. Farr, he was appointed Superintendent of Statistics in the General Register Office, from which post he has now retired. Among other offices which he has held are those of Examiner in Physical Science and in Public Health in the University of Oxford. He was one of the Royal Commissioners who inquired in 1892 into the London water supply. He is the author of numerous papers on physiological and medical subjects in the Transactions of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society, and on statistical subjects in the Journal of the Statistical Society, and in the official reports issued by the General Register Office. He is also the author of a translation, with notes and essays, of the treatises of Aristotle on the Parts of Animals, on Life and Death, and on Respiration, and of Kerner's "Flowers and their Unbidden Guests," and has published various articles on the "Fertilisation of Flowers." Addresses: 10 Gordon Street, Gordon Square, W.C.; and Athenæum.

OHNET, Georges, French novelist and dramatist, was born in Paris on April

3, 1848. His father, an architect, intended him to become a barrister, but after the war of 1870, Georges Ohnet took to political journalism, and was successively on the staff of the Pays and the Constitutionnel, where the vivacity of his style gained him a measure of celebrity. In 1875 his first play, written in conjunction with M. Denayrouze, was produced at the Théâtre Historique under the title of "Regina Sarpi." It had a brilliant success, and was followed in 1877 by "Marthe" at the Gymnase. At about this time M. Ohnet began publishing, under the general title of "Battles of Life," that highly idealistic series of romances with which his name is connected. In 1881 appeared "Serge Panine," a work crowned by the French Academy; in 1882 the famous "Le Maître de Forges," dramatised by the author, and acted at the Gymnase in December 1883, which was one of the most successful novels of the time, being translated into almost every European language; in 1883, "La Comtesse Sarah"; in 1884, "Lise Fleuron"; in 1885, "La Grande Manière," which suggests strongly the manner of Georges Sand, M. Ohnet's model; in 1886, "Les Dames de Croix-Mort"; in 1888, "Volonté," an attack on pessimism; in 1889, "Le Docteur Rameau" and "Dernier Amour"; in 1891, "Dette de Haine"; in 1893, "Nimrod et Cie."; and in 1895, "La Femme en Gris." M. Ohnet has dramatised with great success some half-dozen of his principal novels. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in July 1885. The enormous circulation of his works rivals those of Miss Corelli and Mr. Caine. His Paris address is: 14 Avenue Trudaine.

OHRWALDER, Father, late priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, was born about 1855, and in early life became a missionary. He left Cairo, Dec. 28, 1880, as he says, "as full of bright hopes for a happy future as any young man could wish to be." The missionary party whom he accompanied reached Khartoum early in February 1881, and ultimately founded a mission station at Delen in Kordofan, in the Nubar country. The course of the settlement was a smooth one until April of the following year (1882), when the first signs of a great uprising of the Soudanese became apparent. On Sept. 15, 1882, Mek Omar, a lieutenant of the Mahdi's, sacked their little church, and captured the members of the Mission. After a time, they received a command by special messenger to move on to the Mahdi's camp, "as it was his gracious intention to permit us to look upon his face." On the way, the party were attacked by robbers, and stripped of their clothes, and Ohrwalder was compelled to appear before the Mahdi in a shirt and drawers. Ohrwalder has given us a dramatic account of his famous meeting with the Mahdi, who sought to persuade them to embrace the Moslem faith, but all to no avail. Accordingly, on Sept. 28, 1882, the prisoners were led out to execution, but owing to the appearance of a comet on the preceding night, the Dervish leaders, a superstitious race, postponed the event. All efforts to compel the acceptance of the new faith proving useless, the Mahdi, averse, as he said, to killing priests, promised to release them conditionally upon the surrender of El Obeid. This took place on Jan. 19, 1883, and most horrible tortures ensued. Then followed the reign of bloodshed and cruelty, which is without parallel in history. The Mahdi died on June 22, 1885, of fatty degeneration of the heart. The effect of his death stunned the Dervishes for a time, but they soon gathered under the flag of Abdullah, who, not long after, was beheaded suddenly by the enraged Dervishes in the presence of Ohrwalder. The Father was again captured and forced to march with the victorious Dervishes, who came to Omdurman on April 26, 1886. Ohrwalder passed through a terrible time on the accession of the Khalifa Abdullah, and daily witnessed scenes of the utmost cruelty, himself suffering all manner of indignities and privations. During these unhappy days, naturally that which lay nearest the heart of Ohrwalder was the hope of escape. One brother of the Mission succeeded in gaining freedom, and the news coming to the ears of the Khalifa, he ordered the rest to be brought before him, and after haranguing them for upwards of half-an-hour, he threatened either to throw them into the river or to cut off their hands. Abdullah accordingly exerted a still keener surveillance over the little band of Europeans, and Ohrwalder, giving up for the time being all idea of escape, settled down to earning a precarious living by soap-making. His partner in this plan dying a few months after, he decided to learn how to make ribbon, a form of finery much in vogue amongst the women, and acquired a small and simple loom. With wonderful industry, the good Father, on the ribbon-makers, fearful of competition, declining to teach him the trade except on impossible terms, unravelled a piece of ribbon and thus studied the mode of manufacture with the closest attention. The work at first was very trying and almost unremunerative, but at the end of a month he succeeded in turning out sixteen yards a day. On the night of Oct. 28, 1891, Ahmed Hassan, the last messenger of Archbishop Sogaro, who had for years been endeavouring to bring about the deliverance of his imprisoned mission, suddenly appeared, and Omdurman was quitted on Nov. 23, 1891, in the dead of night. A terrible journey was undergone across the great desert, and in seven days' time, the most advanced Egyptian outpost, sighted, this being at a distance of 100 miles from Omdurman. After a stop at the station for two days the journey resumed, and Cairo regained on Dec. 1, 1891. The thrilling story of the rescue of Father Ohrwalder and two nuns has been told by the Father himself in his book, "Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi Camp." Ohrwalder's manuscript, written in German, was roughly translated into English by Yusef Effendi Cudzi, a Syrian. It was afterwards entirely re-written in narrative form by Sir Fred. Wingate, then Director of Military Intelligence in the Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdi and the Egyptian Sudan." During a popular edition (price 6d.) was published of Father Ohrwalder's account of his terrible imprisonment.

O'KELLY, James, M.P., son of the late John O'Kelly, of Roscommon, was born in Dublin in 1845. He was educated at Dublin University and at the Sorbonne, Paris, and served for some time as an officer in the French army during the Franco-German war. He left France at the fall of Paris and went to New York where he worked for some time as a journalist for the New York Herald. He was a correspondent for the same paper when he went to Cuba at the time of the insurrection, but joining the rebels, was taken prisoner, and confined for some time in a dungeon, whence at last he contrived to escape. After various adventures in America, Algiers, and elsewhere, he went to the Sudan for the purpose of joining the Mahdi's troops; he was lost for some months in the desert, and at last appeared on the Nile, not far from Khartoum. After writing a series of lively letters to the Daily News he returned to England, and once more represented the constituency of Roscommon in the House of Commons. At the general election of 1885 he and Mr. Mullany were returned by an immense Parnellite majority for the new division of North Roscommon, and in 1886 he was returned unopposed. In 1892 he stood as a Parnellite for the old constituency, but was beaten by a small majority by Mr. Bodkin, an Anti-Parnellite. Mr. O'Kelly was a "suspect" and was imprisoned at Kilmainham in 1881-82. In the House of Commons he was at one time frequently "suspended." In 1895 he was returned as Nationalist M.P. for Roscommon. He is London correspondent of the Irish Daily Independent.

OKUMA, Count, son of the commander of the garrison at Nagasaki, a poor Samurai, or knight, was about fifteen years old when Commodore Perry insisted on opening Japan to foreign trade. He studied foreign books, and was therefore chosen for office after the Imperial restoration of 1868. He opposed the feudal system, and supported the Anglicising of education and the introduction of railways and telegraphs. In 1873 he was appointed Minister of Finance, a post which he held with conspicuous ability until 1881, when he resigned owing to a disagreement with the Premier, Marquis Ito. The chief power in the state was at that time wielded by men of the Satsuma-Choshin class, who had brought about the revolution. Okuma saw the need of a Diet to check the power of these classes, but meeting with opposition, resigned. Until the Diet was formed in 1890, he organised a party to oppose the privileged classes. This Progressive party is known as the Kaishinto. In 1888 Count Okuma became Minister for Foreign Affairs, but his tenure of office was shortlived. He was compelled to resign owing to the unpopularity entailed upon him by his efforts to promote the revision of treaties with foreign powers. A bomb was thrown at Count Okuma in 1890 by a fanatical adherent of the old régime. The steadily increasing power of the Kaishinto carried the Count into power in 1896, when he was appointed Foreign Minister, but he was compelled to resign in 1897. In 1898 Party Government was established in Japan. The two parties, the Liberals and Progressives, united to form what they call the Constitutional Party, and Marquis Ito, seeing that the time had come to try the experiment, resigned, and Count Okuma became Prime Minister. The general election gave him a large majority, but dissensions in the Cabinet caused his resignation later in the year.

OLCOTT, Colonel Henry Steel, Theosophist, and President of the Theosophical Society, had made his mark as an American reformer and man of affairs before the outbreak of the War of North and South. By 1856 he had founded the first scientific agricultural school on the Swiss model in the United States, and had written three works on agriculture, one of which went into seven editions. He had by invitation addressed three State Legislatures on the subject of a new sugar-plant, which is now generally cultivated, and had been offered by his own Government a botanical mission to Caffraria, and later the Chief Commissionership of Agriculture, and, by the Greek Government, the Professorship of Agriculture at the University of Athens. He was at one time agricultural editor of Horace Greeley's paper the New York Tribune, and also American correspondent for the Mark Lane Express, and his services to the cause of American agricultural reform were such that the National Agricultural Society voted him two medals of honour, while the American Institute presented him with a silver goblet. When the Civil War broke out he threw up the profession of the law, in which he had been chiefly engaged hitherto, and joined the Northerners. He saw service in four battles, and was present at the capture of Fort Macon, but was subsequently invalided on account of dysentery contracted in the field. On his recovery the authorities determined to keep so useful a man from returning to the front, and therefore appointed him to the highly responsible position of Special Commissioner of the War Department. As such his chief duty was to punish dishonest Government contractors. For two years he is said to have been in constant danger of assassination owing to his unsparing severity towards the rings of wealthy swindlers who made their fortunes at the expense of the Executive. A sum amounting to $200,000 is reported to have been collected by the fraudulent contractors, who hoped thereby to bribe him into silence, but none of them ventured to approach him with the money. At the end of two years, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, he was also ordered on special naval duty, instituted drastic reforms in the dockyards, and introduced a new system of accounts at Boston and Philadelphia. The war being over, Colonel Olcott retired into private life, and during the last fifteen years has been prominent as a student and teacher of Theosophy and neo-Buddhism.

OLDCASTLE, John. See MEYNELL, WILFRID.

OLDENBURG, Grand-Duke of, Nicholas Frederick Peter, son of the Grand-Duke Paul Frederick Augustus and the Princess Ida of Anhalt-Bernburg, born July 8, 1827, succeeded his father, Feb. 27, 1853. The population of the Duchy over which he reigns is about 300,000. He promulgated a liberal constitution in February 1849, modified it in 1852, and during the war between Russia, Turkey, and the Allied Powers, he adhered to the policy of Prussia. After the conquest of Schleswig-Holstein by Prussia and Austria, the Grand-Duke claimed a portion of these duchies, which claim he endeavoured to support by some "Memoirs" addressed to the diplomatists of Europe. He married, Feb. 10, 1852, Elizabeth, daughter of Prince Joseph of Saxe-Altenburg, by whom he has two sons.

OLLIVIER, Olivier Émile, a French statesman, born at Marseilles, July 2, 1825; became a member of the Paris Bar in 1847; and in 1848 was Commissary-General of the Republic at Marseilles; was Préfet at Chaumont, and returned to the Bar in 1849. Elected as Opposition candidate for the third circonscription of the Seine in 1857, he took part in several important discussions; amongst which may be mentioned those relating to the laws respecting public safety, the expedition to Italy, and the regulation of the Press. During the session of 1860 he was one of the most distinguished members of a small group of Opposition Deputies, known by the name of "The Five." In the meantime he undertook the defence of M. Vacherot, indicted for his work entitled "La Démocratie," and in consequence of the style he adopted in pleading, was suspended for three months, an appeal against this judgment failing. In 1863 he was re-elected for Paris. During the session of 1865 he was elected a member of the Council-General of the Var. In July of the same year he received the appointment of Judicial Counsel and Commissary-General of the Viceroy of Egypt in Paris, and retired from the Paris Bar. M. Émile Ollivier was chosen by the Emperor as arbitrator of the difficulties which arose relative to the Isthmus of Suez, and it was upon his report that the final decision was founded. The session of 1866-67 witnessed the complete separation of M. Ollivier from his former political associates of the Left. At the General Elections of 1869 he was returned by an enormous majority for the first circonscription of the Var. On December 27 M. Ollivier, who had been for some time the centre of the movements for uniting the fractions of the late majority with the new Liberal Tiers Parti, received from the Emperor a letter inviting him to form a Ministry which should enjoy the confidence of the Legislative body, and which could carry out the Senatus-Consultum in letter and spirit. This onerous task he undertook, and the names of the new ministers were published in the Journal Officiel on Jan. 3, 1870. M. Ollivier himself took the portfolio of Justice. Among the first-fruits of the new administration was the granting of an amnesty in favour of M. Ledru-Rollin, the convocation of the High Court of Justice at Tours to Prince Pierre Bonaparte, the maintenance of order without shedding of blood, the popular excitement caused by the assassination of Victor Noir, the nomination of Henry Rochefort, and the reforms of M. Haussmann. Several administrative reforms also were introduced, and it was thought by many that an era of constitutional liberty had begun for France. hopes were soon rudely dispelled. declaration of war against Germany and its disastrous results, led to the overthrow of the Ollivier Government on May 1870. M. Ollivier, who, it should be mentioned, had been elected a member of the French Academy in April 1870, prudently retired after the fall of the Empire to Biella, in Piedmont, where he resided for a considerable time with his wife and child, devoting his time to literary pursuits. He returned to France in 1872, and his reception at the Academy took place Feb. 25, 1874. In 1876 he twice stood for the Chamber of Deputies, but was unsuccessful. In 1877 M. Ollivier again became a figure in politics on the occasion of Prince Napoleon's touching the decrees about religious congregations. In the columns of the Figaro he called upon enlightened priests to conform to the decrees, but his appeal was to a violent and prolonged press war with M. Paul de Cassagnac. Since then he has scarcely mixed in contemporary politics except as a correspondent to papers. He accepts the Republic. In 1885, when again standing unsuccessfully for the Chamber, declared that it would be resolutely anti-Radical. M. Ollivier has published numerous journalistic works, which have appeared in the Revue de Droit Pratique, which he founded in 1856, in conjunction with MM. Mourlon, Demangeat, and Ballot. He is the author, with M. Mourlon, of "Commentaires sur les Saisies Immobilières et Ordres," 1858, and of "Commissaire de la Loi du 2 Mars 1864, sur les Coalitions," "Une Visite à la Chapelle des Mémoires," "Dialogue entre Michel Ange et Raphaël," "Principes et Conduite," 1872; "L'Eglise et l'État au Concile du Vatican," 2 vols., 1879; "M. Thiers à l'Académie des Sciences," 1880; "Le Concordat est-il respecté?" 1883; "Droit Ecclésiastique Français," 1885; and "1789 et 1889," 1890. In 1894 he published a defence of his policy in seven volumes, entitled "L'Empire Libéral." M. Ollivier's first wife, who died at Saint Tropez in 1862, was a daughter of Liszt, the pianist and composer; he married secondly, in September 1869, a

OLMSTED, Frederick Law, landscape gardener, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, April 25, 1822. He studied at Yale College, devoting special attention to engineering and the sciences connected with agriculture. In 1848 he purchased a farm on Staten Island, and while managing it, studied landscape gardening. In 1850 he made a pedestrian tour through England and portions of the Continent, the account of which was given in his "Landscape Architecture in England, Ireland, and Talks of an American Farmer in England," 1852. In 1852-53, as correspondent of the New York Times, he travelled through the South for the purpose of studying the economical effects of slavery. The results of this and of a subsequent journey were afterwards published in separate works: "A Journey in the Old Slave States," 1856; "A Journey through Texas," 1857; "A Journey through the Black Country," 1860; and "The Cotton Kingdom," 1861. In the meantime, in 1855, he made a tour through France, Italy, and Germany, for the purpose of observing parks and rural grounds. In 1857, in connection with Calvert Vaux, he secured the prize for the best plan of laying out the New York Central Park, and was appointed architect-in-chief of work. He continued in charge of the park until the outbreak of the Civil War (1861), when he was appointed Secretary and Executive Officer of the Sanitary Commission. From 1863 to 1865 he spent in California, when he was made one of the Commissioners of the Yosemite Reservation. He returned to New York in 1866 and had charge of the laying-out of the Brooklyn Prospect Park. He has since designed parks and other public works at Washington, Chicago, Rochester, Louisville, Milwaukee, Buffalo, Montreal, and other cities. He resides at Brookline, Massachusetts.

OLNEY, Hon. Richard, Attorney-General of the United States, was born at Oxford, Mass., Sept. 15, 1835, and was graduated from Brown University, Providence, R.I., in 1856. He attended the Harvard Law School from 1856 to 1859, when he was admitted to the Bar and began the practice of his profession at Boston, where he has since resided. He served as a Member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1874, but held no other public office until his appointment by President Cleveland in March 1893, as Attorney-General of the United States. In May 1895 he was appointed Secretary of State of the United States by

O'MALLEY, Sir Edward Loughlin, J.P., son of the late Peter Frederick O'Malley, Q.C., was born in 1842, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. 1864, M.A. 1868. He was called to the Bar, Middle Temple, in 1866, and went on the Norfolk and South-Eastern Circuits. He was made Attorney-General for Jamaica in 1876; Attorney-General for Hong Kong in 1879; and Chief-Justice of the Straits Settlements in 1889. In 1892 he was appointed Attorney-General of Jamaica and Hong Kong, in 1895 Chief-Justice of British Guiana, and in 1898 Judge of H.B.M.'s Supreme Consular Court, Constantinople. He received the honour of knighthood in 1891. He married, in 1869, Winifred, daughter of J. A. Hardcastle, M.P. Addresses: Denton House, Cuddesdon, Oxford; and Athenæum.

OMMANNEY, Admiral Sir Erasmus, C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., Knight Grand Commander of the Royal Order of the Saviour (Greece), is the seventh son of the late Sir Francis Molyneux Ommanney, the well-known navy agent, and sometime M.P. for Barnstable, and nephew of the late Admiral Sir John A. Ommanney, K.C.B. He was born in London in 1814, and entered the navy in 1826. As midshipman, he assisted at the landing of the British army at Lisbon in 1827, and was at the battle of Navarino on board the Albion, which was in the thick of the fight, and for three hours was hotly engaged, firing on both sides at once. He acted as A.D.C. to the captain throughout the action. He served in H.M. ships Revenge and Undaunted, and saw much service in the Mediterranean, at the Cape of Good Hope, on the West Coast of Africa, and the East Indian stations. He served as mate in the royal yacht Royal George, in the summer of 1834, and was employed in conveying her Majesty Queen Adelaide from Woolwich to Holland and back again, and was afterwards usefully employed in the Packet Service on board a ten-gun brig, the Pantaloön, carrying the mails between Falmouth and Lisbon. He was promoted to Lieutenant in 1835, and immediately volunteered to serve with Capt. James Ross in an expedition to relieve the whaling vessels beset in the ice of Baffin's Bay; this expedition was carried out in mid-winter under extreme hardships and difficulties, and for his services Lieut. Ommanney received the commendation of the Admiralty. After this he served in H.M.S. Pique, and was then appointed Flag-Lieutenant to Sir John Ommanney in the Tagus, which caused his promotion to the rank of Commander in October 1840. At Glasgow he studied the principles and construction of marine engines, in order to fit himself to command steam-vessels, which were then being introduced into the navy. With the Leucivius he was actively employed in all parts of the Mediterranean for three years, being present at the bombardment of Tangier by the French. He then returned to England, and, unable to get active employment, studied at the Portsmouth Naval College. After being promoted Captain in 1846, he was employed by the Government to help in carrying out the relief measures during the Irish Famine, and in February 1850 was selected to be second in command of the Arctic Expedition, under Captain Austin, to search after the Franklin Expedition, and was the first to discover traces of the missing ships. After travelling over 500 miles on the ice in sledges, Capt. Ommannney returned to the ship, and though no further traces of Franklin were found, a great deal of new land was discovered. On his return to England he was appointed Deputy Controller-General of the Coast-guard, which he left on the outbreak of the war against Russia in 1854, when he was appointed to command the White Sea Expedition, with his pennant in H.M.S. Eurydice. Every part of the White Sea was searched, government stores were destroyed, and various towns bombarded. Upon his return to England, Captain Ommannney was appointed to H.M.S. Hawke for service in the Baltic Fleet, where he was selected to be the Senior Officer in the Gulf of Riga, with four ships under his orders. In November 1857 he proceeded to the West Indies and took command of H.M.S. Brunswick, and was kept as Senior Officer on the Coast of Central America, where he co-operated with the United States Commodore in preventing a filibustering invasion of Nicaragua. He was afterwards recalled to England, and served in the Channel Fleet, and after wintering at Berehaven the Brunswick was despatched to the Mediterranean. Captain Ommannney was lastly employed as Senior Officer in charge of the Naval establishments at the Rock of Gibraltar for nearly three years, a post he was obliged to leave on being promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in November 1864. He was afterwards knighted in recognition of his Arctic services, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society for his scientific observations and for his geographical discoveries made in the Arctic regions. Since being retired by compulsion, he has served on the Thames Conservancy, nominated by the Admiralty, and devoted himself to the interests of learned societies. He has been a frequent attendant at the meetings of the Royal Association, and served on the Council. He accompanied the Society to the Arctic in Canada in 1884 in the capacity of treasurer, on which occasion the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred by the University of Montreal. He published a paper at the Aberdeen meeting in 1881 on the desirability of renewing the expedition and research into the unknown arctic regions. In company with the known Berlin Professor and a Danish Astronomer, he proceeded to Luxor, Upper Egypt, and assisted in observing the transit of Venus. He also accompanied the Expedition which visited Oran, in Algeria, for observing the eclipse of the sun, but the expedition was unfortunately, were unsuccessful on account of the obscurity of the weather. He is one of the oldest Fellows of the Royal Geographical Society, and has taken a deep interest in their proceedings, having been on the Council and been their delegate at the congresses on the Continent at Amsterdam, Berne, and Nantes. He is a Vice-President of the Royal United Service Institution, and attended the Council for twenty years. During a residence of ten years on the Isle of Wight he discharged the duties of a Justice of the Peace, and undertook the work of an independent visitor under the Home Office of the convict Prison, for which the thanks of the Home Secretary were accorded him. He was a survivor of the eventful and sanguinary battle at Navarino, and for other services in Greek waters, King George of Denmark has been pleased to confer upon him the Cross of a Grand Commander of the Order of the Saviour. Admiral Sir Montagu Ommannney married, in 1862, the daughter of Thomas A. Stone, 1 Curzon Street, London. Address: Connaught Square, W.

OMMANNEY, Sir Montagu (Montagu), K.C.M.G., Crown Agent for the Colonies, was born in 1846, at Cheltenham, and educated at Cheltenham, where he passed into Woolwich. In 1864 he entered the Royal Engineers, and with the rank of Captain in 1870 he was appointed to his present post. From 1874 to 1877 he was Private Secretary to the Secretary for the Colonies. He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1881. Address: Manaton, East Sheen.

ONSLow, Earl of, William (William), Bart., G.C.M.G., was born on 7, 1853, and is the only son of the late George Augustus Cranley (Cranley) and Mary, daughter of Lieut.-Colonel William Fraser Bentinck Loftus was educated at Eton, and Exeter College, Oxford; and succeeded his grandfather as 4th Earl in 1870. He was Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, 1887-9; and Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade from February to November 1888, when he became Governor of New Zealand in succession to Sir W. D. Reeves. He was appointed Under-Secretary for India in 1895. The Earl was Lord-in-Waiting to her Majesty in 1880 and in 1886-87, is High Steward of Guildford, and from 1895 to 1898 was Alderman of the London County Council. During these years (1895-98), he was also leader of the Moderate Party in the London County Council. At the election in March 1898 he retired from the leadership owing to the multiplicity of his engagements, and a hearty vote of thanks was passed to him at a meeting of the Moderate Party for his great services to the party during his three years' tenure of the position. In 1875 he married Florence, daughter of 3rd Lord Gardner. Addresses: 7 Hammond Terrace, S.W.; and Clandon, Guildford.

OPPERT, Julius, a French Orientalist, was born in Hamburg, of Jewish parents, July 9, 1825. He studied law at Heidelberg, and Sanskrit and Arabic at Bonn. He next studied the Zend and the ancient Persian, and published a treatise on the vocal system of the latter language. As his religion prevented him holding a professorship in a German university, he went to France in 1847, obtained the professorship of German at Lycées of Laval and Rheims, and was appointed on the scientific expedition sent by the Government to Mesopotamia. After his return in 1854, he submitted to the Institute a new system of interpreting inscriptions. For nearly thirty years he devoted himself chiefly to the deciphering of cuneiform inscriptions. In 1871 he was appointed Professor of Sanskrit in the School of Languages attached to the Imperial Library. Among his works are "Les Inscriptions des Archéides," 1852; "Etudes Assyriennes; expédition scientifique de France en Mésopotamie," 1854-64; "Grammaire assyrienne," 1859; "Grande Inscription du Palais de Khorsabad," 1864; "Histoire des Empires de Chaldée et d'Assyrie, après les monuments," 1866; "L'Immortalité de l'âme chez les Chaldéens, suivie d'une traduction de la descente aux enfers du dieu Istar Astarté," 1875; "L'Ambre chez les Assyriens," 1880; "Fragments Mythologiques relatifs à la Mythologie Assyrienne," 1882; "Deux Textes anciens de la Chaldée," 1883; "Chronologie de la Génèse," 1877; "Documents juridiques de la Chaldée et de l'Assyrie," 1878; "Le Peuple et la Langue des Mèdes," 1879. He has written many papers on the Laws of Assyria and Babylon, such as "État des Esclaves à Babylone," &c. His Paris address is: 2 Rue de Sfax.

ORCHARDSON, William Quiller, R.A., D.C.L. Oxford, born in Edinburgh in 1835, entered at the age of fifteen the Trustees' Academy of his native city. The first pictures he submitted to public inspection were shown in the exhibitions of the Royal Scottish Academy. Encouraged by their reception, Mr. Orchardson came to London in 1863, and the same year exhibited at the Royal Academy for the first time. His contributions were entitled "An Old English Song," and "Portraits," the latter a life-size full-length portrait composition of three young ladies. In the following year he exhibited at the British Institution a figure of "Peggy" from Allan Ramsay's "Gentle Shepherd," and at the Royal Academy another Scottish subject entitled "Flowers of the Forest." The following year there appeared at the Royal Academy "Hamlet and Ophelia," and in the winter exhibition at the French Gallery, Pall Mall, "The Challenge," which won a prize of £100 given by Mr. Wallace. In 1866 came "The Story of a Life" at the Academy—an aged nun relating her life experience to a group of novices; and "Christopher Sly," in Mr. Wallis's winter exhibition at the Suffolk Street Galleries. In 1867 the Academy pictures were "Talbot and the Countess of Auvergne," and "Miss Pettie"; and another was shown at the French Gallery winter exhibition, entitled "Choosing a Weapon." In January 1868 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, only four years after he had come to London. He exhibited that year at the Academy, besides a portrait of Mrs. Birket Foster, a subject from Shakespeare—"Prince Henry, Poins, and Falstaff." In 1870 three pictures by him were exhibited at the Royal Academy, viz., "Day Dreams," "The Market-Girl from the Lido," and "Toilers of the Sea." Mr. Orchardson achieved a great success at the Paris Universal Exhibition, where his "Challenge" and "Christopher Sly" were greatly admired by French critics, and won for the painter one of the very few medals awarded to English artists. His more recent pictures are: "A Hundred Years Ago," "On the Grand Canal, Venice," and "In St. Mark's, Venice," exhibited at the Academy, 1871; "Casus Belli," and "The Forest Pet," 1872; "The Protector," "Oscar and Brin," and "Cinderella," 1873; "Hamlet and the King," "Ophelia," "A Venetian Fruitseller," and "Escaped,"

1874; "Too Good to be True," and "Moonlight on the Lagoons," 1875; "Flotsam and Jetsam," "The Bill of Sale," and "The Old Soldier," 1876; "The Queen of the Swords," and "Jessica" (Merchant of Venice), 1877; "Conditional Neutrality," "A Social Eddy left by the Tide," and "Autumn," 1878; "Hard Hit," a scene at the gaming table, 1879; "Napoleon I. on board H.M.S. Bellerophon," 1880, purchased by the Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantrey bequest; "Housekeeping in the Honeymoon," 1882. These were followed by "Voltaire," 1883; "Un Mariage de Convenance," 1884; "The Salon of Mme. Recamier," 1885; "Un Mariage de Convenance—After," 1886; "The Rift within the Lute," 1887; and "The Young Duke," 1889. Besides portraits of Lord Rookwood, Prof. Dewar, David Stewart, Lord Provost of Aberdeen, the Bishop of St. Asaph's, the Provost of Oriel, Viscount Peel, and several ladies, he has of late years exhibited at the Royal Academy "A Flower," 1895; "Reflections," 1896; "Rivalry," 1897; "Trouble," 1898; and portraits of Lord Kelvin, of Peter Russell, Esq., of the Earl of Crawford (presentation portrait), and of Edmund Davis, Esq., 1899. Mr. Orchardson was elected a Royal Academician, Dec. 13, 1877; and a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1890. Address: 13 Portland Place, W.

ORD, William Miller, M.D., F.R.C.P., received his medical education at St. Thomas's Hospital, where he was successively House Surgeon, Surgical Registrar, Demonstrator of Anatomy, Lecturer on Physiology and on Comparative Anatomy, and where he is now Physician and Lecturer on Medicine. He obtained his M.D. of London in 1877, having become a Fellow of the R.C.P., London, two years previously. He is Treasurer of the Clinical Society, Fellow of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society, and Fellow or Member of other leading Medical Societies. In 1879 he published "Influence of Colloids upon Crystalline Forms," and has contributed many papers on Uric Acid, &c., to the St. Thomas's Hospital Reports, the Med. Chir. Trans., &c. In 1881 he edited the works of Francis Gibson, and in 1885 delivered the Presidential Address at the Medical Society of London on Hyperpyrexia. Address: 37 Upper Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

O'RELL, Max. See BLOUËT, PAUL.

ORLÉANS, Prince Henri d', was born at Ham, near Richmond, Oct. 16, 1867, and is the eldest son of the Duc de

Chartres. When he was about to go to St. Cyr in 1887, the law was passed bidding princes of Royal blood from leaving their country in any capacity; therefore started on a voyage round the world, which lasted twelve months, of which he spent in India shooting with his cousin, the Duc d'Orléans. On his return he published "Six Mois aux chasses au tigre," 1889. In the same year he started with the explorer, Bonvalot, on an exploration of Starting from Russia, they crossed and traversed Tibet, coming out in 1891 after a terribly arduous journey. On his return he was awarded, with his companions Bonvalot and Dedekind, a gold medal of the Geographical Society of France, and was elected a member of the Académie des Sciences, &c. of London, Rome, Vienna, and Bern. In collaboration with M. Bonvalot he published "De Paris au Tonkin à travers Tibet inconnu," 1891. He then started for Central Africa; disembarking in the Gulf of Aden he went inland as far as Ham and Mill-Mill, and laid down the first map of the country, 1892. In 1894 he spent some months in Madagascar before the French occupation, and then returned to Tonkin and discovered the sources of the Irrawaddy on his way from China to India. Since then he has headed a mission to the Negus of Abyssinia.

ORLÉANS, Duc d', Prince Philippe Robert, eldest son of the Comte de Paris, was born Feb. 6, 1838. On attaining his majority, Feb. 6, 1858, he entered Paris, and proceeding to the Mairie, expressed his desire as a Frenchman to perform his military service whereupon he was arrested in conformity with the Expulsion Bill of 1836, which forbids the soil of France to the heirs of the families which have renounced their French citizenship there. He was liberated by President Carnot after a few months' nominal imprisonment, and conducted to the Swiss frontier. This escapade won him the title of the "Premier Conscrit." During the last illness of his father in August 1894, he was constantly at the bedside of the illustrious patient, with whom he is reported to have had private conversations on his duties as future representative of the family tradition. After the Comte de Paris's funeral he received his adherents, and is now residing in Brussels, which will in future be his headquarters, Stowe House being, in his opinion, too distant from Orleanist circles in France, especially from those older members of the party who cannot undertake a sea voyage. In 1896 he married Marie Dorothea, a duchess of Austria. His periodical proclamations have little effect in France now.

ORMEROD, Miss Eleanor A., Iet. S., F.E.S., &c., was born at Ry Park, near Chepstow, and is youngest daughter of Geo. Ormerod, F.R.S., of Sedbury Park, Gloucehire, and of Tyldesley, Lancashire, as well known as the "Historian of re." From her earliest childhood Ormerod was excessively fond of ing plant and animal life. To a us early training under her mother Ormerod attributes the success which tended her studies as a specialist. y life successive illness occasioned s of enforced leisure, which Miss Ormerod occupied in natural history out of doors, together with the ted subjects of Botany, Horticultural and Agricultural Chemistry. She quired a knowledge of Latin, French, , and several other of the less nly studied Continental languages, greatly helped her in later work, e began early to sketch from nature oil and water colours. About the 1853 she took up the scientific study omology. The real work of her life in 1868, when the formation of the ion of Economic Entomology was foot by the Royal Horticultural and the South Kensington Depart-

At this time, Mr. Andrew Murray, rator of the Museum, was in con-ommunication with Miss Ormerod, ing special investigations and re-and, in response, she contributed ens, drawings, and models illus-of insect depredations, in recogni-which many services the "Silver Medal" of the Royal Horticultural r was awarded to her. In the year 1868 Miss Ormerod was chosen to repre-itish natural history modelling from the International Polytechnic Ex-a held in Moscow, and sent over a collection of plaster-of-Paris models, by her in exact facsimile by a of her own invention and coloured elf. These specimens represented number of garden plants and hot-fruits. She also sent groups of -types from nature, representing and reptiles. For these she received ver Medal, the Great Silver Medal, o the Gold Medal of Honour from iversity of Moscow. In 1878 Miss d was elected a Fellow of the ological Society, being the first lady mitted to Fellowship. She arranged d for the Society a large mass of ions relating to coincident condi- weather and plant life. This was ed in a royal 8vo vol. under the name of the "Cobham Journals." In 1881 she published her "Manual of Injurious Insects, with Methods of Prevention and Remedy for their Attacks on Food-Crops, &c.," and in 1884 her "Guide to Insect Life," being a series of ten lectures on the same class of subjects delivered by her in the Lecture Theatre at South Kensington Museum. Both works have been republished in much enlarged form, and were followed, in 1889, by a small vol. on some of the injurious insects of South Africa. But Miss Ormerod's chief publication has been her "Annual Reports of Observations on Injurious Farm Insects," which were begun in 1877, and continued yearly up to the present date, thus forming a continuous record of the presence and habits of insects injurious to field and orchard crops, and the means found really serviceable for checking their ravages, over a period of twenty-one years. In 1881 she accepted the post of Special Lecturer on Economic Entomology at the Royal Agricultural College, but after a few years she resigned this office. She was unanimously elected Consulting Entomologist to the Royal Agricultural Society of England by the Council, on May 2, 1882. To the duties of this post she devoted her best attention for about ten years. But in the course of 1892, she retired from the office. Miss Ormerod is a member of many scientific societies. She is Hon. Member of the Farmers' Club, a Fellow of the Royal Meteorological Society, and of the Entomological Society of London, and of Stockholm, also a Member of the Entomological Society of Washington, and a Corresponding Member of the International Association of Official Entomologists of Washington. Miss Ormerod is also an additional examiner in Agricultural Entomology in the University of Edinburgh. Her membership with societies in Canada, Australia, and South Africa affords the opportunities of giving and receiving communications aiding in her special work, which continues to increase in scope and importance. Besides the heavy home correspondence which she conducts, especially in reply to inquiries from British agriculturists, Miss Ormerod receives numerous applications from foreign countries and the colonies, and is likewise a frequent contributor to the agricultural journals, regarding prevention of farm and fruit insect attacks. Address : Torrington House, St. Albans.

ORMONDE, Marquis of, James Edward William Theobald Butler, K.P., Hereditary Chief Butler of Ireland and Vice - Admiral of Leinster, was born at Kilkenny Castle on Oct. 5, 1844, and succeeded his father, the 2nd Marquis, in 1854. He was educated at Harrow, and entered the 1st Life Guards, retiring with the rank of Captain in 1873. He is Hon. Colonel of 5th Batt. of the Royal Irish Regiment, and for some ten years commanded the Royal East Kent Yeomanry. In 1888 he was made a Knight of St. Patrick. He has been Lord Lieutenant of Kilkenny since 1878. He married, in 1876, Lady Elizabeth Harriet Grosvenor, daughter of the 1st Duke of Westminster. Addresses: 32 Upper Brook Street, W.; Kilkenny Castle, &c.

OSCAR II. King of Sweden and Norway, is the great-grandson of Napoleon's famous general Bernadotte, and was born Jan. 21, 1829. Before he ascended the throne he held the rank of Lieutenant-General in the army. On the death of the King's brother, Charles XV., Sept. 18, 1872, he succeeded to the throne. In 1878 the Frankfort Academy of Sciences elected the King of Sweden a corresponding member in recognition of his poetical translation of Goethe's "Faust" into Swedish. His Majesty is also the author of "A Memoir of Charles XII." (translated into English in 1879); and of "Poems and Leaflets from my Journal," 1880, under the nom de plume of "Oscar Frederik." He married, in June 1857, the Princess Sophia of Nassau, daughter of the late Duke Wilhelm of Nassau, who was born in July 1836. From this union there are four sons—namely, Gustaf, Duke of Wermland, born in June 1858, now heir-apparent to the throne; Oscar, Duke of Götland, born in November 1859, and who married Miss Ebba Munck, daughter of Col. Munck; Carl, Duke of Westergötland, born in February 1861; and Eugene, Duke of Nerike, born in August 1865. The coronation of King Oscar and Queen Sophia took place July 18, 1873, at the Cathedral of Drontheim in Norway. In 1892 and 1893 King Oscar opposed himself resolutely to the desire of the Norwegian Parliament for a foreign and consular service which should be independent of Sweden. On Sept. 18, 1897, he celebrated the 25th anniversary of his accession amidst the great rejoicings of his people. In the same year his son, Prince Carl, was married to the Princess Ingeborg of Denmark.

OSCAR FREDERICK. See OSCAR II.

OSLER, William, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S. Lond., Professor of Medicine at the Johns Hopkins University, was born at Bend Head, Canada, on July 12, 1849, and is the sixth son of the late Rev. F. L. Osler. He was educated at Toronto University, M'Gill University, University College London, Berlin and Vienna, &c. He was Professor of the Institutes of Medicine at M'Gill University from 1874 to 1884, Professor of Clinical Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania from 1884 to 1886, when he was appointed to his present post, and Gulstonian Lecturer at the College of Physicians, London, in 1888. In 1898 he was elected F.R.S. His most important standard work is "The Principles and Practice of Medicine," 3rd ed. 1898. Address: Baltimore.

OSMAN ALI (called Osman Beg or "the bearded one," from dik, beard) was born at Suakim about 1840. He is not of pure Arab descent; his father was a Turkish slave-dealer who married a woman of the Hadendowa and Osman, like his father and grandfather before him, was a dealer in slaves and had connections in Khartoum, Berber; and during later years, before he appeared as the ambassador of the Khalifa, he stayed more frequently at Berber than at Suakim. There he entered into communication with the Mahdi, Mohammed Ahmed, and matured his plans for inducing the tribes round Suakim to rise against the oppression of their Egyptian rulers. Osman Digna was not, however, the first and original leader of the rebellion. Sheik Tahher, of Suakim, who enjoyed the repute of especial holiness amongst the superstitious nomads of the parts, was the real messenger of the Mahdi, and the channel of communication in the negotiations with the rebellious tribes, while Osman Digna was more military commander, and had to have operations upon the spiritual authority of Sheik Tahher, a relation which existed till within recent years. It is well known with what skill Osman Digna filled his position, extended his influence over rebellious tribes, and rose in the estimation of the authorities at Khartoum. The rebellion of the False Prophet on the White Nile broke out in December 1 and in August 3, 1883, Osman Digna appeared before Suakim, on which the first encounter took place at Suakim with Tewfik Bey, Osman being beaten and wounded, and losing three members of his family. In September 1885 an Abyssinian expedition under Ras Alula, which had been sent to the relief of Kassala by Emperor Menelik, encountered Osman Digna at Kafell, and utterly defeated him. Osman again threatened Suakim in 1888, when he was repulsed by General Grenfell on December 21 of that year. He has been reported as slain more frequently than any other warrior. However, his natural astuteness did not desert him after title of Omdurman, for he was one of the few Emirs who escaped the terrible massacre. Late in 1898 he was reported as being fugitive in the less accessible portions of the Soudan.

Lucius O'Brien, Lord Leigh, and the Bishops of Truro and Lincoln, 1899. Mr. Osier was one of the two English recipients of the grand Gold Medal for Art at the Berlin International Exhibition, 1886; and was made a Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur after the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1889. Mr. Osier is Hon. Secretary of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution. He married Lucy, daughter of the late E. K. Chambers, M.D., in 1868. Addresses: 12 Bryanston Square, W.; and Athenæum.

OWEN, Edmund, M.B., F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. Mary's Hospital, London, and in Paris. He was at one time Lecturer on Anatomy, and is now Lecturer on Clinical Surgery at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School. He is Senior Surgeon at St. Mary's, and at the Hospital for Children in Great Ormond Street, besides being Consulting Surgeon to a number of other hospitals. He is a member of Council and of the Court of Examiners at the Royal College of Surgeons, is ex-President of the Harveian Society, Orator and Trustee of the Medical Society of London, Fellow of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society, Hon. Associate of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, &c. He has been Examiner in Surgery at the University of Durham. His works include "Surgical Diseases of Children," 3rd edit., 1897; Harveian and Lettsomian Lectures, both on the Surgery of Childhood, articles in Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," and contributions to the medical journals and to various learned Transactions. Address: 64 Great Cumberland Place, W.

OWEN, Sir Hugh, G.C.B., late Permanent Under-Secretary of the Local Government Board, was born in 1835, and is the eldest son of Sir Hugh Owen, Kt., the Welsh educationist. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, was Assistant Secretary of the Local Government Board from 1876 to 1882, and became Permanent Under-Secretary in 1882. He received the honour of the Knighthood of the Bath in 1887, and was created G.C.B. at New Year 1899. In December 1898 his retirement was announced. The Times stated at that date that "during his tenure of this office many important measures affecting local government have been passed, and successive Presidents of the Board have acknowledged the valuable assistance they have received from Sir Hugh in the preparation and carrying of their several measures. In 1897 a departmental committee on Local Government Board organisation stated in their report that they could not 'pass by without comment the able and devoted manner in which Sir Hugh Owen has administered the trying and ever-increasing work of his department for a period of fifteen years,' and declared that 'few men could have borne the incessant strain as he has done.' By his retirement the State loses a valuable public servant. His ability and unflinching courtesy will cause the announcement that he has ceased to hold office to be received with much regret by all who are interested in local government." He has published various legal works on municipal and local authorities and matters, including "The Education Acts Manual," and "The Municipal Corporation Act," 1882. He married, in 1865, Charlotte Elizabeth, née Burt. Address: Belmont, Crouch End Hill, N.

He was educated at Bottwnnog Grammar School and Jesus College, Oxford, where he gained a scholarship at entrance in 1872. He obtained a second class Honour in Classical Moderations, 1873; and a second class in Mathematical Moderations, 1874; and graduated with second Honour in Mathematical Finals, proceeding to the M.A. degree in 1878. He was ordained Deacon in 1878, Priest in 1880, by the Bishop of St. David's. He was elected Professor and Lecturer in Classics and Theology at St. David's College, Lampeter, 1879-85; Headmaster and Warden of Llandovery College, 1885-89; and was appointed Dean of St. David's in 1889. He retired from the Deanery in 1892. In the same year he was appointed a Canon of St. Asaph, and Principal of David's College, Lampeter. He was consecrated Lord Bishop of St. David's on May 1, 1897. He speaks Welsh fluently, and was active in the movement for the defence of the Established Church in Wales. Married Amelia, daughter of J. Long, of Appley. Addresses: Abergwili, Carmarthen; and Athenaeum.

OXFORD, Bishop of. See ST. DAVID'S.

PACHMANN, Vladimir de, pianist, was born at Odessa about 1850. He was educated at Vienna under Liszt, and gained the gold medal. In 1871 he returned to Russia, and not being able to receive a salary, he studied for more years. He then met with success in Germany, at Vienna, and his first appearance in London was in 1882 at one of Wilhelm Ganz's concerts, and since then rarely has a musical performance passed without his giving a series of recitals, generally at St. James's Hall, which called him "the Poet of the Piano." He is famous for his interpretation of Chopin. He married, in 1884, Miss von Kottwitz, the pianist.

PADEREWSKI, Ignace Jan, born in 1860, in Podolia, Poland, in spite of unsympathetic surroundings, a natural genius for music showed itself when he was still quite young. When he was twenty he had decided to devote himself to composition, and on reaching that age he proceeded to Berlin in order to study harmony, &c. A few years later he resolved to become a pianist, and accordingly studied during three years under the tuition of Leschetitzky, and of the well-known performer, J. Essipoff. He advanced rapidly in his art, and his debut was a complete success. He is now one of the first of the pianists, as well as a brilliant o-owed much of his success to intense incessant practice, which has given his marvellous ease of execution. In 1893 M. Paderewski made an tour and gained thereby some. A new fantasia by him was uced at the Norwich Festival in 1893. January 1895 an unusual incident rurred at Torquay, Paderewski, it was, refusing to play before people who u only five shillings to hear him. His ager afterwards corrected this state-t, affirming that the reason of Pader-w's conduct was that he resented the of prices—from ten shillings on previous visit to five shillings—without consent. However, in the following ath, the artist displayed again his well-known kindness of heart in giving a al at Hanley in behalf of the Audley ress Fund. As a result of this per-ormance, the substantial sum of £160 was handed over to the Mayor of Hanley as a contribution to the Fund. In April 1897, a "Paderewski Orchestral Concert" was given at the Queen's Hall, London, when M. Paderewski, accompanied by Mr. Henry Wood's orchestra, gave a special performance of two concertos, Schumann's in A minor and Liszt's in E flat. It was widely remarked at the time that the pianist, spite of his unrivalled eminence, owed a considerable increase in dignity, oposed, and true virtuosity, and the whole exquisite rendering added largely to M. Paderewski's reputation. In the following June (1897) the artist repeated his orchestral combination, and was declared to have never been heard to greater advantage. Since that time, M. Paderewski has been touring abroad, making one or two fugitive appearances in England, notably at the Crystal Palace at the Saturday Afternoon Concerts.

PAGE, Herbert William, M.A., M.B., F.R.C.S., was educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Cambridge, at the London Hospital, and in Vienna. He is Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery at St. Mary's Hospital, has been Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge, and is Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons, Eng. In 1870-71 he was Assistant-Surgeon to the Hessian Division of the German Army, and at present holds various appointments as Surgeon to the Railway Passengers Assurance Co., &c. He has published "Injuries to the Back in their Surgical and Medico-Legal Aspects," being the Boylston Prize Essay, Harvard, 1881; "Injuries of the Spine and Spinal Cord, and Nervous Shock," 2nd edit., 1885; "Railway Injuries," 1891, translated into German; "Clinical Papers on Surgical Subjects," 1897, besides articles on the Spine, &c., in Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," and Treves's "Manual and System of Surgery," and the Royal Med. Chir. and Clin. Society Transactions, &c. Address: 146 Harley Street, W.

PAGE, Thomas Nelson, D.L., American writer, was born at Oakland, Hanover Co., Virginia, April 23, 1853. He was educated at Washington and Lee University, and received the degree of LL.B. from the University of Virginia in 1874. He has since practised his profession at Richmond. The degree of D.L. was conferred upon him by Washington and Lee University in 1887. Mr. Page's first publication was a rhyme entitled "Uncle Gabe's White Folks," which appeared in Scribner's Monthly (now the Century) in 1877. In 1884 was issued, in the Century, "Marse Chan," a negro dialect story of the Civil War, and this made the writer's reputation. Others in the same vein followed, and in 1887 they were collected and published together in a book under the title of "In Ole Virginia." This was followed by "Befo' de War: Echoes in Negro Dialect," 1888; "Two Little Confederates," 1888; "Elsket and Other Stories," 1890; "On Newfound River," 1891; "Among the Camps," 1891; "The Old South Essays," 1892; "The Burial of the Guns," 1894; "Pastime Stories," 1894; "Polly," 1894; "The Old Gentleman of the Black Stock," 1897; and "Social Life in Old Virginia before the War," 1897. son of the 2nd Earl of Longford. He entered the Diplomatic Service in 1852, and much of his life has been spent in the South American Republics. In 1871 he was at Washington; in 1874 at Copenhagen; and in 1878 he was promoted to be Minister to Chili, serving as Commissioner under the Convention for settling the claims arising out of the Chili-Peruvian War. In 1885 he became Minister to the Argentine Republic in Paraguay, which he left for his present post in 1896. In 1879 he married Caroline, daughter of Rev. the Hon. H. Ward. Address: British Legation, Stockholm.

PALGRAVE, Sir Reginald F. D., K.C.B., fourth son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Dawson Turner, of Great Yarmouth, banker, was born in London, June 28, 1829. He was placed, through the intervention of Sir R. H. Inglis, by Sir D. Le Marchant, Clerk of the House of Commons, in the Committee Office, 1853; upon the recommendation of Sir T. Erskine May, he was appointed by the Speaker, Mr. Evelyn Denison, Examiner of Petitions for Private Bills to both Houses of Parliament, 1866, and Second Clerk Assistant and Clerk Assistant to the House of Commons, 1868 and 1886. In 1886, on the death of Sir Thomas Erskine May, he was appointed Clerk to the House of Commons. He published (1869) "The House of Commons; Illustrations of its History and Practice," 1877; "The Chairman's Handbook," 1890; "Oliver Cromwell, the Protector, an Appreciation"; editing also Books I. and II. of Sir T. E. May's "Treatise on the Law, &c., of Parliament," 1893. He has contributed to the Quarterly Review articles on "Pym and Shaftesbury, Two Popish Plots" (vol. 147), "The Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I." (vol. 154), and "Cromwell," April 1886. He married, in 1857, Grace, daughter of Richard Battley, of Reigate, Esq., and was created C.B. 1887; K.C.B. 1892. Address: Speaker's Court, Westminster, S.W.

PALGRAVE, Robert Harry Inglis, F.R.S., third son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, Knight of Hanover, Deputy Keeper of the Rolls, was born in Westminster on June 11, 1827; was educated at the Charterhouse, and entered early the banking-house of Gurneys & Co., of Yarmouth (now Barclay & Co., Ltd.), of which his grandfather, Mr. Dawson Turner, F.R.S., and Mr. John Brightwen, were partners. He married, in 1859, S. Maria Brightwen, the niece of the last-named; she died April 11, 1898. Mr. Palgrave has occupied himself largely and with much success in the study of economic, statistical, and banking questions. In 1870 he wrote a Prize Essay, printed in the Journal of the Royal Statistical Society, upon the "Local Taxation of Great Britain and Ireland." Since that date he has contributed many papers on banking and currency questions to the Transactions of the above society, to those of the Bankers' Institute, and also to the reports of the British Association, to the Bankers' Magazine, the Bankers' Almanac, &c., and for six years, dating from 1877, he edited, in part at first, afterwards solely, the Economist newspaper. He is the editor of the "Dictionary of Political Economy," the first vol. of which was published in 1893, the second in 1896. In 1882 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; in 1885 he was appointed one of the Royal Commissioners on the depression of Trade and Industry. Mr. Palgrave has also taken a leading part, as president, or otherwise, in the meetings of the section of Economic Science and Statistics of the British Association, and in the very important inquiries into the gold and paper currency questions, which have been undertaken, based partly on his investigations, and with the advantage of his combined practical and scientific knowledge, by the Bankers' Institute, and the Committee of the Association of English Country Bankers. In common with his brothers, Mr. R. H. Inglis Palgrave owes much to the training he received from his parents, his mother, Elizabeth, the daughter of Mr. Dawson Turner, mentioned above, being a lady of great accomplishments and much ability. His only daughter, Elizabeth, is married to the Rev. Rowland V. Barker. Addresses: Belton, near Great Yarmouth; and Athenaeum.

PALISA, Dr. J., was born on Dec. 6, 1848, at Troppau, in Silesia, and was educated first in his native town, and afterwards at Vienna University, where he devoted his attention to Mathematics and Physics, and was, in 1871, appointed Assistant-Observer at the Vienna Observatory; thence in 1873 he went to the Observatory at Geneva, and in 1875 he was appointed Director of the Observatory at Pola, where he had a six-inch meridian circle by Troughton & Simms, and a six-inch refractor with which he discovered no fewer than twenty-eight minor planets. In 1881 he left the Pola Observatory and was appointed the First Assistant at the Imperial Observatory at Vienna, where he has discovered thirty-four more minor planets, making the very large total of thirty-two. PALMER, The Rev. Charles (Raymund), second son of John Palmer, M.D. (well known as a writer), was born at Tamworth, Leicestershire, in 1819, and educated at the Grammar School of that town, and at King's College of Medicine, Birmingham, practised as a surgeon in his native town for some years, and in 1853, he joined the Dominican order, took orders in the Roman Catholic Church, and had entered in 1842. Father Palmer is employed in anti-sectarian researches, chiefly relating to the history of the order in England, now being in antiquarian journals. He has "The History of the Town and County of Tamworth, in the Counties of Warwick," in 1845; "Life of Niccolò da Fiesole, of the Order of the Dominicans," a translation from the French of E. Cartier, with notes, in 1865; "Dominican Tertiary's Guide," to R. Rodolph Suffield also attached to the order, in 1866 (2nd edit. 1868); "The History of Thomas Howard, O.P., Cardinal of Norfolk, Grand Almoner to King John of Braganza, Queen-Consort of Portugal, &c., with a Sketch of the Mission and Influence of the Dominican Order, and of its Early History in England," in 1867; "The History and Antiquities of the Collegiate Church of St. Mary, in the County of Stafford," in 1868; "The History of the Baronial Marmion," in 1875; "Obituary of the Dominicans from 1650," 1884; "Dedicated Registers of Woburn Lodge, Bedfordshire, and of Upton Court," printed in 1888 and 1889; and contributed to various periodicals, chiefly relating to antiquarian and historical subjects, which have been separately reprinted. His manuscript collection of documents concerning Tamworth, in 4 vols., is now in the British Museum; and he has reported the results of his researches in 1881-82 in the Transactions of the Master-General of the Order of the Temple as far as England is concerned.

PALMER, Sir Charles Mark, Bart., 1st Baronet, J.P., coal-owner and shipowner at South Shields, on Nov. 3, 1831, the son of Mr. George Palmer, a merchant and merchant of Newcastle, and was educated in the school of Dr. Bruce, the historian of the "Roman Wall." After preparing for a commercial career in France, he became a partner, first with his father, and shortly afterwards, in 1845, with Mr. John Bowes, M.P., Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Hutt, M.P., and Mr. Nicholas Wood (all since deceased), in coal-mining and coke-making, and extended their colliery operations from a small beginning up to a production of 2½ million tons per annum. In the year 1851 Mr. Palmer conceived the idea of cheapening the transit of coal to London and other ports by the employment of steam collier vessels, which have since completely superseded the old sailing brigs of the north of England. He established the shipbuilding yard at Jarrow on the Tyne, where the first screw collier, the John Bowes, was launched in 1852. He has since developed the Jarrow works into the gigantic concern, now Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company, Ltd., which constructs an ocean steamer from the iron ore of its own Yorkshire mines, through all its processes into a complete ship. From these works the populous modern town of Jarrow originated. It obtained a charter of incorporation in 1875, Mr. Palmer being its first mayor. The Jarrow works have produced armour-plated and other vessels for H.M. navy, and Mr. Palmer was the first to introduce rolled armour-plates for men-of-war. Sir C. Palmer is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of the North Riding of Yorkshire, and of the county of Durham, is an Alderman and Magistrate of the borough of Jarrow, Hon. Colonel of the 1st Newcastle and Durham Engineer Volunteers, and was until lately President of the Newcastle Chamber of Commerce. At the general election of 1874 he was returned M.P. in the Liberal interest for the Northern division of the county of Durham, which he continued to represent till the Reform Act of 1885, when on the redistribution of seats he was elected for the Jarrow division of the same county. After the dissolution of 1886 he was re-elected without opposition, and was again returned in 1892 and 1895. He was created a baronet in 1886. He married (3), in 1877, Gertrude, daughter of James Montgomery, D.L., J.P., of Cranford. Address: 37 Curzon Street, W., &c.

PALMER, Sir Elwin Mitford, K.C.M.G., K.C.B., born March 3, 1852, is the second son of Edward Palmer, and was educated at Lancing College, Sussex, and appointed to the Indian Financial Department in 1871. He proceeded to Egypt from India to take up the appointment of Director-General of Ac-sonne in 1905 and was appointed Financial Adviser to H.H. the Tsar in 1908. Since 1909 he has been Governor of the National Bank of Egypt. He was created C.M.G. in 1917 and C.B.E. in 1920. He has also the Grand Crosses of the Leman and Medjidié. Address: Cairo.

PARIS, Gaston, French philologist, the son of Paul Paris, was born at Arc-en-Maine, Aug. 6, 1839. He was educated at Collège de France, and at the Universities of Bonn and Göttingen, and studied the Romance languages with Professor Diez. On his return to France he entered the École des Chartes pursuing at the same time the study of law, and won the degree of Doctor-ès-lettres in 1865. On May 12, 1874, he was elected a member of the Academy of Inscriptions in the place of Bignon. Among other interesting and curious works he has published: "Étude sur le culte de l'Accusé dans la Langue française," 1861; "Le pseudo-Isidore," 1863; "Histoire poétique de Charlemagne," 1866; "Le Pape Étienne et la Grande École," 1877; "La Poésie finie par la lecture de lectures," 1886 and edn. 1895; "La Littérature française finie par la lecture," 1886 and edn. 1895. He has given editions of several old French works: "La Vie de Saint Alexis," 1873 and 1899; "Les Miracles de Notre Dame par personnages," 1877; "Deux redactions de Roman des sept Sages de Rome," 1877; "La Vie de Saint Gilles," 1880; "Merlin," 1886; "Tous romans de l'Évangile de Nicodème," 1890. He has translated, together with Paul Meyer, the Revue romane, 1876, the Romanes, 1878, and the Revue Neoscholastique. He was elected a member of the Academies of Munich, Rome, Vienna, Berlin, Berlin, etc. He was promoted officer of the Legion of Honour in 1890. His chief work has been the study of the romances connected with the name of Charlemagne, in which he has combined accurate learning with the power of making dry bones live again. In 1890 he was elected to the French Academy, and was offered a medal as a memorial of his election, by professors and students of all French all over the world—a school that he has practically founded single-handed. He is the Administrator of the Collège de France and the Director of the École des Hautes Études. His Paris address is Collège de France.

PARKINSON, Joseph Charles, born in London in 1833, obtained an appointment in Somerset House (Inland Revenue Department) in 1855, after the Civil Service Commission had been established by Order in Council. He published in 1859 "Under Government," the first complete guide to the various departments of the Civil Service. This work, which ran through many editions, was followed in 1860 by a handbook of "Government Examinations." In 1864 Mr. Parkinson's abilities as a journalist were recognised by the Daily News, and for the next ten years he was one of the steadiest and most esteemed contributors to that journal, mainly on the abolition of public executions, poor-law reform, and the preservation of commons. In conjunction with the Duke of Westminster, the late Archbishop of York, the late Dr. Anstie, and others, Mr. Parkinson worked by pen and speech to promote that reform in work-house infirmaries which culminated in Mr. Gathorne Hardy's measure. In 1869 he visited Egypt as the guest of the Viceroy, and described for the Daily News the opening of the Suez Canal. He next visited India on a special mission for the telegraphic authorities, and published an account of his visit, "The Ocean Telegraph to India." Mr. Parkinson has of late years retired from journalism, and occupies himself in the direction of several well-known industrial and scientific enterprises.

PARR, Mrs. Louisa, only child of Matthew Taylor, R.M., was born in London, but spent the years of her early life in Devonshire. Her first venture into print was made in 1868, when a short story appeared under her name in Good Words, entitled, "How it all Happened." It was a slight story, but most gracefully told, and it at once attracted so much attention, that versions of it were published in several foreign languages, and it was reproduced in the Journal des Débats, notwithstanding the editor's general rule against the acceptance of translations. Upon her marriage with a gentleman in the medical profession, which took place in 1869, Mrs. Parr came to live in London, and the scene of her principal literary labours has been the house in Kensington, where she has ever since resided. "Dorothy Fox," Mrs. Parr's first three-volume novel, was published in 1870. This book dealt with Quaker life, and at once delighted the public. In the United States it was as well received as in England, in proof of which it may be mentioned that an American publisher paid £300 for the advance sheets of her next story, "The Prescotts." A first collection of short stories was published in 1871, bearing the title of her first sketch, "How it all Happened"; this was followed in 1874 by another series in two volumes called "The Gosau Smithy." "Adam and Eve," which came out at first as a serial, and was published in book form in 1880, marked an important advance on all previous efforts. A comparison between this work and "Dorothy Fox," its predecessor by ten years, shows at once how greatly Mrs. Parr's skill had ripened and matured in the interval. In "Adam and Eve" all trace of amateurishness had disappeared, and Mrs. Parr had become thoroughly mistress of her art. "Robin" appeared in 1882, and "Loyalty George," her masterpiece, in 1888. In 1892 she published "The Squire," and in 1893, "Can this be Love?" "The Follies of Fashion," which since 1893 have been such an attractive feature of the Poll Mall Magazine, are by Mrs. Parr. The illustrations are taken from Dr. Parr's valuable collection of old prints. Address: 18 Upper Phillimore Place, Kensington, W.

PARRY, Sir Charles Hubert Hastings, Hon. D.C.L. Durham, M.A., Mus. Doc. Oxford, Honorary Mus. Doc. Cambridge and Dublin, Director of the Royal College of Music (1895), Choragus of Oxford University (1884), Hon. Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, is the son of T. Gambier Parry, of Highnam Court, in Gloucestershire, and was born at Bourne-mouth, Feb. 27, 1848. He went to Eton in 1861, working at harmony, &c., with Sir George Elvey, organist at Windsor, and made sufficient progress to pass the examination for the musical bachelor's degree at Oxford before leaving the school. He proceeded to Oxford in 1866, and in 1870 took a second class in Law and History. At intervals he worked at music, with Sir William Sterndale Bennett first, then with Sir G. A. Macfarren, and Mr. E. Dannreuther, and began to contribute to

Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music." In 1873 he gave up business in the City and devoted himself entirely to music. Amongst Mr. Parry's compositions are: "Duo," in E minor, for two pianofortes; Fantasia-Sonata for pianoforte and violin; Sonata in A for pianoforte and violoncello; Trios for pianoforte and strings; Quatuor for same; String Quartet in G, and String Quintet in E flat; Pianoforte Concerto; Variations on an original theme for pianoforte; Overtures, "Guillem de Cabestani," and "An Unwritten Tragedy"; Ten Symphonies, and a Symphonic Suite; "Scenes from Shelley's Prometheus Bound," Gloucester Festival, 1890; "Music to the 'Birds' of Aristophanes," Cambridge, 1884; "Music to the 'Frogs' of Aristophanes," Oxford, 1893; Music to Hypatia; Ode for chorus and orchestra; "The Glories of our Blood and State"; an opera, "Lancelot and Guinevere"; Ode for eight-part chorus and orchestra, "Bliss Pair of Sirens"; Oratorio, "Judith," Birmingham Festival, 1888; "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day," Leeds Festival, 1890; "L'Allegro ed Il Penseroso," a cantata, Norwich Festival, 1890; a fine setting of "De Profundis," Hereford Festival, 1890. Since then he has produced his greatest oratorio, "Job." At the Birmingham Festival in 1894 he produced "King Saul," another oratorio. To these may be added "The Invocation to Music," Leeds, 1895; "Magnificat," Hereford, 1897; "Symphonic Variations," Philharmonic, 1897; also "Studies of Great Composers"; a "Summary of the History of Music" (Novello); "The Evolution of the Art of Music" (Kegan Paul). The honour of knighthood was conferred upon him in June 1898. In 1872 he married Lady Maude Herbert, with whose family he had been intimate since boyhood. PATERSON, William Romaine,
 "Benjamin Swift," was born in Glasgow, July 29, 1871, in the house which is now occupied by the Art Club. His father, the late Robert Paterson, M.D., who was a successful and widely known physician and a man of acute intellect, died while the author was only two years old. His upbringing, which was extremely religious,
 was thus left in the hands of his mother,
 who comes of a race of Scotch bankers.
 At the age of seven the author was put to school in Glasgow at the Albany Academy.
 At the age of sixteen he was sent to a boarding school in Lausanne (La Villa, Onchy) for the purpose of learning French.
 He remained a year, and on his return entered Glasgow University. Owing to ill health his course was irregular and retarded, but in the department of Philosophy and Literature he was awarded a high place. He won the prize of the Lord Rector (Mr. A. J. Balfour) for an Essay on Progress which was open to the University.
 In 1894-95 he graduated M.A. with first-class Honours in Philosophy, and was awarded a Fellowship. Thereafter he travelled extensively in Europe, especially in Austria, France, and Italy, for the purpose of studying German, French, and Italian. He learned Italian in the monastery of Monte Oliveto near Siena. On his return from Italy in the summer of 1896
 he published his first work "Nancy Noon" (London: T. Fisher Unwin). A second edition was called for shortly after. In October 1897 appeared "The Tormentor" (London: T. Fisher Unwin); in April 1898 "The Destroyer" (London: T. Fisher Unwin, 2nd edit., May 1898). Comyns's for December 1897 contains an article on the "Functions of Art," by Benjamin Swift. In the Glasgow Herald, January 1898, he wrote an article on "Legal Infanticide in Italy." Address: 5 Cornwall Mansions, Cornwall Gardens, S.W.

PATON. Sir Joseph Noël, R.S.A., LL.D., D.L., the Queen's Limner for Scotland, born at Dunfermline, Fife-shire, in 1821, was admitted a student of the Royal Academy of London in 1843, and first became known to the public by his outline etchings illustrative of Shakespeare and Shelley. His cartoon of the "Spirit of Religion" gained one of the three premiums awarded at the Westminster Hall competition of 1848, and his oil pictures of "Christ Bearing the Cross" and "Reconciliation of Oberon and Titania"—the former of colossal size, the latter small—jointly gained a prize, in the second class, of £80, in 1847. The latter picture, prior to its exhibition in London, was bought by the Royal Scottish Academy for the Scottish National Gallery, and "The Quarrel of Oberon and Titania," painted in 1846, and purchased for £700, also for the Scottish National Gallery, by the Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland, was exhibited in the Paris Exhibition of 1868, where it received honourable mention. Amongst his numerous pictures and sketches from the works of the poets may be mentioned "Dante Meditating the Episode of Francesca," 1861, and "The Dead Lady," 1864, engraved. Other pictures are "Largo Allegro," since engraved; "The Furies of Pleasure," 1868; "Home," which has been engraved, and of which a replica was executed by command of her Majesty, which was at the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1869; "Hesperus," 1871, engraved; "In Memoriam," which has been engraved, and of which a photograph was executed for the Queen, 1866; and "Dawn, Dusk at Eternity," considered by many his finest work, 1871. "Eve and Faun," 1874, engraved; "Nicker the Solitaire," 1878. Mr. Noël Paton executed in the spring of 1880, a series of six pictures illustrative of the old Border ballad, "The Dowie Deans of Yarrow," painted for the Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland. It was engraved by that body for their subscribers. In 1880 he executed illustrations of "The Ancient Mariner" for the Art Union of London, and in 1886 painted "Mrs. James Wain," engraved. He was appointed the Queen's Limner for Scotland in 1865, and received the British knighthood, April 12, 1867. In the year appeared "A Fairy Ball," 1866 "Callion Listening to the M." d was born in Madrid, Feb. 19, 1843. After a course of professional training under her brother-in-law, Maurice Strakosch, she appeared at New York, Nov. 24, 1859, and reports of her fame reached these shores, where a much more brilliant success awaited her. She made her first appearance in London at the Italian Opera House, Covent Garden, in the part of Zerkina, in "La Sonnambula," May 14, 1861, and so favourable was the impression created that she became at once the prime favourite of the day. To Amina succeeded her equally successful performance of Lucia, in Donizetti's opera, but she gave still greater reason for approbation by her representation of Violetta in "La Traviata," to which she imparted a purity with which no part had never before been invested. Her Zerlina was also much admired, while Martha she displayed so original a vein of arch comedy as to give an unwonted interest to the performance. Mlle. Patti, with laudable ambition, attempted, in the summer of 1863, the difficult part of Ninetta, in "La Gazza Ladra," and her spirited rendering of the character fully sustained her high reputation, both as Norina, in "Don Pasquale," and as Adina, in "L'Elisir d'Amore." Undaunted by the success of rival celebrities who had preceded her, she in 1864 took the part of Margherita, in Gounod's "Faust," and her performance was pronounced by some critics to be superior to that of every other representative of the character. She achieved a fresh success in the part of Juliet, in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," which proved the great attraction of the operatic season of 1867. Mlle. Patti has been equally successful on the Continent of Europe. In the early part of 1870 she visited Russia, where she met with an enthusiastic welcome, receiving from the Emperor Alexander the Order of Merit, and the appointment of First Singer at the Imperial Court. Early in 1888 Madame Patti accepted an engagement to sing in the Argentine Republic. Her tour through that State was the most successful she had ever made. She was paid £1200 a night, and gave thirty-three performances. She returned there the following year, when she had even a greater success. In May 1868 she was married, at the Roman Catholic Church, Clapham, to M. Louis Sébastien Henri de Roger de Cahuzac, Marquis de Caux, from whom she was afterwards divorced. In 1886 she was married, in Wales, to Signor Nicolini, the tenor singer, who died in January 1898, and her marriage to Baron Cederström took place in January 1899. The wedding was an exceptional social event, and on the wedding day the popular complimentary demonstrations along the line of route from the great diva's Welsh home to London marked the extreme hold she has taken on the hearts of her innumerable admirers. Baron Olof Rudolph Cederström became a naturalised British subject in February 1899. She now resides chiefly at Craig-y-nos, her Welsh country seat, where in 1891 she opened a private theatre. In October 1893 she started for her farewell tour in the United States. Madame Patti still sings at Albert Hall concerts in London, which are known as "Patti Concerts." Address: Craig-y-nos Castle, Wales.

PATTON, Francis Landey, D.D., LL.D., was born at Warwick, Bermuda, Jan. 22, 1843. His family removed to Canada while he was a boy, and he was educated at University College, Toronto; studying theology later at Knox College, Toronto, and at the Princeton (New York) Theological Seminary, from the latter of which he graduated in 1865. From 1865 to 1867 he was pastor of the Eighty-fourth Street Church in New York; 1867-71, of the Presbyterian Church in Nyack, New York; 1871-72, of the South Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, New York; and 1874-81, of the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church in Chicago. He edited the Interior, a denominational Chicago paper, from 1873 to 1876, and was Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the North-west, Chicago, 1871-1881. While at Chicago his successful prosecution of Professor David Swing for heterodoxy brought him into general prominence as a theological writer and speaker, and procured him the appointment in 1881 to the Stuart Professorship of the Relation of Philosophy and Science to the Christian Religion, a chair especially founded for him at the Princeton Seminary. In addition to filling the duties of that department, he also lectured on ethics before the College of New Jersey (to which the Seminary is attached), and in 1885 was made a Professor of the College on that subject. On the resignation of the Presidency of the College by Dr. McCosh, Dr. Patton was chosen to succeed him, and he assumed the office in June 1888. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Hanover College, Indiana, in 1872, and that of LL.D. by Wooster University, Ohio, in 1878, and by Harvard University in 1889. Besides his work on the Interior, he was for a number of years associate editor of both the Presbyterian Review and the New Princeton Review, and he has been a voluminous contributor to magazines and papers. His published works include "The Inspiration of the Scriptures," 1865; "A Summary of Christian Doctrine,"

1874; and "The Doctrine of a Future Retribution."

PAUNCEFOTE, The Right Hon. Sir Julian, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., third son of the late Robert Pauncefote, Esq., of Preston Court, Gloucestershire, was born at Munich, Sept. 13, 1828, and educated in Paris, Geneva, and at Marlborough College. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1852, and joined the Oxford Circuit. He was appointed Attorney-General of Hong-Kong in May 1865, and acted as Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court in 1869, and again in 1872. He received the thanks of the Executive and Legislative Councils of Hong-Kong for his services to the colony, and in 1874 was knighted by patent. He was appointed Chief-Justice of the Leeward Islands in 1873, and in 1874 Legal Assistant Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. In 1876 he was appointed Assistant (Legal) Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. He was created a C.B. and a K.C.M.G. in 1880, and in 1882 he succeeded the late Lord Tenterden as Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In 1885 he received the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1888 Sir Julian succeeded Lord Sackville as British Minister at Washington. In 1892 he received the Grand Cross of the Bath for his diplomatic services, and in 1893 he was raised to the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States. On Nov. 21, 1894, during a visit home, Sir Julian Pauncefote was sworn of the Privy Council. His action at Washington has done much to bring together the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, and he possesses the confidence of the leading men of both nations, especially of his old chief, the Marquis of Salisbury. He was one of the delegates from Great Britain at the Peace Conference held at the Hague in 1899.

PAVY, Frederick William, LL.D. Glasgow, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., was formerly Lecturer on the Principles and Practice of Medicine, on Physiology, and on Comparative Anatomy at Guy's Hospital. He is now Consulting Physician to Guy's. He became Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1860, and was twice Censor, viz. in 1883-84 and 1891-92. He delivered the Harveian Oration in 1886, and has been Lettsomian, Gulstonian, and Croonian Lecturer. He is President of the Pathological Society, and Fellow or member of many learned societies. In 1863 he became F.R.S. Dr. Pavy has written several volumes on food, dietetics, &c., and has communicated many papers on the physiology of sugar, &c. to the Transactions and Proceedings of the Linnean Society. His Lettsomian lectures (1886) were upon the subject of Diabetes. Address: 35 Grosvenor Street, W.

PAYNE, Edward John, born Jan. 22, 1814, is the son of Edward Wilmot Payne, of High Wycombe, Bucks. He was educated at High Wycombe Grammar School, and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A., and was elected Fellow of his College in 1872. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1834, and was appointed Recorder of Chipping Wycombe in 1883. He is the author of "Select Works of Edmund Burke," with notes, 3 vols., 1874, &c.; "History of European Colonies," 1877; "Voyage of the Elizabethan Seamen to America," 1880; "History of the New World of America," 1892, in which work Mr. Payne has critically investigated the origins of history in the New World, its rudimentary civilisation, sociology, languages, and arts, and the causes and circumstances of its discovery by Europeans. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and a Member of Council of the Hakluyt Society. Address: 2 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, London.

PAYNE, George, F.L.S., F.S.A., was born at Sittingbourne, in Kent, in 1844, and was educated at Elm House Academy near that town. He formed between 1865 and 1883 an extensive local collection of geological and British, Roman, and Anglo-Saxon remains. These he offered to his native town as a gift in 1883, on condition that a suitable building be provided for their reception. The offer was declined, and the British Museum subsequently acquired the greater portion of the collection, while the remainder went to the Maidstone Museum. Since 1870 he has been accustomed to give lectures annually in various parts of Kent on archaeological matters, with a view to encourage the study and preservation of antiquities. He is author of a "Catalogue of his Museum of Local Antiquities," 1883, printed for private circulation; a "Catalogue of the Museum of Local Antiquities collected by Mr. Henry Durden at Blandford, Dorset," 1892, printed for private circulation; a "Catalogue of the Kent Archaeological Society's Collections," 1892, printed by the Society; "An Archaeological Survey of the County of Kent," 1889, printed by the Society of Antiquaries, and adopted by that body as a model for the archaeological survey of Great Britain; "Collectanea Cantiana," 1893, being an account of the author's archaeological researches in the neighbourhood of Sittingbourne and other of Kent; and numerous papers in æologia Cantiana," Proceedings of Society of Antiquaries, Journal of the Archaeological Association, the Anti- and various periodicals, &c. He appointed Local Secretary for Kent Society of Antiquaries, London, elected a Fellow of that Society, and subsequently elected twice on council; elected a Fellow of the Lincolnsociety, 1878; became a member of the Ant Archaeological Society in 1870, and several years a member of the Society, and was elected Hon. Secretary and Curator of the Society in 1889; and one of the delegates on behalf of the Society of Antiquaries on the Ethnological Survey of the United Kingdom, is member of the Standing Committee of the Ethnographical Survey, the Ethnological Survey of Great Britain, and the Congress of Archaeological Societies. He is honorary correspondent of the Archaeological Association, and the Society for the Protection of Ancient Monuments. During the last ten years he resided at Rochester, where he has been instrumental in bringing about the restoration of the famous castle there, and assisted the Corporation by superintending the work. He has also taken active measures towards founding the museum at Rochester, in which undertaking he has been fully supported by the Corporation and citizens. The most important discovery he has made outside his residence at Sittingbourne are the remains of the Roman walls of Rochester; he has made the extensive remains of an establishment at Darenth, near Dover; and discovering a large portion of a Norman Church at Boxley Abbey, Maidstone. Throughout his life he has taken an active interest in the literary and scientific societies in Kent, having rendered them assistance both in the field and at the winter meetings. Address: The Priory, Rochester.

PAYNE, Joseph Frank, F.R.C.P., born Jan. 10, 1840, at Camberwell, London, and is the son of Joseph Payne, late Professor of Education at the University of Preceptors. He was educated at University College, London, and proceeded Demy to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. First Natural Science, 1862; M.B. 1867; M.D. 1870. He obtained a Fellowship at University College, and the Burdett-Coutts Scholarship in Physiology, and the Radcliffe Travelling Scholarship in Medicine. He studied medicine at St. George's Hospital, London, and was, as Radcliffe Fellow, at Paris, and Vienna. He became member of the Royal College of Physicians in 1868, Fellow in 1873, was Censor from 1896 to 1898, and delivered the Harveian Oration in 1896. He is now Senior Physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, and President of the Pathological Society of London and of the Dermatological Society of Great Britain and Ireland, and was formerly President of the Epidemiological Society of London. He has been Examiner in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Edinburgh, and in the Victoria University. In 1879 he was appointed, with the late Surgeon-Major Colville, British Medical Commissioner, to investigate the outbreak of Plague in the Russian province of Astrachan. In 1890 he was a member of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis, presided over successively by Lord Basing and Sir George Buchanan. He is the author of a "Manual of General Pathology," 1888; "Observations on Rare Diseases of the Skin," 1889; Introduction to a reproduction (Cambridge, 1881) of Linacre's Translation of Galen's "De Temperamentis," first printed at Cambridge, 1521; the Harveian Oration for 1896 on "Harvey and Galen." He has written articles on "History of Medicine" and "Plague" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and biographies of physicians in the "Dictionary of National Biography," with numerous papers and lectures in "St. Thomas's Hospital Reports," Transactions of Medical Societies, &c. He is the editor of "The Works of Joseph Payne," 2 vols., 1880-1892; and of the "Nomenclature of Diseases," published by the College of Physicians in 1896. Besides the subjects of general medicine and pathology, he has paid special attention to the history of medicine and of epidemic diseases, and has published several ancient documents bearing on these subjects, the value of which has been widely recognised in Continental as well as in English publications. Address: 78 Wimpole Street, Cavendish Square, W.

PEAR, Frances Mary, daughter of Commander George Shuldharn Pear, R.N., born at Exminster, Devon, writer of novels and stories, of which the following is a brief list: "One Year," 1868; "Un-awares," 1870; "The Rose Garden"; "Cartouche"; "Mother Molly"; "Contradictions"; "Near Neighbours"; "The Crooked Desk," illustrated, 1890; "Made-moiselle," 1890 (new edit., 1892); "Abbots' Bridge," 1891; "The Baroness: a Dutch Story," 1892; "Paul's Sister"; "The Swing of the Pendulum," 1893; "The Country Cousin"; "Madame's Granddaughter"; "Catherine," and "The Interloper," 1894; "Jacob and the Raven: stories," 1896; and "The Career of Claudia," 1897.

PEARS, Edwin, was born in 1835, at York. He graduated in the University of London, being first in honours Roman Law, and Jurisprudence, and was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1870. He was General Secretary of the Social Science Association from 1868 to 1873, and Secretary to the International Prison Congress of 1872. In the Transactions of the former Society he published "Prisons and Reformatories at Home and Abroad." Mr. Pears is now the most promising practitioner at the English Bar in Constantinople, whence, as correspondent of the Daily News, he sent the letters which first called the attention of Europe to Moslem atrocities committed in Bulgaria, May 1876. The first two of these letters, having attracted attention in Parliament and their statements being disputed by Mr. Disraeli, were published in the 15th important Blue-book on the Eastern Question. Mr. Pears is the first newspaper correspondent who took up the ground in the interest of England in the Ottoman Empire will be best forwarded by helping the Christian races as representing the progressive element of the empire, rather than the Turks, whom he regards as doomed, from natural causes, to disappear as a ruling race, and as being able to contribute nothing of value towards European civilisation.

PEARSE, The Rev. Mark G. Wesleyan minister and author, was born at Camborne in 1842, and is the only son of Mark Guy Pearse, of Sandown, Isle of Wight. His early life was spent in Cornwall. In 1861 he became a student at Bartholomew's Hospital, but subsequently entered the Wesleyan ministry, and was stationed at Leeds, Brixton, Ipswich, Bedford, Highbury, Westminster, and is now jointly with the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes conducting the London Wesleyan Mission at St. James's Hall. As a preacher, lecturer he has few equals; and for his humour, deep insight into character, and certain homely sympathy with the religious poor, his little book, "Dan'l Quorn's Religious Notions," has never been surpassed. It was published in 1861 and has passed through many editions. Among his many other religious publications should be mentioned "The Genius of Jesus," 1898. Address: 111 Bedford Place, Russell Square, W.C.

PEARY, Lieutenant Robert Ed- Arctic explorer, man of science, il engineer of the United States was born at Cresson, Pa., May 6, und was educated at Bowdoin , Maine, graduating in 1877. He the U.S. Navy as civil engineer e rank of Lieutenant in 1881, and was appointed Assistant-Engineer Survey for the Nicaragua Ship Lieutenant Peary began his im- work on the ice-cap of Northern nd in 1886. The only assistance investigations which he received he American Government was a leave of absence from his duties as engineer in the Navy. He had to entirely on the help of his friends, ceeds of his own lectures, and his publications, which have been o l value. All his expeditions have all, but nevertheless his work has valuable to the cause of Arctic tion. His first expedition, that of en his ship was the Eagle, brought uly 100 miles over the inland ice ch further north than the route of (q.v.). Peary, as a result, laid a heme for crossing the ice from one o the other, and completing, if , the exploration of the North

Greenland coast, and then making for the pole itself. In 1891 he resumed his work, and accompanied by his young wife and a carefully selected crew, ultimately landed on the shores of M'Cormick Inlet, to the north of Inglefield Gulf (77° 40' N.). Peary unfortunately broke both his ankles just after the start, but preparations were at once made for sledge-parties over the ice. Scientific observation and research occupied the staff through the winter, and in the following spring (1892) began the famous "White march" over the inland ice to the northern shores of Greenland. The whole party moved forward on the first stage of the journey, but the greater part of the course mapped out (500 miles) was accomplished by Peary and a companion, Eivind Astrup, since dead. After a series of exciting adventures, the two explorers made their way out to the Northern Arctic Coast in 81° 40' N. and 34° 5' W., reaching a point east further than any predecessor. The information concerning Greenland and the ice-locked north, which Peary was able to bring back, is scientifically of the utmost importance, and generally most fascinating. The return journey was even more trying than the outward, and was rendered considerably more difficult, owing to the necessity of making large detours in consequence of the inaccuracies of the existing maps. In the spring and summer of 1895 Peary again traversed his old routes and corrected his observations on the regions crossed. He subsequently paid two more visits to North-East Greenland with a view to removing the great meteorite of ninety tons, which has been known since Ross's time. Peary succeeded in bringing this vast mass to America, thus making another valuable contribution to scientific knowledge. He published, in 1898, the records of all his expeditions in a volume entitled "Northward over the 'Great Ice': A Narrative of Life and Work along the Shores and upon the Interior Ice-Cap of Northern Greenland in the years 1886 and 1897." His wife, as before mentioned, wrote some years ago a small volume containing a brief account of one of his earlier expeditions. The work so far accomplished by Lieutenant Peary and dealt with in these volumes comprises:—(1) A summer voyage and reconnaissance of the Greenland ice, 1886; (2) a thirteen months' sojourn in Northern Greenland, including a 1200 mile sledge journey across the ice-cap, and the determination of the insularity of Greenland, 1891-92; (3) a twenty-five months' stay in North Greenland, including a second 1200 mile sledge journey across the ice-cap, the completion of the study of the Whale Sound natives, a detailed survey of that region, and the discovery of the Great Cape York meteorites, 1893-96: a summer voyage in 1896 and 1897, including the securing of the last and the largest of the Great Cape York meteorites, a meteor mass. Although the foregoing is a considerable record of achievement, Peary is said to regard his accomplished work as only part of a great scheme which still remains uncompleted. He is hoping to receive large assistance from his country, and having in view the distinction which Peary has brought to her rolls, the expectation deserves a worthy fulfilment. Lieutenant Peary is a man of intiring energy, and shows in his work, and no less in his two volumes of travels, an intensity which he has often visibly to restrain. In January 1897 Lieutenant Peary received the Duffin Gold Medal from the American Geographical Society. After a preliminary voyage in the summer of 1897 he started in 1898 on another expedition to the Arctic, with the hope of being able to reach the Pole.

PEASE, Sir Joseph Whitwell, Bart., M.P., J.P., D.L. son of the late Joseph Pease, a well-known coal and ironstone mine-owner of Darlington, by Emma, daughter of the late Joseph Gurney of Norwich, was born in 1824, and privately educated. In 1863 he was elected in the Liberal interest for South Durham, which constituency he represented until 1885, when he was elected for the Barnard Castle Division of the county. In 1886 he was re-elected without a contest, and in 1892 and in 1895 he was again returned at the head of the poll. He is a D.L. and J.P. for the County of Durham, and F.R.S. and J.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire, chairman of the North-Eastern Railway, and the owner of coal and ironstone mines in Durham and Yorkshire. He was created a baronet in 1892. Sir Joseph is a member of the Society of Friends, and President of the Peace and Anti-Optimism Societies. In Parliament he has rendered valuable services in all questions connected with trade and commerce, and especially with the coal and iron industries of the North of England. Through a follower of Mr. Gladstone, he spoke against the Berthel-Sumner Railway scheme; and in a very short time there gave a melancholy demonstration of his common-sense prophecies. In 1874 he married Mary, daughter of the late Alfred Esq. of Falmouth, who died in 1892. His eldest son, Mr. Alfred E. Pease, was Liberal member for the City of York from 1887 to 1892, and was elected for the Cleveland Division of Yorkshire in 1895. Sir Robert Peel, and daughter of Lieut.-General Sir Adam and was born on Aug. 3, 1823. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1845 first entered Parliament for Warwick, which he has since represented till 1885, when he visited Warwick and Leamington. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Forestry from December 1868 to January 1870, Secretary to the Board of Trade from 1873; Patronage Secretary to the Board of Trade from 1873-74; and Under-Secretary of Home Department for nine months in 1880. On the retirement of Sir Brand in 1884 Mr. Peel was Speaker, and continued to hold office amid general expressions of sympathy from all parties. After the Dissolution of 1886 he was proposed as Speaker by R. Churchill and seconded by Mr. Stowe, and in 1892 was again elected to that post. He was made D.C.L. on June 22, 1887. The momentous retirement from the Speakership in 1895 was one of the memorable events of Parliamentary history. In his address to the House from the House of Commons were devoted him for his eminent services as representative. He was raised to the Peerage as Viscount Peel, and was a pension of £400 per annum, the Freedom of the City was given him. In 1896 he was appointed to the Liquor Licensing Laws Commission. He was appointed Trustee of the Museum in the room of the Earl Spencer Walpole in 1884. He married Adelaide, daughter of Stratford Dugdale of Merevale, Leicestershire, in 1848. He has taken a large share in University business. He was elected to the Council of the Senate in 1874, and, except during two years (1878-80), he has served on it ever since; in this capacity he took part in the alteration of the University statutes of 1882. He was appointed Vice-Chancellor in 1891, and was re-appointed in 1892. In this capacity he endeavoured to bring about a better relation between the University and the town of Cambridge, by seeking some modification of exceptional powers possessed by the University. He has been a member of numerous syndicates; among these may be mentioned that which remodelled the Classical Tripos in 1872; and also that which again reconstructed it in 1881; also two which dealt with the course for the ordinary B.A. degree. He has also served on the General Board of Studies, the Financial Board, the Board for Classics, the Board for Modern Medical Studies, the Local Examinations and Lectures Syndicate, and several others. He was for two years President of the Philological Society of London. He was one of the earliest promoters of Women's Education at Cambridge, and is President of the Council of Newnham College. He is a Governor of Repton School. He married in 1866 Annette, daughter of W. Cripps Kitchener. Address: The Lodge, Christ's College, Cambridge.

PELHAM, Henry Francis, M.A., President of Trinity College, Oxford, born at Berg Apton, Norfolk, on Sept. 19, 1846, is the eldest son of the Hon. and Right Rev. John Thomas Pelham, Bishop of Norwich. He was educated at Harrow, and at Trinity College, Oxford; and obtained a first class in Lit. Hum., and a Fellowship at Exeter College, in the year 1869, and the Chancellor's Prize for an English Essay in 1870. He was elected Proctor in 1879, Reader in Ancient History in 1877, Camden Professor of Ancient History in 1889, and President of Trinity College in 1897. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, a Member of the Council of the Hellenic Society, and one of the Governors of Harrow School. He is the author of numerous articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," Smith's "Dictionary of Antiquities," the Journal of Philology and the Classical Review. In 1890 he published "The Imperial Domains and the Colonate"; in 1893, "Outlines of Roman History"; in 1895, "The Roman Frontier System." He married Laura, daughter of Sir E. U. Buxton, Bart., M.P., in 1873. Addresses: Trinity College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

C.B., K.H., killed at Chilianry 1849, was born on the 15th 1, and educated at Cheltenham the H.E.I.C. Military College,

He was appointed Lieutenant-Royal Engineers in December in November 1870, Major in 1876, Lieut.-Colonel in December 1887. He was Major-General in January 1896. He served in the Campaign, 1867-68, and was promoted to Major-General in despatches and awarded the Victoria Cross in Madras, with short intervals 1862 to January 1896, and has carried out various important works in Southern India, the great Peshawar dam, completed in 1896. This is the highest dam, the largest artificial lake in the world was sometime Chief Engineer of the Government of Madras Public Works and Marine Department; President of the Sanitary Commission; Member of the Legislature of Madras (1890-96); was Professor of the Madras University and was President of the Faculty of Engineering in the same (1893-96). He was President of the Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill, in 1896; created C.S.I. in 1895; and the Telford Medal of the Institution of Civil Engineers in 1897. He died in December 1879, Grace, of Lieut.-General S. Chamien, Address: Cooper's Hill, Englefield, Surrey.

SE, Emily, born in London, 1858, is the eldest daughter of the late Esq. F.R.S., F.R.I.B.A., and late Surveyor of St. Paul's Cathedral.

She was educated at Wimpole, Wimpole, Dresden, and Somerset, Oxford. After taking a first class in Hum. at Oxford in 1892, she received a Fellowship, and pursued, mainly in archaeology, at Wimpole, Dresden, and also in Italy.

She was appointed Principal of the College, London, and Professor of History in 1893, and about that time lectured at the British Museum, South Kensington Museum. Miss Penrose became Principal of Holloway College at Egham, and of Holloway College, Egham, College, Oxford, and his mother was a daughter of the Rev. Edmund Cartwright, D.D., F.R.S. After four years at Bedford Grammar School, he entered the foundation at Winchester College. On leaving Winchester, he became a pupil of Edward Blore, architect; and afterwards entered Magdalene College, Cambridge. During his residence there he rowed three times in the University crew against Oxford. He graduated in 1842. For three years he held the appointment of Travelling Bachelor to the University of Cambridge. In 1851 he brought out, for the Society of Dilettanti, a work entitled "The Principles of Athenian Architecture," of which a second edition has been published. In the following year he was appointed Surveyor of the Fabric to St. Paul's Cathedral, a post which he held till midsummer, 1897. Mr. Penrose published in 1869 a work named "A Method of Predicting Occultations of Stars and Solar Eclipses by Graphical Construction." The Royal Gold Medal of the Institute of British Architects was presented to him in 1883. In 1885 he was elected an Honorary Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge, and in 1886 was appointed Director of the British Archaeological School at Athens. During 1893 he contributed to the Transactions of the Royal Society a paper on certain astronomical facts connected with the orientation of Greek temples, which was followed by a supplement on the same subject in 1897. He was elected Honorary Antiquary to the Royal Academy, as successor to Sir A. W. Franks, in the year 1898. In 1856 he married Harriette, daughter of the late Francis Gibbes, surgeon, of Harewood, in Yorkshire. Addresses: Coleby Field, Wimbledon; and Athenæum.

PENZANCE, Lord, The Right Hon. James Plaisted Wilde, Dean of Arches and Chancellor of York, born in London, July 12, 1816, is the fourth son of the late Edward Archer Wilde, Esq., and nephew of the late Lord Truro. He received his education at Winchester College, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1838, and M.A. in 1842. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1839, and devoted his attention to mercantile and marine law, and went the Northern Circuit. He was appointed Junior Counsel to the Excise and Customs in 1840, Queen's Counsel in 1855, Counsel to the Duchy of Lancaster in 1859, and a Baron of the Exchequer in April 1860, when he received the honour of knighthood. In 1863 he succeeded Sir Cresswell Cresswell as Judge of the Court of Probate, and Judge Ordinary of the Divorce Court, appointments which he retained until 1872, when he resigned owing to ill-health. He was sworn a Privy Councillor in July 1864, and created a peer of the United Kingdom, April 6, 1869, since which time he has sat as a member of the Final Court of Appeal in the House of Lords. In June 1875 he was appointed Judge under the Public Worship Regulation Act (Dean of Arches), and Judge of the Provincial Courts of Canterbury and York. He unsuccessfully contested Leicester in the Liberal interest in 1852, and Peterborough in 1857. He was a member of the Commission appointed to consider the feasibility of forming a digest of the Common Law, which he had shortly before advocated in an address delivered at the meeting of the Social Science Congress at York. He was a member of the Commission of the Marriage Laws; a Member of the Judicature Commission; and took a leading part in opposing the changes which aimed at a fusion of law and equity, and which were afterwards carried out in the destruction of the old Common Law Courts. He was also a Member of the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission. Upon the abolition of Purchase in the Army, he was a Member of the Commission appointed to consider the claims of certain of the Purchase Officers, and shortly afterwards he was appointed Chairman of the Commission on Retirement and Promotion in the Army, and prepared the report which was afterwards in part carried out by Royal Warrant. He was Chairman of the Commission appointed to report on the condition of Wellington College. He was also Chairman and drew up the Report of the Commission which sat to inquire into the practices of the Stock Exchange. When Mr. Peel was elected Speaker of the House of Commons he took his place as Chairman of a Departmental Committee appointed by the War Office to consider the position of Engineer Officers in India. He took a leading part, in conjunction with the late Lord Redesdale, in opposing the abolition of the judicial functions of the House of Lords, an opposition which resulted in Lord Cairns withdrawing the Bill brought into the House of Lords for that purpose. He married Mary, daughter of the Earl of Radnor, in 1860. Address: Eashing Park, Godalming.

PEPPERCORN, A. D., landscapist, was born in London, and received his artistic training in Gérôme's Studio and at the Beaux Arts, Paris. His art is singularly suggestive of that of the Barbizon school, and he has been likened to Corot. He lives on the edge of those exquisite beech woods which extend from Horsley to Shere in Surrey, and are perhaps the only extensive and romantic woodlands east of the New Forest. He held two oil and one water-colour exhibition at Goupils' Gallery, is present at all the principal annual exhibitions in London, having latterly exhibited small and choice exhibitions at the Gallery, and was an honoured member of the late Grosvenor Gallery. In the esteem of those who really stand art he holds a very high place. Address: 32 Shaftesbury Avenue, W. West Horsley, Leatherhead.

PERCIVAL, The Right Rev D.D., Hon. LL.D., Bishop of Hereford. Sept. 27, 1834, was educated at Oxford where he was Scholar of Queen's College from 1854 to 1858, and Fellow of the College from 1858 to 1862. From 1862 he was a Master at Rugby School and was then appointed first Head of Clifton College, a post which he successfully filled until 1878, when he was elected President of Trinity College, Oxford. A few years later he was Canon of Bristol. He has published "Some Helps for School Life," "The Connection of the Universities with the Great Towns." He was one of the originators of the University Cell in Bristol; and is known throughout the country, and especially in the west, for his exertions for the spread of university education among the middle classes. In 1887 Dr. Percival was appointed Master of Rugby School, in succession to Dr. Jex-Blake, and resigned the presidency of Trinity College, Oxford, in 1895. Dr. Percival married, in 1861, Louisa, daughter of James Holland, and died in June 1896. In January 1897 he married (2) Miss Mary Georgina Symonds, second daughter of the late Frederick Symonds, of Oxford. Addresses: Palace, Hereford; and Athenaeum.

PERKIN, William Henry, I. Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in London March 12, 1838. As a chemist and inventor he has long been noted in scientific circles; but to the world at large his to enduring fame is based on his greatest and earliest achievement, the discovery of the first aniline colour. He was educated at the City of London School, the school in England at that date in which scientific subjects were taught. He studied chemistry systematically under Dr. A. W. Hofmann, at the Royal College of Chemistry. This was in 1853, when he was only fifteen years of age. Two years afterwards he acted as Assistant to Hofmann in his research laboratory.

following March he read an account of his first research before the Chemical Society. During the Easter vacation of 1856, whilst conducting an experiment at home, which had for its object the artificial formation of quinine, he obtained results which led him to the discovery of the "aniline purple," or "mauve," a discovery which laid the foundation of the industry of the coal-tar dyes, which has now assumed such enormous dimensions. After experimenting with this colouring matter in the dye-works at Perth, and encouraged by them to follow up the manufacture, Perkin left the College of Chemistry in order to devote himself to the development of his new discovery, which was patented in 1856, he being then not more than eighteen years of age. The nature of mauve being an entirely new industry, naturally presented many difficulties, as most of the substances required for its production were at that time known in only a few scientific laboratories, and none of the plant in ordinary chemical works was suitable for production. But owing to Perkin's scientific knowledge and practical turn of mind these difficulties were overcome. In undertaking he was associated with his father and brother, and the firm was known as Perkin & Sons. The works were erected on the Grand Junction Canal at Millwall, London, Middlesex. The new dye was successfully made in the course of the year 1857, and supplied first to the silk dyers in London, and then at Macclesfield, and some time afterwards to calico printers in Scotland and elsewhere. In 1859 the Société Industrielle of Mulhouse awarded Perkin a silver medal, and some time afterwards a gold medal for his discovery of the mauve. Besides the mauve, he discovered also several other coal-tar colouring matters; and after Graebe and Liebermann had made their celebrated discovery of the formation of alizarine from anthracene in 1868, he found two new processes by which this was rendered of practical value; and alizarine was first manufactured commercially at Greenford, near Manchester, in 1869. Perkin also discovered that with artificial alizarine another colouring matter was associated, viz., anthra-purpurine, which has proved to be of great value, as it produces colours of a more scarlet shade than pure alizarine, and when mixed with the latter renders its shades more brilliant. At the end of the year 1873, Perkin retired from technical work. During the entire period in which he was occupied in carrying on the manufacture of coal-tar colours he was actively engaged in scientific research, not only in reference to this industry, but also in pure chemistry.

Out of his very numerous papers the following, relating to pure chemistry, may be referred to, viz., those on the halogen derivatives of acetic and succinic acids, which resulted, among other things, in the artificial formation of glycolic acid, a derivative of gelatine (1859), and tartaric acid (1861). These were carried out in conjunction with the late Mr. B. F. Duppa, and were of special interest at that date, when but few bodies of animal or vegetable origin had been produced artificially. In 1867 he published his first papers on salicylic aldehyde, showing that this substance is not only an aldehyde but also a phenol. This was the commencement of a series of researches, which resulted in the artificial formation of coumarin (the odorous principle of the Tonka bean, sweet-scented vernal grass, &c.), and the discovery of several new bodies of this class, showing the existence of a whole series of these odoriferous substances. The further prosecution of this line of research led to the discovery of a new reaction, by which cinnamic acid could be easily obtained from benzaldehyde, by heating it with acetic anhydride and a salt of a fatty acid, and moreover, by substituting other aromatic aldehydes, and also varying the anhydride, a large number of new acids of this class were obtained. By modifying this reaction, which is now known as "Perkin's Reaction," Dr. Caro succeeded in producing cinnamic acid technically (at the Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik), for the artificial production of indigo by the method discovered by Bayer. Perkin's later work has been on the remarkable property of substances to rotate the plane of polarisation when placed in the field of a magnet (discovered by Faraday), and he has shown that this rotation varies with bodies of the homologous series in a definite manner for each addition of CH_2 , and moreover it exhibits distinct differences between normal and isomeric compounds, and is therefore likely to be of value in determining the constitution of bodies. By this property it appears also to be possible to distinguish between bodies which, when hydrated, form definite chemical products and those which only form molecular compounds. Dr. Perkin was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1866, at the age of twenty-eight. In 1869 he became one of the honorary secretaries of the Chemical Society, a post which he held until elected President of that Society in 1883; he was also President of the Society of Chemical Industry in 1884-85. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Ph.D. of the University of Würzburg, and in 1884 he was made an Honorary Member of the German

Chemical Society. In 1879 the Royal medal, and in 1889 the Lavoisier medal, were awarded to him by the Royal Society, and in 1891 he received the Dalglish medal of the Chemical Society the latter two being given in recognition of his researches in the magnetic reaction of bodies; and in 1898 the Albert medal from the Society of Arts was awarded him for his discoveries in colouring matters. In 1891 he received the honorary degree of D.Sc. from the University of St. Andrews, and in 1892 was awarded the Birmingham medal of the Gas Chemicals in recognition of the importance of his discoveries in the coal-tar industry. Address: The Chemical Society, Rantree.

PERKIN, William Henry, junior, F.R.S., Professor of Organic Chemistry in Owens College, Manchester, was born in Sudbury on June 22, 1836, and is the eldest son of W. H. Perkin, M.D., F.R.S., &c. He was educated in the City of London School, at the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, and at the Universities of Windsor and Munich. He was a Private Doctor at Munich for three years. In 1867 was appointed Professor of Chemistry at the Heriot-Watt College, Edinburgh, and in 1869 proceeded to his present post. He has published well-known text-books of Chemistry in conjunction with Drs. Kipping and Lead, and has contributed many papers to Chemistry in the scientific journals. Address: Fairview, Fallowfield, Manchester.

PEROSI, Father Lorenzo, Italian composer, was born at Ferrara in 1872. His love for music showed itself from his earliest years, and having sprung from a musical family he received his first lessons from his father, himself an organist of some repute. Young Perosi's talent was so pronounced that he was sent to the St. Cecilia Institute of Rome, and afterwards to Ravenna. His first appointment was at the Conservatoire of Parma, but his ideas always having been of an ecclesiastical nature, he took up the clerical profession at Venice. In this he composed a great number of masses and other church compositions; these were followed by oratorios, which quickly gained for him a larger circle of admirers. In 1897 he conceived the idea of a series of twelve oratorios to illustrate the life of Christ. The first of these was "La Passione di Cristo"; then "La Trasfigurazione di Cristo"; and "La Risurrezione di Lazzaro." The last of the series is "La Risurrezione di Cristo," which was given in 1899 at the ancient church of St. Agostino, in Milan.

PEROWSKY, The Rev. E. Henry, D.D., Master of Corpus College, Cambridge, was born in 1820 and was educated at Corpus College, Cambridge, of which he was, and Tutor from 1856 to 1873. His former master was William, Lord Palmerston from 1845 and Vice-Chancellor in 1850. In 1860 he was appointed Hon. Canon of Ely in 1864. He was Lady Margaret's in the University in 1877. The Dean from 1873 to 1881, and was the Master of Corpus in 1877. He was a commendary in the University series of a Seraphim order and delivered the Erasmus Lecture at Goddard of Jesus. Address: Lodge, Corpus Christi College, Cam.

PEROWSKY, The Right Rev. James Stewart, D.D., Bishop of Exeter, was born March 20, 1812, and was the eldest of a family of Englishmen, emigrants, and now in this country in the various Bishops of America. He was first Norwich Grammar School, and at Corpus College, Cambridge, was joined Ball's University School, Corpus Theological School, and with the Hebrew School, in the Member's Priestsman Latin Exam. 1840, and 1847. Dr. Perowsky's B.A. degree in 1845, and then in 1848, and was elected a Fellow College in 1848. He was then the Classical Tutor in 1850. He was Select Preacher at the Church in 1853, 1861, and 1871, and since 1873, Holman, Leeson, and Lady Margaret's Preacher. For several years he held a Chair of Professorship in King's College, and was Assistant-Secretary of the Inn and Examinations of the Bishop of Norwich. From 1872 he was Vice-Principal of St. College, Lancaster, and when needed in obtaining for the Charter empowering it to the degree of B.A. He was in 1870 Professor in Theology, and in 1871 a Fellow of Trinity College. In 1874 he was Cambridge Preacher, Chapel Royal, Whitehall. He was a Residentary of Lincoln from 1875, and Holman Professor of at Cambridge, having been elected office, June 15, 1875; he was also in the Text of Scripture, at University of London. He was an honorary chaplain to the Queen in 1875. In August 1876 he was named by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to be

S., Assoc. M.I.C.E., Vice-Presi-
e Physical Society and Vice-President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, was born at Garvagh, in Ulster, on Feb. 14, 1850. His father was Samuel Perry, of that town. Dr. Perry attended the Model School, Belfast, and won a silver medal in Natural Science. He graduated in 1870 as Bachelor of Engineering, in the Queen's University of Ireland, with first honours, Gold Medal and Peel Prize; and gained a Whitworth Scholarship in that year. The honorary degree of Master in Engineering was conferred on him by the University Senate in 1882. He was Lecturer in Physics at Clifton College, 1870-74; and there started the earliest School Physical Laboratory and Workshop, still thriving institutions. He published "A Treatise on Steam" (Macmillan), in 1873;

was a secretary of the A Section, British Association, 1874; and in that year became Thomson Scholar, and hon. assistant to Sir William Thomson in Glasgow. He wrote the mathematical and physical articles in Blackie's "Cyclopedia." His first scientific paper was read before the Royal Society of London, early in 1875, on "The Electric Conductivity of Glass as Dependent on Temperature." In partnership with Sir William Thomson, he read a paper on "Capillary Surfaces of Revolution," before the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Of the papers published by him with Prof. Ayrton, since 1876, the following are some of the most important: "The Specific Inductive Capacity of Gases," "On Electrolytic Polarisation," "Resistance of Galvanometer Coils," "Ice as an Electrolyte," "Heat Conduction in Stone," "Contact Theory of Voltaic Action," "Ratio of Electric Units," "On Electromotors, and their Government," "On Electrical Measuring Instruments," "On the Gas Engine," and "Magnifying Spring." In 1875 he went to Japan as Joint-Professor (with the Principal) of Engineering in the Imperial College of Engineering, and returned to England in 1879. He gained the Silver Medal of the Society of Arts in 1881 for his lecture on "The Future Development of Electrical Appliances," since translated into German by Prof.
Weinhold. He delivered a course of Cantor lectures on hydraulic machinery in 1882; and became Professor of Mechanical Engineering and applied Mathematics at the Finsbury Technical College. He is secretary of the Physical Society. Professors Ayrton and Perry were appointed joint-engineers to the Faure Accumulator Company, and remained in that capacity until the English patents were disposed of.
Their more important inventions are: A dynamo machine, in the description of which in 1882 the well-known system of multipolar winding is first described; permanent magnet and spring ammeters and voltmeters, with and without commutators; solenoid and shielded ammeters and voltmeters; spring balances; resistances for use with strong currents varied by foot and hand; ergometers; power-meter; ohmmeter; non-sparking key; electromotors; switches for use with accumulators, and arrangements for lighting railway trains; photometers; secchometers; dynamometer couplings and transmission and absorption dynamometers; an electric arc lamp; the governing of motors and dynamos; an electric tricycle; an electric railway system with friction gearing, contact boxes and locomotives, forming part of the general system belonging to the Telfherage Company (Limited). Of their inventions which are not commercially valuable may be mentioned their arrangement for "Seeing by Electricity"; their multireflex arrangement exhibited in Paris; their ballistic galvanometer, and their many forms of apparatus employed in the teaching of electricity, &c. On the death of Prof. Fleeming Jenkin, Prof. Perry became engineer to the Telfherage Company, and from July to October 1885, superintended the erection and settling to work of the Telfher line at Glynde in Sussex. In June 1885 Prof. Perry was elected to a Fellowship of the Royal Society. The Royal University of Ireland has bestowed on him its highest scientific degree, that of Doctor of Science. He delivered the "operatives" lecture of the British Association meeting of 1890 on "Spinning Tops." He is now utilising part of the immense water-power of Galway (in partnership with his brother, who is County Surveyor there) in Electric Lighting and Transmission of Power. The Ayrton and Perry partnership was dissolved in 1889. Since that time Prof. Perry has published many scientific papers and developed several instruments, of which his Electric Supply Meter for the use of consumers of electric energy is the one most valuable commercially. In 1896 he was appointed to the Chair of Mathematics and Mechanics at the Royal College of Science, London. He is a member of the Kew Committee of the Royal Society. He advocates many reforms in the teaching of Mathematics and Mechanics, which are explained in his recent publications, "The Calculus for Engineers" and "Applied Mechanics." He is married to Miss Alice Jowitt, of Sheffield. Address: Royal College of Science, S. Kensington.

PERSIA, Shah of. See MUZAFFER-ED-DIN, SHAH OF PERSIA.

PERUGINI, Charles Edward, was born in Naples of Italian parentage, on Sept. 1, 1839. He was educated in England, and first began his art studies in Paris, at the Pension Colart. After the advice of Horace Vernet, who was much interested in the boy, his parents sent him to Naples, where he studied painting under Signor Mancinelli. He then went to Rome, and worked in the studio of Signor Mancinelli, finishing his art education in Paris, under the personal supervision of Arys. C. E. Perugini first exhibited at the French Gallery, and at the Royal Academy of Artists in Pall Mall; and since he has been represented each successive year at the Royal Academy. He is also a constant exhibitor at the New Gallery. Among his principal works are: "Cup of Tea," 1874; "A Labourer," 1875, by which he was represented at the Universal Exhibition of 1875; "Rivals," 1876; "Finishing Touches," 1877; "Fresh Lavender," 1879; "A Summer Shower," 1880; "Dolce Far Niente," 1881; "Moments," 1884; "Cup and Ball," 1885; "A Summer Shower," 1888; "The High-Born Lady," 1893; "The Weary Waiting," 1898; "An Italian," 1899; and many others of which have been reproduced, in line engraving, wood, metal, or photography. He has also painted many portraits, but has exhibited few of them; two of the best being "Countess Granville and her daughters," and the portrait of Mr. C. E. Perugini was naturalized in 1859, and joined the Artists' Company of the 38th Middlesex Royal Volunteer Battalion (the 20th), and was elected to a position, which he held until 1872. Perugini was awarded the Gold Medal of the Melbourne International Exhibition of 1880, and received other medals and diplomas from Philadelphia, Sydney, and Adelaide. In 1874 he married the daughter of Charles Dickens. Address: 38A Victoria Road, Kensington.

PERUGINI, Kate, wife of Perugini, is the eldest daughter of Charles Dickens, the novelist. She was born in London, and first began drawing at Bedford College, Bedford Square. She afterwards studied art in London and among her teachers being the late Collins and the late Frederick Walker. Mrs. Kate Perugini is a painter of children's portraits, and of children's subjects. The best known of these are "Impartial Audience," "A Little Womboy," "A Little Coquette," "A Sister," "Happy and Careless Rabbit Hutch," "A Doll's Dress," "Little Nell," "A Story Book," "A Pathy," "A Flower Merchant," that Bloom in the Spring," and lies," a photogravure of which was by the Berlin Photographic Company these pictures, and a great number portraits of children, have been sold at the Royal Academy and the Gallery. Her Academy picture is "The Sister of the Bride." Mrs. Mugini is a member of the Society of Artists.

PETERBOROUGH, Bishop of. See THE HON. AND RIGHT REV. EDWARD.

PETHERICK, Edward Augustus, son of Peter John Petherick, and of Edward Jarman Petherick, Bridgwater, was born March 6, Burnham, Somerset, where his as bookseller and librarian. His emigrating to Australia in 1852, received early official training in the offices, Collingwood, Victoria. 1832 to 1888 he was connected with book-selling and publishing house in London from 1870 to 1888. In connection with a Colonial Booksellers' Association (1887 to 1892) he edited the Torch and Book Circular, a guide to new English and American, including citations relating to or issued in the Colonies. Among much other philological work which Mr. Petherick may be mentioned a "Bibliography of Australasia and Polynesia," now of publication, and a "Catalogue of the Port Gate Library" (S. W. Silver), ended and re-issued in 1886 as an index to the Literature of Geography in all Ages and Countries." Contributed to the Melbourne Review (1885) a series of papers treating of the Southern Hemisphere, preparing a work in elucidation of and Portuguese voyages in the territory. He has also written upon politics and finances, his latest work being "Australia in 1897." Petherick has travelled round the world, and has visited the States and most of the British Colonies.

He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, of the Royal Colonial Society, and of the Linnean Society; member of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia (Victorian Branch), and of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, and of kindred societies.

He married, in 1892, Mary daughter of Rev. Samuel Annear, missionary, and widow of Charles Petherick, of Melbourne and Bourne. Address: 85 Hopton Road, Streatham, S.W.

PETIT, Hon. Sir Dinshaw Manockjee, Bart., a philanthropic Parsee, was born June 30, 1823, and is the chief representative of one of the oldest Parsee families, which obtained its surname from the French sobriquet of Petit, owing to their short stature. Sir Dinshaw acquired his English education at a school kept by a pensioned sergeant named Sykes. At seventeen he entered an English firm as clerk, at the same time trading on his own account with the rest of India and with China. Some time after he had inherited about twelve lakhs on the death of his father in 1859, he took full advantage of the American Civil War to invest all his capital in the extension of the cotton industry, and such were his energy and prudence that he not only increased his fortune, but succeeded in preserving it intact during the worst crisis of the share mania. He deserves all the credit for having acted as the pioneer of that milling industry which has turned Bombay into an Asiatic Lancashire. He is now the chief owner of seven of the largest mills in his Presidency, and is considered to be one of the wealthiest men in India. In 1887 he received the honour of knighthood on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, and in the following year he was appointed member of the Viceroy's Judicial Council—a post which he afterwards resigned owing to the pressure of his other engagements. During the last thirty years Sir Dinshaw has dispensed large sums in public and private charity, principally the latter, and the amount of these benefactions is stated on trustworthy authority to exceed £200,000. One of the most notable of his latest gifts was to present the freehold of the land on which the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute has been erected. He has given a lakh (100,000) of rupees towards the founding of a leper hospital in Bombay. These and other benefactions have made the Parsee community of Western India famous throughout the world. He was Sheriff of Bombay in 1887, and is a member of the Chief Parsee Council. In 1890 he was created a baronet, and his heir is his grandson, who was born in 1873. Address: Petit Hill, Bombay.

PETRE, Sir George Glynn, C.B., K.C.M.G., was born on Sept. 4, 1822, and is the second son of Henry Petre, of Dunkenhagh, Clayton-le-Moors, Lancs.; he entered the diplomatic service in 1846, and was attached to the Legation at Frankfurt. He was transferred to the Embassy in Paris, March 1853, and in 1856 he went to Naples, and acted as Chargé d'Affaires from July to October, when, in conjunction with the French Minister, he broke off diplomatic relations with the King of the Two Sicilies, and was subsequently re-appointed to the Embassy of Paris. He was appointed Secretary of Legation at Hanover, June 6, 1859; Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen, December 1864; and assisted at the investiture of his Majesty Christian IX. with the Order of the Garter, as a bearer of a portion of the insignia. He was transferred to Brussels in 1866, and promoted to be Secretary of Embassy in Berlin, June 26, 1868. Mr. Petre was accredited Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, April 1, 1881; Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republic of Paraguay, March 2, 1882; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Portugal, Jan. 16, 1884. In 1886 he was made a Companion of the Bath, and in 1890 a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In January 1893 he retired on a pension. He married, in 1858, Emma Katherine, daughter of the late Major Sneyd. Address: Hatchwoods, Winchfield, Hants.

PETRIE, Professor William Matthew Flinders, D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., Egyptologist, was born at Charlton, on June 3, 1853, and is the grandson through his mother of Captain Flinders, discoverer and explorer in Australia. He was privately educated. From 1875 to 1880 he was occupied in surveying British earthworks, &c.; his plans are in the British Museum. In 1877 he wrote "Inductive Metrology, or the Recovery of Ancient Measures from the Monuments"; 1880, "Stonehenge: Plans, Description, and Theories." In 1881-82 he surveyed at the pyramids, and the results appeared in "Pyramids and Temples of Gizeh," assisted by a grant from the Royal Society. In 1884-86 he excavated for the Egypt Exploration Fund at Tanis (Zoan), Naukratis, Am, and Daphnæ, the last three being new discoveries. The results appeared in "Tanis I.," "Naukratis," "Tanis II.," and "Two Hieroglyphic Papyri." He also wrote the articles "Pyramid" and "Weights and Measures," in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 9th edit. In 1887 his work was on rock inscriptions and casts of sculpture, appearing in "A Season in Egypt" and "Racial Portraits." In 1888 and onwards he has excavated with the assistance of private friends, working from 1888 to 1890 in the Fayum, and discovering the colossi of Biahmu, Roman portraits at Hawara, early towns at Kahun and Gurob, and the interior of the pyramids of Hawara, Illahun. The results appeared in "Kahun," "Kahun," and "Illahun." An article on "Historical Scarabs" was published in 1888. In 1890 he discovered and excavated on the site of Lachish in Palestine Exploration Fund, the site appearing as "Tell el Hesi." In 1891 he excavated at Medum, finding the unknown temple, and published "Medum." A popular summary of Egyptian work was then issued, in "Years' Diggings in Egypt." In 1892 he excavated the palace of Akheraten, published in "Tell el Amarna." He received the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford in 1893, and was appointed to the newly founded Edwards Professorship of Egyptology at University College, London. He organised a library and collection. In 1894 he discovered prehistoric sculp in the Temple of Koptos, published "Koptos." In 1895 he discovered "New Race" at Nagada, since proved prehistoric Egyptians, published "Nagada and Ballas." In the same year he received the honorary degree of D.Litt. at Edinburgh. In 1896 he explored Temples of Thebes, finding the inscription, published in "Six Temples of Thebes." In 1897 he excavated at Denderah, published in "Deshasheh." In 1898 he explored the early cemetery at Denderah. In May 1899 Prof. Petrie lectured at University College the discoveries of the winter of 1898-99. The entirely new discovery of the traces of a foreign people entered Egypt about the twelfth Dynasty. This people was probably Libyans. The most valuable discovery was the magnificent bronze dagger of King Sesostris of the fourteenth Dynasty. He has published a "History of Egypt," "Egyptian Tales," "Egyptian Decorative Art," "Religion and Conscience," "Syria," "Egypt," &c. The purpose of his searches has been the scientific study of Egyptian civilisation, recorded in publication of drawings and descriptions. Permanent address: University College, London.

PETTIGREW, James Bell, LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., Laureate of the Institute of France, Professor of Medicine and Anatomy, and Dean of the Medical Faculty in the University of St. Andrews, was born in 1834, and is a native of Lanarkshire, Scotland. He is on his father's side to the late well-known Dr. Thomas J. Pettigrew, F.R.C.S., of "Bibliotheca Sussexiana," "Encyclopædia Egyptiaca," "Medical Portrait Gallery," &c.; and on his mother's (Mary Bell) to the famous Henry Bell

er and builder of the original Comet ship, and the founder of steam navigation in Europe. He was educated at the Free West Academy of Airdrie, the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow. He studied Arts at Glasgow University from 1850 to 1855, and Medicine at Edinburgh University from 1856 to 1861. He graduated in Medicine at Glasgow University with first-class honours in 1861. In 1858-59 he was Professor John Goodsir's Senior Lecturer and won the Gold Medal for the best treatise on the Arrangement of the Muscular System in the Ventricles of the Vertebrate. Phil. Trans. 1864. This treatise was the basis for his appointment of Lecturer to the Royal Society of Medicine for 1860. He carried off in this year (1860) the annual Gold Medal of the Royal Society of Medicine for his "On the Presumption of Survival." Brit. and For. Med. Chirurg. January 1865. In 1860 also he was elected President of the Royal Medical Society, an honour greatly prized by all his alumni. On graduating in 1861, he selected as the subject of his inaugural dissertation, "The Nerves of the Heart, and their Relation with the Cerebro-spinal and Sympathetic Systems in Mammalia," a novel and intricate investigation. For this he received a graduation Gold Medal, the highest honour the University of Edinburgh confers, Proc. Roy. Soc. Edin. 1861. He became house surgeon to Professor Syme at the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. In 1862 he obtained the post of Assistant in the Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. Here he remained for five years (1862-67). During the period he added about 600 finished dissections, injections, and casts to his collection. In addition to his work he wrote several important papers, each memoir being profusely illustrated by dissections and drawings. The following may be mentioned: "The Arrangement of the Vascular Systems in Vertebrates." Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin. 1864; "The Arrangements of the Bladder and Uterus." Phil. Trans. 1867; "The Mechanical Appliances by which Flight is effected in the Animal Kingdom." Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin. 1867. In 1867 he retired from the Hunterian Museum, and spent two years in the south of Ireland, where he occupied himself in extending his knowledge of the flight of insects, birds, and fishes. He also experimented largely at the time on the subject of artificial respiration. In 1869 he was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of London, and in the same year he returned to Edinburgh, having been appointed Curator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, and Pathologist to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. There he continued his anatomical, physical, and physiological researches, particularly those of flight, and in 1870 he produced a memoir, "On the Physiology of Wings, being an analysis of the movements by which Flight is produced in the Insect, Bird, and Bat," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., vol. xxvi. pp. 321-446. At that period he added numerous specimens to the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh; these, with the other specimens deposited in the Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Anatomical Museum of the University of Edinburgh, amounted to considerably over 1000. He also gave daily demonstrations in morbid anatomy at the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh to large classes of students. In 1872 he delivered a course of lectures to the President and Fellows of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, "On the Physiology of the Circulation in Plants, in the Lower Animals, and in Man." These appeared in the Edinburgh Medical Journal, Lancet, &c., as delivered, and were republished by Macmillan in 1874. In 1872 he was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and a member of the Harveian, Botanical, Medico-Chirurgical, and other learned societies. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, and appointed Examiner in Physiology to the College. He also (1873) became Lecturer in Physiology to the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. On assuming the duties of teacher of Physiology, he chose as the subject of his opening address, "The Relation of Plants and Animals to Inorganic Matter, and the Interaction of the Vital and Physical Forces," Lancet, November 1873; reprinted shortly afterwards by MacLachlan and Stewart, of Edinburgh. In that year (1873) he published his work on "Animal Locomotion; or Walking, Swimming, and Flying," the most popular and best known of all his writings, Anglo-American Science Series, vol. vii. This volume was translated, shortly after its appearance, into French, German, and other languages, and has passed through several large editions. In 1874 he was awarded the Godard prize of the French Academy of Sciences for his Anatomico-physiological Researches, and made a Laureate of the Institute of France. In 1875 he was appointed Chandos Professor of Medicine and Anatomy and Dean of the Medical Faculty in the University of St. Andrews, positions which he still holds. On being inducted to his Chair, he gave as his introductory lecture "Man in which he was raised to the Bench in November 1897. He is a learned lawyer, and a well-known authority on Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Law. He has published the "Book of Church Law"; "Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law," 2nd edit.; "Phillimore's International Law," vol. iv., 3rd edit. As a Liberal he unsuccessfully contested St. George's, Hanover Square, in 1885, and as a Home Ruler failed to secure a seat in South Oxfordshire in 1886 and 1892. He has strong ecclesiastical sympathies, and is Vice-President of the English Church Union. In June 1898 he was presented with a silver model of a three-masted antique galleon by past and present members of the Admiralty Bar in recognition of his long service in the Admiralty Court. He married, in 1870, Agnes, eldest daughter of the late Mr. C. M. Lushington, M.P. Addresses: 86 Eaton Place, S.W.; The Coppice, Henley-on-Thames, &c.; and Athenæum.

PHILLIPS, Lawrence Barnett, F.S.A., F.R.A.S., A.R.E., eldest son of the late Barnett Phillips, Esq., of Bloomsbury Square, was born Jan. 29, 1842, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, which he left at the age of fourteen, to study mechanics and watchmaking, his general education being continued by private tutors at his father's residence. In 1861 he commenced business as a wholesale chronometer and watch manufacturer, having already invented the rocking-bar mechanism for winding watches, which did much towards their general introduction, and which form of keyless work has now been universally adopted by the English manufacturers. He has designed and constructed some of the most complicated and highly-finished specimens of horological art, and by the invention of various forms of mechanism succeeded in the simplification of chronographs and the improvement of calculating machines. In 1866 he published the "Autographic Album," which was followed in 1871 by "Horological Rating Tables," and in 1873 by "The Dictionary of Biographical Reference," an original work, giving the names of 100,000 celebrities of all countries, and references in each instance to sources of further information. In November 1865 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and in March 1885 a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. Since 1882, when he retired from business, he has occupied himself as a painter and etcher, and has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy and most of the leading London and provincial exhibitions, and is an Associate of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers. In 1890 he constructed and patented an improved sketching-box and palette, which

rise tragedy for the St. James' and he chose the subject of Paolo and Francesca. In this play it is his aim to bring English tragedy back to the severer and simpler model of the ancients, rather than to the luxuriance of the French drama. His next book will be somewhat long poem dealing with the resurrection of the after-life, a subject which has agitated so many minds. Mr. Phillpotts, in the earlier part of 1898, gave public readings from the older poets and from his own works. Woodthorpe Road, Ashford, POTTS, James Surtees, Headmaster of Bedford Grammar School, is the son of the Rev. William John Phillpotts, Worcester, and was born in 1862. He was educated at Winchester College, Oxford, where he obtained first class in Classical Moderations, Hum., and won the Stanhope Prize in 1889 (B.C.L., M.A.). He left his College from 1888 to 1890 as an Assistant-Master at the same school, and was appointed to his present post in 1895. He edited "King and Commonwealth," selections from Xenophon, and, with Edward E. Morris and Mr. C. H. St. John, has edited the well-known Modern History series for the Cambridge University Press. Address: School House, Bedford.

POTTS, Edmund Constantine, Minister Plenipotentiary in London, was born March 15, 1840, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1858, having been educated at Harrow. After several minor appointments, he was Consul-General at Budapest in 1874, and in 1875, and in 1876; and in 1893 was a British Commissioner in the West African Commission. The next year he was appointed to his present post. He married Maria, daughter of H. M. Mundy, of Shipley, in 1874. Address: British Legation, London.

POTTS, Alfredo, violoncellist, was born in 1822, and studied at the Conservatoire under his uncle, Giovanni Merighi. He made his first appearance in London in 1844, when he was a member of the Philharmonic Society. He has settled in London, and has chiefly played at the Saturday Popular Concerts. He is a composer, and has written a number of obbligato to several songs, concertino and two or three

PICK, Thomas Pickering, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. George's Hospital, where he is now Senior Surgeon. He has been Vice-President and member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and in July 1898 was again re-elected Vice-President. He has been Hunterian Professor of the Royal College of Surgeons, and delivered the Bradshaw Lecture in December 1898, his subject being "The Healing of Wounds." He is a Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc. and Inspector of Anatomy for England and Wales. He is editor of "Gray's Anatomy" and of Holmes's "Surgery," and has contributed to the St. George's Hospital Reports, and to the leading medical journals. Address: 18 Portman Street, Portman Square, W.

PICKARD, Benjamin, M.P., is the eldest son of a miner, and was born at Kippox, near Leeds, on Feb. 28, 1842. He received a short schooling at the local Grammar School, and began to work in the pit at the tender age of twelve. At an early period of his career he became known as a labour agitator, has been successively Assistant-Secretary and Secretary of the West Yorkshire Miners' Association, a post which he still holds, and is now President of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain. Since 1885 he has been Liberal member for the Normanton Division of Yorkshire, and in Parliament has been an active promoter of the Eight Hours Movement as applied to Mines, and the Employers' Liability, Truck, and Mines Acts. He was a member of the Trades Congress Parliamentary Committee during a year, has attended nearly twenty congresses of trades-unions, and has organised six international congresses of miners. He is also a worker in the cause of the Peace Society and the Lord's Rest-Day Association. Among other works he has written the "Miners' Annual Report" during sixteen years. Address: 2 Huddersfield Road, Barnsley.

PICKARD-CAMBRIDGE, The Rev. Octavius, M.A., F.R.S., was born at Bloxworth Rectory, Dorsetshire, on Nov. 3, 1828, and is the fifth son of the late Rev. George Pickard, Rector of Warmwell, and of Bloxworth (who, with his children, assumed, in 1847, the additional surname of Cambridge under the will of his first-cousin, Charles Owen Cambridge, Esq., of Whitminster, co. Gloucester), and Frances Amelia, his wife, daughter of the late Martin Whish, Esq., Commissioner of Excise. He was educated as private pupil of the late Rev. William Barnes, B.D. (the Dorset Poet), Dorchester, 1844-45; was Student in the Middle Temple, London, 1849-52; was at University College, Durham, 1855-58; Licentiate in Theology, 1857; B.A. 1858, M.A. 1859; ordained Deacon, 1858, and Priest, 1859. He was Curate of Scarisbrick, Lancashire, 1858-60; Curate of Bloxworth and Winterbourne Tomson, Dorsetshire, 1860-68; Rector of Bloxworth and Winterbourne Tomson, 1868; Diocesan Inspector of Schools, in Religious Knowledge, for the second portion of the Rural Deanery of Whitchurch, 1879-82; elected Clerical Member of the Diocesan Synod of Salisbury, 1870-89; Chaplain to the High Sheriff of Dorset, 1889; elected Fellow of the Royal Society, 1887; is Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London; formerly Member of the Entomological Society of London; is Honorary Member of the New Zealand Institute; Honorary Member of the Trinity Historical Society, Dallas, Texas; Vice-President and Treasurer of the Dorset Natural History and Antiquarian Field Club; Honorary Member of the Hampshire Field Club; and Honorary Member of the Arts Society. He is the author of numerous papers on Natural History in the proceedings of various learned societies, and of the following works: "Spiders of Dorset," 2 vols., 1879-81; "Araneidea," in "Scientific Results of the Second Yarkand Mission," published by order of the Government of India, 1885; "Arachnida of Kerguelen Island," published in Report of the Transit of Venus Expedition—Zoology, 1877; article "Arachnida" in "Encyclopædia Britannica," ninth ed., 1875, p. 271; and "Arachnida, Araneidea" in "Biologia Centrali-Americana," edited by F. D. Godman and Osbert Salvin (still in course of publication). He married, in 1866, Rose, daughter of the Rev. James Lloyd Wallace, of Sevenoaks, Kent. Address: Bloxworth, Wareham, Dorset.

PICKERING, Professor Edward Charles, American astronomer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, July 19, 1846. He graduated in Civil Engineering at the Lawrence Scientific School, Harvard, in 1865, and in 1866 was appointed Assistant-Instructor of Physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, of which he held the full Professorship from 1868 to 1877. During that period he made many researches in physics, particularly investigating the polarisation of light and the laws of its reflection and dispersion. He also described a new form of spectrum telescope, and invented (1870) a telephone receiver. In 1870 he had charge of the polariscope in the United States Coast Survey Expedition sent to Spain to observe the total eclipse of the sun, he having previously been a member of the party sent to Iowa by the U. S. Nautical Almanac Office to observe the eclipse of 1869. Since 1876 he has been at the Observatory at Harvard, which, under his management, is one of the foremost observatories in America. He has been engaged there in determining the brightness of stars by means of a Photometer, and he has published catalogues giving the relative brightness of 4000, 20,000, 8000, and 6000 stars respectively. He has also made precise measurements of Jupiter's Satellites, they were undergoing eclipse, and of Satellites of Mars, and of other objects. Later his work has been largely to the photography of the stars and of their spectra, the northern stars being photographed at Cambridge, the southern stars at an auxiliary station in Peru. Professor Pickering is a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society of London, and was awarded its Gold Medal in 1886 for photometric researches. In 1873 he became a Member of the Academy of Sciences, and in 1874 he received its Henry Draper Medal for his researches in Astronomical Physics. He was, in 1876, a Vice-President of the Association for the Advancement of Science, and in addition held a number of other scientific positions in Europe and the United States. More than twenty volumes of the Annals of the Observatory have been issued under his direction. Besides his many papers, which number above a hundred, he has published annual reports, he has edited, with Dr. Bezold, 1876; and is the author of "The Theory of Colour in its Art and Art Industry," by Dr. Bezold, 1876; and is the author of "Physical Manipulation," 1873-76.

PICKERING, Percival, American astronomer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, July 19, 1846. He graduated in Civil Engineering at the Lawrence Scientific School, Harvard, in 1865, and in 1866 was appointed Assistant-Instructor of Physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, of which he held the full Professorship from 1868 to 1877. During that period he made many researches in physics, particularly investigating the polarisation of light and the laws of its reflection and dispersion. He also described a new form of spectrum telescope, and invented (1870) a telephone receiver. In 1870 he had charge of the polariscope in the United States Coast Survey Expedition sent to Spain to observe the total eclipse of the sun, he having previously been a member of the edford College. His principles have been published in the Chemical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, the Chemical News, and Physikal. Chemie. The following are some of his works: "Sulphuric Acid on Copper," "Action of Hydrochloric Acid on Dioxide," 1879; "The Formation of Molecular Compounds," "Molecular Weights of Solids," 1885; "Modifications of Calorimeters," "On Delicate Calorimeters," "Water of Crystallization," "The Nature of Solution," "Influence of Temperature on the Rate of Dissolution of Salts," "Calorimeters," "The Thermal Effects of Neutralisation, and their Application to the Nature of Solution, and to the Law of Residual Affinity," "Thermochemical Constants," "Dissolution of Substances in Liquids, and its Bearing on the Theory of the Heat of Neutralisation," "The Theory of Residual Affinity," "The Principles of Thermochemistry," 1888; "The Neutralisation of Acids," 1889; "A New Form of Calorimeter," "The Nature of Solution as Elucidated by a Study of the Electric Conductivities, and the Expansion by Dilution of Sulphuric Acid Solutions," "The Principles of Thermochemistry as Elucidated by the Action of Sulphuric Acid Solutions," "The Freezing-Points of the Supposed Hydrates of Water," "The Expansion of Water," "Determinations of the Heat of Fusion of City and Heat of Fusion of Cane-Sugar Solutions," "The Cryoscopic Constants of Cane-Sugar Solutions," "Residual Chemical Affinity of the Physical Nature of Solutions," 1891; "The Recognition of Curvature by means of a Cryoscopic Constant," "The Heat of Gases in Liquids," 1892; "The Rate of Diffusion of Solutions," "Some Common Alkylamines and Ammonia," "The Hydrates of Hydrochloric Acid," "The Hydrates of Potassium, and Lithium," "The Hydrates of Hydrochloric Acid," "Study of some Properties of Stereotrogen Compounds," "Note on the Stereotrogen Compounds," "The Dried Acid," 1893; "The Hydrates of Soda and Potash," "The Properties of Calorimeters," 1894. Mr. Pickersgill was elected to the Chemical Society in 1878, the Physical Society in 1886, the Institute of Chemistry in 1888, and the Royal Society in 1890. Investigations on the thermal changes accompanying the hydrolysis of starch, the invention of cane-sugar, and other allied reactions have subsequently been published by Mr. Pickering and Mr. Horace Brown, F.R.S. In 1894 Mr. Pickering initiated, in conjunction with the Duke of Bedford, an experimental horticultural station at Ridgmont, Beds., known as the Woburn Experimental Fruit Farm, and of this station Mr. Pickering acts as director. The first report on the results obtained there was published in 1897. Address: The Woburn Fruit Farm, Ridgmont, Beds.

PICKERSGILL, Edward Hare, M.P., Gladstonian Liberal, was born in 1850, is the son of the late Mr. Thomas Pickersgill, architect, of York, and was educated at York Grammar School, and graduated B.A. at London University in 1872. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1884, and was from 1868 to 1885 a Civil Servant in the G.P.O. Savings Bank Department. Since 1885 he has sat in Parliament for Bethnal Green, South-West. Address: 238 Amherst Road, Hackney.

PICKERSGILL, Frederick Richard, Hon. R.A., nephew of the late Henry William Pickersgill, R.A., born in London in 1820, studied at the Royal Academy. His first production, "The Combat between Hercules and Achelous," an oil painting, exhibited in 1840, was followed by a prize cartoon of "The Death of King Lear," exhibited in Westminster Hall in 1843; and "The Burial of Harold," a picture for which he received a first-class prize in 1847, and which was immediately purchased for the new Houses of Parliament. Mr. Pickersgill was for many years a regular exhibitor. In 1847 he was elected A.R.A., and in 1857 was promoted to the rank of Academician. He was Keeper of the Royal Academy from 1873 to 1887, and retired a few years ago. Permanent address: The Towers, Yarmouth, Isle of Wight.

PICQUART, Colonel Georges, was born at Strasbourg in 1854, and is a descendant of an old Lorraine family long settled in Alsace. From 1872 to 1874 he studied at St. Cyr, and in the latter year entered the Staff College, leaving it in 1876 with a brilliant record. He served for a short time in Algeria with the Zouaves, and afterwards joined the infantry, being gazetted Captain in 1880. In 1883 he was appointed to the War Office Staff, and in 1885 served in Tongking, where he gained the Médaille militaire. He returned to France in 1888, and was promoted to be major. In 1890 he obtained the post of Professor at the Military School, filling the position with much distinction. He rejoined the War Office in 1893, and two years later (1895) succeeded the late Colonel Sandherr as head of the Intelligence Department. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in 1896, having previously, from 1890 to 1895, served on General de Gallifet's staff. At the beginning of May 1896 the fragments of a telegram-card ("petit bleu") fell into his hands, as head of the military police, which proved that Commandant Esterhazy was on suspicious terms of intimacy with the writer. This led Colonel Picquart to inquire into Esterhazy's life, and his suspicions deepened, and he was forced to the conclusion that the famous bordereau or memorandum had been in reality written by Esterhazy, and not by Dreyfus. At first these discoveries were favoured by his chiefs, Generals de Boisdeffre and Gonse, but when they saw that a revision of the Dreyfus court-martial would expose the illegal manner in which the condemnation of the prisoner had been secured, he was relieved of his duties as head of the Intelligence Department of the War Office, and sent on a mission all over France on Nov. 16, 1896; and in January 1897 he was sent to Tunis. He was sent without an escort to a dangerous part of the Tripolitan frontier, where the Marquis de Morès had been killed by the natives some time previously. In May 1897 the War Office officials decided to accuse him of having forged the "petit bleu." At that time he was attached to an Algerian cavalry regiment as colonel, and in June he came to Paris and consulted Maître Leblois, an old friend of his family, as to the accusations of the War Office. The lawyer told Picquart's tale to M. Scheurer-Kestner, Vice-President of the Senate, who commenced the agitation for a revision of the Dreyfus trial, which is still dividing France into two opposite camps. In November 1897 he was recalled suddenly from Algeria, and was examined by General de Pellieux, who endeavoured to prove that the Colonel had forged the "petit bleu" incriminating Esterhazy. He was questioned in camera at the Esterhazy bogus court-martial in January 1898, when the Count was acquitted of high treason, and on the day of his acquittal Colonel Picquart was arrested by the military authorities, on the frivolous charge of having communicated to Maître Leblois, his counsel, documents concerning the national defence. The Minister of War did not fix his

Vaughan accepting the Mastership of the Temple in 1869, he was presented to the important Vicarage of Doncaster, by the late Archbishop of York, who, when in town, had been one of his congregation. The charactor of his labours, as Vicar and Rural Dean of Doncaster, was so apparent, that, when the still more important Vicarage of Halifax became vacant by the death of Archdeacon Musgrave in 1875, he was selected by the Crown to fill the post. The income of the Vicarage of Halifax is £2000 a year, and there are no fewer than thirty-two livings in the gift of the Vicar, whose position is thus semi-episcopal. He is also the Rural Dean of Halifax. During the last four years of his ministry there, the Vicar's rate question was settled, £13,000 having been raised by the churchmen of the parish to redeem it, thus securing to the Church what was at one time seriously threatened. When this was accomplished Dr. Pigou next set to work to get the parish church restored. He found it in a dilapidated condition, and, seconded by Sir Henry Edwards, Bart., he raised £20,000; so that now the Halifax parish church is one of the finest in the kingdom. In 1888 Dr. Pigou was appointed to the Deanery of Chichester, where he remained till 1891, when he became Dean of Bristol. At Bristol he has recently been intent on the restoration of the Cathedral, after plans by the late Mr. Pearse, and at a cost of about £15,000. In the year 1871 Dr. Pigou was appointed Honorary Chaplain to the Queen; and in 1874 Chaplain-in-Ordinary. In 1878 his University conferred on him the two degrees of B.D. and D.D., a rare distinction. He has published a small volume of "Addresses at Holy Communion," "A Manual of Confirmation," "Faith and Practice" (a volume of sermons), "Two Sermons Preached before the Queen, on Unostentatious Piety and Private Prayer," and various addresses. Address: The Deanery, Bristol.

PILLSBURY, H. N., American chess-player, was born at Somerville, near Boston, Mass., in December 1872. His first knowledge of the game with which his name has become associated was obtained in 1891 in Boston, and such was the rapidity with which he mastered its intricacies that within two years from his first move he was rated a first-class player at the Boston Chess Club, where he constantly attended. In the winter of 1892-93 he met Mr. Nalbrodt, and won from him in brilliant style. His first attempt at tournament play was at the Columbian Chess Congress held in New York in 1893, and although he was not among the prize-winners he established a reputation for rare originality. In the meantime he had removed to Brooklyn, N.Y., which has since been his home. In 1895 he won first place in the tournament at Hastings (England), where he met all the great chess-masters of the world. In the tourney at Vienna, in 1898, he tied the score with Tarrasch, but in the deciding game he lost, and so took second place.

PINERO, Arthur Wing, born in London on May 24, 1855, is the son of John Daniel Pinero, a solicitor, and was educated with the view of following his father's profession. Having no particular liking for the law, however, he ultimately prepared for the stage, and made his début at Edinburgh in June 1874. The following year he joined the Lyceum company, and played Claudius to Mr. Irving during his first "Hamlet" tour at all the principal theatres in the United Kingdom. Subsequently Mr. Pinero played Lord Stanley in the Lyceum revival of "Richard III.," the Marquis of Huntly in "Charles I.," and Alderman Jorgens in "Vanderdecken." He is the author of several very successful plays, among which are "£200 a Year," 1877; "The Money-Spinner," 1880; and "The Squire," 1881; "Lords and Commons" and "The Rocket," 1883; "Low Water," 1884; "The Magistrate," 1885; "The Schoolmistress," "The Hobby-Horse," 1886; "Sweet Lavender," 1888; "The Profligate," 1889; "In Chancery," "Lady Bountiful," "The Times," and "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." The last play, which in the opinion of many is his best, was produced at the St. James's in May 1893. "The Notorious Mrs. Ebb-smith" came next, being produced at the Garrick on March 13, 1895. This was followed by "The Benefit of the Doubt," at the Comedy, in October 1895, and "The Princess and the Butterfly," at the St. James's, in March 1897. His latest play, "Trelawny of the 'Wells,'" was acted for the first time at the Court on Jan. 20, 1898. Address: 63 Hamilton Terrace, N.W.

PINTO, Alexandre Alberto da Rocha Serpa, was born April 30, 1846, at the Tendões in the province of Douro, Portugal, and educated at the Royal Military College, Lisbon. He entered the 7th Infantry Regiment, Aug. 13, 1863; became Ensign, July 14, 1864; Lieutenant in the 12th Rifles, Nov. 20, 1868; Captain, Oct. 10, 1874; Major, April 17, 1877; and Aide-de-Camp of the King of Portugal, March 10, 1880. In 1869 he was in the Zambesi war, and in the battle of Nov. 23 at Massangano he succeeded in saving the regiment of India. He was then in command of the African native troops.

During 1877-79 he crossed Benguela to Durban, and he has admirably described the journey in a work entitled "How I Crossed" (1881). These geographical labours won for him the Gold Medal of the Geographical Society of Paris, Antwerp, Rome, &c. He was also elected a Fellow of the most important geographical associations in the world, and of many other associations. Major Serpa was Knight Commander of the Order of James of Portugal, a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and of the Order of Belgium, and has received many foreign Orders.

PIRBRIGHT, Lord, The Hon. Baron Henry de Winton, for East Toxteth Division, was born in 1820, F.R.S., J.P. for Surrey, and J.P. for Middlesex County of London. He was Minister, Commissioner for the Poor Law Fund, third son of the late Lord Winton, Hereditary Baron of the Empire, of Park Crescent, W. His mother, Lady Winton, daughter of Samuel Moser, was born in London, Oct. 20, 1800, educated in Paris and at King's College, London, of which he is a Fellow. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June 1863, and practised as a barrister about three years. In 1860 he was Member for Greenwich, and at that time he took an active part in the House, especially those foreign affairs. He directed the then imperfect administration of the Royal Patriotic Fund, and his recommendations which were embodied in an Act of Parliament, 1863, Gladstone, in acknowledging his services thus rendered, made him a Royal Commissioner of the Fund. At the general election of 1868, consequent upon alterations in the Redistribution Bill, he was elected for Greenwich, and successful in his second year. In 1870 he was returned unopposed in the East Toxteth, for which constituency he was again elected in 1882. Lord Salisbury's Government appointed him the office of Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. He was Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in January 1888 (to 1892); the International Conference of Bounties in 1887-88; and a member of the Treaty of Commerce in 1889, in which capacity he advocated the abolition of the Bounties. In 1889 he became a Member of the Privy Council, and in the same year a Fellow of the Royal Society, and author of "The Earth and its

gustus Henry Lane-Fox, F.R.S., J.P., D.C.L., F.S.A., was born in 1820, and is the sole surviving son of W. A. Lane-Fox, of Hope Hall, and a daughter of the 18th Earl of Morton. He was educated at the R.M.A., Sandhurst, and became an officer in the Grenadier Guards, and was afterwards on the staff. He served in the Crimea, and was at Alma and Sebastopol, being mentioned in despatches, London Gazette of Oct. 10, 1854, and obtaining a medal with two clasps, the Turkish medal, and brevet of major. Since 1893 he has been Colonel of the South Lancashire Regiment. He is Vice-President of the Society of Antiquaries, and President of the Anthropological Institute, and it is as an anthropologist that he will be remembered by posterity. The magnificent Pitt-Rivers collection, illustrative of savage life and embryo civilisation, has been presented to the New Museum at Oxford, and is to it very much what the original Hunterian collections are to the Museum of the Roy.
Coll. of Surgeons, Eng. The manner of its formation was described by Lieut.- General Pitt-Rivers, then Col. Lane-Fox, as long ago as 1874-75, at a time when it was being exhibited in the Bethnal Green Museum. Since the year 1852 he had been in the habit of selecting from among the commoner class of objects relating to savage life which reached England, those which appeared to show connection of form. Connection of form is therefore the guiding principle of the collection, which serves to illustrate the development of specific ideas and their transmission from one people to another. In 1880 the subject of our memoir inherited the Rivers estates, in accordance with the will of his great-uncle, the second Lord Rivers. The will was excessively binding, and provided inter alia that he should assume the name and arms of Pitt-Rivers within a year of his inheriting the property. The Rivers estates are, indeed, unique, having been forest-land, swarmed over by an immense herd of fallow-deer, until the present century. They lie in that part of Wiltshire, near Dorsetshire, where the Romano-British bordered for some time on the territories of the conquering West Saxons, and having been protected by the deer
from the inroads of cultivation for many centuries, afford a field of operations for the excavator hardly to be equalled in any other part of Western Europe. Lieut.-General Pitt-Rivers has conducted extensive excavations in the burrows, &c., on his estates round Rushmore, and has published the results in four sumptuously printed and illustrated volumes, of which the last appeared in December 1898. They are cited by the general title of "Rushmore Excavations." He has published much in the British Association Reports, and in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, on the affinities of weapons, on excavations, &c. He married, in 1853, Alice, daughter of the 2nd Lord Stanley of Alderley, and in 1880 assumed the name of Pitt-Rivers, under the will of his great-uncle, the 2nd Baron Rivers. Addresses: 4 Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.; Rushmore, Salisbury; and Athenæum.

PLANÇON, Pol, basso singer of grand opera, was born in the Ardennes in 1855. His parents were fond of music, but only as a recreation, and it was decided that he should follow a commercial career, and he was sent to Paris in 1871. He chanced to meet Theodore Ritter, who induced him to devote his time to music, and introduced him to the famous tenor Dupré, under whose guidance he worked for two years. He started his musical career at Lyons, in the rôle of Count St. Bris in "The Huguenots." There he remained for two years, when he returned to Paris, and sang for Samoureux. In 1883 he was engaged at a grand opera to sing Mephistopheles, in which he scored an immediate success, and he has been constantly heard in that part since. In 1893 he went to America, and on returning was engaged by Sir Augustus Harris to sing at Covent Garden, where he has been a regular performer ever since. His chief parts are: Francis I. in Saint-Saëns' "Ascanio," Don Gormaz in Massenet's "Cid," Pittacus in Gounod's "Sappho," the Landgrave in "Tannhäuser," Pogner in "Die Meistersinger," Brother Lawrence in "Romeo and Juliet," Jupiter in "Philemon and Baucis," and the General in "La Navarraise." Paris address: 16 Rue de Marignan.

PLANQUETTE, Robert, a musician, was born in Paris, July 21, 1850, and educated at the Conservatoire there, where he was a pupil of Duprato. He is the composer of the popular operetta "Les Cloches de Corneville," which was played at the Folies Dramatiques in 1877, and had immense success in France and in England. In 1882 he produced "Rip Van Winkle"; in 1887, "The Old Guard"; and in 1889, "Paul Jones." One of his last productions in France was "Le Talisman," which was produced at the Gaité in January

Crasenose College, Oxford, where he obtained B.A. in 1865. After serving as Secretary to Sir John Peter Grant, Governor of Jamaica from 1866 to 1870, he was called to the Bar at the Temple in January 1870, and went to the Oxford Circuit. He was appointed Recorder of Wenlock in 1878; Revising Officer for Oxfordshire in 1883; and a Metropolitan Police Magistrate in June 1883. In 1883 he married Evelyn, youngest daughter of General Sir Charles Foster. Address: Marylebone Police Station, 31 Brunswick Square, London.

PLOWDEN, Trevor John Chichele, Resident at Haiderabad, was born in 1865 and entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1888. He has held offices as Secretary of Bengal, Inspector of Police, and in 1877 was Secretary to the Prisons Conference. In 1879 he was Political Agent in Turkish Arabia, Consul-General at Baghdad in 1880. He became Commissioner of Ajmir in 1885, and was promoted to his present post in 1887. Address: The Residency, Haiderabad.

PLUMMER, William E., Hon. M.A., youngest son of John Plummer, born at Deptford, in Kent, March 26, 1845, and was privately educated there. He early developed a taste for astronomy, and entered the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and there acquired a certain knowledge for the practical details of that science. In 1870 he became attached to the Bishop's observatory at Twickenham, under the direction of Mr. Hind, the superintendent of the "Nautical Almanac" office. That observatory was engaged in the formation of charts of the stars situated near the Ecliptic, to facilitate the discovery of minor planets. In 1871 twenty-three Mr. Plummer took part in, as well as in the observation of the comet, and the subsequent determination of its orbit. The establishment of the Oxford University Observatory in 1874 led to Plummer's appointment as senior assistant to that institution, in which capacity he has taken a considerable part in the photometric and extra-meridian observations carried on in that observatory. Later, when the Oxford Observatory took part in the formation of an astro-photographic chart of the heavens, Mr. Plummer gave much attention to the preliminary arrangements, but little part in the actual observations, owing to his withdrawal from Oxford. In 1883 he was appointed Astronomer to the Key Docks and Harbour Board, and Director of the Liverpool Observatory. Here he has introduced a method for the systematic observation of earth tremors, carried out under the auspices of the British Association. He has also been appointed Examiner in Astronomy to the University of Edinburgh. Mr. Plummer in 1879 entered the Royal Astronomical Society; in 1888 was elected to a seat on the Council, and in the following year received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Oxford. He is a frequent contributor to periodical scientific literature, and has written on "The Motion of the Solar System in Space," "The Sidereal System," and on cometary astronomy generally, besides issuing Annual Reports from his Observatory. Address: Liverpool Observatory, Bidston, Birkenhead.

PLUNKETT, Hon. Sir Francis Richard, G.C.M.G., H.M. Minister at Brussels, was born at Corbalt Hall, Co. Meath, in 1835, and is the youngest son of the 9th Earl of Fingal. He accompanied his parents abroad at a very early age. They first lived at Brussels in 1841, and then at Rome, where they met Pope Gregory XVI. and Cardinal Mezzofanti, who spoke to them in ancient Irish. In 1850 he went to Oscott College, and five years later entered the Foreign Office. He commenced his diplomatic career at Naples, and in 1859 became Second Secretary at St. Petersburg. In 1863 he was transferred to Copenhagen, and later to Vienna. In 1870 he became May, daughter of C. W. Morgan, of Philadelphia, at Florence, and in 1873 he became First Secretary at Yeddo, and three years later at Washington. In 1883 he was promoted to be Minister to Japan; in 1888 to Sweden; and in 1893 to his present post. Address: British Legation, Brussels.

PLUNKETT, The Right Hon. Horace Curzon, M.P., D.L., third son of Edward, 16th Baron Dunsany and Anne, daughter of the 2nd Baron Sherborne, born at Sherborne House, Gloucestershire, on Oct. 24, 1854, was educated at Eton and Oxford, and took a B.A. Degree in 1877, obtaining Second Class Honours in the School of Modern History. In 1879 he became a ranchman in Wyoming and Montana, U.S.A., and still retains a business connection with the Western States of America, where he spends a few weeks of every year looking after his affairs. Since 1889 he has spent most of his time in Ireland, where he has been constantly engaged promoting various schemes for the agricultural and industrial development of the country. In 1891 he was appointed a Commissioner of the newly constituted Congested Districts Board, of which he has since been an active member. Mr. Plunkett was the originator of agricultural co-operation in Ireland. In conjunction with a few friends he first organised several farmers' societies, mostly for the erection of co-operative creameries, in the years 1859 to 1894. In the latter year he founded the Irish Agricultural Organisation Society, of which he has since been president, to take over the work of promoting a movement then becoming too widespread to be controlled by himself and his friends. The programme of this Society, which embraces every branch of farming, and which is the adaptation of analogous movements in other European countries, is rapidly being adopted by the farming classes throughout Ireland. At the General Election of 1892 Mr. Plunkett successfully contested South County Dublin, then represented by Sir Thomas Esmonde. He stood as a Conservative, declaring that his main object in seeking Parliamentary honours was to advocate any measures calculated to advance the economic and social condition of the people, believing as he did that the political question would then be easily solved. He was returned again in 1895 with a greatly increased majority. When the General Election of 1895 had temporarily, at any rate, placed the Home Rule question in a subordinate position, Mr. Plunkett invited representative Irishmen of all parties, more especially those who were most prominent in industrial and commercial undertakings, to form a committee to discuss and report upon the material condition of the country, and measures needed for its improvement. The Recess Committee, thus formed was thoroughly representative of all the industrial and commercial interests of the country, and of all political parties, the main objection to the project and refusal to support it coming from the Nationalist Members of Parliament. The Report of the Recess Committee, which appeared in the summer of 1896, met with general approval, and its main recommendation, the establishment of a Department of Agriculture and Industries for Ireland, was substantially adopted by the Government in 1897, and only postponed to make way for the Local Government policy of 1898. Mr. Plunkett is a Member of the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition, 1900. He is a Justice of the Peace for County Meath, Ireland, and a Deputy-Lieutenant for Radnorshire. Mr. Plunkett was sworn a Privy Councillor (Ireland) in 1897. Address: 104 B. Mount Street, W.

tine, Procurator of the Holy Synod in Russia, was born at Moscow in 1841 entered the Higher Law School in Russia, and in 1846 became a member of the Senate. From 1853 to 1857 he was Professor of Civil Law at Moscow, was tutor to the Czar Alexander II. In 1868 he was created a Senator, in 1872 a member of the Imperial Academy, while in 1881 he was appointed to the present post. After the accession of Alexander III., his influence was increased, and with the late Czar he became the most intimate adviser and Imperial master. Opposed to the reforms, he endeavoured to counteract the influence of Greek Orthodox Russian policy. In 1865 he gave the "Cours de Droit Civil," and in 1870 translated "The Imitation of Christ" by the Latin of Thomas à Kempis. In the autumn of 1898 a volume of essays from his pen was translated into French, and English, and published in England under the title of "Remarks of a Russian Statesman." This excursion at once showed its author to have lost none of his old intolerant fanaticism. The general thesis of his work was that since men want to be governed, autocracy is the only practical form. In the writer's opinion the great mistake of the age has been the practical supersession of the old ideas. Faith in the unseen being the thing which preserves morality and men's minds sound and healthy, the Church should be omnipotent, interfering and advising in every course of life. He declared that "among the principles of political principles is the principle of the sovereignty of the people, that all power issues from the people. Thence proceeds the theory of despotism, which has up to the day deluded much of the so-called intelligence, and unhappily infatuated foolish Russians. . . . Parliament is the triumph of egoism, its big oppression."

L., Madame. See RÉJANE,

AL, Wyndham Spencer, D.L., chairman of the London and North-Eastern Railway Company, was born July 22, 1822. He is the third son of John Portal, Esq., of Free-stead and Laverstoke Park, Hants. His family has for several generations been connected with Hampshire its home, and ranks as one of the best known of its worthies. His grandfather was Henri Portal, a descendant of the French Huguenots who were expelled from France in 1711 at Winchester. Forced to seek refuge in England, he built a mill for the manufacture of paper on the river Test at Basingstoke. So excellent was the production of the mill that the Bank of England granted him the privilege of making their bank-note paper, which has ever since been continued in the family. Mr W. S. Portal was educated at Harrow and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He joined the North Hampshire Yeomanry Cavalry as Cornet in 1842, and was promoted Captain in 1853, retiring from the service in 1865. He succeeded his father in the business of the manufacture of the bank-note paper in 1848. Mr. Portal has always taken a great interest in the poorer classes, especially with a view to their improvement socially and intellectually. His first efforts in that direction were begun in 1843, when he rented land and let it out in allotments to labourers and others. He took up poor law, and was elected Chairman of Whitchurch Union, Hants, in 1847, and some years later was chosen Chairman of the Basingstoke Union. While thus engaged he became much impressed by the evils of public-house benefit clubs. This led him to devote his energies to the development of the Hampshire Friendly Society, of which he is President. Mr. Portal is one of the original founders of the Hampshire Reformatory School, and of the Southern Counties' Adult Education Society. He contested the city of Winchester for a seat in Parliament in the Liberal interest in 1857; also the borough of Portsmouth in 1874. For several years he was one of the Visiting Justices of the Winchester Prison, and became convinced that drink is the principal source of crime. This led him to espouse the temperance cause, and he never loses an opportunity of spreading temperance principles among railway men and labourers. Mr. Portal takes an active interest in international exhibitions, and received a medal "for services rendered" from the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851. He was also much engaged in the subsequent International Exhibitions of Paris of 1855 and 1867, and was appointed a member of the Royal Commission in connection with the Chicago Exhibition of 1893. He has been deputed to act in a similar capacity at the Paris Exhibition of 1900. Mr. Portal was presented with the honorary freedom of Southampton in 1895, and is the owner of Malshanger, a fine country seat at Basingstoke. From 1892 until his retirement recently he was chairman of the London and South-Western Railway Company, and in March 1899 he was presented by the Queen with a framed likeness of herself, accompanied by a letter referring to the many occasions on which he had travelled with the Royal train. He married in 1849 the elder daughter of Colonel W. Hicks-Beach,

M.P. of Oakley Hall, Harlow. Address: Mulshager, Washington.

POUBELLE, Eugène René, French naturalist, was born at Paris, 15, 1831, of an ancient Norman family. He was educated at the College of Louis le Grand, and having passed through the Lycée, became an Assistant-Professor. He afterwards held posts at Lyons and Toulouse. At the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, he enlisted as a volunteer, and gained the military decorations of the Légion d'honneur for his gallantry at the sorties from Lyons. He was appointed Préfet of the Rhône, in April 1871, and went in the same capacity to the fall of M. Thiers in 1873, and again became Professor of Natural Science at Toulouse. However, in 1878 he was appointed Préfet of the Rhône, and in 1879 he was promoted to the Rhône. Four years later he took the most important post of Préfet of the Seine, which he held with success for thirteen years. In a municipal council, more and more becoming a political body, he resisted pretensions which would place them in opposition to the Government. Amidst tumultuous scenes and amidst the preservation of an impassive and patience, that tired out the members and prevented civil dissensions. Thanks to him these struggles resulted in the carrying out of important works. His administration was marked by the construction of sewers, the improvement of the arteries, the building of the Geneva, the Bourse du Commerce, the Sorbonne, and the improvement of public education and out-door recreation. In 1889 he was sent by the President of the Republic to Magdeburg, to be present at the exhumation of the remains of Frederick the Great, and to bring them back. POWELL, Major John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., American geologist, was born at Mount Morris, New York, March 24, 1834. His early life was passed at various places in Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and he studied at Illinois College and at Wheaton College, finally taking a special course at Oberlin, Ohio, teaching in the public schools at intervals in the meanwhile. At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Union army as a private, and by its close had gained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, having lost his right arm during its progress. He had, prior to the war, attained prominence as a scientist, and in 1865 was made Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in the Illinois Wesleyan University, but he soon resigned this position to accept a similar one in the Illinois University. In 1868 he organized and conducted an expedition to explore the Colorado, which was the first that Congress established, in the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Colorado River of the West, and in his charge. The results of the exploration made by him of the features of this region (over 100,000 square miles), and of the monument instituted by the United States in the Rocky Mountains, proved so important, that in 1879, consolidated them into a permanent and independent organ of the United States Geological Survey, which Major Powell, in 1882, Clarence King as the Director. At that time Major Powell had devoted considerable attention to ethnology, and through the Smithsonian Institution, vols. of "Contributions to North American Ethnology." To ensure the completion of this work a special Bureau of Ethnology was established by Congress and placed at its head, a position he held, in addition to the directorship of the Survey, until 1894, when he was obliged to resign them both on account of ill health. Major Powell received the Ph.D. from the University of Berlin in 1886, and in the same year LL.D. from Harvard. In 1880 he was a Member of the National Academy of Sciences, and from 1879 to 1887 President of the Anthropological Association. He became a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1875, its Vice-President in 1879, and President in 1887. To these he is a member of a number of other learned and scientific societies. His publications embrace many papers and addresses and Government volumes, including various surveys of the Bureau of Ethnology and of the U.S. Geological Survey. The special volumes which bear his name are: "Explorations of the Colorado River of the West and its Tributaries," 1875; "Report on the Geology of the Eastern Portion of the United States," 1876; "Report on the Lands of the Region of the United States," 1880; "Introduction to the Study of Languages," 1880. Alfred, was born at Liver-. He studied art firstly at a ool in connection with the Art Department of South where he obtained a National award for drawing from the antique, and other prizes, and afterwards principally at Heatherley's Art School in Newman Street, and at different periods also at Antwerp and Paris. He exhibited first, about 1885, at the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, subsequently at the Royal Academy, Royal Society of British Artists, the Dudley and New Galleries, and at Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, &c. He is occupied chiefly with portraiture, but has also exhibited several subject pictures both in oil and water-colours, notably: "Father, I have Sinned," 1893, and "The Heiress," exhibited in 1895 at the Walker Art Gallery, Liver- pool; "A Favourite of the Sultan," Royal Academy, 1894; "Sorrow and Sin," Royal Institute of Painters in Oil, 1894; a por- trait of "M^{de}. Sarah Grand" shown at the Society of Portrait-Painters' Exhibi- tion at the Grafton Gallery in 1896, and another of J. Lumsden Propert, Esq., the well-known authority and writer on minia- ture art, at the same Society's exhibition in 1897. He painted during 1898 a life- size presentation portrait of Li Hung Chang, a commission from a merchant in China as a gift to the venerable statesman. Turning his attention latterly to the some- what neglected art of miniature painting, he founded in 1895 the Society of Minia- turists, of which he has been the Vice- President, Lord Ronald Gower being the first President, and in 1899 became Pre- sident. The Society grew rapidly, and held an important and highly successful inaugural exhibition at the Grafton Gallery in the autumn of 1896, which was com- posed not only of the works of members, but included what was perhaps the most important and representative collection of the works of the old masters in miniature art ever before brought together. This exhibition has since been followed by others of equal interest at the same Gallery. Amongst miniatures by Mr. Praga that have been shown both at the Society's exhibitions and at the Royal Academy were portraits of the late Lady Glenesk, Princess Henry of Pless, the Earl and Countess of Egmont, Sir Henry Irving, the late General Alec Fraser, C.B., and the infant son of the Hon. E. Johnstone. A miniature also of Dr. Lumsden Propert, in Georgian court dress, was shown at a recent exhibition at the New Gallery, and this was referred to in the course of a review in Literature as being "fine enough to have belonged to an earlier age." Mr. Praga contributed an article entitled "The Renaissance of Miniature Painting" to the Magazine of Art for December 1896, which was illustrated by a miniature of the author's, entitled "Isabel." This was sub- sequently exhibited at the Royal Academy.

The article dealt chiefly with the revival and the technique of miniature art, and illustrated three different stages of a miniature painted from life. Mr. Praga is married to a lady well known in journalistic circles as a member of the Daily Telegraph staff. Address: The Grey House, Kensington.

PREECE, Sir William Henry, K.C.B., F.R.S., V.P.I.C.E., &c., Consulting Engineer to the General Post Office, was born in Carnarvon on Feb. 15, 1834, and is the eldest son of R. M. Preece, Bryn Helen, Carnarvon. He was educated at King's College, London, passing through the School and College. He first entered the engineering office of Mr. Edwin Clark in 1852, passing the next year into the Electric and International Telegraph Company, and became, three years later, superintendent of their southern district. In 1858 he was appointed engineer to the Channel Islands Telegraph Company, and in 1860 superintendent of telegraphs to the London and South-Western Company. On the transfer of the telegraphs to the State, he became a Divisional Engineer, in 1877 was promoted to the post of Chief Electrician, and in 1892 to that of Engineer in Chief, which he held until his retirement, on his sixty-fifth birthday, in Feb. 1899. His researches for the advancement of electricity, his practical inventions, and his reputation as a speaker and lecturer have made his name familiar to many outside the scientific world. He is a prominent member of many of the learned societies, including the Royal Society, the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Electrical Engineers (of which he is a past President), the Physical Society, the Royal Institution, the British Association, and the Society of Arts. He is Consulting Engineer to the Colonies. He was made Officier de la Légion d'Honneur in 1889, and in 1894 was created a Companion of the Order of the Bath, and a K.C.B. at the Birthday, 1899. Sir William Preece has patented many inventions, though of late years his work is lost in that of his department at the General Post Office. These include a new method of duplex telegraphy, 1853; a new mode of "terminating" wires, 1858; working miniature signals by electricity to assimilate electric signals with railway signals on railways, 1862; the application of electricity to domestic telegraph purposes, 1864; the application of electricity for signalling between different parts of a train in motion, 1867; working signals on railways by means of electricity, 1868; a new telephone, 1878, &c. He introduced both the telephone and the photograph into England. Sir William has written, in conjunction with Mr. Sivewright, a "Telegraph," which is in use with Dr. Julius Maier, "The Telegraph" and with Mr. Stubbs, a "Microphony." He has edited several books, read, at various scientific meetings, numerous papers on telegraphy, conductors, the telephone, the electric lighting, and various other subjects, too numerous to mention. Rector of Kirkby Wiske, Yorks., was born Sept. 10, 1841, at Spennithorne in Wensleydale. He was educated at Marlborough, and afterwards became Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, and B.A. (2nd class Classical Tripos) 1865. He was Assistant-Master to Dr. Bradley at Marlborough, 1865 to 1867; served as Curate of St. Giles in the Fields, 1868; and during his tenure of the Rectory of Kirkby Wiske, 1868 to 1888, was chaplain successively to Bishops Bickersteth and Carpenter. In 1888 he was appointed Suffragan to the Bishop of Ripon, and Rector of Stanhope in Weardale. The title of Bishop of Penrith, which he received at his consecration, was afterwards changed by Royal Warrant to Bishop of Richmond under the Bishops-Suffragan Nomination Act, 1889. He married (1), in 1869, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of T. C. Hinks, of Breakenbrough, Yorks.; and (2) Louisa, daughter of Canon Worsley of Ripon. Address: Stanhope Rectory, R.S.O., Durham.

PURDIE, Thomas, B.Sc. Lond., Ph.D. Würzburg, LL.D. Aberdeen, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry at the United College, University of St. Andrews, was born at Biggar, Lanarkshire, on Jan. 27, 1843, and received his education at the Grammar School, Lanark, at Edinburgh Academy, and at the Royal School of Mines, London, afterwards studying at the Universities of St. Andrews and Würzburg. He is an Associate of the Royal School of Mines, and in 1875 was appointed its Demonstrator in Chemistry. In 1881 he was appointed Science Master at the High School, Newcastle, Staffs., and in 1884 to his present post. He is author of a series of papers on researches in Organic Chemistry, published in the Journal of the Chemical Society between 1881 and 1898. Address: 14 South Street, St. Andrews.

PUREY-CUST, The Very Rev. Arthur Percival, D.D., F.S.A., J.P., Dean of York, is the only surviving son of the late Hon. William Cust, by Sophia, daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Newnham, of Southborough, Kent, and grandson of the first Lord Brownlow. He was born in February 1828, and was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree in Easter Term, 1850, and was afterwards Fellow of All Souls, where he graduated M.A. in 1854. He was ordained Deacon by the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Wilberforce) in 1851, and was admitted into Priest's orders by the Bishop of Rochester (Dr. Murray) in the following year. He was successively Curate of Northchurch, Hertfordshire, and Rector of Cheddington, Buckinghamshire, from 1853 to 1862, when he was appointed Vicar of and Gloucester Cathedrals, acted as assistant organist and boys. At Gloucester he was very organist of Christ Church, St. Mary-le-Crypt, and St. Stephenham. In addition to this was Master of the Festival conductor to the Oratorio, serving his apprenticeship, as organist of Aylesbury Parish, on the suggestion of Sir F. Gore, organising conductor to the Diocesan Choral Association. In 1874 he was appointed Chichester Cathedral, and in 1877, performs on a magnificent instrument by Cavaillé-Coll, which he calls its "absolute refinement" of tone." During the year he gives organ recitals in Man- chester Hall. He was appointed the Organ, and member of the Professors in the Royal Man- chester College of Music, when it was founded in 1893. He is the author of "The Organ, piano, and vocal music." Pyne is an Hon. Fellow of the Royal Society of Organists, Hon. See CAMPBELL, LADY COLIN.

RAY DE BEAUREPAIRE, French magistrate, was born at Paris, July 2, 1838, and entered the legal profession in 1862. In 1862 he was created a Baronet in 1867. He was a volunteer in the war, and on the defence of Paris, and, on the return of peace, became editor of la Sarthe. In 1877 he entered Parliament, but was expelled in 1885. He re-entered the law. In 1879 he became substitute at the Tribunal of the Seine, Procureur-Général at Rennes in 1881, and Avocat-Général at Paris in 1883. In this last-named post he had to prosecute Louise Michel for urging the people to loot the bakehouses. M. de Beaurepaire first came prominently into public notice during the Boulangist agitation of 1889. In that year M. Bouchez, the Procureur-Général, refused to prosecute the General, and resigned his post. M. de Beaurepaire was nominated to it on the 1st of April in that year, and undertook the prosecution of the General and of M. Rochefort before the Senate in August, when they were condemned to imprisonment for life. He became the object of the most outrageous attacks from the Boulangist press, such as La Cocarde and L'Intransigeant, against which he brought suits for damages, which were dismissed on appeal. In 1890 he prosecuted Eyraud and Gabrielle Bompard for the murder of Gouffé, and in 1892 the anarchist Ravachol. In December of that year he was promoted to the Presidency of the Cour de Cassation, which he resigned in January 1899 somewhat melodramatically, giving as his reasons the partiality of the judges of the Court in their investigation of the Dreyfus imbroglio. His "Revelations" in the Echo de Paris fell somewhat flat. M. de Beaurepaire is also known as an author of moral novels, which he has written under the pseudonym of Jules de Glouvet. Of these the chief are: "Le Forestier," 1880; "Le Berger," 1882; "L'Idéal," 1883; "La Famille Bourgeoise," 1883; "Le Père," 1886; "Marie Fougère," 1889; and extracts from his uncle's papers, which he called "Histoire du Vieux Temps," 1865; 3rd edit., 1888. He was created a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1890, and his Paris address is 4 Place Possolz.

QUILTER, Sir W. Cuthbert, Bart., M.P., is the eldest son of the late W. Quilter, of Norfolk Street, Park Lane, W., and was born in 1841. He was educated privately. He is head of the firm of Quilter, Balfour & Co., and Director and one of the founders of the National Telephone Company. Alderman of the West Suffolk County Council, a leading East Anglian agriculturist, D.L. and J.P. for his county, &c. He was created a Baronet in 1897, and has sat in the House of Commons for the Sudbury Division since 1885. He married Mary, daughter of the late John Wheeley Revington, in 1867. Addresses: 74 South Audley Street, W., and Bawdsey Manor, Suffolk.

ander-Oder, Prussia, on Nov. 19, 1834, and studied in Berlin, Königsberg, and Heidelberg; obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Berlin in 1858, and has since been Professor of Physics in Berlin, Würzburg, and Heidelberg. He has published numerous papers on electricity, capillarity and molecular forces, acoustics, and optics, in Poggendorff's Annalen, Pflüger's Archiv, &c. Professor Quincke is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and of Edinburgh.

RADNOR, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Pleydell-Bouverie, Bart., D.L., J.P., was born on June 19, 1841, and is the son of the 4th Earl, whom he succeeded in 1889, and Mary, daughter of the 1st Earl of Verulam. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He represented South Wilts in the House of Commons from 1874 to 1885, and the Enfield Division from 1885 to 1889. He was Treasurer of the Household in 1885-86 and 1886-89, and is Prov. Grand Master of Mark Masons for Wiltshire. He married, in 1866, Helen, daughter of the late Rev. Henry Chaplin, son of the Right Hon. Henry Chaplin. Addresses: 12 Upper Brook Street, W.; and Longford Castle, Salisbury, &c.

RAGONA, Professor Domenico, Director of the Royal Observatory in Modena, was born in Palermo on Jan. 20, 1820, and studied in that Royal University. He derived very great advantage from the private instruction of his maternal uncle Domenico Scina, a celebrated Sicilian scientist. Whilst still very young, after the death of Scina, he competed for and obtained the post of demonstrator and Assistant-Professor of Physics at the University of Palermo. Afterwards he was appointed assistant at the Royal Observatory of Palermo. In 1851, after having carried out long and arduous astronomical and geodesical observations with regard to the triangulation of the province of Palermo, he was sent, at the expense of the government, to Germany for some years, in order to perfect himself in the science of astronomy. He had excellent theoretical and practical instruction in Berlin from Professor Encke, and in Bonn from Argelander. In Berlin he had the honour of enjoying the friendship of Baron A. von Humboldt, through whose powerful influence Ragona obtained a Merz's refractor of great dimensions, and one of Pistor and Martin's meridian-circles, instruments which now adorn the Obser-

LLA, Cardinal Mariano, el Tindaro, Papal Foreign f State, was born at Polizzi, in 17, 1843, and was educated at y at the College Campranica, e Jesuit Roman College, and e Ecclesiastical Academy. In tered the Papal service, and he served his apprenticeship In that year he was appointed of the Papal Embassy at hen he returned to Rome he became Secretary of the Congregation of the Propaganda, being especially charged with the affairs of the Greek Church. From 1880 to 1882 he was Secretary of Ecclesiastical Affairs, and in the latter year became Papal Nuncio at Madrid. When the dispute as to the Caroline Islands, between Spain and Germany, broke out in 1885, Monsignor Rampolla suggested the choice of the Pope as arbitrator. He was created a Cardinal Priest in 1887, and in May of the same year became Under-Secretary of State. In this post it has been his duty to conduct the delicate negotiations between the Quirinal and the Vatican, especially with regard to the Penal Laws directed against the clergy by the Crispi Cabinet. He is now the chief adviser of the venerable Pontiff, and as the introducer of foreigners, has earned a very favourable fame. Among the Papabili, or probable successors to the present Pope, he is regarded as the most eligible candidate, his supporters being the prelates of the Latin races as opposed to the Austrian and German dignitaries, who do not favour him owing to his opposition to the Triple Alliance.

RAMSAY, Professor William, LL.D., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S., was born at Glasgow, Oct. 2, 1852; his father, of the same name, was a civil engineer, and subsequently Secretary to the Scottish Union and National Insurance Office; he was brother to Sir Andrew Ramsay, the geologist; his mother, Catherine Robertson, was the daughter of Archibald Robertson, M.D., who practised in Edinburgh. William Ramsay was educated at the Glasgow Academy up till his fifteenth year, and subsequently at Glasgow University. At the age of nineteen he went to Tübingen to study chemistry under Professor Fittig, now at Strasburg, and graduated Ph.D. in 1872. From 1872 to 1874 he acted as Chief Assistant to the "Young" Chair of Technical Chemistry in Anderson's College, Glasgow; and from 1874 to 1880 as "Tutorial" Assistant to the Chemical Professor in Glasgow University. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, in 1880; Principal of that College in 1881; was President of the Bristol Naturalists' Society from 1884 to 1887; was appointed to the Chemical Chair at University College, London, in 1887, which appointment he now holds. He was elected a Fellow of the German Chemical Society in 1872; of the Chemical Society of London in 1874; and is one of the original members of the Institute of Chemistry, and of the Society of Chemical Industry. He was elected a Fellow of the Physical Society in 1886, and of the Royal Society of Glasgow in 1881, and has served in the majority of all these societies. He is an Hon. D.D. of Glasgow and Hon. Sc. D. of Dublin. He is a member of the Legion of Honour, and Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, 1887, and Honorary Member of the Academies of Berlin, Madrid, Bologna, Turin, Stockholm, and Geneva, and of the Royal Irish Academy. He is the author of many papers in the Philosophical Magazine, the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and in many foreign journals; these papers treat of organic chemistry, inorganic acids, phosphorus and its derivatives, physical chemistry, molecular volumes, thermal behaviour of gases and liquids, surface energy of liquids. In 1894, in conjunction with Lord Rayleigh, Professor Ramsay announced the discovery of a new element in the atmosphere, which they named Argon. This discovery was followed up in 1895 by the discovery of Helium, an elementary gas emitting a brilliant spectrum, under the influence of the electric discharges. One of the characteristic lines of this spectrum was first observed during the eclipse of 1868, in the solar chromosphere by Janssen, and attributed to the presence of an unknown element in the sun. Professor Ramsay found that certain rare minerals contain this gas in a state of combination, and was successful in isolating it. For their researches on Argon Lord Rayleigh and Prof. Ramsay were awarded the Hodgkins Prize, the Lecompte Prize, and the Barnard Medal; and for his work on Helium Prof. Ramsay was awarded the Davy Medal, the Longstaff Medal, and the Le Blanc Medal. In June 1898 Prof. Ramsay announced, through Prof. Berthelot, at the Academy of Sciences of Paris, that he had discovered a new gas which he proposed to call "Crypton." The presence of Crypton was first detected by the existence in the spectrum of a green line. It belongs, not to the Crypton, but to the Helium family, and its density is somewhat more than that of oxygen. To all appearances it is a simple monatomic body. Prof. Ramsay is also the author of several text-books of chemistry, the most important of which are his "System of Inorganic Chemistry," and his "Gases of the Atmosphere." Address: University College, Gower Street, W.C.

RAMSAY, William Mitchell, D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. St. Andrews, born at Glasgow on March 15, 1851, was the son of Thomas Ramsay, of Alloa, and Jane Mitchell, and was educated at the Gymnasium, Old Aberdeen, and at the Universities of Aberdeen, Göttingen, and Oxford. He

He also cial thanks of the Supreme India, with a substantial services he rendered to the e Indian Mutiny. When ed the Foreign Office in sul Cameron and other men had been imprisoned by Theodore, King of

Abyssinia, Mr. Rassam was chosen by the Home Government to proceed to the court of that monarch with a letter from the Queen asking for the release of the captives. He accordingly went to Massowah, the port of Abyssinia, whence he wrote to Theodore for a safe-conduct; and after having waited there more than a year, he was invited by the king to proceed to his court. Mr. Rassam was accompanied by Lieutenant Prideaux and Dr. Blanc, of the Bombay army, and they were received with every mark of distinction and honour. It seemed at one time that Mr. Rassam's mission would be crowned with success, but through Theodore's eccentricity, coupled with intrigue from other quarters, it was doomed to disappointment. Hopeful as Mr. Rassam was at first of procuring the liberation of Consul Cameron and the other captives, he was himself arrested with his suite, and the three were sent as prisoners with the old captives to Magdala, where they were kept in chains for nearly two years. After the old captives, Consul Cameron and his fellow-prisoners, had undergone about four years' rigorous confinement, and Mr. Rassam and his companions had shared their fate for nearly two years and a half, they were ultimately set free by Theodore on the Easter Eve of 1868, after his defeat the day before by the British force under the command of Sir Robert Napier, at Arogay, below Magdala. Mr. Rassam published a narrative of the "British Mission to Theodore, King of Abyssinia, with Notices of the Country traversed from Massowah through the Soudan, the Amhara, and back to Annesly Bay from Magdala," 2 vols., London, 1869. In 1876 he was selected by the Trustees of the British Museum to conduct the Assyrian Explorations under a favourable firman granted to him by the Ottoman Government, through the influence of Sir Henry Layard, who was then acting as her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople. From that time until July 1882, he conducted the British National Archaeological researches in Assyria, Armenia, and Babylonia; during which time he succeeded in securing for the British Museum important relics connected with the history of those three great ancient kingdoms, amongst which he discovered, in a small mound called "Balawat," in the vicinity of Nineveh, a magnificent bronze gate, twenty feet high, forming a memorial of the wars of Shalmenesar III., B.C. 850. The rich embossed bronzes are now in the British Museum. He also discovered, amongst other sites, the great Biblical cities of Sippara, or Sepharvaim, and Cuthah, situated in Southern Mesopotamia. During his different expeditions to Assyria and Babylonia he acquired for the National Institution about ten thousand whole, and more than one hundred thousand pieces of terra-cotta and clay inscribed tablets, with a large number of different-shaped terra-cotta cylinders and marble tablets recording the religious and general history of those two kingdoms. During the Turko-Russian war of 1877 he was sent by the British Foreign Office on a special mission to Asia Minor, Armenia, and Kurdistan, to inquire into the condition of the different Christian communities, who were said to be maltreated by their Moslem fellow-countrymen. Among other works by Mr. Rassam mention should be made of "Asshur and the Land of Nimrod," "The Garden of Eden and Biblical Sages," and "Biblical Lands." Address: 7 Powis Square, Brighton.

David Robert Plunket, Q.C., LL.D., is the fourth son of the third Lord Plunket, and of Charlotte, daughter of the Right Hon. Lord Chief-Justice Bushe, and grandson of the first Lord Plunket, the famous orator and lawyer, who held the Great Seal in Ireland from 1830 to 1834, and for the second time from 1835 to 1841. Lord Rathmore, who was born Dec. 3, 1838, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in Honours in 1859. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1862. Having held for some time the Professorship of Constitutional Law at the King's Inns, Dublin, he obtained the rank of Q.C. in 1868, and in the same year was appointed Law Adviser to the Government in Ireland. Mr. Plunket unsuccessfully contested Dublin City at the General Election in 1868, but was elected M.P. for the University of Dublin in 1870, a seat which he held continuously until November 1895, when he was raised to the Peerage, as Baron Rathmore of Shanganagh, Co. Dublin. Whilst in the House of Commons he filled, under successive Conservative Administrations, the offices of Solicitor-General for Ireland, 1875-77, Paymaster-General, 1880 (when he was made a Privy Councillor), and Her Majesty's First Commissioner of Works, 1885-86, and 1886-92. Throughout the twenty-six years during which, as Mr. David Plunket, he sat in the House of Commons, Lord Rathmore was the foremost champion of the Irish Conservative party. When in office, he was not—apart from his official utterances—a frequent Parliamentary speaker; but when in opposition, both in the House and on the platform, he was by far the most eloquent champion of the Irish minority in their resistance to Radical policy, on the questions of Irish University Reform, Irish Franchise, Land Legislation for Ireland, and Home Rule.

hool, and at Ealing School; City College, Oxford, in 1834; class in Classics in 1838; and a Fellow of Exeter College in 1841. He obtained the Denyer prize for an Essay in 1842, and again in 1843, having held for some years in his College, was appointed in 1852; became Public Examiner in 1854, and again in 1856, 1868, and preached the Bampton Lectures in 1859. He was elected without the Camden Professorship of History in the University in 1861, and took an active part in the agitation which led the passing of the Oxford Act, in favour of the changes proposed. In September 1872 he was Canon of Canterbury by the election, and in 1888 was presented by the Chapter of Canterbury to the stall of All Hallows, Lombard Street, where he has written (in conjunction with Sir Henry Rawlinson, Bart., and Wilkinson) "The History of a new English version, with a new text, 1858-60; and also, independently, 'The Historical Evidences of the Scripture Records, in respect of the delivery of the Oxford Bampton Lectures, at the Bampton Lecture published in 1860; 'The Constancy of the Christian Church with Heathen and Pagan Nations, in Nine Sermons preached at the University of Oxford on various occasions, 1861; 'The Five Great Monarchs of the Ancient Eastern World,' 1867; 'A Manual of Ancient History,' 1869; 'The Sixth Great Oriental Monarchy; or, the Geography, History, and Antiquities of Parthia,' 1873; 'The History of the Oriental Monarchy; or, the History, and Antiquities of the Persian Empire, illustrated from Ancient Sources,' in 1876; a 'History of Egypt,' 2 vols., in 1881; 'The Phoenicians,' in 1889; and works. Professor Rawlinson's essay, the subject being 'The Evidence and Authenticity of the Ptolemaic Aids to Faith,' Thomson, in reply to 'Essays on the Evidence and Authenticity of the Ptolemaic Aids to Faith,' and was a large contributor to 'Dictionary of the History of Ideas in the Middle Ages,' the article on 'Herodotus' in the ninth edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' He supplied the 'Kings, Chronicles, Ezra, Esther, and the two Books of the Prophets,' to 'The Speaker's Commentary on Exodus to the Bishop's Commentary on the Old Testament and those on Exodus, II. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Esther, and Isaiah's Prophecies' of Dean

Spence and Mr. Exell. During recent years he has written in "Men of the Bible" on the lives and times of Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Ezra, and Nehemiah. In 1893 he published "Parthia" in "The Story of the Nations," and in 1898 he published a memoir of his brother, Sir Henry Rawlinson, Bart. He held the office of Classical Examiner under the Council of Military Education from 1859 to 1870. He has been Proctor in Convocation for the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury since 1873. He was elected a member of the Athenæum Club, as the representative of literature, in 1870, and is a Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy at Turin. In 1846 he married Louisa W., second daughter of Sir R. A. Chermiside, M.D., Physician to the British Embassy, Paris. Addresses: All Hallows Church, Lombard Street, E.C.; The Precincts, Canterbury; and Athenæum.

RAWSON, Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Holdsworth, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Channel Squadron, son of Christopher Rawson, Esq., of Petersfield, Surrey, was born on Nov. 5, 1843. He was educated at Marlborough College, and entered the Navy in 1857. He went almost immediately to China in H.M.S. Calcutta, and was present at the capture of the Peiho Forts and of Peking. He acted as aide-de-camp to Captain Dew of H.M.S. Encounter during the whole of the operations with the army in 1860, taking part in all the engagements, and on one occasion was severely wounded. He was twice mentioned in despatches for meritorious services, and for three months had command of 1300 Chinese troops which were mobilised for the defence of Ningpo against the rebels. He received the Chinese medal with two clasps. During 1861, while employed in the Shanghai River, he jumped overboard at night to save the life of a marine, and received the thanks of his captain on the quarter-deck. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1863, and in that rank served in H.M.S. Bellerophon and in the royal yacht. As Commander he had charge of H.M.S. Hercules in the Channel Squadron from 1871 to 1874. In the following year Admiral Rawson was appointed to the flagship of the Mediterranean fleet, and in 1878 issued a report on the capabilities of defence, &c., of the Suez Canal, for which he received the thanks of the Admiralty. It fell to him to hoist the English flag at Nicosia, capital of Cyprus, where he was for one month the military commandant. As Captain he was employed as principal transit officer during the Egyptian war, and received a C.B. and the Osmanieh of the third class. He has also served as a member of the International Code of Signals Committee. He had the honour of being an aide-de-camp to the Queen from August 1890 to January 1891, when he was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral. As Commander-in-Chief he went to the Cape and West Coast of Africa station in 1895, and in August of the same year he landed a naval brigade, assisted by sixty Soudanese and fifty Zanzibar Ashari troops, and attacked and captured M'wele, the stronghold of a rebellious Arab chief. In 1896 he bombarded the palace of the Sultan of Zanzibar which had been seized by a pretender. The Sultan conferred upon him the Brilliant Star of Zanzibar of the first class. In February 1897 Admiral Rawson organised and commanded a punitive naval expedition, and with seamen and marines landed from his squadron, men sent from England, together with a force of H. M. S. s, he proceeded to the capture of Beira City, to avenge the massacre of a political expedition which had been sent thither. The operations were perfectly successful, and he received the well-merited personal recognition of the Queen and the approval of the Admiralty. He was promoted to a K.C.B. in May 1897. In May 1898 he entertained the King and Queen of Italy on board his flagship H. M. S. Majestic, when the Channel Squadron was visiting Sardinia in the Mediterranean. Admiral Sir Harry Rawson married, in 1871, Florence Alice, daughter of John Shaw, Esq., of Arrowe Park, Cheshire. Address: United Service Club, Pall Mall, S.W.

RAWSON, Sir Rawson William.

K.C.M.G., C.B., eldest son of the celebrated botanist, Sir William Adams, who assumed the name of Rawson, that of his wife in 1825, was born in London, Sept. 2, 1812; was educated at Sunbury, Hertfordshire, and Eton, 1825-29; and was appointed to the Board of Trade in January 1829, at the age of sixteen. In 1830 he became Private Secretary to the Vice-President, Mr. Poulton Thomson; and in 1834 to the President, Mr. Alex. Baring. Upon the creation of the Statistical Department in the Board of Trade, he was appointed first assistant to its chief, Mr. G. R. Porter, which office he continued to hold until 1842. In 1840 he became a Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society of London, one of its Honorary Secretaries, and first editor of its journal; in 1846 he became a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and in 1841 was elected a member of its Council; in 1838 he became a member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and in the three following years acted as one of the Secretaries of Section F (Statistical Science). In 1841, upon the Rt. Hon. W. E.

England, and retired from the service after nearly 47 years of employment. In Barbados he was in the Census in 1871, and upon his return to that island for a long series of years he paid a visit to the Governor of the neighbouring French Colony of Guadeloupe, and received his return visit with interchange of such courtesy as occurred between the two islands, though they are so closely situated. He retired Mr. Rawson was a Fellow. He was elected to the Councils of the Royal Society and Statistical Societies, and in 1885 he was chosen President of the Society. He joined the Colonial Federation League, member of the Council and Committee of the latter until 1894. In 1885, on the creation of the International Statistical Institute, he was its first President, and has since been re-elected to that office, and holds. He presided at the Congresses of the Institute in London and Vienna in 1887, 1889, and at Bern in 1895. In connection with the Royal Geographical Society, he had the rare experience of editing the accounts of the Society of Charles Darwin, then in his old age, and with his son, Major Rawson, in 1894—an interval of half a century. His principal works since his retirement, have been addresses to the Royal Society on "British and Foreign Trade," "International Vital Statistics," a "Synopsis of the Tariffs of the British Empire," in 1893; two contributions to the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society on the "International Partition of the Coast of Africa," 1884; and "European Territories on the Coasts of the Red Sea," 1885; and a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the relative values of Silver, and Commodities, and is also the author of "Our Barometer," in the Journal of the Federation League; and of Highways, or Approaches to the Continent, 1894. Sir Rawson is a member of the American Philosophical Society, the Statistical Society of Paris, the International Statistical Commission of the Geographical and Geodesic Societies of Vienna, and of the Society, "Libre economique," of which he was married, in 1849, Marianne, the daughter of the Hon. the Lord. Address: 68 Cornwall

RAYLEIGH, Lord, John William Strutt, D.C.L. Hon. Oxon., LL.D., F.R.S., Sc.D. Cambridge and Dublin, Hon. C.E., Corresponding Member of the French Institute, Lord Lieutenant of Essex, J.P., 3rd Baron, was born Nov. 12, 1842, and succeeded to the title on the death of his father, of whom he was the only son, in 1873. His mother, created Baroness Rayleigh, was a daughter of the 1st Duke of Leinster. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., Senior Wrangler, and first Smith's Prizeman, 1865; Fellow of his College, 1866; M.A., 1868; Honorary D.C.L. Oxford, 1883; Honorary LL.D. McGill University, Montreal, 1884, and Dublin University, 1885); has been since 1892 Lord Lieutenant of Essex, and is J.P. of the same county; and a Cambridge Commissioner under the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Act, 1877. He was Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge from 1879 to 1884; and was appointed Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Royal Institution, 1887. Since 1896 he has been Scientific Adviser to the Trinity House, and from 1887 to 1896 was Secretary of the Royal Society. In December 1898, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Academy of Medicine, he was appointed an honorary member of the Academy. He is the author of two volumes on "The Theory of Sound," 1877-78 (2nd edit. 1894); and of many memoirs in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, and other scientific publications. He has also edited Clerk Maxwell's "Heat" (1891 and 1894). Professor Ramsay divides with Lord Rayleigh the distinction of discovering a new element—"Argon"—in the atmosphere, the existence of which was announced at the meeting of the British Association at Oxford in August 1894. Lord Rayleigh married, in 1871, Evelyn Georgina Mary, daughter of the late James Maitland Balfour, Esq., of Whittinghame, Prestonkirk, and has three sons. Addresses: Terling Place, Witham, Essex; and Athenæum.

READ, Clare Sewell, J.P., a distinguished agriculturist, born at Ketteringham in 1826, is the eldest son of George Read, Esq., of Barton Bendish Hall, Norfolk. He entered Parliament in 1865 in the Conservative interest as a member for East Norfolk, and was one of the most prominent advocates of the reduction of the Malt Tax. After the dissolution in 1868 he was returned for the southern section of the county, and continued to represent that constituency until 1880, and West Norfolk until 1885. In 1874 he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary of the Local Government Board, a position he retained until January 1876, when he resigned on account of a difference of opinion upon the question of Inspection and Restrictions in Ireland, for the prevention of the spread of pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease among cattle. He advocated uniformity of treatment in both countries, and as an acknowledgment of his services the farmers of England presented him with a service of plate and a cheque for £5500. He is a member of the Council of the Central Chambers of Agriculture, of the Smithfield Club, and of the Farmers' Club, and also of all the local agricultural societies in the county of Norfolk. He married Sarah Maria, only daughter of J. Watson, in 1859. Addresses: 91 Kensington Gardens Square, W.; Barton Bendish, Stoke Ferry.

REANEY, Mrs. Isabel, philanthropist, is a daughter of the late Mr. Robert Edis, of Huntingdon, and a sister of Colonel Edis. She is well known for her labours in the cause of temperance, and is constantly requested to address meetings on that subject. She has also opened "homes" for various forms of distress, notably a Convalescent and Holiday Home at Blackpool. She is well known as a writer of religious stories and other works, of which we may mention "Our Brothers and Sons," "Our Daughters," and "Just in Time." Her husband, the Rev. G. Sale Reaney, is a well-known Broad Church clergyman at East Greenwich, who earlier in life made his mark as a preacher among the Congregationalists. Address: Christ Church Vicarage, Greenwich, S.E.

REAY, Lord, Donald James Mackay, Bart. G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., LL.D. Edinburgh, D.L., J.P., was born in Holland in December 1839, and is the son of the late Baron Mackay, of Ophemart, Minister of State, by the daughter of Baron Fagel, Privy Councillor of the Netherlands. His ancestors were distinguished Scottish Jacobites. Lord Reay was educated at the University of Leyden, where he graduated as D.C.L. in 1861. He joined the Diplomatic Service, and in 1871 was elected Member of the Second Chamber of the States General, and vacated his seat in 1877 on becoming a British subject. He succeeded to his father's title in 1876. In 1881 he was created a Peer of the United Kingdom; in 1884 elected Rector of St. Andrews University; in 1885 appointed Governor of Bombay; in 1894 Under-Secretary of State for India. He was elected for New Ross in 1881, for Wexford, North, in 1885, for Waterford in 1891, and for Waterford City in 1892, a constituency which he still represents. He has sat in Parliament continuously since 1881, and since the Parnell split has been a leading Parnellite. Address : 392 Clap- ham Road, S.W.

REDSPINNER, See SENIOR, WILLIAM.

REED, Sir Edward James, K.C.B., F.R.S., J.P., born at Sheerness, Sept. 20, 1830, was educated at the School of Mathematics and Naval Construction, Portsmouth, served in a subordinate capacity in Sheerness dockyard, and was afterwards editor of the Mechanics' Magazine. He paid great attention to naval architecture, on which he became an authority, and was induced to accept the Secretaryship of the Institution of Naval Architects. He submitted to the Admiralty proposals to reduce the dimensions, cost, and time required for building our iron-clads, and was soon after appointed Chief Constructor of the Navy. In about three years he designed iron-clad ships for the British Navy, amounting to an aggregate of 35,000 tons ; a large iron-clad frigate for the Turkish Government ; a fleet of steam-transports for the service of our Indian Government, consisting of five ships of 4000 tons each, a paddle despatch-steamer of war, and numerous tugs, life-boats, and other smaller vessels. After four years of further service as Chief Constructor, Mr. Reed, whose objections to rigged sea-going turret ships were well known, found these vessels so much in favour that he resigned his office in July 1870. His resignation was made remarkable by the capsizing of the turret ship Captain a few weeks afterwards. Mr. Reid was afterwards engaged in private pursuits, visiting occasionally the foreign dockyards of Europe. He was returned to Parliament in the Liberal interest as member for the Pembroke boroughs at the general election of February 1874. He represented that constituency till April 1880, when he was returned for Cardiff. He was re-elected for Cardiff at the general election in November 1885, and again in February 1886, on his appointment as Lord of the Treasury in Mr. Gladstone's administration. He received the Companionship of the Bath from the Queen of England ; the Star of the Imperial Order of St. Stanislas (first class) from the Emperor of Russia ; the Star and Ribbon of the Medjidieh (second class) from the Sultan of Turkey, and the Knight Commandership of the Imperial Order of Joseph from the Emperor of Austria. He is the author of works on Practical Shipbuilding, Iron-cased Ships, and Coast Defence. In October 1878 he started on a visit to Japan, at the invitation of the Imperial Government. He returned to this country in May 1879, and published a work on "Japan: its Histories, Traditions, and Religions," 2 vols., 1880. Other works from his pen are: "The Stability of Ships," 1884, and "Modern Ships of War" (with Admiral Simpson), 1888. In August 1880 he was created a K.C.B. In 1883 Sir Edward Reed was appointed by the Government to inquire into the cause of the capsizing of the SS. Daphne during the operation of launching on the Clyde; and in 1884 was also appointed by the Government as President of the Load Line Committee, which was formed for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the question of a proper load-line for the ships of the Mercantile Marine. Re-elected for Cardiff in 1892, Sir Edward Reed did not take office under the new Government, and at one time was thought to be on the point of becoming a Unionist. He is Vice-President of the Institute of Naval Architects, and a member of the Council of the Inst. of Civil Engineers. He married, in 1851, Rosetta, daughter of Nathl. Barnaby. Address: 112 Cromwell Road, S.W.

REED, Edward Tennyson, of Punch, was born in London on March 27, 1860, and is the only son of Sir Edward James Reed, K.C.B., F.R.S., M.P. He was educated at Harrow, and in 1880 travelled in the Far East. He began to draw for Punch in 1889, and definitely joined the staff in 1890. He is justly famous for his "Prehistoric Peeps," which are, in some sort, a reminiscence of the sketches and paintings, by which Ernest Griset illustrated the savages of the Quaternary Period. He succeeded Mr. Harry Furniss as Parliamentary Artist to Punch in 1894. His most memorable sketch in this connection is "The House of Commons in Lager" in 1894. At a time when the members of the Corporation of the City of London were busily engaged in a search for armorial bearings he created much mirth with his series of "Ready-Made Coats of Arms." "Unrecorded History" is another of his series of clever sketches. "Prehistoric Peeps" was republished in 1896, and "Mr. Punch's Animal Land" in 1898. Address: 93rd Street West, New York.

REICHEL, Henry Rudolph, M.A., born October 11, 1856, in Belfast, son of the Rev. Charles Parsons Reichel, D.D., Professor of Latin in Queen's College, Belfast, and subsequently Bishop of Meath (died 1894), and of Mary Brown M'Cracken (died 1885), was educated at Christ's Hospital (1865-75), where he was Head Grecian, and at Balliol College, Oxford (1875-80), of which college he was a Scholar. He gained first-class Honours in Classical Moderations, 1876; Mathematical Moderations, 1877; Lit. Hum., 1879; Modern History, 1880; and was elected Fellow of All Souls' College, November 1880, and re-elected for a second term of seven years in 1889. From 1881 to 1884

he acted as History Tutor for University College and New College. In 1884 he was appointed first Principal and Professor of English Literature and History in the University College of North Wales, Bangor, then incorporated under Royal Charter, and since federated with the sister Colleges at Aberystwyth and Cardiff into the University of Wales. During the session 1896-7 he officiated as Vice-Chancellor of this University. He took an active part in the establishment of the Welsh intermediate school system, the most perfectly organised system of the kind in the United Kingdom, and also in the establishment of the University, and is a member of the Executive Committee of the University and of the Executive Committee of the Central Welsh Board, the body which controls the inspection and examination of the intermediate schools. He has published several short papers on educational subjects and has devoted special attention to the position of manual training in the ordinary school curriculum. He married, February 1, 1894, Charity Mary, eldest daughter of Henry M. Pilkington, Q.C., of Tore, Tyrrell's Pass, in the county of Westmeath. Address: University College of North Wales, Bangor.

REID, Sir George, President of the Royal Scottish Academy, LL.D., D.L., was born in Aberdeen on Oct. 31, 1841, and is the third son of the late George Reid and Esther Tait. He was educated at the Grammar School, Aberdeen, and early evinced a taste for art, working at lithography before becoming a painter. His earliest contribution to the Royal Scottish Academy was a small landscape, after which time he painted only landscape for some years. In 1867 began his career as a portrait-painter, his likeness of George Macdonald winning him fame in 1868. His success was now assured, and he exhibited from time to time his well-known portraits of Sir John Millais, the Marchioness of Huntly, Mr. James Anthony Froude, and others. In the R.S.A. Exhibition of February 1899 he exhibited a masterly portrait of the Marquis of Tweeddale, in the green and gold uniform of the Royal Archers, painted for Yester House as a pendant to the portrait of Lady Tweeddale by the late Sir John Millais. Other portraits from his brush in this exhibition were a full-length of Sir William Henderson, ex-Lord Provost of Aberdeen, in robes of office, and a greatly admired "Kit-kat" of Mr. W. W. Robertson, ex-Master of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh. Sir George studied the modern movement in Dutch art under Mollinger, but he is opposed to Impressionism, espe-

in 1864 was appointed editor of the Preston Guardian, and in 1870 to 1887 editor of the Leeds Mercury. Sir Wemyss Reid has contributed largely to the leading reviews and magazines. He is the author of "Charlotte Brontë: a Monograph," a biographical work intended to supplement Mrs. Gaskell's well-known Life of the author of "Jane Eyre." This work, which was published in 1877, has gone through several editions both in England and in the United States. In 1883 Sir Wemyss Reid published "Gladys Fane, a Story of Two Lives." It passed through four editions within a few months of its publication. Two years later, at Christmas, 1885, appeared "Mauleverer's Millions," a sensational story, the scene of which was laid in Yorkshire; it has had a large sale. In 1888 Sir Wemyss Reid published the "Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster," a work tracing the personal history of the author of the Education Act, and throwing considerable light on recent political events. Six editions of the Life appeared within twelve months from its publication. The other works written by Sir Wemyss Reid are "Cabinet Portraits," sketches of leading statesmen of both parties, 1872; "Politicians of To-Day," 1879; "The Land of the Bey," 1882, a narrative of a visit to Tunis during the military operations of France; and the "Life of Lord Houghton," 1890. Sir Wemyss Reid has also contributed to the Leeds Mercury an extensive series of literary and social essays, under the title of "The Rambling Philosopher," as well as letters descriptive of travel in various parts of the world. In 1887 Sir Wemyss Reid resigned the editorship of the Leeds Mercury, and accepted the post of manager to Messrs. Cassell and Company. Since the beginning of 1890 he has been editor of the Speaker, a weekly political and literary review, his resignation from which was announced in 1899. In 1893 he received the hon. degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews, and in 1894 he was knighted "in consideration of his services to letters and to politics." He married (2) Louisa, daughter of Benjamin Berry. Address: 26 Bramham Gardens, S. Kensington, S.W.

REID, The Hon. Whitelaw, was born near Xenia, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1837. He graduated from Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, in 1856, and immediately took up journalism, soon becoming editor of the Xenia News. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was sent into the field as correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, and served for a while as volunteer aide-de-camp to General Thos. A. Morris, and afterwards to General Rosecrans. From 1863 to 1866 he was librarian of the House of Representatives. He was then engaged for a short time in cotton planting in Louisiana, the result of his observations while there on the condition of the South, "After the War," appearing in 1866. Returning to Ohio he devoted himself for two years to writing a complete history of "Ohio in the War," which was published in two volumes in 1868. In the same year he joined the staff of the New York Tribune, of which, on the death of Mr. Greeley in 1872, he became the editor-in-chief and principal owner. He was chosen a regent (for life) of the University of the State of New York in 1878. On the accession to the Presidency of Mr. Harrison in 1889 he accepted an appointment as American minister to France. He negotiated a new Extradition Treaty with France and a limited treaty of Reciprocity. He also began the negotiations which resulted in the withdrawal by half the nations of Europe of the prohibition, which they had maintained for from eight to twelve years, against the importation of American pork, and conducted these negotiations in France to a successful close. On the conclusion of these different tasks he tendered his resignation (1892). A few weeks later the Republican National Convention, after renominating President Harrison, unanimously nominated Mr. Reid as its candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States. During the canvass he made numerous speeches in Boston, New York, Buffalo, Indianapolis, and elsewhere. After the defeat of his party in November he visited the Pacific coast, and in a few months resumed his editorship of the New York Tribune. He was actively connected with the work of sending poor children from New York to homes in the West, and he originated and long conducted the Tribune Fresh Air Fund, which was the pioneer of a multitude of similar charities now existing in both America and England. In addition to the works already mentioned, he is the author of "Schools of Journalism," 1871; "The Scholar in Politics," 1873; "Some Newspaper Tendencies," 1879; "Town-Hall Suggestions," 1881, and a great number of speeches and addresses on political, literary, and social topics. In 1897 he was appointed specially to represent the United States at the Jubilee of Her Majesty in June of that year, and in 1898 he was one of the Commissioners to arrange terms of peace with Spain.

RENALS, Sir Joseph, Bart., Lord of London for 1894-95, was born at am on Feb. 21, 1843, and is the William Renals, the Park, Nottingham. His business career has been chiefly London. He became a member of the Corporation in 1885, as the representative of the Aldersgate Ward in the Common Council. He attained a baronet's rank in 1888, and in 1893 was created Senior Sheriff, and received the rank of knighthood at the same time on the occasion of the Duke of York's marriage.

During the autumn of 1894 he was elected by the Livery for the office of Mayor, and was finally chosen in preference to Alderman Faudel Phillips, who was put forward by a determined set of supporters. A poll was demanded, and resulted in a close contest, votes being given to the successful candidate, and 1360 to Ald. Phillips. Sir Joseph Renals is a member of the Clerical-makers' and Fruiterers' Companies. In politics he is a Liberal, and has often asked to contest Nottingham in the interest, but preferred to take his chance of the Mayoralty. He is a partner in the firm of Renals & Co., is Officer of the Legion d'Honneur, Lieutenant for the City of London, and was created a Baronet in 1888. Address: 108-9 Fore Street, E.C.

RENDALL, Gerald Henry, M.A., Head-Master of Charterhouse School, was born in 1851, at Harrow, and second son of the Rev. F. Rendall, Rector-Master at Harrow. He was educated at Cheam, Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he won a University Scholarship in 1872. He held the University Bell Scholarship in 1874, and stood fourth in the Classical Tripos, graduating B.A. in 1874. He became a University Lightfoot Scholar in 1875, won Hulsean Prize Essayist in 1876, was then Fellow, Lecturer, and Assistant at Trinity College. He was Vice-Chancellor of Victoria University in 1890-1892-94, was member of the abortive Fresham University Commission in 1893, was first Principal of University College, Liverpool, was Gladstone Professor of Greek from 1880-97, and was elected to the present post in 1897. He has published various works on classical subjects, notably his Hulsean Essay on the Emperor Julian, in 1879, and "The Cradle of the Aryans," 1889, and a translation of Marcus Aurelius in 1897. Addresses: 25 Falkner Square, Liverpool; and Athenæum.

RENDEL, Sir Alexander Meadows, K.C.I.E., civil engineer, born in 1829, is the eldest son of James Meadows Rendel, civil engineer, and was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and Trinity College, Cambridge (Scholar and Wrangler); studied as engineer under his father, on whose death in 1856 he became engineer to the then London Dock Company, the Leith Harbour and Dock Commissioners, the East Indian Railway, and other companies. He visited India in 1857-58, and at various other times; subsequently he built the Shadwell New Basin, the Royal Albert Dock, and other works on the Thames, the Albert and Edinburgh Docks at Leith, the Workington Dock and Harbour, and other kindred work; was a member of the Commission appointed in 1870 by the Secretary of State for India, to determine what should be the narrow gauge for India, and is at present engineer in England (commonly called consulting engineer) to the Secretary of State for India, the East Indian, the Bombay and Baroda, the South Mahratta, the Nizam's, and other Indian Railway Companies engaged in the construction and working of about 9000 miles of railway. He is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. He married in 1853 Eliza, eldest daughter of the late Captain Hobson, R.N., late Governor of New Zealand, and was created K.C.I.E. on the formation of the order in 1887. Address: 44 Lancaster Gate, W.

RENDEL, George Whightwick, second surviving son of the late J. M. Rendel, F.R.S., the eminent civil engineer, was educated at Harrow, and as a civil engineer in his father's office, where he subsequently took an important part in reference to some of the later engineering works carried out by Mr. Rendel—notably the superstructures of the great bridges on the East Indian Railway crossing the Ganges and the Jumna at Allahabad. He joined Sir William Armstrong's firm at Elswick in 1858 as managing partner of the new Elswick Ordnance Works, which he continued to direct during twenty-four years (in conjunction with Captain Noble from 1860). During that time he took a large part in the development of guns, ironclads, and ships of war. He devised and carried out the system of hydraulic machinery for mounting and working heavy guns, first tried in H.M.S.

Thunderer, and subsequently adopted in the Dreadnought, Indefatigable, Colossus, and all the later ironclads of the British fleet, as well as in the Duilio, Dandolo, Italia, and Lepanto of the Italian fleet. He designed and directed the building of the Esmeralda for the Chilean Government, the swiftest and most powerful unarmoured cruiser of her time, which has become a type of unarmoured cruisers, as also the gunboat Staunch for the British Government, and the numerous gunboats, developments of the Staunch, known as the "alphabetical gunboats," and built on the Tyne for the Chinese Government. Mr. George Rendel was a member of the Committee on Designs of Ships of War, appointed by the English Government in 1871, to settle the types of English ironclads to be built; also of the Committee appointed by the Government in 1877 to decide upon the questions raised by Sir E. J. Reed in reference to the design of the Indefatigable. In March 1882 he accepted the invitation previously made to him by Mr. Smith under the Conservative Administration, and repeated by Lord Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's Administration, and became professional Civil Lord of the Admiralty, abandoning for the purpose all connection with the Elswick firm. In June 1885, on the fall of Mr. Gladstone's Government, he, for family reasons, resigned his position at the Admiralty and retired to Italy. Address: Posillippo, near Naples.

RENDEL, Lord, Stuart Rendel, J.P., third surviving son of James Meadows Rendel, F.R.S., the engineer of the Harbours of Refuge of Holyhead and Portland, and of many docks and railways in Great Britain and abroad, and brother of the two preceding, was born July 2, 1844; educated at Eton and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated an Honorary Fourth in 1859. He was called to the Bar in 1861, but has never practised; was appointed on behalf of Sir William Armstrong member of the Armstrong and Whitworth Committee, which sat from 1861 to 1863, and carried out the most exhaustive known series of artillery experiments; became a member of Sir Wm. Armstrong's firm in February 1870, and its managing partner in London; has been closely associated with the growth of the great works at Elswick, Newcastle-on-Tyne, which now employ 24,000 men, and form a second arsenal for the empire. He is an Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy, and a Knight of the Order of Charles XII. of Spain. In 1880 Mr. Stuart Rendel retired from the Armstrong firm, and contested and won the representation at his father's house of Manor co. Donegal, where his family owned a residence and the manor of Ingham, and several other estates in Donegal from the Plantation, and are described in history as having taken a prominent part in the defence of the neighbouring city of Derry during the famous siege by James II. in the month of 1688, members of the family at that time much property in which city they several times acted as Mayor and Sheriff two years.

He was educated at Magee College; Queen's Colleges, Galway and Queen's University, Ireland; and Berlin University. First Prize at the first University Exhibition, University Scholar in Modern Languages, Modern History, Law Scholar, University Scholar in Jurisprudence, Law and International Law, LL.B. First Exhibition, Vice-President of the Interessenschaft, Berlin University; Member of the Inns of Court, London, Temple One Hundred Guinea in Equity; First at Bar Final. Called to the Bar in November 1871. Q.C. in July 1895, sat as Recorder on the first London Council, and has been Member of the Inner Vestry and Board of Aldermen has been three times returned for co. Down (East), in which constituency his ancestors, Thomas Lord Chancellor of England, and the sons of Audley, owned Audley large estates for several centuries.

He is a Member of the House of Commerce, and of the House of Commons, and is President and Vice-President of several constitutional clubs. In 1882, Florence Isabel, daughter of D. W. Young, Wallington, Surrey. Addresses: 4 Paper Street; 23 Old Queen Street, S.W.; Manor Cunningham,

E, Edouard de, operatic singer, born at Warsaw in 1854, and is French. He followed the operatic career of his brother Jean, and with him in 1876 at the Théâtre Italien, where he was gifted with a profoundly musical voice, but learnt, during his career, to govern it artistically. He sang in France, England, Italy, and in 1891, and has very frequently appeared with his brother. His first success in England was at Covent Garden, when as Judas, in Massenet's "Roi de Lahore," he created a very favourable impression. In 1887 Sir A. Harris engaged him at Drury Lane, and in subsequent years he has appeared at Covent Garden. His best known rôles are Hans Sachs, Ruy Gomez, Don Basilio, Leporello, Mephistopheles, Friar Lawrence, Marcel, Wotan, and Merke. Address in the season: Royal Palace Hotel, Westminster.

RESZKE, Jean de, M.V.O., operatic singer, brother of the preceding, was born at Warsaw in 1850. He completed his studies in law at the University of his native city, but being drawn by an irresistible vocation, he entered upon a theatrical career. After studying with the celebrated teachers Cialfai and Cotogni, in Italy, who persisted in making him sing baritone rôles, although he had by nature a tenor voice, he made his début in 1874 in Venice as Alfonso in "La Favorita." He was at once engaged in London at Drury Lane, where he sang during two seasons with Titjens, Nilsson, &c., the parts of Don Juan, Figaro, Valentin, Richard I. in Balfe's "Talismano," Nevers and Count Almaviva in the "Nozze." In 1876 he sang for the last time baritone rôles at the Opéra Italien in Paris. Feeling that it would be pernicious to his voice to continue singing parts which were too low for him, with the help of Maestro Striggio he effected the transformation of his voice from baritone to tenor, but it was not until 1880 that he was prevailed upon to appear as Robert le Diable at Madrid. After this promising début he was chosen by Massenet to create the part of Jean in "Hérodiade," at the Théâtre Italien, under the management of Maurel. The great success he obtained resulted in his being engaged at the Grand Opera, where he sang from 1885 until 1890. During these five years he interpreted "Le Cid," especially composed for him by Massenet, "Le Prophète," "L'Africaine," "Aïda," "Faust," "Roméo," "La Dame de Montsaurau," "Don Juan," &c. His Romeo, when Patti sang Juliet, was not eclipsed by the great cantatrice, and he became the greatest favourite of the Parisian public. In 1887 Sir Augustus Harris engaged him for Drury Lane, and he immediately scored a success as Radames in "Aïda." Since that time he has appeared in most of the popular operas in London, always insisting that each work should be sung in the original language in which it was composed. From 1891 till 1897 he took part every winter in a long American tour, singing all Wagner's works in German, and thereby gaining his greatest triumphs in both continents. Josephine de Reszke, sister of the foregoing brothers, was also a well-known singer. She died in 1891 as Baroness de Kronenberg. M.

Jean de Reszke was created M.V.O. in June 1899. Address in the season: Kensington Royal Palace Hotel, W.

RÉVILLE, Albert, pastor and French Protestant writer, was born at Dieppe, Nov. 4, 1826. He contributed to the most important French Protestant organs, and by his writings took a prominent position among his co-religionists. For some months he was suffragan at Nîmes, then pastor at Luneray, near Dieppe, and in 1851 he was called to Rotterdam as pastor of the Walloon Church. In 1862 the University of Leyden conferred upon him the degree of Doctor; in 1880 he was appointed Titular Professor of Religious History in the College of France, and in 1886 he accepted the Presidency of the Section des Sciences Religieuses at the Sorbonne. Among his works are: "Authenticité du Nouveau Testament," 1851; "De la Rédemption," 1859, translated into English in 1864; "Essais de la Critique Religieuse," 1860; "Manuel d'Histoire comparée de la Philosophie et de la Religion," 1861; "Études critiques sur l'Évangile selon St. Matthieu," 1862; "Théodore Parker, sa vie et ses œuvres," 1865; "L'Enseignement de Jésus Christ," 1870; "Histoire du Dogme de la Divinité d'Jésus Christ," 1876; "Prologomènes de l'Histoire des Religions," 1881, translated in 1885; "Histoire des Religions," tomes i.-iv., 1883-88. M. Réville is one of the chief leaders of the Liberal movement among the French Protestants. In 1884 he delivered the Hibbert lectures on the native religions of Mexico and Peru, and in 1889 published a work on "La Religion Chinoise." His Paris address is 16 Avenue La Bourdonnais.

REYER, Ernest, whose real name is Rey, was born at Marseilles, Dec. 1, 1823. He studied solfeggio at the Free School of Music in his native city, and became a good reader. At the age of sixteen he went to Algiers as a Government official, continuing his pianoforte practice, and began to compose without having properly learned harmony and counterpoint. His compositions became popular, and in 1848, when the Revolution deprived him of his situation, he returned to Paris and completed his musical education under his aunt, Madame Louise Farrene. He composed the music of "Le Selam," an Oriental symphony, which was produced with success, April 5, 1850; and "Maitre Wolfram," a one-act opera, which also was successful at the Théâtre Lyrique, May 20, 1854; "La Statue," produced at the same theatre, April 11, 1861, showed much facility and power. His other works include "Erostate," performed at Baden in was born on July 5, 1853. The effect of his health as a boy induced his friends to send him to South Africa for improvement, and in 1871 his elder brother, Herbert, at that time returned to England in the same ship, and matriculated at Oriel College, Oxford; but his course of study was interrupted by his continual ill health, and he finally became affected as the result of the hill, and he again returned to South Africa, settling with his brother at Kimberley. The diamond mines had been opened there, and they both worked, and soon amassed a large fortune. Herbert Rhodes, however, did not enjoy travelling and hunting, and remained in charge of his property. Mr. Rhodes persevered in his work, and became rich. At Kimberley he met and Mr. C. Rudd, and a close friendship was formed between the three. It is very little doubt that while the diamond mines Mr. Rhodes was studying his plans for the subjugation of the whole of the continent of South Africa. He had frequently said, pointing to the map of South Africa, "That's my dream." He did not neglect his studies, and during 1876 he was elected to the Inner Temple, for a short time a law student; he also continued his journeys to Africa, and resided there for a time, obtaining the degrees of B.A. and M.A. He did not confine his attention entirely to diamonds, but managed many undertakings for the improvement of the condition of the natives by means of transit in those regions.

He never cared for money, his one dominant idea of all his life being the expansion and development of Great Britain in South Africa. Of himself, he has said, "My expansion was everything, the world's surface being limited, and the rest of present humanity should be made much of the world as it is possible."

Mr. Rhodes, in the early days of his life, when he was elected to the Cape Parliament for the first time, and about that time met Mr. Krüger. They were thrown much together by many interesting anecdotes connected with the relations of these two men. Rhodes had formed a very high opinion of Krüger, and when he decided to join his expedition; but he decided to remain at the Cape. He was appointed Treasurer-General of the Cape Colony Administration, and in this assembly he chiefly devoted his schemes of expansion to the north, receiving very little encouragement. During 1883 Mr. Rhodes was sent by the Cape Government to deal with the question of the delimitation of Griqualand West, and at the same time he obtained from Mankoroane, the ruling chief, a cession of a large portion of Bechuanaland, which the Cape Colony refused to take over. He thereupon applied to the Home Government, asking them to administer the country, and in 1884 an Imperial Protectorate was established over the territory in question. About that time the London Convention with Mr. Krüger was drawn up, and the Boer President began a rival competition with Mr. Rhodes for native territories, ultimately securing a large part of Zululand, Stellaland, and Goshen. Mr. Rhodes was then appointed Deputy Commissioner for Bechuanaland, and by a firm policy was enabled to keep the Boers out of, and to checkmate the designs of Mr. Krüger upon that portion of South Africa. The extraordinary fertility of the diamond mines at Kimberley led to a great influx of settlers there, the result being the formation of a large number of small companies. Mr. Rhodes seeing the desirability of limiting the supply of diamonds, set himself the task of banding together a number of the companies into one, and thus the De Beers Consolidated Mines sprang into existence. In that company all the important properties were amalgamated. During 1886 gold mines were discovered in the Transvaal, and, with the aid of Mr. Rudd, he formed the company known as the Gold Fields of South Africa, which has had a most prosperous career. As time went on it became more and more evident to Mr. Rhodes that neither the Home nor the Cape Governments had grasped the situation in South Africa, and to prevent the absorption by the Boer Republic of a vast region, which he hoped to see under British rule, he determined to form a company large enough to be able to administer any amount of territory. Both Mr. Beit and Mr. Rothschild favoured the scheme, and the British South Africa Company was formed. Mr. Krüger now became alarmed, and sent emissaries into Matabeleland. When this was known to Mr. Rhodes, he urged upon Sir Hercules Robinson the necessity of obtaining concessions from Lobengula, to whom a mission was at once despatched, with the result that the Moffat Treaty, which amounted in fact to a right of pre-emption over Matabeleland, was signed in 1888. In that year Mr. Rhodes came to London and secured large interests in the African Lake Company, which enabled him to obtain a free hand in the matter of expansion north of the Zambesi River. He also brought the De Beers Company into the British South Africa Company, and secured a Royal Charter. This charter conferred large administrative powers upon the company, and authorised it to promote trade and commerce, and to work mineral and other concessions in the region north of Cape Colony. The total area administered by the company embraces nearly a million square miles, and includes Rhodesia (Mashonaland and Matabeleland), Bechuanaland, and British Central Africa. Effective occupation was first begun in Mashonaland after a good deal of trouble, as Lobengula at first strongly objected to the pioneer force passing through his country. However, Dr. Jameson undertook a mission to the Matabele king, and stayed three months in his kraal at Bulawayo. All difficulties having been removed, Mr. Selous was directed to make a road into Mashonaland in advance of the expedition. Dr. Jameson now gave up his medical practice at Kimberley, and settled at Fort Salisbury, as the representative of Mr. Rhodes, at whose instance, in 1891, he was appointed administrator of the company. Upon the defeat of the Sprigg Ministry in 1890 Mr. Rhodes became Premier of the Cape, and formed an alliance with Mr. Hofmeyr and the Afrikaner Bond, thus securing a solid Dutch vote. During 1891 he gave £10,000 in support of the cause of Home Rule for Ireland. For two or three years the development of the Chartered Company's territories proceeded very satisfactorily, but during 1893 the Matabele became troublesome, and constantly raided and massacred the Mashonas, a more peaceable tribe. Mr. Rhodes, though directed to avoid aggression, prepared for war, and when, in September, Lobengula placed himself at the head of his army, Mr. Rhodes went to Fort Salisbury to direct operations against him. After considerable fighting, in which the Matabele suffered severely, peace was restored, and, upon the death by fever of Lobengula in January 1894, a general submission by the natives was made. Upon his return to Cape Town Mr. Rhodes was entertained at a public banquet, and great satisfaction was expressed with his conduct. In a speech at the time he outlined his policy with regard to the natives, and also his plans for railway communication, tariffs, law, and coinage. About this time he sent three of Lobengula's sons to Cape Town to be educated at his own expense. In company with Dr. Jameson he came to England in November 1894, and made several speeches dealing with Cape politics and a "United South Africa" on federal principles. He was sworn a Member of the Privy Council in February 1895. Early in the following year Mr. Rhodes resigned the Premiership of the Cape, and also his

The only obsta- ning in the way of a trans- lway is the permission to take either through German East Africa or the Congo Free State. But as Mr. Rhodes has been honoured by two interviews with the German Emperor, who has a great admiration for Cecil Rhodes and his projects, it is almost certain that the line will go through German territory. The German Government has also decided to guarantee the interest on the capital invested in it. Mr. Rhodes firmly believes there are gold-fields in Rhodesia, and hopes soon to erect batteries for the crushing of ore. His chief delight is in farming, which he greatly encourages among the settlers; he also keeps a large menagerie at Table Mountain, and he allows the zebras, ostriches, and buck of all kinds to run wild in huge enclosed tracts on the mountain side. He is famous as a collector of books, curios, &c., and has caused many of the Greek and Roman classics to be specially translated for his perusal. He received the D.C.L. degree at the Encenia at Oxford in June 1899, and was most enthusiastically welcomed on that occasion.

RHYS, Ernest, was born in London in 1859, and carried the same year to Carmarthen, his father's native place. He was educated there, and at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Durham; studied mining engineering at Langley Park, co. Durham, and then threw up, in 1885, his post, after passing the usual Government examinations, in favour of literature. He edited the Camelot Series, leading off, in 1886, characteristically, with Malory's "Morte d'Arthur," which won an extraordinary success. The series ran to some eighty volumes. Mr. Rhys has also written on Lord Leighton, and edited, in other series, the plays of Thomas Dekker, and the poems of Herrick, Geo. Herbert, Clough, and Walt Whitman. More recently he has added to this list yet another series, "The Lyric Poets," whose twelve volumes include Campion and Sidney. Marrying in 1891 (vide the succeeding notice), he retreated to a mountain cottage at Geinen Hir, in the Vale of Llangollen, and took up more deliberately the study of Welsh poetry. The result may be seen in his book, "A London Rose, and other Rhymes," whose poems, devoted to Welsh subjects, won the praise of Robert Louis Stevenson; and in his more recent volume of "Welsh Ballads," published in 1897. Mr. Rhys has interested himself, as this book shows, in the revival of Welsh printing; and in a recent lecture on "Welsh Heroes," he is said to have predicted more than a merely fanciful resurrection of the sword of Owain Glyndwr. Mr. Rhys has been duly initiated in the sacred circle of the Welsh bards as "Rhys Goch" and is a well-known contributor to subjects to our contemporaries.

and secured a Royal Charter, which conferred large administrative powers on the company, and authorised it to regulate trade and commerce, and in some cases and other concessions in the interior of Cape Colony. The total area entered by the company embraced 100 million square miles, and included Mashonaland and Matabeleland, Mashonaland, and British Central Africa. The effective occupation was first in Mashonaland after a goodly number, as Lobengula at first strongly opposed the pioneer force passing through the country. However, Dr. Janssens took a mission to the Mashona, and stayed three months before returning. All difficulties having been removed, Mr. Selous was directed to lead a road into Mashonaland in November 1890 expedition. Dr. Janssens then gave up medical practice at Kimberley, and went to Fort Salisbury, as the name was given to the place, at the residence of Mr. Rhodes, at whose instance he was appointed administrator of the company. Upon the death of the Premier of the Cape, and formation of a coalition with Mr. Hofmeyr and the kander Bond, thus securing a majority vote. During 1891 he gave his support of the cause of Home Rule in Ireland. For two or three years the development of the Chartered territories proceeded very rapidly, but during 1893 the War was troublesome, and in 1894 the natives massacred the Matabele, a formidable tribe. Mr. Rhodes, to avoid aggression, prepared himself, when, in September, 1894, he went to the head of the Rhodes went to Fort Salisbury operations against him, in which fighting, in which he suffered severely, peace was made upon the death by fever of the natives was made. Upon his return to Cape Town Mr. Rhodes was given a public banquet, and a speech was expressed with him. In his speech at the time he spoke with regard to the native plans for railway construction, law, and coinage. About 1895 sent three of Lobengula's sons to be educated at the Cape. In company with Dr. Janssens he went to England in November 1895, and several speeches dealing with the principles of a "United South Africa" were given. He was elected to the Privy Council in February 1896, and in the following year Mr. Rhodes became the Premier of the Cape.

owing to the Panama scandals, M. Ribot became President of the Cabinet in January 1893, and exchanged the portfolio of Foreign Affairs for that of the Interior. He still pursued the policy of Republican concentration, but on February 8 his government was violently attacked by M. Cavaignac, who declared that like its predecessors it was the slave of the Radicals. On February 16, the Chamber passed a vote of confidence in the Government, which was thus able to last a few weeks longer, and to pass a law making the correctional tribunals cognisant of libels in the press against foreign governments or their representatives. On March 30 the Ribot government fell, owing to a disagreement about the budget between the Chamber and the Senate. In January 1895, on the election of M. Faure to the Presidency of the Republic, several attempts were made to form ministries, but without success, until M. Ribot was appealed to and at once chose a Cabinet. On March 17, 1895, the Chamber decided unanimously that M. Ribot's speech on the watchmakers' strike, which was then causing serious trouble, should be placarded all over France. This unusual honour was certainly deserved, for the speech in question brought about the termination of the strike. M. Ribot's statement was referred to by M. Rivet, who made the proposal as to publication, as the speech not merely of an honest man, but of a statesman, and as a model for the whole country in the pacification of social conflicts. The accuracy of this estimate may be gauged by the following extract from M. Ribot's speech: "The State ought to respect the dignity of workmen just as it requires them to respect the principles of authority. . . . In view of the dispute as to whether wages had decreased or not, there is but one course to take—namely, a joint verification of the facts. The dictates of authority must now be superseded by the idea of contract and the fulfilment of engagements, and when we have implanted this idea in the heart of all, we shall have done much to dispel misunderstandings. We are about to verify the disputed point with the workmen. Hear them patiently, and see whether they are in the right. Both sides have appointed delegates, and if they cannot agree I shall decide the question impartially. If the workmen are in the right, wages will be increased. This is the way in which I understand the relations between the State and its workmen, and we shall thus set a grand example of social pacification." This eloquent appeal was naturally interpreted by the Socialists as a capitulation to their own theories, but the claim passed unnoticed.

However, Mr. Ribot's administration met with much adverse criticism. In the following month, Madame Lambert, sister of M. Ribot, met with a fatal accident at Calais, being run over in the street by a train. In October 1895 M. Ribot resigned on the question of the participation of members of his Cabinet in the Financial Syndicate connected with the Southern Railways, and he was succeeded by the Cabinet of M. Bourgeois (q.v.). Since this time M. Ribot has held no office, although he has been often approached when Cabinets have been in the making. His Paris address is 6 Rue de Tournon.

RICHARDS, Sir Frederick William, Admiral of the Fleet, G.C.B., F.R.G.S., First Sea Lord of the Admiralty, was born in November 1833, and entered the navy in January 1848. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1855, Commander in 1860, and Captain in 1866. During the Zulu and Boer Wars, he was Commodore of the British fleet on the West Coast of Africa. He accompanied the Ekowe Relief Column, and was present at the battle of Ginghilo in April 1879, and was awarded the Zulu medal with clasp. He received the C.B. in November of the same year. He took part in the action of Laing's Nek in January 1881, and was shortly afterwards created a K.C.B. Sir Frederick was an Aide-de-Camp to the Queen from June 1879 until he was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in June 1882; the following month he became a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty. He hoisted his flag as Commander-in-Chief on the East Indian Station in May 1885, and also commanded the naval forces which were landed during the Burma Annexation war of 1885-86. He rendered valuable service throughout that campaign, and received the thanks of the Indian Government "for the very complete and prompt manner in which his Excellency placed the whole force under his command at the disposal of the Government of India, and for the admirable manner in which the Naval Brigade was organised and equipped." In 1889 he was appointed a member of a Royal Commission under the chairmanship of the present Duke of Devonshire, upon Army and Navy Administration. In the following year he went to China as Commander-in-Chief on that station. In 1892 Sir Frederick was selected as First Sea Lord of the Admiralty, which position he now holds, and by virtue of this appointment he is practically Commander-in-Chief of the Navy. He was created a G.C.B. in June 1895. In November 1898 he was promoted to the rank of Admiral of the Fleet, in recognition of his distinguished services, the promotion to the existing numbers. He was at the request of the First Lord of the Admiralty promoted to the rank of Admiral until the middle of 1900, 121 Victoria Street, S.W.

RICHMOND, Sir William K.C.B., R.A., son of George A.R.A., D.C.L., was born in 1812, 29, 1843. As a student at the Academy he obtained two medals in 1857; in 1860 he exhibited his two brothers. In 1861 he travelled in Italy, working pictures that were not exhibited. In 1865 he went again to Italy, in Rome, working at sculpture, fresco, and tempera. Between 1865 and 1868 he painted "Procession of Bacchus." He settled in England, and painted portraits and other pictures. He executed for J. S. Hodgson, Esq., Lythe Hill, Haslemere, a series of illustrations "The Life of West" the same time he painted a clock "methews Bound," exhibited in the following spring, with several. Since that time Mr. Richmond has been at the Grosvenor and the Academy abandoned by Thackeray, carried by Night and Death, the Tomb of Agamemnon, "Hercules Prometheus," "The Ten Virgins," "An Audience at Athens," and besides portraits of Holman Hunt, the Bishop of Salisbury, Lord C. Princess Louise, and in 1890 Mr. Wilson and the Dean of St. Paul's. Richmond was elected Slade Professor of Oxford, in the place of Mr. Ruskin, 1878, but resigned the post in 1881. Mr. Ruskin again filled it. He received an honorary M.A. degree, and was Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He has made many studies all over Greece, and Egypt during several successive autumns. He has developed interest in local affairs, from a fog combat the fog and smoke nuisance makes London so hard a place to live. In 1891, being consulted on the subject of the decoration of St. Paul's Cathedral, he submitted designs for some part of the choir, which were accepted. Mr. Richmond here saw his opportunity and determined to employ mosaic made in England and applied by English workmen. Messrs. RICHTER, Hans, Mus. Doc. Oxon., a celebrated conductor of orchestral concerts, was born April 4, 1843, at Raab, in Hungary, where his father was Capell-Meister of the Cathedral. In 1853 he entered the Löwenburg School in Vienna. For three or four years he was a member of the Court Chapel Choir, and in 1859 entered the Conservatorium, studied the horn under Kleinecke, and theory under Sechter. For some time he was horn-player in the orchestra of the Kärnthnerthor Opera. Esser brought him under the notice of Wagner, who took him to Lucerne, and there he made the first fair copy of the score of the "Meistersinger." In 1868 he became conductor at the Hof and National Theatre, Munich. Early in 1871 he went to Pesh as chief conductor of the National Theatre. He first attracted general attention in January 1875, when he conducted a grand orchestral concert in Vienna, and was invited to assume direction of the Court Opera Theatre on the retirement of Herbeck in April of the same year. Previous to this he had been conducting the rehearsal of the "Niebelungen Ring" at Bayreuth, and in 1876 he directed the whole of the rehearsals and performances of the Festival there, and received, at the close of the third set of performances, the Order of Maximilian from the King of Bavaria, and that of the Falcon from the Grand-Duke of Weimar. In 1877 he produced the "Walkyrie" in Vienna, and followed it in 1878 by other portions of the tetralogy. The same year he was made Capell-Meister, and received the Order of Franz Joseph. In 1879 he began the series of Orchestral Concerts in London, which, under his direction, have been annually continued, and have excited much attention. He has also conducted many performances of German operas in London, notably those of Wagner. Dr. Richter has a perfect knowledge of the scores of Beethoven's symphonies and other large works, and conducts them from memory. In 1885 he was chosen

Director of the Birmingham Festival, and in 1893 he received a handsome offer from Chicago, but was prevented from going to the Exposition by the Viennese authorities. In September 1898 he resigned his post as Conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic Society, having suffered from rheumatism in his right arm, and being only able to wield the baton with his left. His successor is Herr Gustave Mahler, Director of the Opera House.

RIDDELL, The Right Rev. Arthur, Roman Catholic Bishop of Northampton, the third son of the late Edward Riddell, of Bootham House, York, by his wife, the Hon. Catharine, sister of the 8th Baron Beaumont, was born in Paris on Sept. 15, 1836, and was educated at St. Gregory's College, Downside, near Bath, and at St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw, near Durham. He was ordained priest in 1859, and his first mission was that of St. Charles's, Hull, where he worked for fourteen years. Upon the death of Canon Walker of Scarborough, in 1873, he was appointed to that mission, where he remained until his elevation to episcopal dignity. In June 1880 he was consecrated Bishop of Northampton, and has laboured so assiduously in his diocese, that the number of his clergy has increased from 34 to 71, and that of the laity from 6000 to about 10,000. Address: Bishop's House, Marriott Street, Northampton.

RIDDELL, Mrs. Charlotte Eliza Lawson, is the youngest child of James Cowan, of Carrickfergus, formerly High Sheriff for the county of that town. She married J. H. Riddell, Esq., a civil engineer, by whose initials she is generally known. Mrs. Riddell is the author of many popular novels, including: "Too Much Alone," "City and Suburb," "World in the Church," "George Geith," "Maxwell Drewitt," "Phemie Keller," "Race for Wealth," "Far above Rubies," "First and Last Love," "Life Assize," "Austin Friars," "Home, Sweet Home," "The Earl's Promise," "Mortomley's Estate," "Above Suspicion," "Her Mother's Darling," "The Mystery in Palace Gardens," "The Senior Partner," "Daisies and Buttercups," "A Struggle for Fame," "Alaric Spenceley," "Susan Drummond," "Bernie Boyle," "Mitre Court," "Miss Gascoigne," "The Nun's Curse," "Princess Sunshine," "A Mad Tour," "A Silent Tragedy," "The Head of the Firm," "The Rusty Sword," "Did He Deserve It?" "A Rich Man's Daughter." The last two appeared in 1897. Address: 3 Bulstrode Road, Hounslow, W.

Hum., second in Mathematics, and Fellow of Balliol College, 1851, Latin Essay and B.D. 1869); ordained Deacon in 1856; was a Tutor of Balliol College 1852-63, Junior Professor of Mathematics at the University 1861-62, Select Preacher 1864 and 1890-91, Second Master of Winchester College 1863-66, and Bishop of Winchester College 1874-94. He was consecrated first Bishop of Southwell in 1884; married, (1) 1858, Mary, who died 1859, daughter of the Rev. George Moberly, D.C.L., 2nd Bp. Salisbury; (2) 1876, Lady Laura Palmer, daughter of the 1st Earl of Selborne. Address: Thurgolden, Southwell, Notts.

RIDGEWAY, The Right Rev. Joseph West, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., Bishop of Ceylon, was born in 1844, son of the late Rev. Joseph Ridding, Tunbridge Wells. He entered the army as ensign in 1861, attained rank of Colonel in 1885. He served in the Afghan War in 1879, his services several times acknowledged in despatches. He was Under Secretary to the Government of India, 1880-84, in which latter year he was appointed Assistant-Commissioner of the Demarcation of the N.W. Frontier of Afghanistan, for which he received thanks of her Majesty's Government. In 1885 he was appointed Commissioner of the Delimitation of the Afghan frontier between the Heri Rud and the Oxus. In 1887 Sir West Ridgeway filled the post of Under Secretary at Dublin Castle. In 1892 was sent as Envoy-Extraordinary on a special mission to the Sultan of Morocco. From 1893 to 1895 he was Governor of the Isle of Man, and in 1896 was appointed to his present post. He married Lina, daughter of John Bewick, in 1881. Address: Colombo, Ceylon.

The Right Hon. Sir John Lubbock, Bart., D.L., J.P., M.P., of Appeal, is the son of the late Sir John Lubbock, Bart., Esq., of Halton, Northumberland, daughter of Sir John Lubbock, Esq., and was born in 1834. He received his education at Liverpool College, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was the second Wrangler, and Smith's Prizeman of his year; M.A., 1859. He was a Fellow of Trinity from 1856 to 1866, and in 1860 was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. In 1881 he became a Q.C., and a Benchet in 1884. He was Junior Counsel to the Treasury from 1875 to 1881, and in December 1885 entered Parliament as Liberal Member for the North, or Wisbeach Division of Cambridgeshire. He sat for this constituency till June 1886. On July 11, 1892, he re-entered Parliament as Gladstonian Liberal member for Forfarshire, and was appointed Solicitor-General in August, at the same time receiving the honour of knighthood. In 1894 he was appointed Attorney-General, and in 1894 was raised to the Bench as Lord Justice of Appeal. Addresses: 11 New Square, Lincoln's Inn; and Athenæum, &c.

RIGG, The Rev. James Harrison, D.D., was born on Jan. 16, 1821, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, being the second son of the Rev. John Rigg, a Wesleyan minister who was eminent in his day. He received his education at Old Kingswood School, where he was afterwards a teacher, and in 1845 he entered the Wesleyan ministry. He was one of the leading writers for the Biblical Review (1846-49). For many years the Wesleyan Conference was more indebted for the defence and exposition of its proceedings and principles to this young minister than to any other person. In 1865 he was elected by the Conference to be Chairman of the Kent District, and in 1866 a member of the "Hundred," or the "Legal Conference." In 1868 he was elected Principal of the Wesleyan Training College, a position which he still holds. In 1878 Dr. Rigg was chosen President of the Wesleyan Conference. His name is associated with the admission of laymen in the Conference that year, and with the Thanksgiving Fund, which has realised over £300,000 for Methodist work. In 1892 he received the rare honour of a second election to the Presidency of the Conference. For many years (till 1896) Dr. Rigg was Chairman of the "Second London District Synod" of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. He was one of the original members of the London School Board, on which he represented Westminster for six years. In 1886, 1887, and 1888, he was a member of the Royal Commission on Elementary Education. He has written "The Principles of Wesleyan Methodism," 1850; "Connexionalism and Congregational Independency," 1851; and "The Connexional Economy of Wesleyan Methodism," 1879; "Modern Anglican Theology," 1857 (3rd edit., enlarged 1879); "Essays for the Times on Ecclesiastical and Social Subjects," 1866; "The Churchmanship of John Wesley," now in its 3rd edit.; "The Living Wesley as he was in his Youth and in his Prime," now published in an enlarged form as "The Centenary Life of Wesley," 1891; "National Education in its Social Conditions and Aspects, and Public Elementary Schools, British and Foreign," 1873; "Discourses and Addresses on Leading Truths of Religion and Philosophy," 1880; "The Sabbath and the Sabbath Law before and after Christ," 1881; "Was Wesley a High Churchman?" and "Is Modern Methodism Wesleyan Methodism? or Wesleyan Methodism and the Church of England," and "Church Organisation: Primitive and Protestant," 1887 (2nd edit., much enlarged, 1891; 3rd edit., revised and again greatly enlarged, 1897); "Oxford High Anglicanism and its Chief Leaders," 1895. Dr. Rigg was formerly English correspondent of the New Orleans Christian Advocate (1851), and of the New York Christian Advocate (1858-76). He has written for the Wesleyan Magazine, the Quarterly, Contemporary, and International Reviews, and has contributed articles on Methodism to the new edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He has for many years been the editor of the London Quarterly Review, which is the quarterly literary organ of the Wesleyan Methodists. Throughout his whole course he has held, as an educationist, a position opposed to secularism and equally opposed to sectarian exclusiveness. Addresses: Westminster College, 139 Horseferry Road, S.; and 79 Brixton Hill, S.W.

RILEY, John Athelstan Lawrie, is the only son of John Riley, barrister, of an ancient Yorkshire stock, the De Rileys, and was born in London on Aug. 10, 1858. He was educated at Eton and at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he took his M.A. in 1884. Not being called upon to put his hand to the plough, on leaving the University he travelled extensively in the East, visiting Turkey and Persia, and especially familiarising himself with the wild and little-known district called Kurdistan. Having been an eye-witness of the sufferings of the Christians of Eastern Turkey at the hands of the Kurds, he has more than once assisted in exposing the horrors of Turkish misrule. One result of his travels has been the introduction amongst the Christian population of North-Western Persia of a system of education which has been very successful, whilst he practically laid the foundation of what is now known as the Archbishop of Canterbury's Mission to the Assyrian Christians. He is a Fellow of the Geographical Society; a member of the London Diocesan Conference; a member of the House of Laymen of the Diocese of Exeter; and Honorary Secretary of the Church Education and Visitation Defence Union for the Metropolitan Diocese, the founding of which he took a leading part. He was a member of the London Board from 1891 to 1897, was a member of the Board of Education. As member of the Board he was a prominent champion of Anglican education, published in 1897 "Athena, the Guardian of the Monks," and has written many pamphlets and many articles on educational subjects and on the East, and travel. Some of these have appeared in the Nineteenth Century. In 1887 he married the eldest daughter of the Right Hon. and Rev. Viscount North. Address: 2 Kensington Palace Gardens, W.

RINGER, Sidney, M.D., F.R.S., was born in 1836, his father being in business in Norwich. He was educated at Dr. Brewer's School, and at St. John's College, London, where he became Professor of Materia Medica and Botany, and Professor of Medicine, and holds the Chair of Clinical Medicine. He has been Assistant-Physician at St. George's Hospital, and is now at the Children's Hospital, Ormond Street. He has been Emeritus Professor of the University of London and of the College of Physicians of London. Hon. Member of the Pharmacological Society and New York Medical Society, and Corresponding Member of the Academy of Medicine, Paris. He has published "Handbook of Therapeutics," 2nd edit.; "Temperature in Phthisis," and besides contributing numerous papers to the Physiological Journal and medical journals. Addresses: 15 Cavendish Square, W.; and Leestingham, S. Lincolnshire.

RIPON, Marquis of, The Hon. George Frederick Samuel Robinson, P.C., K.G., G.C.S.I., C.I.E., D.C.L. (Hon. Oxford), Litt.D. (Hon. Toria), F.R.S., Bart., long known as Lord Grey and Ripon, is the only son of Frederick John, 1st Earl of Ripon, known by his original title of Viscount Goderich, which he bore when he held the post of Premier for a few months in 1827, and succeeded to his father's title by Lady Sarah Albina Louisa Hobart, child of Robert, 4th Earl of Bucklebury. He was born in London on Jan. 28, 1859, and to those of his father's title, 3rd Earl de Grey, November 14, 1849. He began his political career as a special mission to Brazil in 1849. At the General Election in to the House of Commons by the death of Viscount Goderich as well, and continued to sit for Ripon until 1853. In that year he was elected for Huddersfield, where he was winning the seat for the first time by a majority of eighty. At the general election in 1857 he was returned for the county of Yorkshire without opposition. In June 1859, the year in which the Reform Bill was introduced to the Upper House, he was elected him for the post of Secretary for War, and in February 1860 the accession of Sir George C. Lewis made Under-Secretary for the Colonies on the death of Sir G. C. Lewis. In 1863, his lordship, who was noted for his subordination and efficiency in his subordinate offices, took the place of his chief, Lord Russell, for War, together with a cabinet. He remained at the Secretaryship for three years, and in 1866, when Sir Charles Wood, then Secretary of the Colonies, withdrew from office, he was appointed Secretary for India. On Mr. Gladstone's accession to office in December 1868, he resigned that office in 1869. He was created a Knight of the Bath in 1869. In 1871 he acted as High Commissioner for the Treaty of Washington, and in recognition of the services he had rendered in that capacity he was, soon after, promoted to the rank of Viscount of Ripon. His lordship, who was also a Justice of the Peace for North and West Ridings of Yorkshire, and for the county of Durham, was created an honorary D.C.L. in 1870, and on April 23 in that year he was elected as Grand-Master of the Grand Lodge of England, in succession to Lord Shaftesbury. In the autumn of 1874 he received a communication from the Marquis of Ripon, signed by the Marquis of Ripon, in which he expressed his surprise and heightened the circumstance that he was not assigning any reason for his resignation. A few days afterwards, however, that his lordship had been a member of the Catholic Church, which, it was known, had condemned Free-Trade and other oath-bound societies. The resignation of the Marquis into the Catholic Church took place at the end of the month, Sept. 7, 1874, and his resignation gave rise to much comment in the public press, both here and on the Continent. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to office, the Marquis of Ripon was appointed Secretary of India. He arrived at Ripon, in 1880, and was installed in his office. On June 18 a large meeting was held in Exeter Hall to protest against the appointment of a Roman Catholic to the Viceroyalty of India. As Viceroy Lord Ripon excited much diversity of opinion by his policy, which was directed towards extending the rights of natives of India, and, in certain directions, towards limiting the privileges of Europeans. The excitement caused by the famous "Ilbert Bill" was the chief instance of this; and in a word it may be said that there never was a Viceroy so unpopular among Anglo-Indians, or so popular among natives. Lord Ripon's departure was the occasion of the most extraordinary manifestations in his favour on the part of the Hindoo population of Bengal and Bombay. In Mr. Gladstone's short "Home Rule" administration Lord Ripon was First Lord of the Admiralty. On the return of his party to power in 1892 he was appointed Colonial Secretary. In 1895 he was Mayor of Ripon. The Marquis was elected in 1882 President of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. He married, in April 1851, Henrietta Anne Theodosia, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Vyner; she has been a Lady of the Bedchamber to the Princess of Wales. He has surviving issue, Frederick Oliver, born Jan. 29, 1852, now Earl de Grey, heir to the marquise. Addresses: 9 Chelsea Embankment, S.W.; Studley Royal, Ripon; and Athenæum.

RISTICH, John, a Serbian statesman, born at Kragujevac in 1801, began his studies in Germany and continued them in Paris. Under the government of Prince Karadjordjevic he was appointed Secretary and afterwards head of a department in the office of the Minister of the Interior. Michael Karadjordjevic, on his return in 1858, promoted M. Ristich secretary to a legation, where he sent to Constantinople, and for a later period the same from a mission, him as the representative of Serbia at the Sublime Porte. Searched and he been installed in his post. However, when the crisis commenced which culminated in the bombardment of Belgrade, 1872, M. Ristich extricated himself with such ability from the difficulties which ensued, that five years later (1877) he succeeded in obtaining the evacuation of all the Serbian fortresses occupied up to that time by the Turkish troops. This service gained for him the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, but he soon resigned it in consequence of his inability to agree with Prince Michael on certain questions of detail. He was present as the representative of Prince Michael at the capture of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro. While on his way back from Cetinje he learned the news that Prince Michael had been assassinated (July 10, 1868), and had been succeeded by his grand-nephew, Prince Milan. The young Prince was then pursuing his studies in Paris, and the provisional government which had been established sent M. Ristich to that capital to escort him to Servia. On the Prince's arrival at Belgrade the Grand National Skupstschina was convoked, and nominated a Council of Regency, composed of three members, to govern the country during the Prince's minority. M. Blasnavatz, M. Ristich, and M. Gavrilovitch formed this Council, which discharged its functions till 1872, when the Prince attained his majority. This Council then became a Ministry, in which M. Ristich held the portfolio for Foreign Affairs, and on the decease of his colleague, Col. Blasnavatz, he became President of the Council. He afterwards withdrew from public life for two years, until the insurrection occurred in Herzegovina, when he became Minister for Foreign Affairs. In May 1876 he and his friends returned to office, which they had been obliged to resign eight months previously, in consequence of the diplomatic pressure of the Cabinets of Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg. He held the office of Foreign Minister during the disastrous war with Turkey (1877), in which the Servians were thoroughly defeated. In 1878 he was sent to the Congress of Berlin, where he successfully pleaded the RIVETT-CARNAC, Colonel John Henry, C.I.E., V.D., F.S.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, was born in London in 1839, and is the second son of the late Admiral Rivett-Carnac, and Maria, daughter of J. S. Davis, R.E., F.R.S. He was educated abroad, and at the East India College, Haileybury. His career in the Bengal Civil Service was long and distinguished, and extended from 1859 to 1894. During this period he was Advising Secretary to Sir Richard Temple in the Central Provinces, Commissioner of Cotton and Commerce with the Government of India, Special Commissioner in the Bengal Famine of 1874, Opium Agent, and raised and commanded the Ghazipur Light Horse and Volunteer Rifles. He was made C.I.E. in 1878. He has written various important reports on the Indian Cotton Trade, Indian Railways, Antiquities, &c., especially on archaic rock-markings. He is a Fellow of the University of Bombay, F.S.A., and Fellow or Hon. Fellow of various antiquarian societies, and is a Knight Grand Commander of the Austrian Order of Francis Joseph, and North Star of Sweden. He married a daughter of General Sir H. M. Durand, R.E. Address: 40 Green Street, Park Lane, W., &c.

RIVIÈRE, Briton, R.A., D.C.L., animal painter, was born in London, Aug. 14, 1840, being the youngest son of Mr. W. Rivière, who was head of the drawing-school at Cheltenham College, and afterwards a teacher of drawing at Oxford, and Ann, daughter of Joseph Jarvis, Warwickshire. He found in his father an experienced and able master, under whom he studied during the nine years he was at Cheltenham, and subsequently at Oxford. While studying art at the latter place, the influences, other than artistic, by which he was always surrounded, prevailed to turn his attention to classical and other scholarly matters; he entered the University, took his B.A. degree in 1867, and that of M.A. in 1873. The first pictures he exhibited were home rural scenes, as "Rest from Labour," and "Sheep on the Cotswold," in the Academy Gallery in 1858; and, in the next year, "On the Road to Gloucester Fair." From that date till 1864 he was absent from the Academy as an exhibitor, but in the last-mentioned year he sent "Iron Bars" and "Romeo and Juliet." Among his subsequent works are: "The Poacher's Nurse," "Strayed from the Flock," a dead lamb lying in the snow, and "The Long Sleep," 1866; "Fox and Geese" (exhibited in the Exhibition of Water-colour Painters at the

He had been twenty-three times mentioned in despatches before the Afghan war, during which campaign he was eight times thanked by the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief in India. To the Nineteenth Century for November 1882 he contributed an article on the "Present State of the Army," thus supplying the sequel to an interesting speech which he had delivered at the Mansion House about two years before. He was created a peer in January 1892, under the title of Lord Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford. In April 1893, on resigning his command, he left India for England, and was given a brilliant farewell, and received an equally brilliant reception at home. Upon his arrival, a G.C.S.I. was conferred upon him. During 1895 his Lordship was promoted to the rank of Field-Marshal, and succeeded Viscount Wolseley as Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland. He was shortly afterwards admitted to the Privy Council in Ireland, and also received the Order of St. Patrick. Lord Roberts is an ardent advocate of what is known as the "Forward Policy" in Indian affairs, and in March of 1898 he delivered before the House of Lords a very able speech in support of his views with regard to the pacification of the various frontier tribes, and also the prevention of encroachments by Russia in Afghanistan and adjacent territories. His lordship pointed out that the "Forward Policy" was an endeavour to extend British influence over, and establish law and order on, that part of the Indian border where anarchy, murder, and robbery reigned supreme. Moreover, it was necessary to secure the allegiance of the turbulent tribes, owing to the proximity of Russia, who would inevitably invade India, if Afghanistan ever passed into her possession. It was of paramount importance to obtain complete control of the Khyber and other passes, so as to be in a position to check any advance over the great Hindu Kush barrier. "That barrier," said his lordship, "Russia must never be allowed to cross." The speech was greatly appreciated, as it was felt that nobody could speak with higher authority upon the matter than Lord Roberts. He published in 1895 "The Rise of Wellington," which was followed in 1897 by "Forty-one Years in India." The latter work obtained a phenomenal success, and passed through many editions in a few months. He is an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge and Dublin. Lord Roberts married, in 1859, Nora Henrietta, a daughter of Captain Bews, and his son and next, the Hon. Frederick H. S. Roberts, is a Lieutenant of the King's Royal Rifle Corps. Addresses: Royal Hospital, Dublin; and Athensam.

ROBERTS, Frederick Thomas, M.D., F.R.C.P., obtained his medical education at University College, London, where he is now Professor of Medicine, as well as being Professor of Clinical Medicine and Physician at University College Hospital. He obtained the Gold Medal for Anatomy and Physiology at the first M.B. Examination, London, in 1890. He was formerly Physician at Liverpool Northern Hospital, and Lecturer at Liverpool School of Medicine, and now, in addition to the posts above mentioned, is Consulting Physician to the Brompton Hospital, &c., Fellow of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society and Medical Society of London, and Member of other Medical Societies. He was Assistant-Editor of Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," and has contributed largely to that work, to Reynolds's "System," and to the medical journals. His best-known work is "A Handbook of the Theory and Practice of Medicine," 9th edit. Address: 102 Harley Street, W.

ROBERTS, Isaac, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., F.G.S., was born in Denbighshire, North Wales, in the year 1829. A large part of his life has been devoted to practical investigations in Geology, Microscopy, Spectrum Analysis, Astronomy, and other kindred branches of science. He is the author of several papers on geological and astronomical subjects, amongst which are investigations of the physical conditions affecting the circulation of the underground water and the filtering and hygroscopic properties of triassic sandstone. He has for several years (by the aid of self-recording mechanical contrivances designed by himself for tracing continuous diagrammatic curves) studied the movements in the underground water which are caused by capillarity, by rainfall, by variations in atmospheric pressure, and by solar and lunar attraction. He has made exhaustive experiments by means of specially designed weighing machines, to determine the vertical and lateral pressures of wheat, barley, oats, Indian corn, linseed, sand, gravel, and gun shot, when stored in cells up to eighty feet in height. Some of the results of these investigations are published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society. For several years he has been pursuing stellar photography with powerful instruments specially constructed for the purpose, and has succeeded in adding considerably to the knowledge of the stars, clusters, and nebulae. In 1885 he commenced to chart by photography in the northern hemisphere where he had been a year and a half. The French astronomer that the charting of the stars done internationally, and by instruments of a kind of Mr. Roberts' therefore, relation to special researches on and nebulae, with his own photographic plates. They have been regarded with interest and admiration, and have been exhibited. He has also and a machine by which they have been photographed, and he engraved directly with on copper plates for the printing: the machine is also measuring the positions of the stars. In 1877 he was Fellow of the Geological Society, the Royal Astronomical Society. In 1890 he was elected a Royal Society, and in 1891 Doctor of Sciences was conferred on him by the University of London. He published a volume of "Photographs of Stars, Star Nebulae," which is a reliable time of the objects as they appeared in the sky on the day when the respective plates were taken. In 1895 he was awarded the Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society, and has served on the Council of the Society for several years. A field, Crowborough, Sussex.

ROBERTS, Morley, was born in London on Dec. 20, the son of W. H. Roberts, a tending inspector of income, educated at Bedford Grammar School, Owens College, Manchester. He has seen much of the savage side of existence before the mast in merchant ships, in the Austral Western States of America, the Islands, &c. The results of his experiences, which always, or less manual labour and hardship, he has embodied in and virile novels, which are known as "Western Avernus," "Low Relief," 1890; "The Sea-faring," 1891; "King Bill," 1891; "The Mate of the 1892; "The Reputation of 1892; "The Purification of 1894; "Red Earth," 1894; "Of Instinct," and "The Ad Ship's Doctor," 1895; that a book on Eastern life, "The collaboration with Max Mo "Maurice Quain," 1897; "

RS, Samuel, F.R.S., mathematician, son of the Rev. Griffith Roberts, many years minister of the Presbyterian Chapel at Kirkstead, Louth, Lincolnshire, was born in 1827. He received his education at Queen Elizabeth's School, Horncastle, and subsequently to Manchester New College, in Manchester. In 1849 he obtained a degree of London in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy and received the Gold Medal. He entered the legal profession, and was Solicitor in 1853. After an interval of years, Mr. Roberts resumed mathematical studies; and, having returned to London, became in 1865 a member of the London Mathematical Society, published in the same year. He was several years Treasurer, and has held the offices of Vice-President and President, 1880-82, of that Society. In 1885 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, and has accepted a few early articles of an original kind, his writings have related to various mathematical subjects. They are contained in the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and various other English mathematical journals. In 1885 he was called to services to mathematical Council of the London Mathematical Society awarded to Mr. Roberts an Honorary Medal in 1896. Address: 11, Hill, Hampstead, N.W.

RS-AUSTEN, Professor Sir William, K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., Assay-Master, was born in 1811, the son of George and Maria Austen. His father's ancestry were the family of Chandler, which with the Huises and Austens, is among their more distinguished members the learned scholar, Canon of Canterbury. In 1841, at the request of his uncle, the late Sir John P. Austen, of Haffenden and Kent, Mr. Roberts obtained to take the name of Austen. He was appointed Assay-Master at the Royal School of Mines in 1861, and, on becoming a Mining Engineer, obtained the Associate-School, the late Prof. Graham, of the Mint, secured his service, he conducted a remarkable series of researches, and on Prof. Graham's death in 1869, he succeeded to one of the appointments which Prof. Graham had held—that of Assayer to the Mint—being subsequently, in 1882, entrusted with all the duties of the Queen's Assay-Master. In 1880, on the retirement of the late Dr. Percy, F.R.S., at the request of the then Lord President of the Council, Mr. Roberts-Austen was appointed to the Chair of Metallurgy at the Royal School of Mines, a post which he still holds in addition to his office at the Mint. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875, and is the author of several papers, mostly relating to metals, published in the Philosophical Transactions and elsewhere. He was one of the founders of the Physical Society of London, of which he was for some time Secretary, and afterwards a Vice-President. He is one of the two Honorary General Secretaries of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and a Vice-President of the Iron and Steel Institute. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales appointed him a Member of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition, 1885; and he served on the British Executive Council of the 1889 Paris Exhibition. He was chosen Vice-President of the International Mining and Metallurgical Congress in Paris; and received from the President of the French Republic the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He was made a C.B. in 1888, and the University of Durham conferred upon him its honorary degree of D.C.L. in 1897. He received from her Majesty the Queen, in the same year, the Jubilee medal. He was created K.C.B. at the New Year, 1899. Addresses: Royal Mint, Tower Hill, E.; Blatchfeld, Chilworth, Guildford; and Athenæum.

ROBERTSON, Rev. Archibald, D.D., Principal of King's College, London, was born at Sywell Rectory, Northampton, on June 29, 1853, and is the eldest son of the late George S. Robertson, M.A., grandson of Dr. Archibald Robertson, F.R.S., of Northampton. He was educated at Bradfield College, Berks, and Trinity College, Oxford (first class Lit. Hum. and B.A. 1876; M.A. 1879; D.D. 1898); Fellow of Trinity College, 1876-86 (Dean, 1879-83); Principal of Bishop Hatfield's Hall, Durham, 1883-97; Hon. D.D., Durham, 1893. In 1897, on the retirement of Dr. Wace, he was appointed Principal of King's College, London. He has published an edition of Athanasius's "De Incarnatione" (2nd edit., 1893); a translation of the same (2nd edit., 1891); "Prolegomena," &c., to Athanasius with revised translation of principal works, 1892; and is a contributor to the Classical Review, &c., to Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," 2nd edit., 1893;

Clark's "Dictionary of the Bible," 1898; and editor of Methuen's series of Handbooks of Theology. He is Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Bristol, and Vice-Chairman of King's College Hospital. In 1885 he married Eleanor, daughter of the Rev. Charles Noel Mann, late Rector of Mawgan-in-Meneage, &c., Cornwall.

ROBERTSON, Lieutenant-Colonel Donald, C.S.I., President of Mysore and Chief Commissioner of Coorg, was born in Ireland on June 24, 1847, and arrived in India as Ensign in the Scots Fusiliers in 1865. ROBINS, Elizabeth (Mrs. C. E. Raimond), actress, is an American by birth, and has made her name as an interpreter of Ibsen's characters. After making her early appearances on the stage in the United States, she reached London in the spring of 1889. Here she played the part of Mrs. Errol in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" (Opera Comique, March), and in July appeared at the same theatre as Martha Bernick in "The Pillars of Society," by Ibsen. Subsequently she played Louisa Brown in "Dr. Bill" (Avenue, 1890), and in January 1891 returned to the Ibsen drama, and appeared at Terry's as Mrs. Linden in "A Doll's House." She now courageously adventured upon a series of Ibsen performances in conjunction with Miss Lea at the Vaudeville. Here she won great applause as Mrs. Hedda Tesman in "Hedda Gabler." After playing Constance in "The Trumpet Call" at the Adelphi, she again charmed the literary, as well as the merely Ibsenite public as Hilda in "The Master Builder," produced at the Trafalgar Square Theatre, and several times repeated (1893). Subsequently she appeared as Rebecca West in "Rosmersholm" at the Opera Comique (May), and played as Agnes in "Brand" at the same theatre in June. These were her great Ibsen years, and she has since only appeared in Norse drama in London to impersonate Astra in "Little Eyolf" in 1896. Other parts taken by her during recent years have been in "A Woman's Revenge" (Adelphi, 1893), the Countess Zicka in the revival of "Diplomacy" (Garrick, 1893), and Mrs. Lessingham in the play of that name (Garrick, 1894). In the autumn of 1894 she took her Ibsen plays on tour. In 1898 appeared her novel, "The Open Question," which was published anonymously, and created a stir.

ROBINSON, Miss A. Mary F. See DARMESTETER, MME.

ROBINSON, Sir John Charles, born at Nottingham on Dec. 16, 1824, eldest son of Alfred Robinson, of Nottingham, formerly Art Superintendent of the South Kensington Museum, at present holds office in her Majesty's household as Crown Surveyor of Pictures, is an F.S.A., honorary member of the Academy of St. Luke in Rome, Florence, Bologna, Madrid, Lisbon, &c., and a Knight Commander of the Order of Isabella la Catolica and of Santiago of Spain and Portugal. After several years' study as an architect, Mr. Robinson proceeded to Paris and became a pupil of the eminent historical painter, Drilling. On his return he received an appointment to the Government School of Design as Master of the School of Art at Hanley, Staffordshire Potteries 1847. In 1852 he was called to London to assist in the development of the newly-created Science and Art Department, founded under the auspices of the Prince Consort, and in 1853 the organization of the Art Museum at Marlborough House, afterwards transferred to South Kensington, was entrusted to him. In this post he remained till 1860, and the country owes to him the acquisition of an immense mass of varied art treasures gleaned from every part of Europe, where, especially in Italy and in the Spanish peninsula, a great portion of every successive year was spent in long expeditions, during which the remotest corners of these countries were minutely explored. The system of circulating objects of art from the central museum to provincial institutions was, moreover, first suggested and carried into effect by Mr. Robinson in the early years of his tenure of office. In 1862 he suggested and carried out the special loan exhibition of art treasures in connection with the General Industrial Exhibition of that year: an example which has since been repeatedly followed, but perhaps never surpassed in interest or importance, in France, Germany, and other Continental countries. In association with the Marquis d'Azeglio, Italian Minister in London, and the late Baron Marochetti, he founded, and for many years directed as honorary secretary, the well-known Fine Arts Club, now the Burlington Fine Arts Club. In 1869 he resigned his appointment at South Kensington on a retiring pension, but he has not ceased to render from year to year disinterested services to that institution, in the promotion of notable acquisitions and the formation of special loan collections, &c. In 1881, on the resignation of Mr. Redgrave, R.A., the Queen confided the post of Crown Surveyor of Pictures to Mr. Robinson, the office being that of art adviser in the Lord Chamberlain's Department, and comprising the supervision and control not only of the pictures, but of nearly all the art treasures of the Crown, in the various royal palaces, including the Hampton Court Gallery. Among the great number of his published works in divers branches of art may be specified the catalogue of the Soulagues Collection, that of the Art Treasures Exhibition in 1862, and of the Italian Sculpture collections of the South Kensington Museum, all preceded by original introductory essays. In 1870, at the request of the Oxford University authorities, he wrote "A Critical Account of the Drawings of Michel Angelo and Raphael in the Vatican and an elaborate work, which has received general recognition in all parts of the Continent. An edition of Portuguese School of Painting taken on the basis of his researches in the country, by His Majesty the King of Portugal, was translated into English and issued by the Lisbon Academy. It remains one of the most valuable contributions made to the art of Portugal. Very numerous in the shape of letters and occasional branches of art have been a series of years been published by Charles Robinson in the Times, the Nineteenth Century, and other journals. Mr. Robinson is garden and woodland editor of the Field. Address: 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

ROBINSON, Sir William, G.C.M.G., Governor of Hong-Kong, was born in 1836, and is the son of the late Rev. J. B. Robinson. In 1854 he became a clerk in the Colonial Office, and having been private secretary to Lord Blackford and Mr. Cardwell, he was appointed to represent the Colonial Office on the East African Slave-Trade Commission, 1869, and the Vienna Exhibition, 1873. He was Governor of the Bahama Isles, 1874-80; of the Windward Isles, 1881-84; of Barbados, 1884; of Trinidad, 1885; and of Hong-Kong, 1891-97. In 1887 he received the thanks of the Government for the satisfactory settlement of the Venezuelan difficulty arising out of the Henrietta and Josephina cases.

ROBSON, Professor A. W. Mayo, F.R.C.S., Professor of Surgery at the Yorkshire College, Victoria University, was born at Filey, on April 17, 1853, and is the eldest son of the late T. Binnington Robson of Filey. He was educated at a private school, and at the Wesley College, and Yorkshire College. He studied medicine at Leeds, where he is now Senior Surgeon at the General Infirmary, and Lecturer on Practical Surgery and Pathology at the Leeds School of Medicine. He holds a number of important posts in his own district, and in London is Member of Council, and has been Hunterian Professor of Surgery and Pathology at the Royal Coll. Surgeons, Eng. He is also a Fellow of the Royal Med. Chir. Society, and other leading societies, and is President of the British Gynaecological Society, and of various Yorkshire societies. He has been Hon. President of the International Congress of Gynaecology. His publications include "On Gall-Stones and their Treatment," a subject on which, amongst others, he has written largely in Clifford Allbutt's "System of Medicine," and in the leading reviews and transactions, &c. Address: 7 Park Square, Leeds.

ROBSON, William Snowdon, Q.C., M.P., is the third surviving son of the late Robert Robson, J.P. of Newcastle, and was born in 1852. He was educated at Dr. Bruce's School, Newcastle, and at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge (B.A.), graduating in the Moral Science Tripos, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. He joined the North-Eastern Circuit, and took silk in 1892. In 1895 he was appointed Recorder of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. From 1885 to 1896 he sat for the Bow and Bromley Division of the Tower Hamlets, and was elected for South Shields in 1895, a constituency which he represents in the Liberal interest. Addresses: 60 Chester Square, S.W.; Newcastle-upon-Tyne, &c.

ROBY, Henry John, M.P., J.P., LL.D. Edin. and Camb., is a native of Tamworth where his father was a solicitor, and where he was born, Aug. 12, 1830. When he was twelve years of age his family removed to Bridgnorth, and for seven years he was a day-scholar at the grammar school there. In 1849 he went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, and was elected scholar and exhibitioner of the College, graduating B.A. in 1853, being first in the first class of the Classical Tripos. As senior classic he was elected the following year to a Fellowship at St. John's, and subsequently was appointed a classical lecturer. He remained at Cambridge until 1861, filling, among other offices, that of Secretary to the Committee of the Cambridge Local University examinations, and that of one of the examiners for the Law Tripos, the Classical Tripos, and the Moral Science Tripos. Mr. Roby took an active part in promoting reform in his college, and in the university, under the Cambridge University Act, and published a pamphlet on the subject, "Remarks on College Reform," 1858. Upon leaving Cambridge, he became an under-master at Dulwich College, and while there (1861-65) he published his Elementary Latin Grammar. From 1864 to 1868, under the appointment of the Crown, he was successively Secretary to the Schools Inquiry Commis-

d life as so many other French littérateurs have done. His office duties light, he employed a good deal of spare time in doing odd jobs for the newspapers. Slowly he crept into notice, the considerable assistance of an editorial duel, and became somewhat famous as a bold writer, even daring to attack the Emperor himself. He was towards one of the writers of the Revue, and his articles in this journal led to his appointment as sub-inspector of Arts in Paris, a post he resigned in order to devote himself wholly to journalism. After contributing to various papers, he joined the staff of the Figaro at an annual salary of 30,000 francs; but in 1865 retired to save the journal from prosecution, and established the Lanterne, whose weekly issues reached a circulation of over 1,150,000. The paper was, however, soon suppressed on account of violent attacks upon the Imperial Government, and its author was condemned to three years' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 10,000 francs. M. Rochefort fled to London and continued to publish the Lanterne till August 1869, when on his return to the Legislative body he was sentenced to return to Paris. In the same year he founded the Marseillaise, in which Victor Noir was a collaborator. The attacks in this journal on Prince Louis Bonaparte led to the assassination of Victor Noir by the Prince; the paper was seized, and M. Rochefort committed to the prison of Sainte Pélagie. On the proclamation of the Republic in September 1870 he was released by the mob, and for a short time connected with the Government of National Defence. He was president of the Commission of Barricades during the siege of Paris, and in Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected one of the representatives of Paris in the National Assembly. During that time he was the editor of the Revue d'Ordre, in the columns of which he justified the Commune, and vehemently assailed the Government of Versailles, and Thiers personally. On May 19, 1871, while endeavouring to escape from Paris, he was taken, tried by court-martial, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. In September 1872 he was temporarily released to enable him to legitimise his children by marrying their mother, who was dying. Subsequently M. Rochefort was transported to New Caledonia, but effected his escape in 1874. He returned to Europe and attempted to revive the Revue in London and Geneva, but without success. The general amnesty of July 11, 1880, permitted M. Rochefort to return to Paris, where he at once resumed the direction of a new Radical paper, L'Intransigeant, and renewed his attacks upon all the Governments in turn. He has since been elected for Paris, but Parliament was irksome to him, and he resigned. In 1886 he proposed to take part in the workmen's riots in Belgium, but the Belgian authorities would not permit him to cross the frontier. He was a staunch partisan of General Boulanger, and came to England with him in 1889, having escaped through Belgium from France. Until the beginning of 1895 he resided in London, when he returned to Paris under an amnesty. His reception in his native city was one of royal character. He was welcomed by thousands, and received most flattering ovations. During the course of litigation between Rochefort, as editor, and M. Vaughan, manager of the L'Intransigeant, in which the latter gained the day, it became known in December 1896 that for the last seven years Rochefort had received no less than 700,000 francs as editor and 1,700,000 francs in dividends on his shares, or altogether 342,000 francs a year. Commenting on this, the Débats observed: "The war against capital is a good business, but it does not enrich all who take part in it. It is not stated that M. Rochefort has ever had the idea of admitting his compositors and messengers to a share in his ample profits." Always eager for notoriety, he violently assailed Dreyfus and those who supported him in his desire for justice; by the praises he lavished on the army, one would never think he had written against it just as heartily. He joined the anti-Jewish party, of which he is a prominent supporter. M. Rochefort is a great connoisseur of all the arts, and was one of the first to appreciate Goya.

ROCHESTER, Dean of. See HOLE, THE VERY REV. SAMUEL REYNOLDS.

ROCHESTER, Mark. See KENT, WILLIAM CHARLES MARK.

ROD, Edouard, Swiss novelist and critic, was born at Nyon in 1857, and was educated at Berne and Berlin. Early in life he came to Paris, and first took up literary criticism, becoming chief editor of La Revue Contemporaine in 1884. In 1887 he was named Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Geneva. His miscellaneous works include "Apropos de l'Assommoir," 1879; "Les Allemands à Paris," 1880; and "Giacomo Leopardi," 1888. But he is chiefly known as a novelist, and he has written quite a series of psychological analyses imbued with the pessimism of Schopenhauer, the analysis of Baudelaire and the mystical theories of Wagner, among these may be named: "Maurice Maeterlinck," 1911; "La Chante de Miss Faust," 1912; "Katharina Lenhoff," 1914; "Le Roman," 1915; "Nouvelles Romances," 1916, and studies on Dante and Petrarca, 1917. In the same year a "Lectures" series of 107 symphonical notes appeared, he wrote the theories and practice of music in the and argues that the essence of music is the sacrifice of the individual to the social. In March 1918, "Le Journal de la Nation," and delivered a lecture on contemporary French fiction, stating that the novel was the most complete and strongest literary expression of French genius. He is a chevalier of the Legion of Honour and his Paris address is 27, Rue Arlanger.

RODAYS Pierre Fernand de, editor of the Paris Journal, was born at Lutetia, Seine-et-Oise, Nov. 10, 1815, and coming to Paris to study law took to journalism instead. He started by some articles in the Le Monde, and edited a half-yearly paper called Le Journal, under the pseudonym of Le Journal, subsequently he started the Journal de la Nation, and during the last days of the Empire he edited the Journal de la Nation, and during the Franco-Prussian war a second paper called Le Journal. After the war he returned to Paris and became one of the staff of the Journal, where he continued to work and edited the Journal, and the last part under the pseudonym of Le Journal, he wrote a series of biographical articles satirizing the officials of the new Republic, which constituted a campaign under the title of "Les Rois de la République." He was a member of the committee of the paper and great confidence in him, and at his death he became one of the three administrators of the paper, with MM. Magnard and Perrier. On the death of the latter he became editor-in-chief, Nov. 22, 1911. During 1909 he left the paper for a while owing to its attitude on the Dreyfus affair. His address is 103 Rue St. Lazare.

1870, of Carrier-Belleuse. In seven years he aided Van Corat in decorating the interior of the Hotel de la Paix. He made his first appearance in the Salon in 1875 with a terracotta figure of a man. In 1877 his "Age of Reason" won a medal of the third class. His "John the Baptist" was bought by the State, and was acquired by the Louvre in 1880; busts of Victor Hugo, Antonin Proust, and Louis de Chavannes, 1891. He was commissioned by the State to make a group at the door of the Arts Décoratifs, represented by Rimini and Paolo Malacarne produced "Les Bourgeois" which was erected in that town; and Victor Lepage, for the town of Nancy; and the huge statue of Victor Hugo, for the Pantheon. This artist created quite a name for himself by his statue of Balzac, which was commissioned to execute for the Salon de Lettres. It was bought by the State, and the Société de la Paix, declaring it to be without rival. This roused the ire of the artists, who saw in it the exaggeration of Balzac's thought, and one of the chief reasons for the price of the commission. Characteristic examples of his art were to be seen in 1884 at the International Art Exhibition, where it was decorated with the gold medal in 1888.

She has published "The Leavenworth Case," 1878; "A Strange Disappearance," 1879; "The Swords of Damocles," 1881; "The Defence of the Bride, and other Poems," 1882; "X Y Z," and "Hand and Ring," 1883; "The Mill Mystery," and "7 to 12," 1886; "Risifi's Daughter," a drama, 1887; "Behind Closed Doors," 1888; "The Forsaken Inn," 1890; "A Matter of Millions," 1890; "The Old Stone House," 1891; "Cynthia Wakeham's Money," 1892; "Marked Personal," 1893; "That Affair next Door," 1897; and "Lost Man's Lane," 1898. The author has dramatised her first novel, "The Leavenworth Case," and it was presented to the public during the seasons of 1891, 1892, 1893. Her novels are published in the native languages of Germany, Italy, and France, and have been widely circulated in England and the British possessions. On Nov. 24, 1884, Miss A. K. Green was married to Mr. Charles Rohlf, and now resides at Buffalo, New York.

ROLLINAT, Maurice, French poet, was born at Châteauroux in 1853, and is the son of François Rollinat, one of the representatives in the National Assembly of 1848. His family were intimate friends of George Sand, and under her auspices he took to a literary career. His first published work was a collection of poems entitled "Dans les Brandes," which aroused but little stir. But his second work, published in 1883, "Les Névroses," was a most realistic collection of luxurious and eccentric poems, and made him one of the chiefs of that school of young poets who unite plain speaking with sonorous words. It was declared to be a work surpassing those of Poe and Baudelaire, and was followed by two other volumes, "L'Abîme," 1886, and "La Nature," 1892, which, owing to their saner thoughts, made less noise. He also published, in 1893, a book of poetry for children, entitled "Le Livre de la Nature."

ROLLIT, Sir Albert Kaye, M.P., LL.D., D.C.L., D.L., was born in 1842, and is the son of the late John Rollit, of Hull. He was educated at King's College, London, of which he is a Fellow and Governor, and was Gold Medallist of the University of London, of which he is B.A., LL.D., Fellow, and Member of Senate. He became a solicitor in 1863, and was Prizeman of the Incorporated Law Society. He is senior partner in Rollit & Sons, of London and Hull, and in Bailey & Leetham, steamship owners, of Hull, London, Newcastle, and Manchester; Director of the National Telephone Co.; Alderman for Hull, of which he was Mayor, 1883-85; J.P. for London; D.L. for the West Riding, the City of York, and the Tower of London; Commissioner of Lieutenancy for the City; President of the Association of Municipal Corporations; President of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, and, till lately, of the London Chamber of Commerce; President of the British Commission of the Brussels International Exhibition in 1897; Hon. Lieutenant-Colonel in the Engineer Militia; Elder Brother of the Trinity House since 1891; Hon. Freeman of Hull since 1890, of Huddersfield since 1891, of the Carpenters' Company, London; and Board of Trade Representative on the Humber Conservancy. On the occasion of his retirement from the presidency of the London Chamber of Commerce, after five years' tenure of office, he was presented in December 1898 with a silver casket containing a letter of thanks. Among other foreign orders he has the Knight Commandership of the Iron Crown of Italy, of Leopold of Belgium, and of the Double Dragon of China. He has sat for Islington South since 1886. He married (2), in November 1896, Mary, Duchess of Sutherland. Addresses: 30 Lowndes Square, S.W.; and Crogan House, Hull, &c.

ROMER, The Hon. Sir Robert, Lord Justice of the Court of Appeal, born in London, Dec. 23, 1840, is the second son of the late Francis Romer, the composer, and was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Senior Wrangler and Smith's Prize-man, 1863; Fellow of Trinity Hall, 1867. From 1865 to 1866 he was Professor of Mathematics at Queen's College, Cork. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1867; was Examiner in Civil Law at Cambridge, 1869-70; was made Queen's Counsel in 1881; Bench of Lincoln's Inn in 1884, and was appointed one of the Justices of the High Court (Chancery Division) Nov. 17, 1890, in the place of Sir Edward Ebenezer Kay, created a Lord Justice of Appeal. In the Chancery Court he was noted for rapid work and a profound knowledge of the Patent Laws. In February 1899 he was created a Lord Justice of the Court of Appeal in the room of the Right Hon. Sir Joseph William Chitty deceased. He married Betty, the daughter of the late Mark Lemon, editor of Punch. Addresses: 27 Harrington Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

ROMERO, Matias, Mexican man, was born in Oaxaca, Mex., 1837, and educated at the Law and Sciences in his native town; studied philosophy and then law, admitted to the bar in the same year in 1857. In the revolution he sided with the Government. In December 1859 he was appointed of the Mexican Legation in Paris, and was subsequently Chief of Legation until April 1863. He returned in 1863, and resigning his office was appointed Colonel in the army, became Chief-of-Staff to his old General Porfirio Diaz. He was on several military missions of diplomatic nature, and in September to Washington as Minister to the States, and negotiated several treaties with that country after the fall of the Emperor in Mexico; he accepted the Treasury of Juarez's Cabinet, and for five years ministered the finances of the country with skill. In 1876 he was a member of the Mexican Senate, and was appointed General Diaz as President to the Treasury, which he held until April 1, 1879. He was appointed master-General in February 1879, retired. In 1881 the boundaries between Mexico and the United States, and also that between Mexico and the United States, were adjusted by him, and since retained the post of Minister to the United States. He has published Culture on the Southern Coast, 1875; Historical Sketch of the State of Chiapas and Soconusco, 1877; The State of Oaxaca, besides many other volumes, and reports.

RONNER, Mdme. Henri, charming pictures of cats were shown at the Fine Art Gallery in London, Street, was born in Amsterdam, and was educated with great view for the profession of an artist; her father, Herr Ronner, kept her at work for many years, adopting the unusual plan of keeping her up in darkness for two hours every day, in order to rest her eyes, and which was much more likely to be injurious than beneficial. Forty years ago she was Fieco Ronner, since which time she lived in Brussels, and devoted her attention almost solely to animal painting. On the Continent she is regarded as an animal-painter of the highest order, receives from the Brussels National Gallery, the Luxembourg, and very many other museums, and has painted portraits of favourite dogs.

ROENTGEN, Conrad Wilhelm, Professor of Physics at the University of Bavaria, was born at Lennep, Prussia, in 1844. He was educated, where he became a Doctor in 1869. For long he had been an active investigator of physical and his great discovery of the X-rays was made on Nov. 8, 1895, and communicated to the public in the beginning of January 1896. The result of this experiment is a small tube into each end of which is fitted a small glass bulb containing some electric generating apparatus, the tube being exhausted, and the electric circuit is completed by the vacuum space in the tube at the two ends of the wires. If an electric current is made to pass through the wires, a living human hand between the tube and a photographic plate, a photograph can be obtained showing all the outlines of the hand. In 1897 a Röntgen Society was formed in England, of which the first president was Professor Sylvanus Thompson.

ROOKWOOD, Lord, The Right Hon. John Selwin-Ibbetson, only son of the late Sir John Selwin-Ibbetson, the 6th Baronet, daughter of the late Lord Leveson-Gower, was born in 1806, and received his academical education at St. John's College, Cambridge. He twice contested Ipswich, in 1836 and 1841, but without success. His private interest, before being created a Baronet in July 1865; his county was further divided by the Reform Act, he was elected for the western division of it, and the new name Epping Division was presented in the House of Commons in 1867, when he was made a Peer of the Realm by the title of Lord Rookwood. In 1869, and passed, the Bills dealing with Licenses for the Sale of Beer in 1869 and 1870. Sir H. Ibbetson was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, Disraeli taking office in the autumn of 1874. He was chairman of the Royal Commission appointed in 1874 to inquire into the detective branch of the Metropolitan Police. In April 1878 he was appointed Secretary to the Treasury, and held that office until the resignation of the Conservative Government in 1885. He was appointed Church Missioner in 1885. He assumed the name of Ibbetson (which his father had formerly borne) in addition to that of Selwin in 1867. He married (1) Sarah, daughter of the 1st Lord Lyndhurst, and (2) in 1867, the widow of Sir Charles Henry Ibbetson, 5th Baronet. Addresses: 62 Prince's Gate, S.W.; and Down Hall, Essex.

ROOSEVELT, Hon. Theodore, American statesman and writer, was born in New York City, Oct. 27, 1858, and graduated from Harvard University in 1880. He was a Member of the New York State Legislature, 1882-84, and an unsuccessful candidate for Mayor of New York City in 1886. In 1889 he was appointed on the Civil Service Commission by President Harrison. In 1895 he was appointed a Police Commissioner by the Mayor of New York, and in 1897 he became Assistant-Secretary of the United States Navy. He resigned this position soon after the outbreak of the war with Spain in 1898 to become lieutenant-colonel of a regiment of picked men known as the "Rough Riders," recruited largely from the cattle-men of the western plains. With this regiment he distinguished himself greatly by his bravery in the actions preceding the capture of Santiago in Cuba, and was soon made colonel, returning with his men to the United States in August 1898. He has published "The Naval War of 1812," 1882; "Hunting Trips of a Ranchman," 1885; "Life of Thomas H. Benton," 1887; "Life of Gouverneur Morris," 1888; "Essays on Practical Politics," 1888; "Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail," 1888; "The Winning of the West," 1889; "History of New York City," 1891; "The Wilderness Hunter," 1892; "The Winning of the West," vol. iii., 1894; vol. iv., 1896; "American Ideals and other Essays," 1897. On Nov. 8, 1898, he was elected Governor of New York State.

ROPES, Arthur Reed, "Adrian Ross," was born at Lewisham on Dec. 23, 1859, and is the youngest son of the late William Hooper Ropes, a Russia merchant. He was educated at Priory House School, Clapham, at Mill Hill, and City of London Schools, and at King's College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar. He gained the Chancellor's Medal for English verse, and the Member's Prize for English Essay in 1881, was eleventh Wrangler, Senior in Historical Tripos, Lightfoot and Whewell Scholar, Fellow of King's College, 1884-90, Lecturer in History. Mr. Ropes is an interesting example of an academic poet turning into a successful modern librettist. He was known in his college days as a poet of literary subjects and singular literary charm, since which time he has either written or collaborated in the libretti of which he is a staunch supporter. In 1886 and 1892 he was defeated but was defeated in 1895 of Lorne. Since 1896 he Chancellor of the University. In 1863 he married Lucy, daughter of Amund Potter, F.R.S. Ad-Bramham Gardens, S.W.; West Horsley, Surrey; U.

ward, dramatist, was born in Norfolk, on Aug. 7, 1849, Caleb Rose, M.R.C.P., and a long line of clergymen and was chiefly educated at a boarding school, where Mr. Rider was his school-fellow. He was a lawyer, but, after passing the examination, came to devote himself to literature. At a very early age he had been in drama, and in 1873 published "a five-act historical drama acted piece of any importance," "Our Farm," produced in the Theatre, Long Acre. His nights in London alone. He has had some three dozen plays in London or the provinces, which ranged from romantic mimes. His most ambitious has been "Agatha Tylden, Shipowner," which was acted at the Haymarket by Mrs. Norton in the autumn of 1893, and the success of his plays has been the result of Mr. Anstey's "Vice" which he himself has constantly delighted Dick Bultitude. In "The Marble Arch," has been more than a thousand times. Dick Bultitude that Mr. Rose is a professional actor in which he previously belonged to an amateur, nearly all the members of the Mr. Tree, are now well known on stage. In 1881 he had a tour with Mr. George Rignold, many parts in "Henry V." and on tour the comedy part, Gosling, in Herman Meriwell. Since that time he has been doing, except for occasional engagements, when he has toured his own. As a journalist he has done much good work, and has been doing for nearly twenty years in the London News, in which he has been the series of illustrations by M. Montagu, a story in Arrowsmith's, is from his pen. He was a contributor to the Sunday Times in elaborating a new system of children to read. His most recent adaptations for the stage are "Under the Red Robe" and "The Prisoner of Zenda"; and "In Days of Old," partially adapted from the French, and played at the St. James's in 1899. Address: 36 Upper Addison Gardens, W.

ROSEBERY, Earl of, The Right Hon. Archibald Philip Primrose, K.G., K.T., LL.D., F.R.S., son of the late Archibald, Lord Dalmeny, by Lady Catherine Lucy Wilhelmina, only daughter of the 4th Earl Stanhope, was born in London in 1847, and received his education at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford. He succeeded to the title on the death of his grandfather, the 4th Earl of Rosebery, in 1868. The first time he ever spoke in public was in 1871, when, at the opening of Parliament, he was selected by the Prime Minister, Mr Gladstone, to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. He soon took a decided position on the question of national education, and when the Government Education Bill for Scotland was before the House of Peers, he moved an amendment to it by which he aimed at the exclusion of catechisms from public schools. He also spoke in the same session on Lord Russell's motion regarding the Alabama Treaty; and he was appointed Commissioner to inquire into Endowments in Scotland. In the session of 1873 Lord Rosebery was much engaged in an endeavour to obtain a Committee of Inquiry on the supply of horses in this country. He moved for, and obtained the Committee, and was made the chairman of the same. It may be said that to the labours of that Committee the remission of the taxes on horses is fairly due. During the session of 1874 Lord Rosebery moved for, and was made the chairman of, a Committee on the Scotch and Irish representative peerages. He was President of the Social Science Congress which met at Glasgow Oct. 1, 1874. On Nov. 16, 1878, he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen in succession to Mr. W. E. Forster. In November 1880 he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh, but he did not deliver his inaugural address until Nov. 4, 1882. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in August 1881, in succession to Mr. Leonard Courtney, who was transferred to the Colonial Office. His lordship resigned the Under-Secretaryship in June 1883, and in November 1884 became First Commissioner of Works in succession to Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, who succeeded Mr. Fawcett as Postmaster-General. In Mr. Gladstone's next Government (1886) Lord Rosebery was appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and won general approval, at home and abroad, for the firmness with which he conducted the difficult questions arising out of the Servo-Bulgarian War and the Greek desire for territorial indemnity. When Mr. Gladstone brought forward his first Home Rule for Ireland Bill, he entirely approved of it, and became one of its staunchest supporters in the Upper House. In 1878 Lord Rosebery received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. On Jan. 17 he was elected, in company with Sir John Lubbock, member for the City Division of the London County Council; and on Feb. 12 was appointed chairman, but resigned in June 1890, owing to the pressure of his many public duties, and was succeeded by Sir John Lubbock. He married, March 29, 1874, Hannah, only child of Baron Meyer de Rothschild. She died Nov. 19, 1890. Owing to her death, Lord Rosebery abstained from most of his political and social labours during 1891; but in November of that year he published his well-known monograph on William Pitt the younger. In January 1892 he was again elected chairman of the London County Council, and held the position for some months. On Mr. Gladstone's accession to power, Lord Rosebery was appointed Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and in October was made a Knight of the Garter. As a Foreign Minister he has always inclined to maintaining firmly the interests of Great Britain abroad, and as such has carried on Conservative traditions. He is a strong advocate of Imperial Federation, and it is therefore not surprising that when Mr. Gladstone retired in March 1894 and the Premiership was offered to Lord Rosebery by the Queen, a group of "Little-Englanders" and others, headed by Mr. Labouchere, should for a time have violently resented his accession to power, especially whilst such a tried Liberal leader as Sir William Harcourt was apparently passed by. Lord Rosebery, on his acceptance of the Premiership, made some necessary changes in the Cabinet. His Premiership was marked by no startling political events, but he had to carry on the work of Government with a majority too small and heterogeneous to allow of a very daring policy on the part of those in power. After March 1894 he made several great speeches containing some notable remarks on the relations of the House of Commons and House of Lords, and on the question of Welsh Disestablishment. In the summer of 1894 Lord Rosebery's horse "Ladas" won the Derby, and prolonged attacks on his owner's encouragement of so-called "gambling" were the result. During 1895 Lord Rosebery's Premiership came to an end, mainly owing to the hostility shown to an important section of the Fabians, and the Government was defeated for the Houses of Commons and the Lords they were defeated on an amendment to the Bill on the day they won the amendment question in the Army Estimates. On the day Lord Rosebery passed on in the hands of the Queen was accepted. He then supported more than the general feeling to be fought upon the question of the dominance of the House of Lords. On October 1896, in the matter arising out of the Amendment of Lord Rosebery wrote to the Whip resigning his power to the Liberal party as a result of the apparent difference with a mass of the party, and his opposition to Mr. Gladstone's Question. Soon after leaving Edinburgh, he declared his approval of any policy that would involve Great Britain's isolation in regard to the Armenian question. He held that this would be a European war. Upon the death of Gladstone, in May 1898, he gave an eloquent tribute to the services of the illustrious Leader in a speech delivered in the Lords. During the Fabianism of Lord Salisbury, in 1896, Lord Rosebery uniformly supported the policy of Lord Salisbury. This was consistent with the attitude of 1896 against the encroaching French in Siam, when he held he obtained a treaty limiting the boundary to the Mekong River. His policy has the character of being many sympathies. Besides being the first of English Foreign Ministers for many years taken a deep interest in the welfare of the masses, he presented a fine swimming pool at People's Palace, and his chair in the London County Council was numbered for the keen sports displayed during his tenure of office. His movements tending to be the condition of the London classes. His interest in literature, great, and, mutatis mutandis, he tried to carry on the Whig tradition in high places. He is an admirer of Robert Burns, and has frequently interesting addresses to his own men and to Englishmen on the works of the Scottish national poet. He stands high in public utterances are always awaited by his admirers in all parties. Selections from his es were published in June Rosebery has issue, two sons and two daughters; the heir to the titles is Lord Dalmeny, was born in 1891, is youngest daughter, Lady Rosebery, was married in April 1895 to Earl of Crewe, who was Lord of Ireland, 1892-95. INNES, Hon. J., Q.C., is the son of the late Under-Secretary of State for Native Affairs, and is nephew of Lord Sprigg, Premier of Cape Colony. He was educated at Gill College, Grahamstown, and at the Cape University. He was called to the Bar, and was in 1891 elected to the Cape Parliament as Member for Victoria East. He became Attorney-General for the Cape division in 1888. He was Attorney-General from 1891 to 1894, during the ministry of Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, but he resigned the office in 1894. On the occasion of the Reform Bill in 1894, he was selected by the High Court to watch matters on behalf of the Government. He has been, since 1894, the leader of the Opposition in the House of Assembly. Address:

Edward John, M.A., D.Sc., was born at Quebec, Canada, 1831, being a son of Sir Ranald K.C.B., Commissary-General. He is also a nephew of the Marquis of Chereau, late Archbishop of the age of 11 he was brought to England and subsequently was sent to Eton School, where he stayed before entering University College, under Professor De Morgan, and made rapid progress in mathematics. He passed through the higher examinations, and subsequently the mathematical prizes examinations. He matriculated at the University of London, and passed the B.A. examination, and gained the Mathematical Tripos. He received also the degree of his M.A. examination in October 1851 he entered Peterhouse. He studied for a year as a hunter, of St. John's College, remaining two years and a half. Mr. Hopkins, of Peterhouse, graduated as Senior Wrangler, and his Prize examination he equalled with Mr. Clerk Maxwell's Professor of Experimental Mathematics at Cambridge. He was then fellow of Peterhouse, and began his profession of teaching as his. From 1861 to 1885 (with the exception of 1883), the Senior Wrangler every year been his pupil, before that date, and once twenty-seven times. He has amongst his pupils forty-one men. This success is without doubt. In 1855 Mr. Routh wrote a book on Mechanics with Lord Brougham. In 1859 he was appointed Examiner in Mathematics in the University of London, and after the necessary interval of a year, he held the office for a second quinquennial period (1865-70). Soon after his graduation he was elected a member of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, of the Geological Society, and of the Royal Geographical Society; subsequently he became a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also an original member of the London Mathematical Society, having been one of those who helped to establish it. In 1860 he was a Moderator, and in 1861 Examiner for the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge. In 1877 he gained the Adams Prize for his essay on the Stability of Motion. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1879 by the University of Glasgow. In 1883 he was one of the first to take the degree of Doctor of Science, then established in the University of Cambridge for those who had "given proof of distinction by some original contribution to the advancement of science." He was elected Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse in the same year. In 1884 Dr. Routh was appointed by the Crown a Fellow of the University of London, and is therefore now a member of the governing body of that University. In 1886 Dr. Routh ceased taking any new pupils, and during the next two years he merely conducted through the remainder of their mathematical course those who had already begun to read with him. In the thirty-one years from 1857 to 1888 he thus "coached" nearly seven hundred pupils through the Mathematical Tripos, five hundred of them becoming wranglers. In 1888 his old pupils presented Mrs. Routh with a portrait of her husband painted by Herkomer as a memorial of their attachment to him. The presentation took place in Peterhouse, the ceremony being described at some length in the Times of Monday, Nov. 5, 1888. In this year he was elected a member of the Council of the University of Cambridge, and a member of the Council of the Royal Society. At the celebration of the Tercentenary of Trinity College, Dublin, in June 1892, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Science in that University. In 1888 he was an examiner for the second part of the Cambridge Tripos, and in 1893 he was again Moderator. He is also on the governing bodies of Cavendish College, Dulwich College, and till lately of the schools at Ipswich. Dr. Routh has written a book on "Rigid Dynamics," in two volumes, six editions of which have been published. A translation into German was made under the auspices of Prof. Klein of Göttingen. He has written for the Syn-

dics of the University Press a treatise on "Statics," also in two volumes. He has also written for them a treatise on the "Dynamics of a Particle," which appeared in the summer of 1898. Besides these he has contributed numerous papers on mathematical subjects to the Mathematical Messenger, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the volumes of the London Mathematical Society. In 1864 he married the eldest daughter of Sir G. B. Airy, K.C.B., the late Astronomer-Royal. Address: Peterhouse, Cambridge.

ROUVIER, Maurice, French politician, was born at Aix, April 17, 1842, and having entered the legal profession, was a well-known opponent of the Empire. He entered Parliament in July 1871 for Marseille, and sat with the Extreme Left. In 1877 he was one of the 363 members who refused a vote of confidence to the Broglie Cabinet, and it was then that he began to come to the front as an authority on financial matters. Especially did he defend the interest of the town of Marseille, and in Gambetta's great ministry of 1881 he received the Portfolio of Commerce. He resigned with his colleagues in January 1882, but received the same Portfolio in the Ferry Cabinet of 1884. In 1886 he was sent to Rome to treat with the Italian Government as to a new Commercial Treaty, and on the 30th of May of the next year he was asked to form a Government in succession to that of M. Goblet. In this he took the Ministry of Finances, a post he held for many years in successive Cabinets. On entering upon power, he had the courage to deprive General Boulanger of his post as Minister for War, by which act he brought much abuse upon his head. Having held power in the Tirard, Freycinet, and Loubet Cabinets, he had to resign in 1892 on account of his connection with the Baron de Reinach and the Panama scandals. He was accused of having received huge bribes from the Panama directors, but he declared that the money had been spent in preserving the country from Boulangism. However this may be, it has been up to now the drawback to M. Rouvier's official career, and although he is always prominent in financial debates, he has not again taken office. His Paris address is: 8 Rue de Windsor.

ROUX, Dr. Pierre Paul Émile, Director of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, was born in 1853 at Confolens, pursued his classical studies at the College of Confolens d'Aurillac, and afterwards at the Lycée of Puy, and from 1872 to 1874 was a student at the Medical School of Cler-mont Ferrand. At Clermont Roux became intimate with the appointed Professor of Chemistry, Duclaux, and it was doubtless his influence that he wrote his first paper, the variations of "The Quantity Excreted with a Normal Amount of Drinking Coffee or Tea" (Comptes Rendus Acad. des Sciences, August 1874). Roux subsequently entered the military service, but found the military life incompatible with his research work. He therefore resigned in 1874 to 1878 was attached to the Hôtel-Dieu as Clinical Assistant, and then to the Faculty of Medicine. M. Duclaux came to Paris, and brought Roux to the notice of his great master, Pasteur, who at once associated M. Roux with himself and MM. Joulie and Chancelier in the studies he was about to undertake on the wool-sorters' disease. M. Roux accordingly became préparateur in Pasteur's laboratory. In 1883 he took his doctor's degree with the thesis, "Nouvelles observations sur la Rage." The thesis dealt with the anti-rabic inoculations performed at the Pasteur laboratory in 1881-82. In 1884 he became head of the famous Pasteur, and in 1896 succeeded the illustrious master as its sole Director. His memorable researches on charcoal-broth sorters' disease, attenuation of the virus of rabies against hydrophobia, tuberculosis, &c., which have rendered the French Pasteur Institute famous, have been largely shared in by Dr. Roux. His colleagues under Pasteur were MM. Berland and Thuillier. He has many notes on their joint researches. In April 1898, with M. Barreé, contributed a paper on cerebral tetanus and its relation to tetanus to the Congress at Lyons. M. Roux is a professor of great talent, his eloquent expositions of Pasteur's lectures in his courses of lectures to French and foreign students, are well known. His great contributions in microbiological research have won frequent rewards, such as the Breget Prize (1884), and the Alberto Levi prize of the Institut Pasteur, and the prize (1884), and St. Paul prize of the Academy of Medicine. In February 1898 he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences.

ROWBOTHAM, John Fred, the only son of the late Rev. Rowbotham, Incumbent of St. Andrew's, Edinburgh. He was born in 1854, educated at the Edinburgh Academy, at Rossall School, of which he was a scholar. From Rossall he proceeded to Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained the Balliol Scholarship at the age of eighteen, and was the favourite pupil of long other distinctions at Oxford: a first class in Lit. Hum. and a University Scholarship for leaving college he travelled on the Continent, in order to collect materials for his "History of Music," studied at the libraries of Paris, Rome, Florence, Venice, and even visited monasteries for manuscripts. The "History of Music" was published in 1885, and was acknowledged by the entire press, musicians at large, to be the best work on the subject. After completing his "History of Music," Mr. Rowland devoted himself to epic poetry. His epic poem, "The Death of Sardanapalus," was published in 1886. "The Life of the Great Compositor," appeared in 1890. In 1892 he published "The Private Life of the Great Composer," a new edition of the "History of Music"; and in 1894, "A History of Music." Among those who have taken a deep interest in Mr. Rowland's writings is the Queen of England, is President of the local Free Church Council, Chairman of the New College Council, and for the year 1898 was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Mr. Rowland married the daughter of the late William Trewent, Esq., J.P., of Pembroke, and has a large family, his second son, Maynard, being well known as the cyclist who carried despatches through the Boer army from Johannesburg to Dr. Jameson. Address: Selwood, Crescent Road, Crouch End, N.

ROWLANDS, William Bowen, Q.C., J.P., D.L., Leader of the South Wales and Chester Circuit, and Recorder of Swansea, was born in South Wales in 1838, and is the eldest son of the late Thomas Rowlands, J.P., of Glenover, Pembrokeshire, and Anne, daughter of John Bowen, of Dygoed, in the same county. He completed his education at Jesus College, Oxford, of which University he is M.A. In 1870 he gained a first-class certificate of honour at the General Examination for the Bar, and was called at Gray's Inn in 1871. In 1882 he was appointed a Queen's Counsel, and became a Bencher of Gray's Inn in the same year. In 1889 he was Treasurer of his Inn. He is a member of the Council of Legal Education and of the Board of Studies, of the Bar Library Committee, of the Committee of the Four Inns of Court on the Discipline of the Bar, leader of the South Wales and Chester Circuits, D.L. for Cardiganshire, and J.P. for Pembrokeshire, Cardiganshire, and Haverfordwest. In 1886, and again in 1892, Mr. Bowen Rowlands was elected Member of Parliament for Cardiganshire. In June 1893 he was appointed Recorder of Swansea, when he vacated his seat, and was re-elected without opposition. He did not seek re-election in his old constituency in 1895. He married, in 1864, Adeline Wogan, only daughter of J. D. Brown, of Kensington House, Haverfordwest. Address: 3 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.

ROWLAND, Rev. Alfred, LL.B., born on Jan. 17, 1840, at the Hey-on-Thames. His father, James Rowland, was a well-to-do farmer and pastor, exercising for thirty-seven years in the Hey-on-Thames. His second son, Alfred, was born at Cranford College, Maidenhead, four years spent in the business of J. & R. Morley, he entered the University of London, in September 1859. Rowland took his degrees on University in Arts and in 1865 he entered on his first Zion Chapel, Frome, where he was successful. In 1875 he moved to Park Chapel, Crouch End, where church was at the time the one he was asked to enter his pastorate it has grown

The membership, which numbered 262, now numbers 1037. It has been enlarged three times, and accommodates nearly 1500 persons being occupied at the services. During Mr. Rowland's ministry the mission premises have been built, and the Carbin Memorial Church after the first pastor. Mr. Rowland's published sermons: "Half-Hours with Paul," "Paul's First Letter to the Romans," "The Burdens of Life," in a series of sermons issued by Horace Rowland, besides numerous sermons in the "Homiletic Collection" and elsewhere. He has held the office of the "Antient Merchants' Association" since 1889; was Chairman of the Congregational Union in 1892;

ROWTON, Lord, Montagu William Lowry-Corry, C.B., D.L., J.P., second son of the Right Hon. Henry Corry, son of the 2nd Earl of Belmore, and of Lady Harriet, daughter of the 6th Earl of Shaftesbury, was born in London, Oct. 8, 1838. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his degree in 1860. Called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1863, he practised for three years on the Oxford Circuit, and in 1866 was officially appointed Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, then Chancellor of the Exchequer. After Mr. Disraeli's defeat in 1868 he declined offers of public appointments which were made to him, and rendered voluntary service to that statesman till his return to power in 1874, subsequently continuing to act as Lord Beaconsfield's private secretary till his death in 1881. He accompanied Lord Beaconsfield to the Congress of Berlin, being then appointed one of the joint-secretaries to the Special Embassy of Great Britain, and, at its close, received the Companionship of the Bath. At the termination of Lord Beaconsfield's Government in 1880, he was raised to the peerage, taking his title from his estate at Rowton Castle in Shropshire. Lord Beaconsfield bequeathed to Lord Rowton the whole of his letters, papers, documents, and manuscripts, leaving it to his absolute discretion to destroy, preserve, or publish any of them, at such time as, in his uncontrolled judgment, might seem fit. It was at first inferred from the terms of the bequest that Lord Beaconsfield had left behind him some sort of diary or memoirs for publication. This, unfortunately, proved not to be the case, and it became evident that the only manuscript, the publication of which was distinctly contemplated by the testator, was that of "Endymion." This work was almost completed at the date of the signing of the will, and was afterwards published during the lifetime of the writer. Lord Rowton is chairman of the Rowton Houses Company, formed for the purpose of providing large and cheap hotels for poor single men of all classes in London, and he is also chairman of the Guinness Trust. Addresses: 17 Berkeley Square, W.; and Rowton Castle, Shrewsbury.

ROYSTON, The Right Rev. Peter Sorenson, D.D., is the son of John P. Royston, of the Bank of England, was born in London on June 6, 1830, and was educated at St. Paul's School, and Trinity College, Cambridge. Ordained in 1853, he was Resident Tutor at the Church Missionary College, London, for the two following years. From 1855 to 1862, and from 1866 to 1871, he was incumbent of the Church Missionary Society's chapel at Madras, and also acted as Corresponding Secretary of the Society for South India. He was a Fellow of the Madras University from 1858 to 1872, and in the latter year was appointed to the Bishopric of Mauritius, which he was, however, compelled to resign, through ill-health, in 1890. On his return to England, he was, in the following year, appointed Assistant-Bishop to the Bishop of Liverpool, and he has held also the Vicarage of Childwall since 1896. He was editor of the Madras Church Missionary Record from 1856 to 1871. He was married, in 1861, to Mary, daughter of Thomas Clarke, Madras Civil Service.

Addresses: Childwall Vicarage and Athenæum.

ROZE, Madame Marie, soprano, was born in Paris, entered the Conservatoire, and studying under Auber and in 1865 she took a first prize for the gold medal in the cantata, where her chief parts were "La Dame Blanche," "Fra Diavolo," and Auber's "L'Ambassadrice." She appeared in Paris during the siege of 1870, presented with a gold medal for her gallant conduct. Her debut in England was in 1871, and she made a great success in "La Dame Blanche," which she remained in this country to sing. She then went to New York, and after several years in America. Since 1880 she has been a member of the Carl Rosa Company.

RÜCKER, Professor William, M.A. Oxon., F.R.S., M.I.E.E., eldest son of D. H. Rücker, of Errington, Cambs., was born Oct. 23, 1848. He was educated at the Clapham Grammar School, and Brasenose College, Oxford. He was elected Fellow and Lecturer in the Laboratory of the University of Cambridge, and elected Fellow and Lecturer in the Laboratory of the University of Leeds, and Demonstrator in the Laboratory of the University of Leeds. He was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Physics in the newly founded University of Leeds, in the Election of 1885. Professor Rücker tested the Northern Division of the Liberal interest; and in 1887, as a Unionist Liberal for the Division of the West Riding. In 1888, he was appointed Professor in the Royal College of Science, Kensington. Professor Rücker is author or joint-author of many scientific subjects. Together with Prof. Reinold, F.R.S., he has edited the Transactions of the Royal Society in 1883, 1886, and 1893, a series of papers on the properties of liquid films in conjunction with Prof. Thorpe. He has carried out the magnetic experiments of the United Kingdom which form the subject of the Bakerian Lecture before the Royal Society in 1891. The final results of this investigation were published in the Philosophical Transactions in 1896. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884, and received the Royal Medal in 1891, and was to the office of Secretary to the Society in 1896; he has served as Treasurer of the Physical Society, and as Treasurer of the ation; he is an Honorary Fellow of Rose College, Oxford, and a Fellow University of London. He married in 1876, Marian, daughter of J. D. N., F.R.C.P., of Leeds, and (2) Ma, daughter of N. Story-Maskeleyne, Addresses: 19 Gledhow Gardens, and Athenæum.

RUDINI, Marquis di, Italian statesman, was born in 1840, and when hardly 17, became Syndic of Palermo. In 1876, he was for a short time Minister of the Interior, but did not attain prominence until 1891, when he succeeded Crispien as Premier, with a programme of reform. He resigned in 1892, because he could not have a free hand; and succeeded by Signor Giolitti (q.v.). After the fall of the second Crispien Cabinet, owing to the disasters in Erythrea, Marquis di Rudini again became Premier. Replying to an interpolation by Imbriani in May 1896, the Marquis di Rudini strongly supported the Triple Alliance, warmly eulogised the German Emperor, and referred in cordial terms to the friendship between Italy and Great Britain as completing the system of alliances. In the following month the Government carried a vote closing the Budget by only three votes, and a semi-official note was published containing absolutely current reports to the King, that the Marquis di Rudini had accepted his resignation to the King. In March 1897 the Premier issued an election manifesto, which set forth the programme of the Cabinet. The elections at the end of the same month resulted in a large majority for the Government, and, speaking soon after, Rudini expressed confidence in his ability to retain office for a considerable time.

However, it soon became apparent that it was a complete mistake to suppose that the elections signified public approval of the Government. Elections in Italy are the result, it is said, of personal pressures at best, and of official pressure at worst. Notwithstanding the reelection of di Rudini, the country evinced a discontent with the Government as a whole, particularly with the monarchy. Disasters in Africa were popularly supposed to have been directly caused by unconstitutional agencies beyond the reach of public opinion. Although the King in his speech from the Throne promised to introduce a Bill for promoting the welfare of the people, the lower classes began to clamour for reform. The reception of the King in the populace of Rome on his way to Parliament was "frigid beyond precedent" and occasional cries of "Viva la repubblica" were even raised. It might be noted by the way that a press telegram to England referring to the general disfavour was stopped by the authorities as being untrue. Popular feeling was excited by the alleged injustice and inequality of the revised assessments, and the Chamber of Commerce of Rome organised a tremendous and widely-adopted protest, afterwards by deputation interviewing the Premier, who gave unsatisfactory replies to the spokesmen of the demonstrators. The crowd outside, becoming irritated by the delay of di Rudini's answer, began stoning the military guard, who subsequently fired on the people, and after a hand-to-hand fight succeeded in clearing the streets. The city soon assumed its usual aspect, but the authorities were blamed for the disturbances. However, the Government granted the desired revision of assessments, and matters were smoothed over for a time. In December 1897 the Government were defeated on a military bill, and the Minister of War, General Pelloux (q.v.), persisting in his resignation, the Premier also gave up office. The Marquis di Rudini, having overcome the redoubtable Zanardelli, remodelled his ministry, but its life was uncertain from its birth. The pressing need of the hour was social reform, which di Rudini was too conservative to undertake. Hence his failure to allay popular discontent.

RUDLER, Frederick William, was born in London, July 8, 1840, and appointed an assistant in the Museum of Practical Geology in Jermyn Street, in 1861. He was Assistant-Secretary of the Ethnological Society in 1870; and for some time edited its Quarterly Journal, and that of the Anthropological Institute. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Natural Science in the University College of Wales, but resigned that position in 1879, to take the Curatorship of the Museum of Practical Geology. He also held the office of Registrar of the Royal School of Mines until its amalgamation with the Normal School of Science. For many years he was Honorary Secretary of the Anthropological Institute, and in 1880 presided over the Anthropological Department of the British Association. In 1887 and 1888 he was President of the Geologists' Association, and in 1898 President of the Anthropological Institute. In conjunction with the late Mr. Robert Hunt he edited the seventh edition of Ure's "Dictionary of Arts," and, jointly with others, was author of the volume on Europe in Stanford's "Compendium of Geography." Mr. Rudler was a contributor to the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and to Longmans' two Dictionaries of Chemistry. He is a copious writer of articles and reviews, mostly anonymous, in various scientific journals, and is a lecturer in connection with the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching. Address: Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn Street, S.W.

RUMBOLD, The Right Hon. Sir Horace, Bart., G.C.M.G., G.C.B., Ambassador to the Emperor of Austria, is the fifth son of Sir William Rumbold, by Henrietta Elizabeth, second daughter of the 1st Lord Radcliffe. He was born on July 22, 1829, and succeeded his brother in 1877. He entered the diplomatic service, and was successively Attaché at Washington in 1849, and from 1852 onwards at Florence, Paris, and Frankfurt. On Sept. 19, 1854, he was appointed paid Attaché at Stuttgart, and, in November 1856, second paid Attaché at Vienna. In December 1858 he was selected to be Secretary of Legation in China, and proceeded thither with Mr., afterwards Sir Frederick Bruce, in March 1859. When Mr. Bruce's mission was prevented from proceeding to Peking, and the Taku forts were attacked, June 25, 1859, he was sent home with despatches, and to supply the Government with full particulars of events at the Peiho. In September 1862 he became Secretary of Legation at Athens, and in July 1863 was sent, in company with the French and Russian First Secretaries, his colleagues, to conclude an armistice between the two military factions at that time waging civil war in Athens. Transferred to Bern on May 18, 1864, he nevertheless remained in charge of the mission at Athens until June 30, during which time he accompanied the King on a visit to the Ionian islands, then newly annexed. On March 7, 1868, he was promoted to be Secretary of Embassy at St. Petersburg, and was transferred in March 1871 to Constantinople. In October 1872 he became Minister-Resident and Consul-General in Chili, and at the beginning of 1878 was appointed Minister-Resident at Bern. On Aug. 15, 1879, he was made Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, and was transferred in that capacity to the King of Norway and Sweden on April 1, 1881, to the King of the Hellenes on Dec. 17, 1884, and to the King of the Netherlands, and also to his Majesty in his capacity of Grand-Duke of Luxembourg, on Feb. 1, 1888. His present appointment dates from August 1896, when he succeeded Sir Edmund Monson. He was created a K.C.M.G. in August 1886, and a G.C.M.G. in May 1892, and was sworn of the Privy Council in November 1896. He married (1), in 1867, Caroline Barney, daughter of

Mr. George Harrington, (1), and (2), in 1881, Louisa Anne, widow of Mr. Thomas Russell, of the 1st Life Guards, address: 127 Sloane Street.

RUNDLE, Major-General Henry Macleod Leslie, D.S.O., was born in January, educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the Army as Lieutenant of Royal Artillery in 1876, and was promoted Captain in March 1885, Major in June 1887, and Colonel in January 1890. His first saw active service in the Boer War of 1879 with Sir Evelyn Wood's Column, and was present with a battery in the engagement at the Field Artillery, and took part in the defence of Potchefstroom. He then went to Egypt, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. General Rundle became attached to the Egyptian Army in 1883, since which time he has been actively employed in various operations that have taken place in Egypt. During the Nile Expedition he was employed on special service with the Bedouin tribes, when he was promoted to Major and the Medjidieh class. In 1885 he was attached to the Frontier Field Force, and took part in the action at Sarras, being promoted to the Mounted Corps. He was promoted to D.S.O. and the Osmanieh class in 1886. He was present at the action at Fort Tokar, and at the action at the battle of Atbara. General Rundle served with the Donga Expeditionary Force under Lord Kitchener as Chief of the Staff, and, besides his command at Firket, he took part in operations at Hafir. He was specially promoted to Major-General for distinguished service in the Nile Expedition of 1898, and was present at the battle of Atbara and the taking of Khartoum. Upon returning to England he was knighted, and appointed to the command of the South-Eastern District. General Rundle is a Pasha and Adjutant-General of the Egyptian Army. Address: Dover.

years later he wrote "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," published in 1849, followed by the first volume of "The Stones of Venice" in 1851, the second and third volumes of which appeared in 1853. The illustrations in the last-named productions, which excited some of the same professional hostility that his first publication evoked, displayed to much advantage his artistic powers. Mr. Ruskin has expounded his views both in lectures and in newspapers and reviews, having contributed articles to the Quarterly on Lord Lindsay's "Christian Art," in 1847, and on Eastlake's "History of Oil Painting" in 1848. In 1851 he advocated Pre-Raphaelitism in letters to the Times; and in 1853 he lectured in Edinburgh on Gothic Architecture, published as "Lectures on Architecture and Painting," 1854. In addition to the above-mentioned works, Mr. Ruskin has written "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds," "The King of the Golden River," a story for children, illustrated by Doyle, in 1851; "Notes to Pictures in the Royal Academy, Nos. 1 to 5," in 1854-59; "Giotto and his works in Padua," written for the Arundel Society, of which he was a member; "Notes on the Turner Collection," in 1857; "The Elements of Drawing," and "Political Economy of Art," in 1857; "Elements of Perspective," and "The Two Paths," in 1859; "Unto this Last: Four Essays," republished from the Cornhill Magazine, in 1862; "Ethics of the Dust," in 1866; "Sesame and Lilies," in 1865; "Crown of Wild Olive," in 1866; "Time and Tide," in 1867; and "The Queen of the Air, being a Study of the Greek Myths of Cloud and Storm." To the Art Journal he contributed "The Cestus of Aglaia," and he has written for various periodicals. Mr. Ruskin was appointed Rede Lecturer at Cambridge in April 1867, and the Senate conferred the degree of LL.D. upon him, May 15. He was also elected Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford, and in 1870 published "Lectures on Art"; in 1872, "Aratra Pentelici: Six Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture, given before the University of Oxford in Michaelmas Term, 1870," followed by "The Eagle's Nest," and other courses of lectures. In 1871 he proposed to devote £5000 for the purpose of an endowment to pay a master of drawing in the Taylor Galleries, Oxford, and this handsome offer was, with some modifications, accepted by the University in January 1872. He was re-elected to the Slade Professorship of Fine Art, 1876. From 1871 to 1884 he published the 96 "Letters to the Workmen and Labourers of England" under the title of "Fors Clavigera." In 1883 he was again elected Slade Professor, and at his inaugural

"Rain Maps": "Atmospheric Lines between D Lines at Sydney," &c. In 1861 he published "Notes on the Rate of Growth of some Australian Trees." He married a Spiney lady, a daughter of Ambrose Foss, in 1861. Address: The Observatory, Spiney.

RUSSELL, Earl, John Francis Stanley, J.P., L.C.C., was born on Aug. 12, 1865, and is the son of the late Viscount Amberley, and Katherine, daughter of the 2nd Baron Stanley of Alderley. He succeeded his grandfather, the illustrious Lord John Russell, in 1878. He was educated at Winchester and Balliol College, Oxford, under Dr. Jowett. He is especially interested in social questions, and is a Progressive Alderman of the London County Council. He married, in 1889, Matel, daughter of Sir Claude Scott, Bart. Address: Amberley Cottage, Maidenhead.

RUSSELL, Thomas Wallace, M.P. for South Tyrone, was born at Cupar-Fife, N.B., Feb. 28, 1841, is the son of David Russell, and was educated at the Madras Academy, Cupar-Fife. He unsuccessfully contested Preston as a Liberal in 1885, but was elected for South Tyrone in 1886, 1892, and 1895 as a Liberal Unionist. His energies were strongly directed, both in the House and in the country, against the Home Rule movement. He was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board in 1895, and he was largely instrumental in forming the Land Acts Committee of 1894, from which there followed the Land Act of 1896. Mr. Russell has contributed numerous articles to magazines on the Irish Question and other matters. He is a J.P. for the county of Dublin. He married 2d Martha, daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel Keown, of the 15th Hussars. Address: 99 Asthey Gardens, S.W.; and 102 and 103 St. Stephen's Green, Dublin.

RUSSELL, William Clark, known under his author's name of Clark Russell, was born at the Carlton House Hotel, Broadway, in the city of New York, on Feb. 24, 1844. His father was Mr. Henry Russell, the composer of "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," "There's a Good Time Coming, Boys," and many other compositions of a like kind. Mr. Clark Russell's mother was, prior to her marriage, Miss Lloyd, a connection of the poet Wordsworth, and the associate in her youth of Coleridge, Southey, Lamb, and others of that group. She died in 1887. Mr. Clark Russell was educated at Winchester and in France, and went to sea as a midshipman in the ilyvale, and Mary, daughter of John Kelly, of Castle Kelly. He was educated principally at Dr. Geoghegan's school in Dublin, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1838. During the Repeal agitation he was engaged to describe the monster meeting for the Times, and shortly afterwards an engagement on the staff of the Times. In 1846 he entered the 1st Life Guards, and was called to the Bar as Barrister-at-Law in 1850. In 1850 he was in Schleswig-Holstein during the war, and was present at the battle of Idstedt. In 1854 he was despatched as correspondent of the Times with the 1st Life Guards to the British expedition to the East, on the declaration of war between Russia and the Ottoman Empire, and from Malta he proceeded to the Light Division to Gallipoli, then to the Crimea, and so on to Bulgaria, and finally to the Crimea, where he was present at the landing at Old Fort on the 13th of September, 1854, till the final armistice and the evacuation of the Chersonese by the British in 1856. He was present at the battle of the Alma, Balaclava, and witnessed the bombardment of the Redan and the two assaults on the Malakoff, and accompanied the expeditions to Kinburn; and saw the capture of the city on Sept. 8, 1855, and the fall of the city. He witnessed the privations and sufferings of the British during the terrible winter, and the exposure of the troops were exposed in open air, and he made known by his letters and excited such indignation in the Ministry that they were turned out, and were succeeded by a more experienced and pledged to reform our military system. In 1856 he went to Moscow for the coronation of the Czar, and was present at the coronation in the Crimea, and, in the year of the outbreak of the mutiny at Cawnpore, was sent out for Sir Colin Campbell to Lucknow, and was present at the taking of Lucknow, and the siege of Oudh, Rohilkund, &c., and received the Indian War Medal and the Lucknow Clasp. In 1858 he went to England and established the Navy Gazette, of which he was the chief proprietor, having maintained for a short time with an army in Italy. When civil war was imminent in the United States he proceeded to Washington in the South, and joined the army on the day of the first battle of Bull Run, which ended in the Federal defeat. In 1862 he returned to England, and, after an unsuccessful attempt to gain the lines at Düsseldorf, he remained at home till the outbreak of the war between Prussia and France in 1870, when he repaired to the headquarters of Von Benedek, and witnessed the disastrous battle of Königgratz. A few years of peaceful life and of travel on the Continent and in the East followed; but in 1870, when war was declared by Napoleon III. against the King of Prussia and his allies, Mr. Russell was attached to the headquarters of the Crown Prince, which he joined at Wörth. He was present at the battle of Sedan, and he accompanied the German army on their march through France, remaining with the headquarters during the siege till the capitulation of Paris, when he entered the city with the Crown Prince's staff. In 1875 he was named Honorary Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales on his expedition to India, and he previously accompanied his Royal Highness during his visits to Egypt, Turkey, the Crimea, &c. When the Zulu troubles were at their height, and Lord Wolseley was sent out to save the situation, Sir William (then Mr.) Russell accompanied him, and was at the taking of Sekukuni's stronghold; and he subsequently was in Egypt during the operations under the same general, which led to the overthrow of Arabi, to the re-establishment of the Khedive in Cairo, and to the British occupation of Egypt. He has published "Letters from the Crimea," 1855-56; "The British Expedition to the Crimea," "Diary in India," "The Sepoy Mutiny," "My Diary North and South, during the Civil War in America," "Canada: its Defences," "Rifle Clubs and Volunteer Corps," "The Adventures of Dr. Brady," "My Diary in the East with the Prince of Wales," "Hesperotheria: or Notes from the West," 1882, &c. He unsuccessfully contested Chelsea in the Conservative interest in 1869. He is a Knight of the Iron Cross, a Commander of the Legion of Honour, has the Turkish War Medal of 1854-56, the Indian War Medal, 1857-58, the South African War Medal, 1879; and the Medjidieh (third and fourth class), the Osmanieh (third and fourth class), the St. Sauveur of Greece, Chevalier of Franz Josef, the Redeemer of Greece, Portugal, &c. The honour of knighthood was conferred upon him in 1895. He married (1), in 1846, Mary, daughter of Peter Burrowes, Esq., of Warren House, co. Dublin; and (2), in 1884, the Countess A. Malvezzi. Address: 37 Queen's Mansions, Victoria Street, S.W.

RUTHERFORD, The Rev. William Gunion, LL.D., Head-Master of Westminster School, born on July 17, 1853, is the second son of the Rev. Robert Rutherford, Newlands, Peeblesshire, and was educated at St. Andrews University, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1876. He also received the degree of LL.D. from St. Andrews in 1884. He was ordained Deacon by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1883, and Priest by the Bishop of London in 1885. He held a Classical Mastership at St. Paul's School from 1876 to 1883, when he was appointed, without examination, Fellow and Prælector of University College, Oxford. In the same year he became Head-Master of Westminster School. In 1881 he published "The New Phrynichus, a revised Text of the Eclogæ of the Grammarian Phrynichus, with Introductions, and a Commentary"; in 1883 an edition of "The Fables of Babrius, with Introductory Dissertations, Critical Notes, Commentary, and Lexicon"; and in 1889 "The Fourth Book of Thucydides, a revision of the Text illustrating the Principal Causes of Corruption in the manuscripts of this author"; "Scholia Aristophanica," in 3 vols., vols. i. and ii. published in 1896. The introductory chapters of "The New Phrynichus" have been translated into German by Dr. A. Funck, at the instance of the late Prof. Georg Curtius of Leipzig, under the title of "Zwei Abhandlungen zur Geschichte des Atticismus," Leipzig, 1883, and into French by Prof. Kehlhoff with the title "Contribution à l'étude du dialecte attique." Besides these larger works, Mr. Rutherford has published several smaller books, of which the most important are "A First Greek Grammar," which has gone through many editions; "Lex Rex, or Short Digest on the Principal Relations between Latin, Greek, and Anglo-Saxon Sounds"; "Herondas, a first Recension," published in 1892. In the same year he was elected a member of the Athenæum by the committee in virtue of Rule 2. He married Constance, youngest daughter of J. T. Renton, of Bradstone Brook, Shalford, in 1884. Address: 19 Dean's Yard, S.W.; Little Hallands, Bishopstone, Lewes; and Athenæum.

RUTLAND, Duke of, The Most Noble John James Robert Manners, K.G., G.C.B., P.C., LL.D., D.C.L., second son of the late John Henry, 5th Duke of Rutland, by the Lady Elizabeth Howard, fifth daughter of Frederick, 5th Earl of Carlisle, born at Belvoir Castle, Leicestershire, Dec. 13, 1818, was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1839. In June 1841 he was, with Mr. Gladstone, returned member in the Conservative interest for the borough of Newark, but he did not present himself again to that constituency at the general election in August 1847. He was defeated in a contest for

Liverpool in the latter year. He contested for the City of London in 1849, but was defeated by Lord Rothschild in June 1849; he then turned for Colchester in 1850, and continued to represent it till March 1857, when he was elected for North Leicestershire. He made a speech in February 1842, when the repeal of the Corn Laws was the subject, and, subsequently, the cultivation of relations with the See of Ely, and a better understanding with the hood, a relaxation of the law, and the passing of the Ten Hours Act, and in many other matters that he held too broad a view always with his party, though Sir R. Peel's free-importation, 1845-46, and from that time himself completely with the Conservatives. He was appointed First Clerk of the Office of Works with a Cabinet, and sworn a Privy Counsellor. Lord Derby's first administration held the same post in Lord Russell's administration in 1858-59, and was appointed in Lord Derby's third administration, 1866-67. On the Conservatives to office in 1868 he was appointed Postmaster, but he held that post until he went out of office in April 1871, when a G.C.B. In 1871 he turned for the new Melton Leicestershire, and was sworn in Lord Salisbury's Government as a member of D.C.L. upon him by the University in 1876. Previously, in 1862, LL.D. of Cambridge University conferred on him. His Grace was a defender of the rights of the supporter of the agriculturists, acted for many years as Clerk of the Tithe Redemption Trust. His performance was "English and other Poems," 1841. Appendix volume are some minor "Memorials of other Lands," five of his Grace's excursions with his elder brother, the Duke of Granby (the late Duke of Rutland), France, Spain, Switzerland. His other works are: "A Pilgrimage of Holy-Days," 1843; "Notes of a Tour," 1849; "Notes of a Cruise on board the Duke of Rutland's Yacht, Resolution, in 1848," a handsome folio volume of sketches by John Christian Baskin. "English Ballads and other Poems," 1841. "The Factories Bill, a Lecture," 1851; "Speeches of Church Rates," 1856. He was appointed Chancellor of the Lord Salisbury's second administration. He succeeded to the dukedom of North Devon on the death of his brother, Mar. 2, 1888. He married first, in 1851, Catharine Mary, daughter of the late Lord Salisbury, C.B. (she died April 7, 1888). He married secondly, in 1862, Janet, daughter of Thomas Hughan, Esq. Galloway. Addresses: Belvoir Castle, Cambridge Gate, Regent's Park,

W. P., was born in the county of Devon, Oct. 27, 1867; trained for the legal profession, but left it for journalism as a step towards literature, and came to London in 1886. He was on the staff of the National Press; was literary sub-editor of the Catholic and was one of the founders of the Review Society; and assisted Sir John Lubbock in his Irish literary tour. He joined the Sun staff under Mr. O'Connor in 1894, and for some time was in the position of its literary editor. He was on the literary staff of the Weekly Review. Mr. O'Connor, and is an outside contributor to several London newspapers. He published "The Heart of Tipperary: the Romance of the Land League," 1894; "The Irish Literary Revival," 1894; "The Thatch," a novel, pseudonym of "Kevin Kennedy," 1898. He has also written several addresses: Sun Buildings, Fleet Street, London; and Irish Literary, 8 Adelphi Terrace, Strand,

Rev. Professor Herbert Ryle, D.D., was born in Onslow, London, May 25, 1856, and is the eldest son of the Right Rev. John Ryle, Lord Bishop of Liverpool. He was educated under the Rev. R. Wace, D.D. (Sussex), 1866-68, and at Eton College, being elected on to the Foundation Scholarship in 1869, and the Newcastle Scholarship in 1870, his tutor being E. C. Austen Leigh. The same year he was elected to the Foundation Scholarship at King's College, London; B.A. in 1879 (obliged to take a first degree in consequence of not attaining a first class in the logical Tripos, 1881. University of Cambridge: Carnus Prizeman (Undergraduate), 1875; (Bachelor), 1879; Winchcombe Prize, 1878; Crosse Prize, 1880; Hebrew Evans and Scholastic Prize, 1881. He was elected Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, in 1881; M.A. degree in 1882, and the D.D. in 1892. He was ordained Deacon in 1883. He was Divinity

Lecturer at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 1881-84, and at King's College, 1882-86. In 1886 he was made Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, South Wales, where he remained till 1888, having been elected to the Hulsean Professorship of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, in November 1887, which he holds at the present time. He was elected a Professorial Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, in 1888. He was Examining Chaplain to the late Bishop of St. Asaph, 1887-89, and is now to the Lord Bishop of Ripon. He was Examiner for the Cambridge Theological Tripos in 1884, 1886, 1887, 1889, 1892, and was Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge in 1889 and 1892. In 1896 he became President of Queen's College, Cambridge. He is an Hon. Chaplain to the Queen. He has published the following works: "The Psalms of Solomon," edited in conjunction with M. R. James, Cambridge University Press, 1891; "The Canon of the Old Testament," an essay on the gradual growth and formation of the Hebrew Canon of Scripture, 1892; "The Early Narratives of Genesis," 1892; and a "Commentary on Ezra and Nehemiah," Cambridge Bible for School Series, 1893. He is also a contributor to Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," 2nd edit., and to the "Cambridge Companion to the Bible," 1893. Professor Ryle was married, in 1883, to Nea Hewish, only daughter of Major-General G. Hewish-Adams (late Royal Irish Rifles), and has issue living Edward Hewish and Roger John. Address: The Lodge, Queen's College, Cambridge.

RYLE, The Right Rev. John Charles, D.D., Bishop of Liverpool, eldest son of the late John Ryle, Esq., M.P., born near Macclesfield on May 16, 1816, educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1836, was Craven University Scholar, and took a first class in classical honours. Having been admitted into orders in 1841, he was curate at Exbury, in the New Forest; was appointed Rector of St. Thomas's, Winchester, in 1843; Rector of Helmingham, Suffolk, in 1844; Vicar of Stradbroke, Suffolk, in 1861; Rural Dean of Horne in 1869; and an honorary Canon of Norwich in 1871. He was nominated to the Deanery of Salisbury by Lord Beaconsfield in March 1880, and soon afterwards the same statesman appointed him Bishop of Liverpool. He was consecrated in York Minster, June 11, 1880. He is the author of "Expository Thoughts on the Gospels," in 7 vols., published in 1856-59; of "Plain Speaking, First and Second Series," of "Hymns for the Church on Earth," and ity Extension in 1885, and held it, with conspicuous administrative for ten years. From 1886 to 1895 Steward of Christ Church, a post time held by the Right Hon. Arthur ; and from 1890 to 1895 he was of Christ Church. In 1893 he appointed a Member of the Royal Commission on Secondary Education. A years ago Government instituted an office, the Directorship of Special Studies and Reports in the Education Department, and Mr. Sadler was appointed. He has issued three volumes of Local Reports, written by himself and assistants, which together will probably go far to revolutionise the ideas of ignorant Englishmen upon education. The first volume, issued in 1897, dealt, among other matters, with the elementary educational systems of Ireland, Belgium, Denmark, and Prussia; and also with the higher Primary Schools of France, and the Realschulen of Berlin. He is a Member of the Education sub-committee of the Royal Commission for the Paris Exposition of 1900. Jointly with an old friend, Mr. Mackinder, of Christ Church, he has written on "University Extension" in all its bearings. He married, in 1886, a daughter of Charles Harvey. Addresses: Eastwood, Weybridge; and henceum.

SADLER, Walter Dendy, was born at Dorking, on May 12, 1854, and is the eldest son of John Dendy Sadler, solicitor, Horsham. He was educated at Horsham, and studied at Heatherley's, in London, for six months in 1871, and at Altdorf, under J. M. Burfield and Wilhelm Simmler. He returned to London in 1877, and has exhibited at the Royal Academy since 1873. His subjects are those thoroughly English types—the post-boys, squires, farmers, and ruddy-cheeked country tradesmen of the beginning of the century—of whom quaint survivals must have been familiar to him in the Surrey towns and villages during the seventies. Among his principal works we may mention "Friday," "It's always the Largest Fish that is Lost," "The Old Squire and the Young Squire," "Old and Crusted," "Uninvited Guests," "Dummy Whist;" and of late years, at the Royal Academy, "Toddy at the 'Cheshire Cheese,'" and "An Offer of Marriage," 1895; "The End of the Skein," "Time and the Flowers," and "Married," 1896; "Nearly Done," and "For Weal or Woe," 1897; "The Young and the Old," and "A Little Mortgage," 1898; "The Christening," and "The Plaintiff and the Defendant," 1899. Address: Hemingford Grey, St. Ives, Hants.

SAGASTA, Praxedes Mateo, a Spanish statesman, was born at Torrecilla de Cameros, July 21, 1827. He studied in the School of Engineers in Madrid, practised his profession at Valladolid and Zamora, and was elected by the latter town to the Constituent Cortes of 1854. He took part in the insurrection of 1856, and was obliged to seek refuge in France. On the amnesty being proclaimed he returned to Spain, and became a Professor in the School of Engineers in Madrid. He was also the editor of La Iberia, the principal organ of the Progressist party. After the unsuccessful insurrection of June 1856, he was again under the necessity of seeking an asylum in France, and he did not return to Spain until after the fall of Queen Isabella II. Appointed Minister of the Interior in the first Cabinet formed by General Prim, he gradually adopted more and more the views of that statesman and of the Conservative party, and completely broke off his relations with his old friend Zorilla. He was consequently exposed to bitter attacks from the Republican minority in the Cortes. Appointed Minister of State in January 1870, he ordered several towns, including Barcelona, to be placed in a state of siege, declared himself in favour of the monarchy, and proposed, on Dec. 17, 1870, the dissolution of the Chamber, after the king had taken the oath. He continued to be Minister of State and Minister of the Interior in the first Cabinet of King Amadeus, and during that monarch's brief reign he took part in several ministerial combinations, either as a Member or as President of the Council. Under the Presidency of Marshal Serrano, in 1874, he was Minister for Foreign Affairs (Jan. 4), Minister of the Interior (May 13), and President of the Council (Aug. 4). After the coup d'état re-establishing the monarchy, he withdrew for a time from public life. In June 1875 he gave in his adherence to the cause of Alfonso XII., and endeavoured to form a Liberal Constitutional party. Subsequently he joined the Opposition, and attacked the administrations formed by Martínez Campos and Cánovas, 1877–79. When a new Liberal party was formed in 1880 Señor Sagasta gave in his adhesion to it. The Conservative Cabinet of Señor Cánovas del Castillo was overthrown early in the year 1881, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and General Martínez Campos came into power. Sagasta's ministry remained in office till Oct. 1883, when it was superseded by a Cabinet formed from the Dynastic Left. This, however, was short-lived, and was followed by a return of the Conservatives to power. On the death of Alfonso XII., Nov. 23, 1885, Señor Sagasta, at the request of the Queen Regent, again became the head of the Government; but, in consequence of a crisis, he re-formed the Cabinet in 1888, and gave to his policy a more markedly democratic character. Among the acts of his ministry may be mentioned the passing of the Anglo-Spanish commercial treaty. After fresh ministerial crises, Señor Sagasta was again commissioned to form a new ministry in January 1890, but in the July following, after violent scenes in the Chamber, he was obliged to retire, and was replaced by Cánovas del Castillo, whose Cabinet remained in power till the elections of March 1893, when Sagasta returned to office as President of the Council and Foreign Minister. He relinquished the latter post, however, on the assembling of the Cortes, in order to devote himself entirely to a general supervision of affairs, 5th April 1893. A Cabinet crisis occurred on March 8, 1894, the ministry resigned, and Señor Sagasta was again requested to form a Cabinet, which came into power, met with constant opposition, and resigned office on October 31. A new ministry was formed a few days afterwards, and Señor Sagasta again became Premier, five of his former ministers resuming office under him. In March 1895 occurred an extraordinary incident, which resulted in the resignation of Sagasta's ministry. A number of army officers, irritated at their conduct being criticised in certain of the Madrid papers, attacked and wrecked the offices of the Resumen and Globo. The editors naturally claimed the protection of the Government, which was granted, and the officers in question were strongly guarded by the police. When the subject was discussed in the Chamber on the following day (March 15, 1895), the reply of the War Minister, General Lopez Dominguez, was regarded as practically backing up the officers in their illegal conduct. The Press representatives left the House in a body, and the ministry subsequently resigned on the War Minister insisting that the charge of libel against the two newspapers which had attacked the officers should be tried before a court-martial. Previous to the resignation of the Cabinet, a deputation of officers waited upon Señor Sagasta to require the suppression of the Resumen. Sagasta met this insolent demand with a flat refusal, and confined to barracks all the officers concerned, while some were court-martialled. The succeeding Premier, the ill-fated Señor Cánovas del Castillo, on assuming office, stated that the new Government had effected no compromise with the military, but were counting on the loyal support of Sagasta and his followers, in order to legalise the strained situation. In July 1897 Sagasta manifested to the nation, severing the policy of the Government towards Cuba, and stated that the Government was to send out to Cuba a captain whose mission should be to suppress the insurrection, while should be appointed to conciliate conflicting elements in the alluding to the Philippines. He insisted upon the necessity of the influence of the monks, and preventing their outside the sphere of their religion. In the previous month, owing to a monetary dead-lock, the Government tendered their resignations. Queen-Regent (q.v.), after refusing to accept. However, came to a sudden end on the nation of Señor Cánovas by his death on the first Sunday in August. General Premier pro tempore. General resigned in the following month by the receipt of the fact, note, and Sagasta was seen in the graph. He resumed office at the first meeting of the Cabinet in plain terms, his dissatisfaction with the course of events in Cuba, and the importance of a report on the position, and details of which General Weyler was to submit. The Premier also said that Weyler would tender his resignation "but, if he did not, he would resign." This step was taken, and General Weyler was superseded by Marshal Sagasta attempted to redeem his promise by granting autonomy to the island, but their leaders, emboldened by the critical internal state of Spain, demanded complete independence. It was to enter here upon the long and difficult failure of Sagasta's policy, and the consequent imbroglio with the United States. Sagasta's country's aid at a time when they touched their lowest point, but his leadership saved a nation. In crisis after crisis, soothed passions, allayed public anger, and circumvented a hopeless war, almost bankrupt treasury, and, as a measure, the national conflict still engaged on these great ted to be Secretary of Legation at enos Ayres (1872), transferred to Rio Janeiro (1877), and Constantinople in 79. In 1881 he became Minister to the publics of Central America, in 1884 he

s transferred to Colombia, and later the same year to Venezuela, which he
t in March 1887, diplomatic relations ving been broken off, owing to the dis-te with British Guiana as to the boundary. In 1888 he was promoted to be Minister to Serbia, and was transferred to his present post in 1893.

ST. JOHN, Sir Spenser, G.C.M.G., third son of the late Mr. James Augustus
St. John, was born in London, Dec. 22, 1825. After receiving a careful education, he began to turn his attention towards the East, and having applied himself diligently to the study of the Malay language, was in 1848 appointed secretary to Sir James Brooke. He resided in Borneo several years as H.M. Consul-General, and received in 1861 the appointment of Chargé d'Affaires to the Republic of Hayti. On returning to this country in 1862, he published an account of his Eastern residence and travels, entitled "Life in the Forests of the Far East." Early in 1863 he left England for the West Indies, and some years later was promoted to the post of Minister Resident and Consul-General in Hayti. About the same time he was accredited also as Chargé d'Affaires to the Dominican Republic. In 1874 he was appointed Minister Resident and Consul-General at Lima, Peru, and in 1875 he proceeded on a special mission to Bolivia.
He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1881 for services rendered during the war between Peru and Chili, and a G.C.M.G. in 1894. In May 1883 he was sent on a special mission to Mexico, to negotiate for the resumption of diplomatic relations with that country; and was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Mexico, Nov. 28, 1884, and was transferred to Stockholm, July 1, 1893. Sir Spenser St. John, who is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, published in 1879 "The Life of Sir James Brooke, Rajah of Sarawak," and in 1885,
"The Black Republic," an account of Hayti. Address: Athenæum.

ST. JOHN - BRENON, Edward,
F.S.A., F.R.G.S., journalist, the eldest son of the Rev. William Brenon, M.A., was born in Dublin, Feb. 21, 1847, and educated at the High School and Trinity College in that city. In 1866 he published his first volume of poems, entitled "Bianca, the Flower-girl of Bologna." In 1869 followed "Ambrosia Amoris," and a few years afterwards, in rapid succession, "Two Gallian Laments," "The Witch of Nemi," and "The Tribune Reflects." Mr. St.
John-Brenon has on several occasions essayed unsuccessfully to enter Parliament.

ST. LÉON, Madame, née Cerito, Francesca, called Fanny, a celebrated dancer, born in Naples, March 11, 1821, is the daughter of an old soldier of the Europe. "She gave a child she was born into, with great natural grace and beauty. She had a perfect carriage in 1830 at the San Carlo Theatre, in a 'L'air Italien.' The 'Hortensia' and created great enthusiasm, and afterwards ranked at the principal theatres of Italy. She was in Vienna for two years, and was a favorite every season from 1840 to 1845, in London, where she landed the first of her successes with Talisman, Capriccio, and L'Air de France. A daughter she was married to a German noble, under the name M. A. St. Leon, from whom she was separated in 1850. Mme. Camille, who was called the "Fourth Opera," composed, along with M. Loche, the Gaiety, the "Gaiety," and other plays. She is now residing in Paris.

SAINT-SAËNS, Charles Camille.

Charles Camille was born in Paris Oct. 9, 1835. He inherited his father's love for music from his mother and a great amount was taught him the elements of music. At seven he began to study the piano, and soon appeared afterward as a soloist at the Conservatoire. In 1847 he entered Benedict's class at the Conservatoire, and ranked the second organist in 1849, and the first in 1851. At the age of seventeen he composed his first symphony, which was performed with success by the Société de Sainte Cecile. In 1850 he became organist of the church of St. Merri. In 1855 he was appointed organist at the Madeleine, and distinguished himself as much by his talent for improvisation as by his execution. Shortly afterward he accepted the post of Pianoforte Professor at Niedermeyer's Ecole de Musique Religieuse. For his cantata, "Les Noces de Prométhée," he gained the prize awarded by the International Exhibition of 1867. "La Princesse-Jaune" was produced at the Opéra Comique, June 12, 1872, and "Le Timbale d'Argent," at the Théâtre Lyrique, Feb. 23, 1877. Neither of these operas met with much success, and M. Saint-Saëns produced his next work, "Samson et Delilah," a sacred drama, at Weimar, in December 1877, and "Erienne Marcel," an opera, at Lyons, Feb. 8, 1879. The printed catalogue of his works includes sixty-four numbered, besides many unnumbered, pieces. He visited England in 1871, and played at the Musical Union. In 1874 and 1879 he took part in the Philharmonic Concerts, and on Dec. 6, 1879, he conducted his "Ronde d'Omphale" at the Crystal Palace. He produced at the great Opéra of Paris "Henry VIII." in 1883, and "Ascanio" in 1890. "Samson et Delilah" was produced at the great Opéra of Paris, Nov. 23, 1892, and "Phryne" at the Opéra Comique, May 1894. M. Saint-Saëns is LL.D. of Cambridge, 1893. "Theodore Saint-Saëns died at the Opéra Comique, December 1893. In 1894 he had great sympathy in the Philharmonic Concerts given in addition to his other work. M. Saint-Saëns is a critic, and has written La Renaissance Lyrique, Le Français, Le Nouveau Lyrique. He was member of the Institute, Paris. Saint-Saëns is one of the greatest talents on the piano and instrumental works, and his works show consummate technique. His faults are his inequality and occasional lapses in Paris during the winter he gives up piano and one knows where he has been thought to be. His address is: 4 Place de l'Opéra.

SAINTSBURY, George.

Bateman, Professor of English Literature in Edinburgh, was born at St. Oct. 20, 1847, and studied at College School, London. His orchestral compositions have been few, the most recent being the "Grand Funeral March in memory of Victor Hugo," first performed at the Albert Hall. He has also won reputation as a writer and lecturer on musical subjects, being the first to trace the history of the pianoforte and its precursors. Mr. Salaman, who founded the first amateur choral society in London in 1849, was one of the founders of the Musical Society of London in 1858, and was for nearly ten years its honorary Secretary. He was also one of the founders in 1874 of the Musical Association for the "investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art and science of music," and he performed the duties of honorary secretary until the end of 1877, when he retired as a Vice-President of the Association. In 1882 he published an important volume entitled "Jews as they are," which deals with the modern Jews from a social, political, and religious point of view, and seeks to vindicate the Jewish character from reproach and prejudice. Mr. Salaman has now retired from professional life, but, in his 85th year, he still continues to compose music, and to celebrate each birthday by the publication of new songs, his latest dating exactly seventy years after his earliest. SALISBURY, Marquis of, The Most Hon. Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoigne-Cecil, P.C., K.G., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., D.L., J.P., Prime Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, is the eldest surviving son of the 2nd Marquis of Salisbury, by his first wife, the daughter and heir of Bamber Gascoigne, Esq., born at Hatfield in 1830, was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated, and was elected a Fellow of All Souls' College (1853). In 1853 he was elected M.P. for Stamford, and he represented that borough in the Conservative interest until his succession to the marquise on the death of his father, April 12, 1868. While in the Lower House he was known as Lord Robert Cecil, until the decease of his elder brother on June 14, 1865, when he assumed the courtesy title of Viscount Cranborne. His lordship took an active part in all public measures which affected the interests of the Established Church, and in the chief political questions of the day, and he was a frequent contributor to the Quarterly Review and to other periodicals. In Lord Derby's third administration he was, in July 1866, appointed Secretary of State for India, which post he resigned on account of a difference of opinion respecting the Reform Bill, March 2, 1867, when two other Cabinet ministers, viz., General Peel, War Secretary, and Lord Carnarvon, Colonial Secretary, also gave in their resignations. On Nov. 12, 1869, he was elected Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in succession to the late Earl of Derby. In 1871-72 he and Lord Cairns, as arbitrators, conducted a long investigation into the complicated affairs of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company. His lordship was again appointed Secretary of State for India when Mr. Disraeli returned to office in February 1874. When, at the close of the war between Turkey and Servia, differences arose between the former Power and Russia, the Marquis of Salisbury was sent as Special Ambassador to the Sublime Porte, and he and Sir Henry Elliot acted as joint Minister Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain at the Conference of Constantinople. His lordship left England Nov. 20, 1876, and, en route, visited Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and Rome. The progress towards agreement made at the preliminary meetings held at the Russian Embassy in Constantinople were so satisfactory that the formal Conference, at which the joint proposals of the Powers were pressed upon the Porte, was opened on December 23. At the same time the new Constitution of the Ottoman Empire was formally promulgated by its author, Midhat Pasha. The Marquis of Salisbury really took the place of leader at the Conference, which held altogether seven plenary meetings. On Sunday, Jan. 14, 1877, he had an audience of the Sultan, at which Sir Arnold Kemball acted as interpreter, and pressed upon his Majesty the two points on which the two Powers intended to insist, informing him that if they were not accepted the Ambassadors would immediately leave Constantinople. These two proposals were, that there should be a mixed Turkish and International Commission of Supervision, and that the first appointment of the Governors should be ratified by the Powers. On Jan. 18 a special meeting of the Ottoman Grand Council was held, and about 140 Mussulmans and about sixty leading Christians were present. The proceedings lasted two hours, and were opened by Midhat Pasha. With one dissentient voice the Council were unanimous in insisting on the rejection of the proposals of the Powers. The Conference held its last sitting on January 20, and immediately afterwards Lord Salisbury left for England. On April 2, 1878, he was appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the room of the Earl

d electrical railway at Liverpool, the course of a speech delivered on that occasion, dwelt on the marvellous of electricity. He is himself an engineer, and has applied it to practical uses at Hatfield House and on his estate.

He is also much interested in astronomy and the whole range of experimental physics, and spends much of his time in his private laboratory. On March 1884 he presided at Oxford, as Chancellor of the University, over a meeting in the building fund of the Radcliffe Library, and spoke on that occasion on the necessity of giving increased attention to the study of medicine. In April, illness prevented him from visiting Belfast to meet the great Unionist demonstrations, but he received a number of Ulster delegates, and himself travelled in Ulster.

In August 1894 he presided over the meeting of the British Association at Cambridge and delivered a notable inaugural address in which he dwelt on the necessities of giving increased attention to scientific speculation. In December 1895 the Liberal Government asked him on the ammunition question, and he sat on the Committee on Army Estimates, and Lord Rosebery immediately resigned. Lord Salisbury was sent for, and duly resumed his administration. His Cabinet, newly constituted, consisted of 14 members, of whom four were Unionists. The general election of 1895, in giving the Unionist Coalition a majority of 150, the strongest Government of modern times. During 1896 Lord Salisbury was much occupied by the conduct of our relations with America, and the Venezuelan Boundary, and his conciliatory attitude has been much appreciated at Washington. Indeed, the present cordial understanding between the two branches of the Saxon race is, in great measure, due to Lord Salisbury's endeavours. The atrocities added very much to the duties of his office. The action of Mr. Chamberlain and others, who on every occasion vehemently denounced the Sultan, only handicapped the Government in its efforts to obtain a peaceful solution of the problem. Isolated action on the part of England was strongly advocated, and finally by a section of the press, but Lord Salisbury resolutely pursued a policy which enabled him to act in concert with the European Powers, since he held that a European war would follow the isolated action of Great Britain. During the crisis a similar attitude was followed, and Lord Salisbury's policy was severely criticised. But the chaotic state of the island itself, and the conflicting interests of the Great Powers, rendered any action by any single Power very difficult. Upon the outbreak of a conflict at Candia, in which British soldiers were killed and Christian inhabitants massacred, Admiral Noel, in command of the British squadron, bombarded the town, and afterwards sent an ultimatum to the Turkish Governor demanding the ringleaders. His request was speedily complied with, and several of them were executed. Later, a collective note signed by Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy, demanding the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from the island, was presented to the Sultan, who surrendered unconditionally. The evacuation was completed in November, when Lord Salisbury urged upon the Russian Minister at Constantinople to formally propose Prince George of Greece as High Commissioner and Governor of Crete. The proposal met with universal approbation, and was ultimately accepted by the Sultan. Affairs in the Far East reached an acute stage during 1897-98. Li Hung Chang, the most influential personage in China, had been sent in 1896 to Europe as an Envoy Extraordinary, and after visiting the various capitals, came to London and received a hearty welcome. During his visit to this country, he went to Hatfield as the guest of Lord Salisbury, and endeavoured, in vain, to get his lordship to assent to an increase of the import duties levied upon British goods entering China. The refusal to accede to the wishes of Li Hung Chang was probably the cause of his hostility to England throughout the Chinese crisis, which was precipitated by the act of Germany in November 1897, when a force of German marines landed at Kiao Chau in order to exact reparation for the murder of two missionaries. They made their position secure, and shortly afterwards demanded, and obtained, the port and the territory around it on a lease of 99 years. Russia almost immediately after occupied Port Arthur and Talienwan in a similar manner, and Lord Salisbury had to face a considerable alteration in the balance of power in the Far East. As a set-off against the Russian aggression, Great Britain put forward a demand, which was granted, for the cession of the islands and waters of Wei-hai-wei for the same number of years and on the same terms as Port Arthur had been ceded to Russia. Throughout the Chinese crisis Lord Salisbury was subjected to a good deal of criticism from both sides of the House, and also in the press, for not pursuing a more active policy. But the lack of vigorous action was more apparent than real, as among the various concessions secured by his lordship were the opening of all inland waters to navigation to the vessels of all nations; the opening of various treaty ports; the assurance that no portion of the province adjoining the Yangtse-Kiang Valley should be alienated to any other power. The Chinese Government also undertook that so long as British trade continued to exceed that of any other nation the Inspector-General of Maritime Customs should be a British subject. A convention was also signed by which the mainland opposite Hong Kong, and the island of Lan-tao and M'rs Bay, were secured to Great Britain, the area thus acquired covering about 200 square miles. The consecutive victories in the Soudan, and the capture of Khartoum by Lord Kitchener in 1898 brought into prominence our relations with France and her interests in Egypt, and when a French force was discovered posted at Fashoda a serious situation was created. In September Lord Salisbury pointed out to the French Foreign Office that all the territories which had been subject to the Khalifa had passed by right of conquest to the British and Egyptian Governments, and that H.M. Government did not consider this right open to discussion. Lord Salisbury also insisted upon the withdrawal of the French force as a condition precedent to negotiation on the matter. His lordship had the unanimous support of the country on the question of the evacuation of Fashoda by the French, and ultimately a satisfactory solution of the difficulty was arrived at by which the French Government relinquished all claims to the Nile Valley in consideration of concessions made to them in the Niger Hinterland. During 1898 Lord Salisbury was obliged for some weeks to give up his duties and go abroad on account of his health, which for some time had given his friends much anxiety. The duties of the Foreign Office devolved upon Mr. A. J. Balfour during his absence. The Marquis of Salisbury is a member of the Council of King's College, London; Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Constable of Dover Castle; High Steward of Great Yarmouth; Elder Brother of Trinity House, and Hon. Colonel of the 4th Batt. of the Bedfordshire Regiment and of the Herts Militia. For many years he was Chairman of the Middlesex Sessions. Lord Salisbury's tenure of office during the Jubilee year of the Queen's reign will be memorable in his lordship's family for the honour which her Majesty paid him by going in person to visit him at Hatfield. In 1857 he married Georgiana Caroline, daughter of Sir Edward Hall Alderson, Baron of the Exchequer, and niece of the celebrated Mrs. Opie. His eldest son is Viscount Cranborne (born 1861), M.P. for the Darwen Division of Lancashire from 1885 to 1892, and in 1893 returned for Rochester.

SALISBURY, Bishop Wordsworth, THE RIGHT

SALMON, The Rev. GEORGE, Dublin, and Hon. Edin. D. LL.D. Cantab., F.R.S. L. & C. in 1819, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, was elected as Senior Moderator in 1839. He was successively Fellow of his College, and Regius Professor of Divinity at the University of Dublin in 1866, and held until his appointment to the College in 1888. Besides contributions to theological and periodicals, and in particular "Dictionary of Christian Biography," on "The Higher Plane," "The Geometry of Three Dimensions," "The Modern Higher Algebra," have been translated into European languages, and was honoured by the Royal and the Royal Society, and the Medal of the Royal Irish Academy. He has published four volumes besides many single sermons, published two series of lectures in the Divinity School of the one forming an Introduction to the Testament, and the other to the Infallibility of the Church. His recent publication is "Theological Criticism of the New Testament." He is a member of the Academy, a Fellow of the Royal Society of London and Edinburgh, corresponding member of the Académie des Sciences at Göttingen, Berlin, and a Fellow of the Lincei, Rome. He was President of the Mathematical and Physical Sciences of the British Association meeting held in Dublin in 1887. Address: Provost's House, I.

SALMON, Admiral JAMES, G.C.B., U.C., was born in Farnham, and educated at Marlborough, is the son of the Rev. H. S. Salmon of Swarraton, by Emily, a daughter of Admiral Nowell. He entered the Navy in May 1847, and was promoted to the rank of Captain in January 1856. While holding the command of H.M.S. James Watson in the Russian war, and was awarded the Baltic medal. In the Indian Mutiny he gained his V.C. while attacking the "Shannon Brigade," relieving Lucknow, during the attack on the strongly occupied fort, and the attack suffered severe and extraordinary marksmanship.

SALMONÉ, Professor H. Anthony, holds the Chair of Arabic at King's College, London, was born in Beyrout, on Sept. 1, 1860. He is of Cretan descent, and derives his family name from Saint Salmoné in Crete, which is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. The subject was brought to England when a year old, and later was sent to the Archdeaconry College, Beyrout, in which city afterwards entered St. Joseph's University, where he completed his education, then returned to England. He early devoted his whole energy to philological and literary studies. His father, who died in 1894, was himself an accomplished linguist, and was able to read, write, and converse fluently in about a dozen languages. He soon found a number of scholars amongst the most distinguished linguists and scholars in this country, and in 1883 was elected a member of the Royal Asiatic Society. During the same year, and under the presidency of the late Bartle Frere, he delivered an address before a well-attended meeting of the Society, "On the importance to Great Britain of the study of Arabic." In 1884 Professor Salmoné was appointed lecturer in Arabic at University College, London, and he began to devote himself to the compilation of an Arabic-English and

English-Arabic lexicon, which was dedicated by special permission to the Queen. It was compiled on a new and unique system, comprising about 120,000 Arabic words in vol. i. and about 50,000 in vol. ii.; this important work, published by Trübner in 1890, was well received by the press and by Oriental scholars at home and abroad. In the same year he was appointed Professor of Arabic at King's College, London. In 1891 he went on an extended tour in the East, visiting among other places some parts of India, Persia, Mesopotamia, Arabia, Egypt, Syria, and various other places in Turkey. His reputation as an Arabic scholar secured for him a welcome reception by the leading native scholars in Syria, Egypt, and Constantinople. In 1892 Professor Salmoné received a gratifying acknowledgment of his work, the Sultan of Turkey sending him the Order of the Medjidieh of the third class, in recognition of the services he had rendered to Oriental literature by the publication of his Arabic-English lexicon. Soon after starting on his Eastern travels in 1891 he was offered the post of special correspondent to the Times in Egypt, which, however, he was unable to accept. After his return from the East Professor Salmoné edited and conducted for nearly a year and a half the Eastern and Western Review, a monthly periodical intended to arouse public interest in Imperial affairs and Oriental subjects generally. After the discontinuance of this periodical he contributed various miscellaneous and political articles to the reviews and to newspapers, including the Nineteenth Century, Blackwood, the Times, and other journals. One of his most interesting works is "The Fall and Resurrection of Turkey" (published in 1896 by Messrs. Methuen), which gives a full and graphic account of the condition of the Turkish Empire, and indicates the reforms which are needed. He has also devised and edited an interesting work entitled "The Imperial Souvenir" (D. Nutt, 1897), dedicated by special permission to the Queen. It gives a metrical translation of the third verse of the National Anthem in fifty languages spoken in the British Empire. Professor Salmoné was employed at the War Office during 1885 and 1886 in the translation of important documents, also undertaking similar duties for the Admiralty. He has always been an active agitator for the encouragement of Oriental studies in England, and recently delivered an address "On the importance to Great Britain of establishing an Oriental School in London" at the Royal Asiatic Society. Address: 39 Colville Gardens, W.

son of the late Mr. Philip Salomons, and was born on June 28, 1851, at Brighton. Having lost both his parents when he was very young, the responsibility of his guardianship was undertaken by his uncle, the late Sir David Salomons. He was educated by private tutors and at University College, London, afterwards proceeding to Caius College, Cambridge, graduating in the Natural Science Tripos, his tastes tending rather to physical science than to pure mathematics. The pursuit of scientific attainments has been almost the exclusive occupation of his life. Not content with mere theoretical knowledge, he was in the habit of frequenting workshops, working with the men, and thus gaining an insight into the practical work; his uncle, moreover, provided him with a laboratory where he could devote his attention to the subjects which interested him so deeply. When, however, he succeeded to his uncle's position he was not neglectful of its duties and responsibilities. He worked assiduously as a county magistrate, being a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Sussex, Middlesex, Westminster, and London, and he is also a Deputy-Lieutenant for Kent. In 1874 Sir David Salomons stood in the Liberal interest for Mid-Kent, but he was defeated; and at the general election of 1880, through holding the offices of sheriff and returning officer, he was precluded from seeking election. Since that period he had relinquished things political, until 1885, when he consented to contest the new borough of St. George's-in-the-East. Sir David Salomons is a member of several clubs, including the Savage Club; a County Councillor for Kent, representing one of the Tunbridge Divisions; and belongs to many societies, being an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, of the Physical Society, of the Chemical Society, of the Geological Society, of the Royal Meteorological Society, and a Fellow of the Royal Microscopical Society. He is a Past Vice-President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, and a Past Manager of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. Sir David has also studied drawing and painting, the better to appreciate art and its difficulties. He has served on the Scientific Committees appointed by the Institute of Electrical Engineers for settling symbols, fire risks, &c., and has brought out several new and successful inventions. He is also the author of several scientific papers read before many scientific societies: "Electric Light Installations and Management of Accumulators," 7th edit., in 3 vols. (the 8th edition will shortly appear), and of "Photographic Notes and Formulæ," &c. Regarding the "Woman's Rights"

ings for Punch that he is best known; is singular that although Mr. [unclear] is the doyen of English caricature and as such maintains the ancient and highly honourable traditions of a [unclear] English art, he has never recognition from any Academy, elected to the Athenæum under [unclear] in April 1896. He is married to the eldest daughter of the late Spenspath, F.R.S. Addresses: 18 Terrace, Kensington, W.; and m.

SAMPSON, William Thomas, a naval officer, was born at Albany, N.Y., Feb. 9, 1840, and graduated at the Naval Academy in 1861. He became a lieutenant the same year, and a Lieutenant July 1862; was stationed at the Naval Academy in 1864, and then served as monitor Patapasco, and was in that ship when she was destroyed by a torpedo at Charleston Harbour in January 1865. He was in the European squadron in 1867, when he became a Lieut.-Commander, and in August 1874 was made a Commander. He was on the Asiatic Squadron in command of the Swordara, 1879–80. Assistant-Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, Washington, 1880–81, and Superintendent of the Naval Academy, 1886–90, becoming a Captain in 1890. From January 1892 till 1897 he was in command of the Bureau of Ordnance, and in 1897 to the spring of 1898 was in command of the battleship Iowa. Just before the war with Spain broke out in 1898 he was placed in command of the American fleet at Key West, with the rank of Rear-Admiral, and had the credit of operations in West Indian waters which culminated in the destruction of the Spanish squadron near Santiago July 3, 1898. He was appointed at one of the Commissioners to the Conference with the Spanish authorities for the evacuation of Cuba by Spain, and previously been advanced to the rank of Rear-Admiral for his services.

SAMPSON, The Right Hon. Sir [unclear], K.C.M.G., C.B., J.P., born 1820, is the son of the late Samuel, Esq., of London. He sailed for New South Wales in 1832; and, after finishing his education at the Sydney Grammar School, he became extensively engaged in mining, commercial, and engineering pursuits, and is recognised as the pioneer of several industries which have since developed into important ones. His public career commenced in 1850 years before responsible government was inaugurated in New South Wales; he was then elected a member of the Legislative Council. Soon after the promulgation of the new Constitution in 1856 he was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly; and, in 1859, first accepted office in the Forster Administration as Colonial Treasurer. He held the same portfolio in the Cowper Government of 1865, the Robertson Ministry in 1868, and the Cowper Administration of 1869. He has also acted as Postmaster-General in several Governments, and successfully conducted negotiations with the United States Government for a Postal Convention with New South Wales, which resulted in the establishment of the San Francisco Mail Service with Australia. After holding high office under every Governor of the Colony (except Lord Carrington) since the inauguration of responsible government, he, in 1880, resigned the Postmaster-Generalship in the Parkes Administration, and was appointed Agent-General for the Colony in London, a position which he continues to fill. In that capacity he has conducted diplomatic and financial business of the highest importance with uniform success, and to the great satisfaction of successive Governments. He was created C.M.G. in 1874; K.C.M.G. in 1882; and C.B. (Civil) in 1886. He was created a Baronet in January 1898. He retired in October 1898, after a year's leave, and was thanked by Mr. Chamberlain for the manner in which he had discharged the duties of his post. He has been twice married (1), in 1857, to Henrietta Matilda, daughter of Benjamin Goldsmid Levien, Esq., of Geelong, Victoria; and (2) in 1877, to Sara Louise, daughter of E. Isaac, Esq., of Auckland, New Zealand. Address: 34 Nevill Square, S.W.

SAMUEL-MONTAGU, Sir [unclear], Bart. (usually called Sir Samuel Montagu), M.P., J.P., D.L., head of the banking firm of Samuel Montagu & Co., London, was born at Liverpool on Dec. 21, 1832, and is the son of the late Louis Samuel, of Liverpool, and afterwards of Bloomsbury, a watchmaker. He assumed the name of Montagu by royal license in 1894. He was educated at Liverpool Institute and privately, and established the banking-house, of which he is now head, in 1853. He was a member of the Gold and Silver Commission from 1887 to 1890. He has represented the Tower Hamlets, Whitechapel Division, since 1885, and is a Liberal in politics. He is an authority on currency and a leading member of the Hebrew community in London, a member of the Jewish Board of Deputies, President of the Jewish Working-Men's Club, J.P. for London, D.L. for Tower Hamlets. He married Ellen, youngest daughter of the late Louis Cohen, of the London Stock Exchange, in 1892. Addresses: 12 Palace Gardens, Kensington, W.; and South Stoneham House, Hants.

SAMUELSON, The Right Hon. Sir Bernhard, Bart., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., was born on Nov. 22, 1829, and is the son of S. H. Samuelson, a Liverpool merchant. He was educated privately, and was for some time in a general merchant's office in Liverpool, until in 1842 he was placed in charge of the Continental affairs of Sharp, Stewart & Co., engineers, of Manchester. Leaving their service in 1845, he established railway works at Tours between 1846-48. In 1849 he purchased the agricultural implement works at Banbury, and in 1851 erected blast furnaces at Middlesborough, where he bought collieries and ironstone mines between the years 1872-80. He is Chairman of Samuelson & Co., of Banbury and Orleans. He represented Banbury in Parliament in 1859, and sat as Liberal member for North Oxfordshire from 1885 to 1895. He was Chairman of several Royal Commissions, notably that on Technical Education, and was made a Baronet for his services in 1884. He was member of the Royal Commission on Scientific Instruction, was for three or four years Chairman of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, has been President of the Iron and Steel Institute, is J.P. for Oxfordshire, Knight of the Legion of Honour, &c. He was made F.R.S. in 1881, and P.C. in 1895. His publications take the form of Reports to the House of Commons on Technical Education, Patent Laws, Railway Rates, and Thames Conservancy, &c. He married, in 1889, Mrs. Denny, a daughter of Chevalier Leon Serena, and widow of William Denny, of Dumbarton. Addresses: 56 Prince's Gate, S.W.; and Bodicote Grange, Oxfordshire.

SAMUELSON, James, is the eighth son of the late Samuel H. Samuelson, merchant, of Liverpool and Hull. He was born in the latter place in 1829, was educated in Liverpool by the Rev. John Brunner (father of Sir John Brunner, M.P.), and studied zoology under Dr. Zaddach at König-berg University. In 1867 he passed the General Examination of the Inns of Court, and was called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1870, but never practised. Mr. Samuelson has all his life been connected with manufacturing industries, and he is now the chief proprietor in a limited company at Birkenhead, managed by his two sons, for crushing palm kernels and cocoa-nuts. His leisure has been employed in literary and social work, the latter including the foundation of the of the present state of religious), and of many other experts in their respective departments. Mr. Samuelson was an advanced Liberal, and helped to foster liberty at home and abroad.

He filled the chair on two occasions, the Liverpool Cretan and the Liverpool Greek Committee, both of which considerable sums to the suffering Greeks. He has three times unsuccessfully contested constituencies; belongs to the Liverpool Reform Club, and is an active member of the National Liberal Club. Address: 42 Grosvenor Road, Brixton, S.W.

BARTOLOMEO, Francesco de, Baron de, Italian Ambassador at the Court of St. James, was born in Naples and was educated at the military school of La Nunzcatella, at Naples, which he left in 1854 with the grade of Sub-lieutenant of Engineers. In 1860 he left the service of King Francis II. of Naples, and entered that of Victor Emmanuel. He was at the siege of Gaeta, and his services there gained for him the Military Cross of Savoy. He was given a high rank in the Ordnance Corps, and fought against the Austrians in 1866. He is, however, best known as a writer, and in 1868 founded La Fanfulla at Florence, which became one of the most popular newspapers in Italy. He sold his share on leaving Parliament in 1874. His best-known work is "Ananke," published in 1878. He was appointed to his present post in August 1898.

SANDAY, The Rev. William, D.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Christ Church, Oxford, was born at Holme Pierrepont, Nottingham, in 1843, and is the eldest son of William Sanday, of Holme Pierrepont, and of his wife, Elizabeth Mann, of Scawsby, Doncaster. He was educated at Repton School, and at Balliol and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford, being elected scholar of Balliol in 1863. He obtained a first class in 1865, and was ordained Deacon in 1867, Priest in 1869, taking his M.A. degree in 1868. He held a fellowship at Balliol from 1866 to 1873. Dr. Sanday has successively been Lecturer of St. Nicholas, London, 1871; Vicar of Great Waltham, Essex, 1873; and Rector of Barton-on-the-Heath, Lincoln, 1873; and Principal of Bishop Weyland's Hall, Durham, 1876. In 1882 he was appointed Professor of Exegesis at Balliol, in succession to the late Canon Cook, who resigned the post; and in 1885 he was elected to the Lady Margaret Professorship of Divinity attached to Christ Church, which he now holds. He was Whitehall Preacher in 1889-90, and Select Preacher in Cambridge University between 1880 and 1892. Dr. Sanday has published "Authorship and Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel," 1873; "The Gospels in the Second Century," 1876; "Commentaries on Romans and Galatians for English Readers," 1878; and is joint editor of "Variorum Bible," and "Studia Biblica," and of a larger "Commentary on Romans," 1895, which is now in a third edition. In 1893 Dr. Sanday delivered the Bampton Lectures, his subject being "Inspiration." They were published later in the year. He married, in 1877, Marion, daughter of W. H. Woodman Hastings, J.P., of the family of Warren Hastings. Address: Christ Church, Oxford.

SANDEMAN, Albert George, late Governor of the Bank of England, was born on Oct. 21, 1832, and is the son of George Glas Sandeman, Portuguese merchant. He is senior partner in George G. He was Professor Superintendent of the Brown Institution from 1871 to 1878. Dr. Sanderson was employed by the Royal Commissioners to make investigations respecting the Cattle Plague, 1865-66; was sent by her Majesty's Government to North Germany in 1865 to inquire into an Epidemic of Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis; and was occupied in an inquiry for a Royal Commission as to the influence of extreme heat on the health of workers in the Cornwall mines in 1869. In 1883 he sat on the Royal Commission on Hospitals for Infectious Diseases, and has since served on two other Royal Commissions, viz., that on the consumption of tuberculous meat and milk, 1891, and that on the University of London, 1892. He is the author of numerous Reports on infectious diseases and other subjects connected with Public Health in the Reports of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council in 1869 and for several succeeding years; and of papers on physiological and pathological subjects read before the Royal Society, particularly an elaborate series of researches on the Electrical Properties of the Diptera Muscipula, as well as on the electrical organs of the skate and other electrical fishes. He was President of the Biological Section of the British Association at the meeting at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1880, and was elected President of the Association at Nottingham in 1893. He has three times filled the office of Croonian Lecturer, viz., in 1867 and 1877 at the Royal Society, and at the College of Physicians in 1891. For his physiological and pathological researches he received a Royal Medal in 1883, and the Baly Medal of the Royal College of Physicians in 1880. In 1895 he was appointed Regius Professor of Medicine in the University of Oxford. In recognition of his services to science he was created a Baronet at the Birthday, 1899. Address: Oxford.

SANDFORD, The Right Rev. Charles Waldegrave, D.D., Bishop of Gibraltar, son of the late Archdeacon Sandford, born in 1825, received his academical education at Oxford, where he was a student of Christ Church, and obtained a first class in Lit. Hum., was for several years Tutor and Senior Censor of Christ Church, 1855-1870, became Commissary of the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1869, and Rector of Bishopscourt, Kent, in 1870. On the resignation of Bishop Harris he was nominated by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the See of Gibraltar, and was consecrated at Oxford, Feb. 1, 1871. He is married to Alice, daughter of Sir George Baker, Bart. Addresses: 4 Hyde Park Square, W.; Cannes, France; and Athenæum.

SANDFORD, The Right Rev. Daniel Fox, D.D. Hon. Durham, LL.D. Glasgow, late Bishop of Tasmania, third son of the late Sir Samuel Kerrie Sandford, D.C.L., sometime M.P. for Paisley, and Professor of Greek at Glasgow, was born in 1831. In 1868 he edited Monicum and Panegyricus of 1874, the second part of the Orations of Demosthenes (1896); in 1880, the Bacchæ of 1874, with illustrations from works of the 3rd edit., 1892; in 1885, Cicero; in 1890, the "Speeches against the Law of Lepidus," Aristotle's "Constitution"; in 1896, a "First Greek Writer"; and in 1897, the Ippic and Olynthiacs of 1874. He has contributed to the Review since its foundation in 1874; written articles on the History of "Social England." He has also edited the late Commentary on the Rhetoric of 1877; and (in conjunction with Professor Nettleship) has re-arranged an English translation of "Dictionary of Classical Mythology, Literature, Art, and 1891. In 1887 he published Vacation in Greece." He is a member of the Committee of the University of Athens, a Vice-President of the Society, and Examiner in the University of Victoria. He has been a member of the Cambridge Philology, and Chairman of the Board of Studies. In 1885 he was awarded a degree of Doctor of Letters from the University of Cambridge. In 1894 he was specially elected a member of the Athenæum Club. He lives at 10, Cambridge House, Cambridge.

SANTLEY, R.A., was born at 11, 23, 1820, and received his education in art from John Varley, one of the British School of water-colours. Later on, Sir John Lubbock, R.A., gave him some advice and instruction in oil painting, but, however, till 1842 that he turned himself to painting as a professional student of the Royal Academy, where he studied for four years. Leaving, he began to exhibit oil pictures, "or" "fancy subtle figures generally, and especially children, by which pictures probably most widely known, and having been engraved. Of the select as typical examples Samuel, the "Infant Timothy Red Riding-Hood," and "The King of the Forest." Among Mr. Santley's other works of this description are "The Cross," "Mother's Love," "Evening," "Shepherd's Love," "Harmony,"

"Young Minstrel," "Retrospection," "Saxon Women," "The Boy Shakespeare," "The Walk to Emmaus," "The Miller's Daughter," and "Young Steele." After some years, however, Mr. Santley began to paint portraits, and his pretty pictures of ladies and children became, and for some time continued to be, the fashion. Since 1895 he has continued to exhibit largely at the Royal Academy's Exhibitions, his subjects being chiefly portraits. In 1896 he exhibited a portrait of Miss Dorothea Baird as "Trilby," and in 1899 as many as five portraits. The largest collection of Mr. Santley's works was at Strawberry Hill. For Countess Waldegrave the artist painted no fewer than 22 members of her distinguished circle, including the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marchioness of Westminster when Lady Constance Grosvenor, the Countess of Shaftesbury, the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, the Duchess of Wellington when Marchioness of Douro, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, Lord Lyndhurst, the Marchioness of Clanricarde, M. Van de Weyer, the Belgian Minister, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Countess Morley, Earl Grey, Bishop Wilberforce, and Countess Waldegrave herself. This Strawberry Hill gallery of pictures was exhibited at the French Gallery, Pall Mall, in 1861. He was elected A.R.A. in 1861; R.A. in 1870; and in January 1871 was appointed Principal Painter in Ordinary to the Queen in succession to the late Sir George Hayter, and was commissioned to paint a large picture of her Majesty and her Royal grand-children, the eldest three children of the Prince of Wales, and a State portrait of the Queen for the Turkish Embassy. In June 1877 Mr. Santley was elected a corresponding member of the Royal Accademia Raffaello in Urbino. Mr. Santley married a daughter of R. M. M. Thomson, staff-surgeon, Bengal Presidency. Address: 43 Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.

SANTLEY, Charles, baritone singer, was born at Liverpool in 1834, and after receiving a good musical and general education in his own country, proceeded to Italy to complete his professional training. He made his first appearance as an operatic singer in this country at Covent Garden, during the Pyne-Harrison management, and achieved his first great successes in the part of Hoel in the opera of "Dinorah" in 1859, and in that of Rhineberg, in Vincent Wallace's opera of "Lurline," in March 1860. He created so favourable an impression in this latter character that he took rank as one of the most effective baritones of the day. His career, especially since he attached himself exclusively to the Italian operatic stage, where he has distinguished himself in most of the great capitals of Europe, has been very successful. His voice is as remarkable for its quality as for the extent of its register, in the upper part of which it partakes of a pure tenore robusto, while in the lower portion it displays the qualities of the basso profondo. In Gounod's opera of "Faust," Mr. Santley performed in the same season the parts of Valentine and Mephistopheles. He sang in Australia in 1889-90 and at the Cape in 1893. He has published a work entitled "Student and Singer" (1892). Mr. Santley married, in 1859, Gertrude Kemble, a grand-daughter of Charles Kemble; she had appeared in public as a soprano singer, but gave up her professional career after her marriage. Address: 67 Carlton Hill, N.W.

SARASATE, Pablo Martin Meliton, Spanish violinist, was born at Pampeluna, March 10, 1844. He entered the Paris Conservatoire in January 1856, became the favourite pupil of Alard, and gained the first prizes for solfeggio and violin. He then entered Rebur's harmony class and secured a premier accessit in 1859, but afterwards relinquished the study of composition for the career of a concert player. His performances were highly successful. He has played in nearly all the great towns between Naples and Norway, and Portugal and Moscow, and has visited America, North and South. His first appearance in London was at the Philharmonic Concert on May 18, 1874. He again appeared at the Musical Union of June 9 of the same year. In 1877 he played at the Crystal Palace on October 13; on March 28, 1878, at the Philharmonic; in 1885 he gave several violin recitals in London, with very remarkable success, and in 1886 a series of equally successful concerts. Since then the "Sarasate Concerts" have become an annual feature of the St. James's Hall musical season. His works, which amount to over thirty, have as their favourite numbers, "Souvenir de Domont," "Spanische Tänze," and "Serenade Andalouse." He is unmarried, a fact that is said to be due to advice given him by his master, Auber.

SARAWAK, Rajah of. See BROOKE, SIR CHARLES.

SARDOU, Victorien, French dramatist, is the son of M. Léandre Sardou, a professor in Paris, and the compiler of several publications. He was born in Paris, Sept. 7, 1831. At first he studied medicine, but he was obliged, in consequence of the embarrassments of his family, to give private lessons in history, philosophy, and mathematics. He also made attempts in literature, writing articles for several reviews, for the minor journals, and for the "Revue des Conversations." His first play, "La Taverne des Étudiants," was produced at the Odéon, April 1, 1854, a complete failure. In the year 1855 Sardou was in a state of poverty and extreme distress. He was attacked by typhoid fever, and a neighbour, Brécourt, nursed him while he was during his illness, from which he recovered. He married the following year, and by her introduction to Mlle. Dejazet, he established the theatre with her. M. Sardou, after his former failure, now turned again to dramatic composition, and built up for himself a brilliant career. Nine years later he was in possession of a handsome fortune and a European reputation, when a gloom was temporarily cast upon his career by the death of his wife (1867). M. Sardou's earlier plays performed at the Théâtre de la Renaissance were: "Les Premières Armes de l'Europe," Dec. 27, 1859; "Monsieur Garçon," Dec. 1860; and "Les Préjugés," April 24, 1862. "Monsieur Garçon" was one of the most prolonged successes of the little theatre, and "Les Premières Armes de l'Europe" was afterwards brought out at the Théâtre des Variétés, and also, in a revised version, at the Criterion Theatre. Subjoined is a list of his other plays: "Les Gens Nerveux," Palais National, May 15, 1860; "Les Femmes de Paris," Vaudeville, Dec. 31, 1860; "Les Femmes de Paris," under the pseudonym of Carpeaux, Feb. 9, 1861; "Piccolino," Théâtre de la Renaissance, Oct. 18, 1861; "Nos Intimes," Théâtre de la Renaissance, Oct. 18, 1861; "La Papillonne," Théâtre de la Renaissance, April 11, 1862, a piece well received; "La Gymnase," April 12, 1862; "L'Amour," same theatre, Oct. 29, 1862; "L'Amour," a comic opera written in conjunction with Opéra Comique, April 13, 1863; "Les Femmes de Paris," Vaudeville, in four acts, which after being suppressed by the censorship, was served by the press; "Le Dégel," Théâtre de la Renaissance, Dec. 12, 1864; "Don Quichotte," 1864, in three acts, Gymnase, Jan. 1, 1865; "Les Pommes du Voisin," Théâtre de la Renaissance, Oct. 25, 1864; "Capitaine Harpagon," Opéra Comique, Dec. 26, 1864; "Garçons," Gymnase, Jan. 1, 1865; "Famille Benoiton," Vaudeville, Oct. 1865; "Nos bons Villages," Oct. 3, 1866; "Maison de other masters of style in art, is the son of a scientific father and an artistic mother. He was born in Florence, Italy, in 1856, his father, who had come to live there, being Dr. Fitz Hugh Sargent, a Boston physician, and his mother, a Miss Newbold, of the Philadelphia Newbolds, a clever water-colourist. He received his education partly in Italy, partly in Germany, and entered the Academy Schools, where he had completed some years of diligent study before he was eighteen. On a visit to the Tyrol with his mother, he met the late Lord Leighton, who praised his work. This encouraged him to study, under M. Carolus-Duran. In 1879 he exhibited at the Salon and was honourably mentioned, and in 1881 obtained a medal of the second class. He has won his European reputation as a peculiarly masterly portrait-painter and painter of genre. Some of the most celebrated portraits in the United States are from his brush, and he is represented at the Luxembourg by his "Carmencita," which was produced in New York, and first exhibited at the Society of American Artists. In 1894 he painted for Sir Henry Irving a portrait of Ellen Terry, and during the last twenty years has exhibited the following principal works: "Fishing for Oysters at Cancale," and "En Route pour la Pêche," 1878; "Neapolitan Children Bathing," 1879; and "El Jaleso," 1882, and, among portraits, those of Carolus-Duran and of Pozzi, the gynecologist, as well as the "Portrait of a Young Lady" (Salon, 1881); group of four young girls, "Hall of the Four Children," 1882; "Madame G." (Salon, 1884); "Mrs. Marquand" and "Mrs. Boit" (Royal Academy, 1888). At the latter's exhibition in 1895 he exhibited portraits of Mrs. Ernest Hills, Coventry Patmore, W. Graham Robertson, and Mrs. Russell Cooke; in 1896, of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P., Mrs. Ian Hamilton, Sir George Lewis, and Mrs. Colin Hunter, &c.; in 1897, of Mrs. Carl Meyer and her children, a group which made a profound sensation among connoisseurs; and the Hon. Laura Lister; in 1898, of Francis Cranmer Penrose (President, R.I.B.A., 1894-96), Mrs. Harold Wilson, Johannes Wolff, Asher Wertheimer (a portrait like that of Mrs. Carl Meyer), Sir Thomas Sutherland, G.C.M.G., M.P., the Right Hon. Lord Watson (painted for members of the legal profession in Scotland), and Mrs. Wertheimer; in 1899, of Mrs. Charles Hunter, Miss Octavia Hill, Miss Jane Evans, and Lady Faudel-Phillips, the last three presentation portraits. Mr. Sargent became an A.R.A. in 1894, R.A. in 1897, and, with Mr. E. A. Abbey, another American, is one of the most famous of English Academicians.

He was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2 in 1898. Address: 33 Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.

SARLE, Sir Allen Lanyon, J.P., Director of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, was born at Rousay, Orkney, on Nov. 14, 1828, and is the second son of the late Charles Sarle, at one time Stipendiary Magistrate at Dominica. He was educated at Selkirk Grammar School, and at the High School, Edinburgh, and entered into the service of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway in 1849. He was General Manager and Secretary of this line from 1886 to 1897. He is a Lieut.-Colonel of Railway Volunteers, and was knighted in 1890. He married, in 1859, Elizabeth Ann, née Horn. Address: Greenhayes, Banstead, Surrey.

SARRIEN, Jean Marie Ferdinand, French politician, was born at Bourbon-Lancy, Saône et Loire, Oct. 13, 1840. He was brought up as a lawyer, and having become Mayor of his native town, he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1876, where he sat among the Republican Left. In 1884 he replaced M. Rouvier (q.v.), as President of the Budget Commission, and in 1885 became Minister of Posts and Telegraphs in the Brisson Cabinet. When this fell, in the same year, he exchanged the portfolio of Posts for that of the Interior in the De Freycinet Cabinet, which was formed in January 1886. In the Goblet Ministry, which followed, he held the Portfolio of Justice. In the second Brisson Cabinet of 1898 he again held that position, and distinguished himself with the Premier as an advocate of the revision of the Dreyfus trial. His Paris address is: 22 Avenue de la Observation.

SASSOON, Sir Edward Albert, Bart., D.L., was born on June 20, 1856, and is the eldest surviving son of the 1st baronet, Sir Albert A. Sassoon, of Bombay. He succeeded his father in 1896, and has been a Major in the Middlesex Yeomanry (Duke of Cambridge's Hussars). He married, in 1887, Aline Caroline, daughter of Baron Gustave de Rothschild. Addresses: 25 Park Lane, W.; 1 Eastern Terrace, Brighton; Sans Souci, Bombay.

SATOW, Sir Ernest Mason, K.C.M.G., was born in 1843, and having been educated at London University, became a student interpreter in 1861. He accompanied Colonel Neale, the Chargé d'Affaires, to Japan, and was present at the battle of Kagosima, in September 1863, and at the bombardment of Shimonaka. In 1864 he was interpreter to

the wars of the Crimea, Italy, and and was promoted Colonel in During the siege of Metz he commanded the 1st Regiment of Infantry.
When Marshal Bazaine surrendered in 1870, he protested, with forty-two officers, against his treachery. He went to Germany as a prisoner, but succeeded in making his escape, crossed Switzerland, and rejoined the army Loire. In January 1871 he was appointed General of Brigade, and commanded at Algiers. In 1873 he was appointed to the Chamber of Deputies for the Department of the Aube, and relieved of his command, joined the army in Italy, and took a prominent part in operations on army re-organisation.
He was elected to the Senate, in 1875, and devoted himself exclusively to his duties, and in May 1876 he was appointed to the command of the 58th Regiment of Infantry at Marseilles. In 1878 he became a General of Division, commanded Army Corps at Nancy,
and Châlons. When the occupation of Tunis was in progress, he returned to France, and the French success there was greatly aided by his energy. In 1884
he succeeded General Lecoq as Governor of Algeria, and during his long tenure of this post, he succeeded in inspiring confidence in his administration. In 1886, when General Boulanger was Minister of War, he protested in the Senate against the attacks of that Minister Paris garrison. On being reprimanded for this, he sent in his resignation, which created such a stir in high military circles that he was persuaded to withdraw it.

When M. Grévy retired from the presidency in 1887, he took measures to vigorously any disturbances that might arise if M. Jules Ferry were elected President. During the great manoeuvres of 1888 he held the supreme command, and his army obeyed his orders. In reaching the limit of age, but was granted a special dispensation, under which he remained at his post until recent

SAVAGE, Richard Henry, author, soldier, diplomat, traveller, &c., was born in 1846 at Utica, New York, and educated at the United States Military Academy, West Point. He is descended from the Savages of Worcester and the Ewatts of Stirling. His boyhood was spent in California from 1850 to 1864 among the wild scenes of western American life. Promoted as an honour graduate to be an officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, he served upon the western frontier until 1871. Transferred to the diplomatic service, he filled various high positions in Europe and America under General Grant's administration. Selected by General Sherman, he served as Major and Chief of Staff to Stone Pasha in Egypt. For some years he was identified with railroad construction and practical engineering, but since 1884 has devoted himself to travel and literature. He served with distinction in quelling the Kearny riots in San Francisco as Colonel of the National Guard, and afterwards qualified himself for the Bar, being admitted to practise in the Supreme Court of the United States. He is a member of many scientific and literary societies, and has travelled the whole world over, making special explorations in Siberia, Corea, Central America, Africa, and Russia. He is well known as a public speaker and lecturer upon graver matters, but has latterly gained distinction as a poet and writer of romantic fiction. In 1890 Colonel Savage selected New York City as a residence, and definitely devoted himself to literary pursuits. In eight years he has produced twenty-four volumes, novels, poems, and stories. His first novel, "My Official Wife," scored a wonderful success, and has been translated into seventeen languages, as well as extensively dramatised. "Prince Schamyl's Wooing," "In the Old Château," and "Delilah of Harlem" have been also notable hits. The works of this writer are published in the United States, England, and Germany, and have been translated into nearly all the Continental languages. Colonel Savage enjoys an enormous cosmopolitan acquaintance, the result of twenty-five years of travel and a life of the most stirring adventure. He spends a large portion of his time in Russia, his only daughter being married to a Russian noble of high rank.

SAVAGE-ARMSTRONG, George Francis, M.A., D.Lit., poet, born in the county of Dublin, May 5, 1845, is the third and only surviving son of the late E. J. Armstrong, Esq., and Jane, daughter and eventual co-heiress of the late Rev. Henry Savage, of Glaslary, J.P., Incumbent of Ardkeen, co. Down, and representative of the Glaslary branch of the ancient Anglo-Norman family of Savage of the Ards. He received his early education partly in Dublin and partly in Jersey. In 1862 he made a long pedestrian tour in France with his elder brother, Major Armstrong. In the same year he obtained a civil appointment and resided in Dublin. His literary career was most brilliant. He published a volume of "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic." In 1870 appeared a "Tragedy," written during his residence in France, and he was appointed by the University of Dublin to the Chair of History and English Literature in Trinity College, Cork, and a Fellow of the Queen's University in Ireland. The next year he was presented with the degree of M.A. by the latter College, Dublin, in recognition of his "high literary character." In 1872 he published "King's Tragedy," the first part of the "Tragedies and new editions of the "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic," and "The King's Tragedy" were followed by "King's Tragedy," the second part of the "Tragedies," and in 1876 by "King's Tragedy," which completed the Trilogy. In 1877 he published the "Life and Letters of his brother Edmund," and a volume of his "Essays and enlarged edition of his "Poetical Works" (1st edit., 1877). In 1878 he was presented with the degree of Doctor of Literature, honoris causa, by the Queen's University, and was elected Fellow of the Royal University, and in the spring of the same year he published a volume of poems entitled "A Garland from the Forest of Wicklow," in 1879 he published a new volume of poems entitled "A Garland from the Forest of Wicklow"; in 1880, "Victoria Imperatrix: a Jubilee Garland"; and in 1881, "Mephistopheles: a Satire in Verse." In 1882 he published "One in the Philosophical poem in three parts," a new and enlarged edition of "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic," and in 1883 he was entrusted by the Trinity College, Dublin, with the able duty of writing the Ode for the centenary Festival of Dublin, which was set to music by the professor Sir Robert Stewart. Musically performed with great éclat on the night of the Festival. Under Mr. Schnad- sation, Liberal associations of the Birmingham organi- stablished in most of the tuencies; and in 1887 these ere banded together in the ral Federation, of which adhorst became Secretary. l meetings of the new isation were attended by . In 1884 Mr. Schnadhorst ecretaryship of the Birming- on, and was made its Chair- tee. In the following year ted President, but resigned eaving Birmingham to take e in London, to which place ers of the National Liberal re removed after the split in the Liberal party upon the Irish ques- tion. On March 9, 1887, Mr. Schnadhorst was entertained at a banquet at the Hotel Métropole, and was there presented with a national testimonial of ten thousand guineas and an illuminated address. Lord Burton presided at the banquet, and Sir Wm. Harcourt was the chief speaker. A letter was read from Mr. Gladstone expressing his sense of the services which Mr. Schnadhorst had rendered to the party. On coming to London Mr. Schnadhorst accepted the post of honorary secretary to the Liberal Central Association, which office he still retains. Ill-health has compelled Mr. Schnadhorst during recent years to pay lengthened visits to Australia, Egypt, and to South Africa. On his return from Africa in 1890, Mr. Schnadhorst addressed himself again to the organisation of the Liberal party, and was rewarded by its triumph at the General Election in 1892. In 1893 Mr. Schnadhorst resigned the secretaryship of the Federation, and was elected Chairman of its Committee, which post he held until his retirement in the autumn of 1894, owing to ill-health. Mr. Schnadhorst has been frequently invited to enter Parliament, but has hitherto declined all requests. Address: Woodford Green.

SCHNEIDER, Hortense Catherine, a French actress, born at Bordeaux about 1835, displayed while very young an aptitude for the stage, and at the age of fifteen played with applause in "Michel et Christine" at the Athénée of her native city. An old teacher named Schaffner gave her lessons in singing, and she subsequently spent three years at Agen, playing secondary parts. Going to Paris, she obtained an engagement in the company of the Bouffes-Parisiens, and on Sept. 19, 1853, made her début in "Le Chien de Garde" at the Théâtre des Variétés. Here she met with considerable success, which was increased by her performances at the Théâtre du Palais Royal, where she made her first appearance, Aug. 5, 1858. In Dec. 1864 Mdlle. Schneider returned to the Variétés, and elicited great applause by her acting in "La Belle Hélène." She achieved a success even more signal in "La Grande-Duchesse de Gêrolstein" during the Universal Exposition of 1867, and appeared in the same part in London in July 1868. In the following year she returned to the Bouffes-Parisiens. On her marriage, in 1881, she retired from the stage.

SCHOFIELD, Alfred Tayler, born June 4, 1846, is the eldest son of Robert Schofield, Esq., of Heybrook, Lancashire, and Mary, eldest daughter of James

Taylor, Esq., of Ravenswood, Croydon. He was educated by private tutors in Devonshire, &c., and at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, passing the Senior Cambridge Local Examination. He entered the London Hospital in 1879, whence he passed out in 1883 First Prizeman in Medicine and Obstetrics, and second in Surgery. While there he held the post of House Physician to Dr. Langdon Down. He took the diplomas of both Colleges, M.R.C.S. Eng. and L.R.C.P. Lond., and in 1884 passed the examination for M.D. in all subjects in honours at the University of Brussels. The same year he commenced general practice, but soon turned his attention to the treatment of nervous diseases, in which he has now for some years been almost exclusively engaged. Struck with the unconscious mental origin of most of these diseases, he studied psychology, and became a member of the Philosophic Institute. He is the author of a book on "The Unconscious Mind," dealing in extenso with the unconscious psychic forces within, and of works on "The Formation of Habit in Man," "Some Relations of Mind and Body," "The Natural and the Artificial," "Nerves in Order and Disorder," "Faith Healing," and "The Fourth Dimension," as well as of various papers in the Lancet, &c. He helped to found the Friedenheim Hospital for the Dying, of which he is a Trustee and Hon. Physician. He holds the latter post also in the Homes for Working-Girls, the Factory Girls' Union, the Morley Homes for Working-Men, the Church Army, &c. Dr. Schofield is also Member of the British Medical Association and Sanitary Institute, Member of Council Central Hospital Committee, Lebanon Hospital for Insane, District Nurses' Association, Royal British Nurses' Association, Chairman Parents' National Educational Union, Member of Council and Examiner to the National Health Society and the British College of Physical Education, Consulting Physician to Bishopstoke Asylum, Bedford. Soon after commencing practice Dr. Schofield's attention was drawn to the deplorable general ignorance of personal and domestic hygiene, and for many years most of his leisure time has been absorbed by seeking to make this an integral part of the education of every woman. In this cause he enlisted the sympathy and active co-operation of hygienic reformers, and eventually succeeded in 1895 in getting hygiene added to the subjects for the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examination. He has continued actively working in the cause, and has written and spoken much on the subject. Among his works are two manuals of physiology, "Personal and Domestic Hygiene," "How to Keep Healthy," "Health at Home," as well as numerous articles in newspapers and reviews. He is also a religious worker, and has written several religious books. Address, 14 Bourne Terrace, Hyde Park.

SCHOFIELD, General. General M'Allister, was born in Westchester County, New York, Sept. 1, 1825; graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1853, and served in Florida as Lieutenant of Artillery. From 1855 to 1860 he served West Point as Assistant Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy. From 1860 to 1861 was Professor at Washington University, St. Louis, after the outbreak of the Civil War he was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and in November 1862 Major-General of Volunteers, commanding the 1st Kansas, with headquarters at Fort Leavenworth. In February 1864 he took command of the Army of the Ohio, and joined combined armies under General Sherman, a prominent part in all their operations to the close of the war. He was Brigadier-General in the regular army in 1864 and Major-General in 1865. He was placed in command of the Military District, consisting of West Virginia. In 1868 he was Secretary of War, but resigned, and was given the command of the Department of the Missouri, and in 1870 the Division of the Pacific. In 1881 he was Superintendent of the Academy at West Point. In 1882 again given the command of the Division of the Pacific; from which in 1883 transferred to the command of the Division of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago; and in 1886 to the Department of the Atlantic, with headquarters at Norfolk Island, New York City. At the death of General Sheridan, in 1888, he was in command of the Army at Washington. Retired because of the age limit in 1895. In February preceding his death he had received promotion to Lieut.-General of the army. He published "Forty-six Years in the SCHREINER, Olive (Mrs. Wright), a South African and the second daughter of a Lutheran minister in Cape Town, and was born early sixties. At the age of two came to England with the mother, her best-known work, "The South African Farm." She was anxious to vote herself to physiological science, the publication of her book, after being submitted to Mr. George J.

t great promise, led her to literature. "The Story of a Farm," by "Ralph Iron," won immense popularity, and in 1893 brought many editions. A daughter, Olive Schreiner is entitled to the credit of the 18th edition, 1893, a collection of parables. In May 1893 she went to England, and in October 1894 a little African story, "The Story of a Real Life," in the Library. Her most notable recent years has been a serial tale "Trooper Peter von Homburg," 1897. Her latest (1899) is "An English South of the Situation," being a Transvaal imbroglio from a different view. In February 1899 Schreiner married a young ironwright. She is the sister of P. Schreiner, Q.C., C.M.G.

MR. The Hon. William C.M.G., Cape Premier, is a German missionary to South Africa. His English lady, Miss Tindell, was in a convent at Grahamstown born in 1859. He was at the Cape University, where everything before him. He went to England, entered Downing College, and was Senior in his class in 1881, obtaining the Victoria Cross medal. He gained an appointment to the Inner Temple in 1882, returned to the Cape, and soon began to practice before the Supreme Court and was appointed Counsel to the Commissioner of South Africa. When Rhodes became Prime Minister

Schreiner was appointed Attorney-General, and on President Kruger's drifts to all colonial traffic he advised the Government that the South African Republic opposed to the terms of the Convention. This opinion being rejected by the Imperial Government, it brought to bear on the Transvaal, which resulted in war. In 1897, when he was a witness before the South Africa Committee of the House of Commons, his evidence was not as would have been a better one, although he still held that the London Convention was valid. Mr. Schreiner was a witness before the South Africa Committee on his description of his interview with Mr. Cecil Rhodes on the news of the Jameson Raid, and of Mr. Rhodes's exclamation, "Jameson has played a fine card," formed one of the sensational incidents of the inquiry. Mr. Justice Bigham, as a member of the Committee, had taken a view strongly in favour of the Uitlanders, and he subjected Mr. Schreiner to a very searching interrogatory. The struggle was an intellectual one, and has been regarded as one of the most notable displays of mental power ever witnessed in a parliamentary committee room. The Government of Sir Gordon Sprigg (q.v.) was defeated in July 1898, on a motion of want of confidence moved by Mr. Schreiner, by a majority of 41 against 36. Thereupon, the Government appealed to the country, and the General Election of September 1898 left them in a minority of one, which the election of the Speaker, Dr. Berry (q.v.), increased to two. Mr. Schreiner then brought forward another vote of want of confidence, by which the Government were defeated by 39 to 37. He accordingly was called upon to form a Ministry, and, although he professes steadfast loyalty to the Imperial crown, it is felt that Mr. Hofmeyr of the Afrikaner Bond really directs the policy of the new combination. Holding office with such a small majority, he had to consent in the early days of his administration to a conference with the opposition led by Mr. Rhodes, on the subject of a Redistribution Bill, which, if carried, will be the knell of his party. Mr. Schreiner is the brother of Miss Olive Schreiner ("Ralph Iron"). He is married to a daughter of Mr. Retz, for many years the President of the Orange Free State. Address: Sweet Repose, Cape Town.

SCHUNCK, (Henry) Edward, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Manchester on Aug. 16, 1820, and is the youngest son of the late Martin Schunck, foreign merchant. On the completion of his school education, he was sent to Germany to study chemistry, as it was intended that he should take the direction of his father's large print and calico works in Manchester. At Berlin, under Rose and Magnus, he made first-rate progress, and under Liebig, at Giessen, he took the degree of Ph.D. On returning to England, Dr. Schunck engaged for some years in practical work, but finding this repugnant to his tastes and inclination, he gave it up, and devoted himself to pure science. It is in consequence, however, of his early connection with print and dye work, that his attention was directed more especially to the chemistry of colouring matters, a knowledge of which is most essential to the proper understanding of dyeing processes. The research which Dr. Schunck conducted in Germany was "On the Action of Nitric Acid on Aloes." The chief result and Cudbear. Among all the colouring matters there are none the study of whose properties and reactions is calculated to throw more light on the whole class than those which are prepared by an artificial process from certain kinds of lichens. Dr. Schunck, in common with many other philosophers, was surprised that lichens, a class of plants themselves colourless, should yield colouring matters by the combined action of ammonia and oxygen. Another paper on this subject appeared in 1846, being a special research "On the Substances contained in the Rocella tinctoria," which derives its interest from the fact of its being that species of lichen from which the finest kind of archil dye is prepared. From 1846 to 1855 Dr. Schunck was at work on the subject of the colouring matters of madder, then one of the most important dye-stuffs used in calico-printing, but which has since been replaced by artificial alizarin. Dr. Schunck investigated the properties of "rubian" at great length, and read several memoirs on the subject to the Royal Society. In 1854 Dr. Schunck produced, among other papers, one "On the Action of the Ferment of Madder on Sugar" being one of a

In 1851 he married Edith, daughter of John Brooke, Esq. Address: Kersal, Manchester.

LN, Jacob Gould, American, was born at Freetown, P.E.I., 1854. In 1870 he won a Scholarship of Wales College, Charlotte. In 1875 he won the Canadian Scholarship in connection with University of London, and two years later he went there with the University of London. In 1877-78 he was in Paris and Edinburgh, and in 1879 he won the Hibbert Travelling Fellowship, spending the ensuing two years as Hibbert Fellow at Heidelberg, Göttingen, as well as in Italy. In 1880 he was Professor at Acadia College, Nova Scotia, and in 1882-86 was Professor of Natural Sciences and English Literature in the University of Halifax. From that time he was head of the Philosophical Department at Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. In 1892 became President of the Association for the Advancement of Science, a position which he still holds (1898). He was elected a Fellow of the Association for the Advancement of Science in 1895. He has published "Ethical Immanence," 1881; "Ethical Immanence," 1887; "Belief in God," 1887; "Agnosticism and Religion," 1887.

Z, Carl, was born at Liblar, Prussia, Germany, March 2, 1829. Educated at the Gymnasium of Bonn and at the University of Bonn. He became associated with Gottschalk, in editing a revolutionary journal, and subsequently he participated in the revolutionary movement in South Germany. At the surrender of the fortress of Spandau, he escaped into Switzerland, and in May 1850 he returned secretly to Prussia and rescued Kinkel, who had been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment in the fortress of Spandau. The two brothers then fled to Scotland. Schurz then became a newspaper correspondent, and a year later returned to London. In 1852 he went to the United States, remained in Philadelphia, and then settled in Wisconsin. He became prominent as a political writer, and as the English language.

He was nominated by the Republicans for Lieutenant-Governor of the State, but was defeated. In 1861 he was appointed Minister to Spain, where he remained till December 1861. Returning to the United States, he resigned his office, and entered the army, and in the May following was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He took part in the second battle of Bull Run, was promoted to the rank of Major-General, and commanded a division in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. In the autumn of 1863 he went to Tennessee, and took part in several battles, but resigned after the close of the war in 1865. In the summer of 1865 he was sent by President Johnson on a confidential mission into the Southern States, and his elaborate report on their condition was published by Congress. In 1866 he removed to Detroit, Michigan, where he founded and edited for some time the Detroit Post. In 1868 he removed to St. Louis, and in 1869 was elected U.S. Senator from Missouri. He opposed President Grant's San Domingo policy, and in several speeches advocated the return to specie payments. In the Presidential canvass of 1872 he united with that portion of the Republican party known as Liberals, who nominated Mr. Greeley for President, in opposition to General Grant; but on the defeat of Mr. Greeley he, with most of the Liberals, returned to the regular Republican party; and in 1876 took an active part in the canvass for Mr. Hayes, by whom he was in 1877 appointed Secretary of the Interior. During his occupancy of that position he seconded Mr. Hayes's efforts at a reform of the civil service by instituting competitive examinations for appointments to clerkships in his department. At the expiration of his term, 1881, he removed to New York, and was the editor of the Evening Post until August 1883. Since then he has been engaged in literary pursuits. In 1884 he took a leading part in the Independent movement in the Presidential campaign, opposing the election of James G. Blaine and advocating that of Grover Cleveland. He published a "Life of Henry Clay," in 2 vols., in 1887, and a biographical sketch of Abraham Lincoln in 1891. In 1888 he visited Germany, and was received with distinction by Prince Bismarck, the present Emperor (then Crown Prince), and many of the prominent public men of the Empire. In the same year he wrote a public letter in favour of the re-election of President Cleveland. In 1893 he was elected President of the National Civil Service Reform League, succeeding George William Curtis, deceased.

SCHUSTER, Professor Arthur, Ph.D., F.R.S., son of Francis Joseph

Professor of Natural History in France, from March to Sept. 1870, and afterwards in the position of Lecturer until he went to Switzerland. Nineteenth year, when he attended the lectures at an art school in Paris. His father having returned to Manchester in 1871, he followed there in the following year and entered business in the father's firm. In October 1873, he took an appointment as a commercial traveller, and he spent the next three years in the service of the firm, and then at the University of Heidelberg, where Kirchhoff held the Chair of Physics. He took his degree of Ph.D. while at Heidelberg. During the session 1874-75, he held the post of Honorary Demonstrator in the Physical Laboratory of the Owens College. After having spent a few months in Heidelberg, he returned to London, where he was appointed, early in the year 1876, to the Chair of the Royal Society. Under the Empress, he spent a number of years and to leave England for Spain. In 1881, a Professorship of Applied Mathematics was founded at the Owens College, and he was appointed to the Chair, which he held till 1888, when he succeeded Robert Stewart as Professor of Physics. He took part in four different expeditions in observations of total solar eclipses—the Spanish eclipse, which has already been mentioned in the eclipse in Central India, which took place in 1878; the 1882 eclipse in Egypt, in which he photographed for the first time on plates prepared by Captain Abney; the spectrum of the solar corona; and finally the eclipse of 1888 in the West Indies. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1876. In 1880 he was President of Section A of the British Association, which met at Edinburgh during that year. He was appointed by the Council of the Royal Society to give the Bakerian Lecture in 1884 and 1890 on the discharge of electricity through gases. He is the author of several papers published in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Reports of the British Association; amongst others a paper, published by the Royal Society in 1884, in which the experimental proof was first given that the apparent repulsion observed in Crookes's radiometer is due to the residual gas left in the vacuum. The Philosophical Transactions of the year 1889 contain a full discussion of the diurnal variation of terrestrial magnetism, in which it is proved that the cause of variation is to be found in the earth's atmosphere. A number of his papers "On the present state of Spectrum Analysis," are published in the Reports of the British Association. During the last few years Prof. Schuster's time has principally been given up to the investigation of the discharge of electricity in the atmosphere, and the annual magnetic storm. In 1890, he received the Medal for the spectrum analysis and for his investigations on electrical discharges in gases and on magnetism. He was elected Foreigner of the Royal Society in 1891, and was elected a member of the American Royal Society in 1892.

was born in Paris in 1844, son of Dr. Schwann, who resided at Liège, and studied at University of Liège. A prominent Manchester man, he was secretary, President of the Manchester Bazaar. SCUDDER, Horace Elisha, American writer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, Oct. 16, 1838. He graduated at Williams College in 1858, and soon after went to New York, where he taught for three years. In 1862 his first book "Seven Little People and their Friends," appeared, and for a time his principal attention was given to writing for the young. Returning to Boston he edited the Riverside Magazine from 1867 to 1870, and then became associated with the publishing house which now bears the name of Houghton, Mifflin and Co., first as partner and afterwards as editorial adviser and manager. In 1890, upon the resignation of Mr. Aldrich, he added to his duties the editorship of the Atlantic Monthly. In addition to editorial work and voluminous periodical contributions, Mr. Scudder has published de, Merionethshire ; Ross, Kerry ; Oxted, Surrey ; Ks, &c. ; North and South Rhenhead. He has published in Art and Architecture," demoir and Letters of the don, Artist," and in 1868 Rhine Provinces."

In 1859 the late Rev. .F.R.S., invited him to ls in the Woodwardian is work continued till

1871, with teaching of Field Geology and Palæontology and occasional lectures for the Professor. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Geography and Lecturer on Geology in King's College and Queen's College, London ; of Queen's College he became the Dean in 1881. He originated in 1885, and has since conducted, the London Geological Field class, having published in 1891 a handbook for its use. He became a member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1861, and subsequently Fellow of the Geological, Linnean, Zoological, and Royal Geographical Societies. He was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. His original writings, about 120 in number, relate to Palæontology and other departments of geology, and to Comparative Anatomy. He has published a "Catalogue of Fossil Reptiles in the Woodwardian Museum," 1869 ; the "Ornithosauria," 1870 ; "Physical Geology and Palæontology," 1885, issued as vol. i. of Phillips's Geology ; "The Freshwater Fishes of Europe," 1886 ; and "Factors in Life," 1887 ; "Fossil Reptilia," 1887 ; and "Story of the Earth in Past Ages," 1895. He has studied the Fossil Reptilia in the public museums of France, Belgium, Holland, North and South Germany, Austria, Russia, and Cape Colony, from which country he has collected several new types of reptiles. His scientific memoirs are contained in the publications of the Geological, Linnean, and Royal Societies, the Geological Magazine, and Annals of Natural History. Among the results of his researches was the discovery (1865) that the Fossil Reptiles named Pterodactyles, are more nearly related to birds than are living reptiles ; this was made out by evidence from the breathing organs and brain. He regarded (1865) the succession of geological deposits of different mineral character as evidence of changed geographical outlines of ancient lands ; and explained the changes in fossil life of successive deposits as results of migration of faunas consequent on geographical changes. He enunciated the mechanical law in 1866, that growth is in proportion to work done ; and regarded it as explaining the different proportions of organs and of animals. In 1869 he founded the genus Ornithopsis on a vertebra in the British Museum which had previously been regarded as part of the skull of Iguanodon, indicated it as a new ordinal group of reptiles, which have since been found in the Isle of Wight and the United States. He discovered that Ichthyosaurus was viviparous, 1880, and that some Plesiosaurs were viviparous, 1887. In a Croonian lecture of the Royal Society, 1887, the Fossil Reptilia of South Africa were found to be a link between the existing Amphibia and Mammalia. Professor H. G. Seeley received from the Geological Society the Murchison Fund, 1876, and the Lyell Medal, 1885. He was made a Foreign Correspondent of the Academy of Sciences of Philadelphia in 1878; Corresponding Member Kk. Geologische Reichsanstalt, Vienna, in 1879; and member of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow in 1889. Address: 25 Palace Gardens Terrace, Kensington, W.

SEFTON, Earl of, Charles William Hylton Molyneux, Bart., K.G., Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Tower and Sword, was born on June 25, 1867, and succeeded his father, the 4th Earl, in 1897. He is a Lieutenant in the Lancs. Hussars, Yeomanry Cavalry. Addresses: 37 Belgrave Square, S.W.; and Croxteth Hall, Liverpool, &c.

SELBORNE, Earl of, William Waldegrave Palmer, J.P., Under-Secretary for the Colonies, was born on Oct. 17, 1859, and is the son of the 1st Earl, the eminent Lord Chancellor Selborne, and Laura, daughter of the 8th Earl Waldegrave. He succeeded his father in 1895. He was educated at Winchester College, and University College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in the Modern History School. He was Assistant Private Secretary to the Right Hon. H. C. E. Childers, Chancellor of the Exchequer, from 1882 to 1885. As Viscount Wolmer he was Member of Parliament for East Hampshire, first as a Liberal and afterwards as a Liberal Unionist from 1885 to 1892, when he was returned for West Edinburgh. He represented that constituency until 1895, when he entered the Upper House, and was appointed Under-Secretary for the Colonies. He is a Major in the Hants Militia, and co. Alderman. He married, in 1883, Lady Beatrix Maud Cecil, daughter of the Marquis of Salisbury. Addresses: 49 Mount Street, W.; and Blackmoor, Petersfield, Hants.

SELLA, Vittorio, was born at Biella, in N. Italy, in August 1859, and is distinguished as a mountaineer, geographer, and photographer. Between 1881 and 1890 he received many medals and diplomas for photography in London, Turin, Vienna, and Florence; and in the last year he received the Murchison award in recognition of his recent journey in the Caucasus, and his series of panoramic photographs of the chain. He has written many memoirs, the last being "Nel Causaso Centrale: Excursioni colla camera oscura," and he is well known as having obtained the largest, and probably the best, views of the Agassiz made, in 1882, the first of the Matterhorn, and the Rosa.

SELOUS, Frederick Explorer, naturalist, and explorer, born in London on Feb. 18, 1857, father was of Huguenot descent on his mother's side he is of the Bruces of Clackmannan. He was educated at Bruce Castle and he was famous for his high spirit of violent mischief and misprision. His schoolfellows saw the appreciation of his character and his name of Selous into "Selo" became his nickname. When a couple of years in Switzerland, where he learnt French from the former, as he thinks, with facility. Whilst in the latter he attracted some notice in the by jumping into the Rhine after a wild duck which he had had on a greatcoat and then filled with water, and then a swimmer he found great getting to shore with the gun still quite a youth he had cast his lot in South Africa. He sailed from England, and set foot upon the shores of Africa in 1881 he published his first Hunter's Wanderings in Africa won instant recognition, and received more credit from the general public for his prowess as a hunter than for what he done as a naturalist and geographer. From the Royal Geographical Society, however, he received success Cuthbert Peake grant, the Bart and finally, in 1893, the Forster Medal, the highest honour which their power to bestow. Such is not gained by hunting, and in Africa, to which he has so long butted, will show how Mr. Selous His services to natural history received recognition from the Society, who have made him a corresponding member. In Selous published his second and known work, "Travel and South-East Africa." A matter of varied and often interest, it contains an accurate historic pioneer expedition author so successfully led. SEMBRICH, Marcella, a distinguished vocalist, was born at Lemberg, Galicia, Feb. 15, 1858, and for some years studied the piano and violin, firstly under her father, and before she was six she appeared on the concert platform. While receiving piano lessons from Liszt in Vienna, it was discovered that she had a splendid voice, and she was at once sent to Milan to study singing under Lamperti.
She made her début as an opera singer in Athens in "I Puritani," 1877, and then returned to Vienna for further study; she subsequently appeared in Dresden, and remained at the Royal Opera House till 1880. She soon became a great favourite in the characters of "Zerlina," "Susanna," "Constance," "Martha," "Lucia," &c.
In 1880 she made her first appearance in London. Mdlle. Sembrich has sung in all the principal cities of Europe, and has been everywhere received with the greatest enthusiasm. In 1883-84 she was a member of Mr. Abbey's Italian Opera Company at New York, where she created a great sensation by the compass of her voice and the brilliance of her execution.

SEMON, Sir Felix, M.D., F.R.C.P., was born at Danzig, in Eastern Prussia, on Dec. 8, 1849. His father was the late Mr.
S. J. Semon, stockbroker, of Danzig, later of Berlin; his mother the eldest daughter of the late Alderman S. Aschenheim, of Elbing. He received his education at one of the Berlin High Schools, between 1856 and 1868, and from 1868 to 1874 studied medicine at Heidelberg and Berlin. His studies were interrupted by the Franco-German war, through which he served as a volunteer in the 2nd Uhlans of the Guard (medal and five clasps). In 1873
he passed the examination for the M.D. of Berlin; in 1874 the German States examination. After the completion of his official course of studies he went to Vienna, Paris, and London, with a view of seeing practice abroad. Having been appointed Clinical Assistant at the Throat Hospital, Golden Square, in 1875, he

...and four years later he was appointed to the Sage Professorship of Moral Philosophy in Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. In 1897 he succeeded the late Professor Calderwood in the Chair of Moral Philosophy at Edinburgh University. He has been a frequent contributor to magazines on philosophical subjects, and he assisted the late Professor Calderwood in the revision and re-writing of Fleming's "Vocabulary of Philosophy." In 1891 he published an essay, entitled "Freedom of the Ethical Postulate," and in 1894 completed and published a larger work, entitled "A Study of Ethical Principles." While at Cornell University he acted as co-editor of the Philosophical Review. Address: Edinburgh University.

SEWELL, Elizabeth Missing, sister of the Rev. William Sewell, was born in the Isle of Wight in 1815. She became known as a writer of High Church fiction by her "Amy Herbert," 1844. This was followed by "Gertrude," "Sketches," and "Laneton Parsonage," 1847; "Margaret Percival," "Child's History of Rome," 1849; "The Earl's Daughter," 1850; "Readings for Lent, from Bishop Taylor," 1851; "Experiences of Life," "First Vis-

Oxford, LL.D. Glasgow, D.L., was born Dec. 13, 1828, and is the son of Alexander Shand of Aberdeen, and Louisa, daughter of John Whyte, M.D., of Banff. He was educated at the Universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Heidelberg, was called to the Bar, at Edinburgh, in 1853, and was Advocate-Depute from 1860 to 1862. He has been Sheriff of Kincardineshire, Haddingtonshire, and Berwickshire. In 1872 he was appointed a Judge of the Court of Session, and retired in 1890, when he was appointed a Member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In 1882 he was appointed a Commissioner under the Educational Endowments Act. In 1892 he was made Hon. Bencher of Gray's Inn, and raised to the Peerage as Baron Shand. He was Chairman of the Coal Owners' and Miners' Conciliation Board in 1894. He married Emily Merelina, daughter of John Clarke Meymott, in 1857. Addresses: 32 Bryanston Square, W., and Athenæum.

SHANNON, James Jebusa, A.R.A., is an Irish Canadian, and was born at Auburn, in New York State, in 1862. He came to England at the age of sixteen, and was for three years a student at South Kensington, where he gained the gold medal for the figure. He first became known as an admirable portrait-painter by his likeness of the Hon. Horatia Stopford, one of the Queen's maids of honour, exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1881, and painted for her Majesty. In 1887 appeared his full-length portrait of Henry Vique, Esq., a picture for which he has been awarded first-class medals at the Paris, Berlin, and Vienna Exhibitions. At the Chicago Exhibition he gained a medal for his full-length portrait of Mrs. Charlesworth. His noted Academy portraits and pictures during recent years have been—"The Marquis of Granby, M.P.," "Winifred, daughter of G. H. Pember, Esq.," and "The Lady Boston," 1895; "Mrs. Baird," 1896; "Clare Sewell Read, Esq., M.P. for Norfolk, 1865-85" (presentation portrait), "Mrs. George Peck," "Jill, the daughter of G. W. Rhodes," and "The Right Hon. Sir John T. Hibbert, K.C.B.," 1897; "The White Mouse," "Kathleen, daughter of Hon. Mr. Justice Mathew," "Mrs. Herbert Cohen," "Sir James Smith" (presentation portrait), and "Sir Thomas Roe" (presentation portrait), 1898; "Babes in the Wood," and portraits of Lady Mathew, the Lady Ulrica Duncombe, and Lord Cranworth, 1899. Mr. Shannon was for some years a Member of the New English Art Club, of which he was an original member. With Mr. E. A. Abbey and Mr. Sargent he shares the distinction of being one of the few Americans who, since the time of West, have won a high place in the annals of English art. In 1897 he was made A.R.A. Address: 3 Holland Park Road, Kensington, W.

SHARP, William, was born at Paisley on Sept. 12, 1856, and was educated at Glasgow University. He spent his boyhood in the West Highlands, and there probably acquired his appreciation of things Celtic. He has travelled in Australia, and among the South Sea Islands: also extensively in Europe, Canada, &c. In 1879 he came to London, and was introduced by Philip Bourke Marston to Rossetti, of whom he saw much, and whose biography he wrote. He is well known as a critic and magazine-writer, and as general editor of the "Canterbury Poets," in which series he published "Sonnets of this Century," which has gone into nearly twenty editions, and as editor of "Lyra Celtica," published in collaboration with Mrs. Sharp, a Highland relative of his, who is herself an author, and ardent student of literature. "Lyra Celtica" is an anthology of English poems, written by authors with Celtic blood in their veins. The above are only a few among the works published by Mr. and Mrs. William Sharp, which include many volumes of verse, novels, anthologies, monographs on Philip Bourke Marston, Brown, &c. Address: 30 Greencroft Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

SHARPE, Richard Bowdler, LL.D., was born Nov. 22, 1817, at 1 Skinner Street, Snow Hill, London, where his father was publisher and editor of Sharpe's London Magazine, a famous literary journal of the time. He was a King's Scholar at Peterborough and Loughborough Grammar Schools, of both of which successively his cousin, the Rev. James Wallace, was headmaster. At the age of eighteen he was appointed the first Librarian of the Zoological Society of London, a post which he held from November 1836 to February 1872. In September of the latter year he received the appointment of Senior Assistant in the Zoological Department of the British Museum, in charge of the collection of birds, which post he still holds. In 1875 he received the Honorary Fellowship of the Zoological Society, "for distinguished services to science." He is also an Honorary Member of the New Zealand Institute, a Foreign Member of the Academy of Sciences of Lisbon, of the Zoological Society of Amsterdam, of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow, and many other foreign societies. He is also LL.D. of the University of Aberdeen, and holds the Gold Medal for Science from H.L.M. the Honour bestowed upon him after the Zoological Congress at Bonn, when he was President of the Zoology and Comparative Ornithology section. His principal works are: "A Monograph of the Family Alcedinidae, or Family of Kingfishers," 1842; "A Monograph of the Family of Swallows," 1845; "Layard's Birds of Scythia," 1846; many popular books on ornithology; his greatest work, however, is "The Birds of the World," in the British Museum, a graphic record of all the birds of the world. Of the twenty-three volumes of this work as yet published, there are no less than eleven times as many completed several of them of the late John Gould, after the latter, such as "The Birds of the World of New Guinea." The donations of the great collections of birds, notably of Allan Hume, C.B., Mr. F. L. Man, Mr. Osbert Salvin, Mr. Ramsay, and Mr. Henry See, to Dr. Sharpe's curatorial zoological collections of the B.M. have increased the series to an enormous extent, so that the series amounts to about 1000 volumes—more than four times as many as were previously possessed by any other museum in the world. Address: Natural History Museum, Cromwell Road, S.W.

SHAW, Byam, painter, born Madras on November 13, 1857, son of John Shaw of Ayr. Registrar of the High Court, was educated at home, and at St. John's Wood Art School, and at the Royal Academy School. In November 1894 he was elected member of the Royal Institute of Water-Colours, and in January 1895 Member of the Society of Artists. He is a brilliant colourist, an interesting and talented disciple of the fast-vanishing Pre-Raphaelites; exhibited notable pictures at the Academy since 1893, among which may mention a scene illustrating Rossetti's "Blessed Damozel," 1895; "Whitner," a portrait, 1896; "Love's Labour's Lost," 1897; "The Comforter," two very original, and notable paintings, "Truth" and "The Queen," 1898; and "Love's Labour's Lost," 1899. There is a great future for Byam Shaw, who in time will be accepted successor to Sir E. Jones, Rossetti, Madox-Bry

SHAW, George Bernard, critic, was born in Dublin on July 26, 1856. His father, George Carr Shaw, was an ex-Civil servant, who capitalised his pension and embarked on flour-milling, failing entirely in this new business. His mother was Lucinda Elizabeth Gurly, who had much talent as an amateur singer and teacher. The only education George Bernard received was at the Wesleyan Connexional School in Dublin, although his family were not Methodists, and this ended when he was fourteen. He came to London in 1876, but for several years could obtain no literary recognition. Meantime, he flung himself into Socialism, and was one of the founders of the Fabian Society. For four years, from 1886 to 1890, he was art critic to the World, and for one year (1891) to Truth. He gained his reputation as a musical critic by his articles in the Star, signed "Corno di Bassetto" (1888-91). He then for four years was musical critic of the World (1890-94), until the death of Edmund Yates. From 1895 to 1898 he was dramatic critic of the Saturday Review, under the editorship of Frank Harris, and wrote such pertinent accounts of new plays that he reminded old readers of the palmy days of the "Saturday Reviler." In 1892 his play, "Widowers' Houses," was produced by the Independent Theatre Society, creating as much discussion as did his "Arms and the Man" at the Avenue Theatre in 1894. Other plays of his which have been performed in 1897 are: "Candida," "The Man of Destiny," and "The Devil's Disciple." His literary output began with four novels: "The Irrational Knot," "Love among the Artists," "Cashel Byron's Profession," and "An Unsocial Socialist," which were published between 1880 and 1883. In 1889 he edited a volume of Fabian Essays, to which he contributed two himself; and he has written other Socialist pamphlets, such as: "The Impossibilities of Anarchism," and "The Fabian Society, what has it done?" He has written an analysis of the plays of Henrik Ibsen, whom he regards as the greatest living dramatist. In 1898 appeared his "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," in two volumes, which provoked as much discussion as Mr. Shaw's works are accustomed to do; and in the same year he wrote a commentary on Wagner's "Der Ring der Nibelungen" for the use of spectators at the performances at Covent Garden in that year, entitled "Wagner's Ring, what it means." In this year he was nursed through a serious illness by Miss Payne Townshend, a wealthy supporter of Socialism, who had done much good work in connection with the Fabian Society and the London School of Economics. Mr. Shaw married this

Murdoch. He was a Lord of the Treasury from May to July 1866; of the Board of Trade from August to January 1871; Secretary of the Admiralty from the last date of 1874, and again from April to following November, when he was the first Commissioner of the Public Buildings in succession to Mr. Stansfeld, and resigned that office on the death of Governor of Madras. As Secretary to Mr. Shaw-Lefevre he effected improvements into the House of Commons, notably at Westminster Palace, and at Hyde Park.

On the death of Mr. Fawcett he was appointed Postmaster-General (1874), and his tenure of this office was marked by the introduction of the penny red stamps. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre was a Benchman of the Inner Temple from 1882. He is the author of an article on "Public Works in the Nineteenth Century" (November 1882) in which he defeated at Reading in 1885, he was without a seat in the election, April 1886, he stood for Bradford, vacant of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, but in 1893 appeared his important tenure. At the general election of 1886 and 1892 he was elected as a Gladstonian Liberal. In 1892 he was appointed First Commissioner of Works, in which office he was succeeded by Mr. Herbert Gladstone. He succeeded Mr. H. H. Matthews as President of the Local Government Board. At the general election of 1895 he was defeated for Central Bradford. In a severe contest, he was re-elected Haggerston Division of the House of Commons, a member of the London County Council. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre took part in establishing the Commons Preservation Society in 1866, and has been a member of the Society, with intervals, ever since. At his death, a number of suits were found in the House of Lords of Manors who enclose the commons round the suits were in all cases found to be the means of saving the commons. In 1895 he published "English Commons and their History," a history of the Commons, the Preservation of Commons; other works which he has written are "Peel and O'Connell," a criticism of the Irish policies of Mr. Disraeli. His sister, Miss Madelevre, was formerly Principal of the Hall, Oxford. In 1873 he married Constance Emily Moreland, daughter of the Earl of Ducie. Ad-

SHEA, Sir Ambrose, K.C.M.G., was born in Newfoundland in 1820, received his education there, and for over thirty years occupied a foremost place in the public affairs of that Colony. For six years he was Speaker of the Assembly, and subsequently for five years was an unofficial Member of the Council of Government. He was one of the two delegates from the Colony at the celebrated Quebec Conference at which the Constitution of the Canadian Dominion was framed. In 1888 Sir Ambrose was delegated to London to urge the right of the Colony to enforce restrictions on French fishing operations on the Newfoundland coasts, but owing to some Imperial Cabinet difficulties at the moment nothing could be done. The Legislature of the Island, however, renewed their efforts, and he was again sent, in conjunction with the Premier, Sir Robert Thorburn, to press the question, and this time with success. Soon afterwards Lord Knutsford offered Sir Ambrose the Governorship of the Bahamas, on the acceptance of which he retired from commercial pursuits. This post he assumed at the end of 1887, and it would be difficult to parallel the record he has made in that Colony during a short period of years. On his arrival the place was in a state of impending bankruptcy. The precarious resources, fruit, and sponge-fishing, were declining, and those having means were unwilling to invest a shilling in any untried adventure. The population was thinning by emigration to the Southern States, and no one thought of the future without misgiving. The prospect for a new Governor was cheerless in the extreme; but Sir Ambrose is sanguine, and he betook himself at once to an examination of the situation. He had not been a month in his position before he felt that he had lighted on a solution of the difficulties. His attention was attracted to a bold-looking plant of the aloe order, and he found on inspecting it that it held a fibre similar to manilla; and his experience enabled him to see that this had a stable commercial value, though he was not encouraged when he explained what he thought of the capabilities of this plant. He was told that attempts had before been made in the direction he proposed, but without any success, and that the plant was now universally regarded as a noxious weed, which defied all efforts to eradicate it. This was the prevailing feeling; but Sir Ambrose had formed a strong opinion, and gradually he gained assent to his views. The growth seems to set all ordinary adverse or disappointing influences at defiance; and the product is all but, if not quite, equal to the celebrated manilla-hemp. The exports of the Colony have hitherto averaged about £125,000 a year, but no one on the spot, who knows on what grounds the calculations rest, has a doubt that within a very few years the value of the exports will be quadrupled, and an output of a million is within range of the most reasonable contemplation. Land has gone up to four times its former value, and already the revenue responds to the industrial activity that prevails. These results are by common consent due solely to the ability and unflagging energy of the Governor. Sir Ambrose is the first Colonist who ever held the post of Imperial Governor, and his splendid success will be hailed with great satisfaction by Colonists everywhere, for there are few to whom his name as a prominent Colonist has not been long familiar. Sir Ambrose returned to England in January 1895, on the expiration of his term of office.

John, D.D., was born in 1834, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar. He was ordained, and was appointed Rector of New Westminster and Chaplain to the Bishop of Columbia in 1859. Returning to England in 1867, he became Vicar of Bilton, Yorks., in 1868, and in 1873 Vicar of St. Margaret Anfield, Walton-on-the-Hill, Liverpool. In 1893 he was consecrated Bishop of Norwich. Address: The Palace, Norwich.

SHERARD, Robert Harborough,

man of letters, born in London, December 3, 1861, is the second son of the Rev. Bennet Sherard-Kennedy, of Stapleford Hall, Melton-Mowbray. His mother is a granddaughter of William Wordsworth, the poet. He was educated at Queen Elizabeth's College, Guernsey, at Oxford, and at the Universities of Bonn and Paris. In 1882 he dropped the affix of Kennedy. Since 1883 he has acted as special correspondent to leading English and American papers and magazines in various parts of the world. He has written poems, biographies, sociological works and novels, inter alia, "Emile Zola," 1893; "Alphonse Daudet," 1894; "A Bartered Honour," 1884; "Rogues," 1889; "By Right, not Law," 1891; "Jacob Niemand," 1895; "The Iron Cross," 1897; translated and edited "Ménéval's Memoirs," collaborated with the late Alphonse Daudet on a tale called "Premier Voyage, Premier Mensonge," 1898. He has written a series of articles on certain iniquities in English industries, entitled "The White Slaves of England." These appeared in serial form in Pearson's Magazine, and were republished in book form

(Bowden, London, 1st edit., 1898). They attracted attention and had a large sale. His novels formed the subject of a critical study in Le Figaro. "Romancier Anglais," Magasin de l'Author's Club, 3 Whitechapel brother of the late Gen. Sherman, was born at Lancaster, Ont., Canada. He received an academic education, studied law, and began practice in 1844. He was a delegate to the Whig Conventions of 1846 and 1847, a Member of Congress from 1848 to 1850. He entered the Republican Party after its formation, and worked with it. In 1861 he was elected to the U.S. Senate and re-elected in 1872. On the accession of Mr. Hayes, in 1877, Sherman was appointed Secretary of the Interior, a position retained by him until the death of President Hayes's administration in 1881, when he re-entered the Senate, and remained there until appointed Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President McKinley, March 4, 1897. He resigned from the Cabinet to return to private life. It was during his administration while at the head of the Department that the resumption of specie payments (in 1879) was effected without any serious financial or commercial disturbance to the country. Senator Sherman was a prominent candidate for the Presidential nomination in 1884, but was defeated, and was the presiding officer of the Convention in 1885-87. He published in 1877 a book of his "Selected Speeches and Writings on Finance and Taxation," 1877, New York: Washington.

SHERRINGTON, The Hon.

Charles Scott, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., born in London on Nov. 20, 1857, is the son of J. U. Sherrington, of Great Yarmouth, and Anne B. Sherrington, of Norwich. He was educated at Elizabeth's School, Ipswich, and at St. John's College, Cambridge; and at St. Thomas's Hospital (M.A. and M.D. Cantabrigiæ). In 1884 he was appointed General Lecturer in Physiology at St. Thomas's Hospital. From 1887 to 1891 he was Hon. Sec. of the Physiological Society, and in 1891 was appointed Professor of Physiology in the Brown Institution, of London, and in 1895 was appointed the Holt Professorship of Physiology in Victoria University College, Victoria, New Zealand. In 1892, 1895, and 1898 he was British Secretary for the Triennial Congresses of Physiologists.

duated in 1861, having obtained distinguished honours in English composition and in divinity. He afterwards proceeded to the degree of M.A. comitatus causæ at Oxford. He was ordained in 1865 by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait), and having held successively the curacies of Chelsea and of Kensington, and of St. Peter's, Vere Street, under Frederick Maurice, and been for two years incumbent of St. Mildred's, Lee, he was appointed in 1873 to the incumbency of Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair. He has published two volumes, entitled "Some Difficulties of Belief," and "The Life of the World to Come," and "St. George for England," a volume of sermons to children which has been translated into French, German, and Italian. He was one of the contributors selected by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol for his lordship's New Testament Commentary. He has also edited a series of volumes, entitled "Helps to Belief," and has written the one on "Prayer" in that series. Mr. Teignmouth Shore was appointed one of her Majesty's chaplains in July 1878, in succession to Dr. MacLagan, now Archbishop of York. He prepared the daughters of the Prince and Princess of Wales for their confirmation, and officiated at the marriage of the Princess Louise of Wales with the Duke of Fife in 1889; and was made Chaplain of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1889, and Canon of Worcester in December 1890. Canon Teignmouth Shore has the Jubilee Medal with a clasp, which was conferred on him by the Queen, and the Order of Princess Alice of Hesse, which was given him by the Grand-Duke of Hesse, as well as the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. He is married to Eleanor, daughter of J. F. Waller, J.P. Addresses: College, Worcester; and Athenæum.

SHORTER, Clement King, editor of the Illustrated London News, the Sketch, and, for short periods, of the English Illustrated Magazine and Pick-Me-Up, is descended from Huntingdonshire ancestry, and was born in London, July 19, 1858, and educated at Downham Market, Norfolk. In 1877 he entered the Exchequer and Audit Department at Somerset House, and twenty years later retired from the Civil Service in order to become editor of the Illustrated London News. Subsequently he took over the editorship of the Sketch and English Illustrated. Mr. Clement Shorter is also well known as an author, and has published in volume form: "Charlotte Brontë and her Circle," 1896, and a comprehensive work on Victorian Literature, 1897. She was a member of the Royal Commission on Secondary Education of 1894. Permanent address: Newnham College, Cambridge.

SIDGWICK, Professor Henry, M.A., Litt.D., born at Skipton, Yorkshire, May 31, 1838, was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was Fellow of Trinity College from 1859 to 1869, and Lecturer of Trinity College from 1859 to 1875, when he was appointed Prælector of Moral and Political Philosophy. He was elected an honorary Fellow of Trinity College, April 16, 1881; and was appointed Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in 1883. Professor Sidgwick is the author of "The Methods of Ethics," 1874; "Outlines of the History of Ethics," the "Principles of Political Economy," 1883; the "Elements of Politics," 1891; "Practical Ethics," 1898; and of several articles on philosophical and literary subjects. He took a prominent part in the promotion of the higher education of women at Cambridge, especially in the foundation and management of Newnham College. Professor Sidgwick is LL.D. of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and St. Andrews, and was made a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1890. He married Eleanor Mildred, daughter of the late James Maitland Balfour, in 1876. Address: Newnham College, Cambridge.

SIENKIEWICZ, Henryk, Polish novelist, was born at Okreya, in Podlasia, on an estate belonging to his mother. His family was originally Lithuanian, and removed to Poland in consequence of the Russian war; his grandfather served under Napoleon, and his father took part in the revolutions of 1830 and 1863. Having been educated at the Warsaw Gymnasium and the University, he emigrated in 1876 to California, to the colony that Madame Modjeska (q.v.) intended to found there. But the colony was a failure, and he returned to his own country, where his first literary work, the recital of his travels, was published in the Warsaw reviews. In 1891 he travelled to Central Africa with Count Tyshkevich. His great work is an early Christian story, "Quo Vadis," which he finished at Nice in 1896. It has been translated into almost every European language, and has given him a world-wide reputation. His other works include: "Szkiec Węgłem" (Sketches in Charcoal), 1874; "Ogniem I Mieczem" (Fire and Sword), 1885; "Potop" (The Hood), 1886. Most of his works have been translated by Mr. Jeremiah Curtin, the latest being "Hania," a collection of short stories, published in the spring of 1898. His next book is to be "The Knights of the Cross."

SIEVEKING, Sir Edward Henry, M.D., F.R.C.P., LL.D., F.S.A., Physician in Ordinary to H.M. the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, was born in London, within the sound of Bow Bells, on Aug. 24, 1816. He is descended from an old North German family, still flourishing in Hamburg, and was educated partly in England and partly in Germany. He commenced the study of medicine at the universities of Berlin and Bonn, and continued it at University College, London, and the University of Edinburgh, where he took his degree of M.D. in 1841. He travelled abroad, studying in Paris, Vienna, and Berlin. He practised among the English colony at Hamburg for four years, and while there contributed to Oppenheim's Medical Journal; wrote a treatise on Ventilation, a previously unconsidered subject in Germany, and built a children's hospital. In 1847 he returned to London, became a Member of the Royal College of Physicians, and four years later Fellow. After serving as Physician to the Northern Dispensary he was appointed in 1851 to St. Mary's Hospital, with which he remained actively associated for thirty-five years, and is now Consulting Physician. He has been President of the Harveian, and President of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society. His first publication in England was in 1849, and was a pamphlet on nursing, in which the provision of nurses for the poor, as part of a perfect system of state sanitation, was strongly urged. A paper on the same subject by Dr. Sieveking was subsequently read before the Epidemiological Society, and this led to the formation of a committee, which, for a series of years, sought to carry out the views advocated by him. Lord Shaftesbury on two different occasions introduced the committee to the Poor-Law Board, which gave its official support; but nothing came of it. The present appreciation of nursing, as an aid to curative medicine, may, in a great measure, be attributed to the work done by the committee. Dr. Sieveking was a co-translator of Rokitsan's great work on Pathology for the Sydenham Society, and subsequently translated from the German for the same society Romberg's work on nervous diseases. In 1854, with his colleague at St. Mary's, Dr. Handfield Jones, he published a work on Pathological Anatomy, of which a second edition has since been edited by Dr. Payne. From 1855 to 1860 Dr. Sieveking was editor of the British and Foreign Medical and Chirurgical Review, founded, and long carried on by Sir John Forbes. In 1860 the recommendation of Sir J. Forbes as Physician in Ordinary to H.M. the Prince of Wales was offered to him by Dr. Sieveking. In 1862 he was Physician Extraordinary, and in 1863 Physician in Ordinary, to H.M. the Queen. He was knighted in 1890. LL.D. Edinburgh, at the University of Edinburgh University; wrote Epilepsy, two editions; and Advice in Life Assurance, which he delivered frequent addresses on. He was Croonian Lecturer at the College of Physicians; and in 1865 a Harveian oration there, the result of a sequence of which the College of Physicians and Surgeons met. E. H. Sieveking in producing a publication of the MS. of the original Physiological Lecture in 1616 et seq. Sir E. H. Sieveking filled many offices at the Royal College of Physicians. He was the first President of the Edinburgh University Club, and a member of the Athenaeum Club. Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Edinburgh and Cambridge, Consulting Surgeon St. Thomas's, was born on October 10, 1816, and is the son of Louis Michael Simon, for thirty-one years an influential member of the Committee of the Stock Exchange, and of his wife, née Nonnet. By both grandfathers he was of French origin, each grand- father having come to England (where he soon married an English wife) at about the beginning of the last quarter of last century. John Simon was educated chiefly at the Rev. Dr. Burney's school at Greenwich, spent a year in the family of a German Pfarrer, and in 1833 began the study of medicine at King's College, then of new establishment in the Strand, and St. Thomas's, under the famous Joseph Henry Green, who was Professor of Surgery at the latter institution. During the winter of 1837-38 he acted as Prosecutor to Dr. Todd during his course on physiology. On Aug. 24, 1838, he was allowed by Mr. Green to go up for examination at the College of Surgeons, although his hospital apprenticeship had not yet expired, in order to be ready for an appointment as Joint-Demonstrator of Anatomy at King's College, London. He held this Demonstratorship for nine years, his colleague being Dr. (afterwards Bishop) Macdougall. In 1840, on the foundation of King's College Hospital, the subject of our memoir was at once appointed Senior Assistant-Surgeon, under Partridge and Fergusson, his colleague being Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Bowman, who had become second to him in the Demonstratorship. The dissecting-room at King's College was not in those days one of the finest in London, and the future sanitary reformer's health suffered from constant confinement there. He was accordingly rescued from an increasingly difficult situation, when, in 1847, he received the very high honour of appointment as Lecturer in Pathology, and virtually as Surgeon, at his more familiar home, St. Thomas's, of which he is still an officer. At King's College his career had been practically a period of waiting; he had enjoyed considerable leisure there, and, in accordance with the honourable tradition of the medical profession in old days, had devoted much time to cultivated pursuits, such as the study of art, metaphysical literature, Oriental languages, which he studied in the Marsden Library at King's, and kindred subjects. These interests, which have been lifelong, and have left their impress upon his polished literary style, led him at different times into the society of a very varied and brilliant circle, including such names as William Wordsworth (to whom he was introduced by Green), Tennyson, Ruskin,

Thomas, Joseph, George, Henry, Lewis, Thomas, Walter, Thomas, Henry, Charles, Bernard, many of the Saint-Simonians. Nor was the intellectual author Ludwig Feuer, Heinrich Schelling, Sir Robert Southey, Samuel Rogers, and a host of others too numerous to mention. At St. Thomas, however, he became convinced of the necessity of concentration, and found the work of his post a keener stimulus to industry. In December 1847 he delivered a lecture at St. Thomas's on the "Practical and Philosophical Method of Pathological Research," and followed this up with courses of lectures on "Diagnosis and Therapeutics" published in the Lancet in 1850-51. It was in this early period that he began that work of sanitary reform the value of which his name will ever be honored and famous. In 1848 the City of London Officership of Health was instituted and he was appointed thereto, retaining it until he entered the service of the Government as Medical Officer to the Local Government Board seven years later. He continued in the service of Government until 1874. The day must not unduly estimate the stupendous importance of vaccination and humanity of sanitary reform work. The wide-reaching sanitary legislation of these years have remained a dead letter but for the practical steps which were taken by all others put in. It may be truly stated that he drained the City and rendered it healthy, abolishing the pesthouses and the other existent system of central depositories under houses, overcrowded almshouses, slaughter-houses and other insanitary trade establishments, and actively attacking against insanitary graveyards. Thomas pointed out pure water, overcrowded dwellings, and a number of other similar nuisances. The reports written by him at this time to the City Commissioners of sewers bear abundant testimony to his activity. Cholera threatening London at the time of his appointment, his conduct of this novel post was naturally the object of public scrutiny. The disease visited England in 1848-49, and in his report for that year he stated the facts and lessons of the visitation. Again in 1853 he foretold a return of the epidemic, and in 1854 recorded his experience of its severity. In the report of 1852 he laid particular stress on the fact that London was still left without comprehensive sanitary legislation. In the long run these reports led to much valuable legislation, and to a healthy revolution of public opinion, hitherto indifferent to hygienic considerations, especially as they affected the poor masses of the community. The Central Medical Officership, created in 1855, was held by the subject of our memoir for twenty-one year. From 1856 he was attached to the Officership of Health, which was then epoch-making body. From 1856 to 1857 he was the Privy Council member, and it was in great part as Privy Council and member of the Government Board made in 1857 that latter long tenure of St. Simon's work was of the best and wide-reaching nature. It was to the Privy Council that he presented and reported the results with a variety of suggestions with vaccination. In 1857 he treated comprehensively the subject and is a reference to the drawing from vast stores that may be called the subject of vaccination, and some of the counter-evidence submitted in Mr. Forster's speech, and in silence the announcement in an age less swayed by people's hysteria, besides that the present had better to make their voices heard, and the full details of his official career would be a record of hygienic reform during years. Some men have said in which a grateful nation have held him may be placed of his list of honors. It made an Hon. Fellow, first of Surgeons, Eng., and then the second baronet of Fellows, the Council in recognition of his powers. He is then James Paget, Mr. Ingle of the eight surviving Fellows and 1844 appointments. In 1840 he was a member of Vice-President in 1870-71, in 1878-79. Early in 1840 F.R.S., and in 1878-79 was President of the Royal Society Vice-President of the Biological and Clinical Societies, of the Medical Teachers' Association of the Pathological Society, Member of the Pathological Societies. In 1868 Oxford conferred upon him the Hon. D. he was made an Hon. Med. of the University of Munich Hon. LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh, a Hon. M.D. of the University. SIMPSON, William, R.I., artist, was born at Glasgow, Oct. 28, 1823. He began life as an architect, and turned from that to art. He went through the war in the Crimea as an artist, and published sketches in two volumes, entitled "Campaign in the East," 1854-55. Mr. Simpson travelled in India, including the Himalayas and Tibet, from 1859 to 1862. The result was published in a work entitled "India, Ancient and Modern," 1867. Since 1866 he has travelled in Russia, Palestine, Abyssinia, China, Japan, America, India, Afghanistan, and Central Asia, the last being with the Afghan Boundary Commission, and other places as special artist of the Illustrated London News, which he has represented as special artist since 1860. In addition to the works already mentioned, he has published: "Meeting the Sun; a Journey all Round the World," 1873; "Shikare and Tamasha," 1876; "Photographs from Drawings of the Prince of Wales's Visit to India," "Picturesque People," 1876; "The Buddhist Praying - Wheel," 1896; and numerous archaeological papers at various times. Mr. Simpson is a member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours; an Hon. SKEAT, Professor the Rev. Walter William, Litt. D., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D., born in London, Nov. 21, 1835, was edu- cated at King's College School; at Sir R. Cholmeley's School, Highgate; and at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1858, being fourteenth Wrangler. He was elected Fellow of his College in July 1860; became Curate of East Dereham, Norfolk, in December 1860; Curate of Godalming, Surrey, in December 1862; and Mathematical Lecturer at Christ's College in October 1864. He was elected to the recently founded Erlington and Bosworth Professorship of Anglo-Saxon at Cambridge, May 15, 1878; and re-elected to a Fellowship at Christ's Col- lege in January 1883. Dr. Skeat, who has chiefly devoted his attention to early English literature and English etymology, has published "The Songs and Ballads of Uhland, translated from the German," 1864; "A Tale of Ludlow Castle: a Poem," 1866; and "A Mæso-Gothic Glossary," printed by the Philological Society, 1868. For the Early English Text Society he has edited "Lancelot of the Laik: a Scotch Metrical Romance," 1865; "Parallel Extracts from twenty- nine MSS. of Piers the Plowman," 1866; "The Romans of Partenay or Lusignen; otherwise known as the Tales of Melusine," 1866; "The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman," five parts, 1867-84; "Piers the Plowman's Crede," 1867; "The Romance of William of Palerne; or William and the Werwolf," 1868; "The Lay of Havelok the Dane," 1868; "The Bruce; by Master John Barbour," four parts, 1870-89; "Joseph of Arimathea; or the Romance of the Saint Graal, or Holy Grail; with other Lives of Joseph of Arimathea," 1871; "Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe"; "The Wars of Alex- ander," 1886; "Ælfric's Lives of Saints," four parts, 1882-98; &c. In a new edi- tion of Chatterton's Poems, he has finally settled the question of the authenticity of the so-called Rowley Poems, by showing the precise sources whence Chatterton obtained the old words which abound in them. Dr. Skeat was chosen by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press to continue and complete the work of the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar, the late J. M. Kemble, who died before his edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels was finished. In 1873, with the help of others, Dr. Skeat started the English Dialect Society, for the record and preservation of provincial English words, of which Society he was the Director for four years, and afterwards President. In the course of 1873 and 1874 six works were published for this Society, five of which were edited by him. The Society lasted for twenty-four years 1875-80), during which time his used every publication upon which the English Literature Dictionary is mainly founded. For the Oxford Press he has edited several of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, a portion of Piers the Plowman, and two volumes of Specimens of English Literature, one of them in conjunction with Dr. Murray; also, for the same press, the "Prologue of St. Mark in German," an "Etymological English Dictionary," his first work, and an abridgment of the same, entitled a "Concise Etymological Dictionary"; besides two vols. on the Principles of English Etymology. In 1890 he completed a two-volume edition of "Piers the Plowman," showing all three texts, with notes, &c.; and in 1897, a new edition of Chaucer's Works in seven volumes. A Scottish Text Society having been founded in 1888, Dr. Skeat edited the Society's first volume, viz., an edition of the King's Quene by King James the First of Scotland; and, subsequently, a reprint of his edition of Barbour's Bruce. In 1898 he edited "The Student's Chaucer," in the volumes; and in 1899 reprinted numerous short articles in a work entitled "A Student's Pastime." His various works have greatly contributed to the increased interest which is now taken in the intelligent study of our older literature. Address: 2 Salisbury Villas, Cambridge.

He was Junior Counsel of the Treasury from 1863 to 1868, and from 1879 to 1883, when he was elevated to the Bench as a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1888 he was one of the three Judges appointed on the Parnell Commission. In 1893 he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal. In 1867 he married Isabel, a daughter of J. C. Fletcher. Address: Salt Hill, Chichester; and 66 Cadogan Square, S.W.

SMITH, Benjamin Leigh, was born March 12, 1828, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he graduated as a Wrangler in 1852. He was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple in 1856. Mr. Smith has made five voyages to the Arctic regions. He visited them first in 1871, in the Samson, when he sailed to the north-east of Spitzbergen; reached latitude 81° 24', and added greatly to the knowledge of land in that direction: secondly, in 1872, in the Samson, to the north of Spitzbergen; thirdly, in 1873, with the Diana steamer and Samson, again to Spitzbergen, when he relieved the Swedish Expedition, for which he received the Order of the North Star from the King of Sweden. In these three voyages he took deep-sea temperatures, which added much to the knowledge of the Gulf Stream, and established the fact of warm under-currents flowing beneath surface-water of low temperature. In 1882 he sailed in the Eira, and again went to Spitzbergen, attempting to reach the east coast of land, and to pass to the north of Spitzbergen; he returned to Spitzbergen; and steamed north, through much ice to Josef Land, on August 1st. To the west, he discovered nearly over 200 miles of new coast. He again started in the Eira to Josef Land, which he reached but unfortunately the Eira was in the ice on August 21st, and many stores were saved. They built a hut of turf and stones, sheltered, living mostly on seal. On June 21, 1882, they left the Eira and reached Nova Zembla. The next day they fell in with the Barents and the Hope, which came to their relief, and they were taken on board the Hope. Mr. Smith received a Gold Medal of the Paris Geographical Society and a Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society in 1881.

SMITH, Sir Cecil Clements, was born in London, Dec. 1841, is the son of the Rev. John Smith and of Cecilia, daughter of the composer, Muzio Clementi. He was a scholar and was in the first class of the Tripos, and graduated in 1861. He won several University prizes, was elected Crosse Theologian, and in 1860 Tyrwhitt's prize. He twice won the Fish Verse prize, and proceeded B.D. 1871; D.D. 1889. He was made Holy Orders, and was made of St. Paul's, Cambridge, where of Trinity College, Cambridge; Chaplain to the Bishop of Exeter, 1865; Curate of Holy Trinity, 1866; Vicar of Trumpington, 1867; Chaplain of St. Aidan's College, 1868; Chaplain to the Bishop of Exeter, 1869. From 1880 to 1890 he was Bishop of Chester, and on June 1890 he was consecrated, in St. Paul's Cathedral, Lord Bishop of Sydney, Metropolitan of New South Wales, and Primate of Australia. He is author of "Obstacles to Missionary Success" (Maitland Prize Essay), 1868; "Christian Faith," 1869; "Lessons on the Book of Genesis," 1879; "The Blood of the New Covenant," 1889; and articles in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" on Corinthians and Colossians. Address: Bishops-court, Randwick, New South Wales.

SMITH-WILLIAMS, Mrs., née McKenzie, Marian, A.R.A.M., contralto singer, is the elder daughter of Captain Joseph McKenzie, shipowner, of Plymouth, where she was born. She studied singing under Mr. Samuel Weeks of that town, and, coming to London to complete her education, gained the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, also the Westmoreland Scholarship, and the bronze, silver, and gold medals of the Academy, the latter for declamatory singing. She was a pupil of Signor Randegger, and for elocution, of Mr. Walter Lacy. She has also studied oratorio singing with Miss Anna Williams, and has an extensive repertoire in works of the classical composers from Bach and Handel down to those of the present day. Among the latter we notice repeated successes in Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," and Dr. Hubert Parry's "Judith." Besides having an established reputation as a festival singer, especially as principal contralto at the Handel and Bach festivals, &c., Miss McKenzie has achieved distinction in classic and ballad concerts. She has also sung at State Concerts and at Welsh Eistedfodds. With a voice remarkable for richness and sympathy, she is perhaps unrivalled for sweetness and distinctness in the use of the mother tongue. She is an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and of the Philharmonic Society. Miss Marian McKenzie married Mr. Smith-Williams, the brother of Miss Anna Williams, the soprano. Address: Prince's House, Victoria Street, S.W.

SMYTH, Charles Piazzi, LL.D. Edin., F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E., for a time F.R.S., and for forty-three years Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, was born in 1819 at Naples, and is the second of three sons of the late Admiral Smyth, but was educated in England. He commenced his astronomical service at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope, under Sir T. Maclear, in 1835, and subsequently assisted in the re-measurement of La Caille's South African Arc of the Meridian. He was appointed, in 1845, to succeed Thomas

Henderson, First Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, in the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh. He applied himself, on arrival, to clearing off five years' arrears of computation and printing, and next to continuing Meridian star observations, besides establishing a daily time-ball, and afterwards an electrically-fired daily time-gun for the service of the city. In 1858 he was appointed to prepare for Government all the meteorological deductions furnished by 55 observing stations. In 1856, soon after his marriage with Jessie Duncan, he spent several months in testing, with her, the qualities of the Peak of Teneriffe for star observation above the level of the clouds. In 1859 he visited and published on the Russian Observatories. In 1864-65 he visited (accompanied again by his wife), investigated, and published on, the great pyramid in Egypt, and described the results in various works, one of which has just reached its 5th edition. In 1871 he began to compose a comprehensive star-catalogue and ephemeris of all the Edinburgh and best contemporary observations of the same stars, of which new kind of catalogue the first four hours were published in 1877 in the 14th volume of the Edinburgh Observatory's publications, and the last twenty hours were published in 1886, as the 15th volume. Then, with failing instruments and insufficient means for rectifying them, he applied for retirement, and obtained it in August 1888, and was awarded a small pension. He and Mrs. Piazzi Smyth have since resided near Ripon, where he has devoted himself to solar photographic spectroscopy, and to watching and photographically recording cloud-forms. Address: Clova, Ripon.

SMYTHE, Lionel Percy, painter in oil and water-colours, was born in London in 1840, of English parents, and was educated at King's College School. He was elected a Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1880, but retired in 1889. Being elected an Associate of the Old Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1893, he became a full member in the following year, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts in 1898. Addresses: Château d'Honvault, par Wimilla, Pas de Calais; and 36 Gloucester Crescent, Regent's Park, London, N.W.

SNELUS, George James, F.R.S., F.C.S., Bessemer Medallist, Vice-President of the Iron and Steel Institute, &c., an iron-master, was born June 25, 1837, at Camden Town, London, and is the son of James Snelus, a builder, who died when George James Snelus was seven and a half years of age, and the family was left impoverished by a long illness. Thanks, however, to his father, James Snelus was provided with education. He was originally a teacher at St. John's College, and for some years he acted as a city with great success in the conduct of Science, Chemistry, and Art Departments. At that time he also attended the Manchester, as a student of Roscoe, and the Physical Professor Clifton. In the examinations of 1864 he obtained the Royal Albert Scholarship, and with the whole of the University securing the Gold Medal in Geography, Bronze Medal in &c., and a free education for at the Royal School of Mines there was eminently successful. He obtained the first scholarship for year, second scholarship for year, and the first place in the Beche medal for Mining in passing out as an Associate in mining and metallurgy. He was nominated by Dr. Percy first of chief chemist to the Works, which appointment he held for four and a half years, to the satisfaction of the late William Me in 1871, recommended him as a scientific adviser to the Government being sent out by the Iron Institute to the United States and report on the Danks Rolling Process. Mr. Snelus studied the theory of all the making steel and iron when at he had at this time formed an idea of the action of phosphorus on iron, and the investigation process enabled him to put Percy, on his return to England in 1872, that contrary to the expectations of the metallurgists, and in opposition to the theory of the Doctor himself, the phosphorus was eliminated in the puddling process by liquating phosphide of iron from the iron (the phosphorus was eliminated in the early stage, and while the iron was fluid and contained a large carbon, and that therefore possible to eliminate the phosphorus in the Bessemer process: that he believed he had discovered a secret of overcoming the difficulty considered insurmountable. At the time remarked that he had made a very great discovery the Iron and Steel Institute in 1883 awarded Mr. Snelus being "the first to make impure iron in a Bessemer with basic materials." 10 tons of steel have since phosphoric iron, pre- for steel-making. This to a large extent revolutionizing, and no country has the invention so much as owing to the stringency Laws of that country in was unable to obtain a invention, and so has never test reward or recognition although his work has pertains to those who have lives of the process. At Exhibition in London Mr. and some illustrations of vents, together with the phosphorous steel made by s, and was awarded a Gold series and inventions. At tion of 1878 Mr. Snelus laborate set of analysed ting the manufacture of in various countries, for arded a Gold Medal. The ubsequently purchased as collection for the Poly- at Aix-la-Chapelle. Mr. ginal member of the Iron ite, has been a member of e 1881, and in 1897 was he Vice-Presidents. SOLLAS, Professor William Johnson, M.A., D.Sc. Cambridge, LL.D. Dublin, F.R.S., M.R.I.A., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Officier d'Académie, Professor of Geology and Mineralogy, Oxford; born May 30, 1849, at Birmingham, eldest son of William Henry Sollas, was educated in the City of London School, afterwards in the Royal School of Mines, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1882. He took his B.A. degree in 1873, subsequently D.Sc., and was made an honorary LL.D. (Dublin) in 1886. In 1893 he received the Bigsby Medal of the Geological Society. He was appointed Lecturer on the Cambridge University Extension in 1873, and for it delivered courses of lectures on geology in most of the large towns of England and Wales; in 1880 he was appointed Professor of Geology and Zoology in the University College, Bristol; in 1883 he was elected Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin; and in 1897 Professor of Geology and Palaeontology in the University of Oxford. From 1895 to 1898 he was also Petrologist to the Geological Survey of Ireland. He has been continuously writing memoirs on scientific subjects since 1872. Most of these have appeared in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, Geological Magazine, and in the publications of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal Dublin Society. These have for subjects, amongst others, the relations of fossil to recent sponges, the replacement of silica (opal) by carbonate of lime, the origin of flint, of fresh-water faunas, the estuary of the Severn, the characters of plesiosaurus, glacial phenomena, particularly the nature of the movement of glacier ice and the origin of eskers, the structure and history of granite and other igneous rocks, and the anatomy of living sponges. He is the author of the article "Sponges" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and of the twenty-fourth volume of the Reports of the Challenger Expedition, treating of the Tetractinellida, 1888. He has paid special attention to theories of coral reefs, and in 1896 conducted an expedition sent by the Royal Society to investigate the coral island of Funafuti. He has travelled over many parts of Europe, North America, and Australia, and has visited several islands in the Pacific. He married Helen, daughter of W. J. Coryn, Weston-super-

Mare. Address : 169 Woodstock Road Oxford.

SOLOMON, Solomon Joseph, A.R.A., artist, was born in Southwark, Sept. 16, 1860. His father is a leather manufacturer, and his mother a native of Prague (Bohemia). He was educated at the school of Mr. Thomas Whitford, M.A., and privately by the Rev. Mr. Singer. His artistic training was begun in 1876, at Heatherly's School of Art in Newman Street, and the next year he entered the Schools of the Royal Academy. In 1879, through the kindness of H.I.H. Prince Lucien Bonaparte, he got an introduction to Cabanel, who received him into his studio in the Beaux Arts in Paris. The following year found him in Munich; but he thought little of the German training, and, after a tour round Italy and Holland, he returned to England, and exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy (a portrait of a gentleman). With his friend Mr. Hacker, Mr. Solomon journeyed through Spain, resting a while at the Shrine of Velasquez in Madrid, and passed the winter working in Morocco, where it was difficult at that time to induce the Moors to become their models. He again sought his master, Cabanel, and remained with him for about nine more months, having a studio of his own in Paris, and exhibiting at the Salon a portrait of Dr. Stevens, and, at the Royal Academy, a small highly-finished work, "Waiting." His next exhibit was "Ruth and Naomi," done in his garden in Tangier, on his second visit to Morocco; and since then, every year, he has shown a composition and a portrait at the Academy. The picture which first brought him any reputation was "Cassandra," now in Ballarat; then "Samson," "Niobe" following, and an allegorical work, "Sacred and Profane Love," with a portrait of the late Sir John Simon. Mr. Solomon was elected a Member of the Institute in 1887. At the Salon of 1889 he received a Medal for "Niobe," and in 1890, at the Academy, he exhibited "Hippolyte," and a portrait of "Mrs. George Mosenthal," full length. In 1893 he exhibited, at the Academy, two portraits and "Your Health!" and in 1894 "Mrs. Patrick Campbell as Paula Tanqueray," and a likeness of Mr. I. Zangwill. In 1895 he exhibited a portrait of Mr. Arthur Hacker, A.R.A., another of Miss Ingram, and "Echo and Narcissus"; in 1896 a portrait of Mrs. Albert H. Jessel and "The Birth of Love"; in 1897 portraits of George Frampton, A.R.A., Raphael Tuck, and Mrs. Adolph Tuck; and in 1898 portraits of Mrs. Kenneth Foster, of his wife, of Sir George Fandel Phillips, Bart., and a Jubilee picture, "On the Threshold of the City." In 1899 he exhibited "The Two Portraits," at the Academy. He has also recently painted a picture for the Royal Exchange. Mr. Solomon was elected A.R.A. in 1896. In 1897 he married Alice Hyman Montague, F.S.A., daughter of John's Wood Studios, N.W.

SOMERSET, Duke of, St. Maur, Bart., J.P., was born Dec. 22, 1846, and is the son of the Duke of St. Maur, and the daughter of John Philip Montagu at Dresden. He was formerly a Major in the 60th Rifles, and served in the River Expedition of 1870. He was Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st West Surrey in 1877. He married Susan Montagu, daughter of Charles Mackintosh, of Maiden Bradley, Bath, &c.

SOMERSET, Lady Henry, was born in London, Aug. 3, 1851. She is the eldest daughter of Earl of Somers, and in 1872 married the Duke of Beaufort. She has one daughter, Lady Katherine Beauclerk, daughter of the Duke of St. Albans. In 1881 Lady Somerset was elected President of the British Women's Temperance Association, which is now the largest Women's Temperance Association in England. She was elected Vice-President of the World's Women's Christian Union. By the death of Mr. Willard in 1898, she took the place of President of the International Women's Union, which numbers over half a million women. For two years she has been the editor of the Women's Signal, a newspaper dealing with questions of women. She has written magazine articles, and a series of short stories entitled "Black and White." In 1895 she was elected to the Industrial Farm Colony, and this scheme has now gained considerable dimensions. In the death of her father, she succeeded to the estates in Herefordshire, Wiltshire, Surrey, and London. She has done a deal of platform work, and the habit of addressing very large meetings in all parts of this country and the continent of America, in the cause of Temperance, and for the advancement of women. emigrated with her parents to Australia in 1839. She has written several novels of Australian life: "Clara Morison: a Tale of the Gold Fever," 1854; "Tender and True," 1856; "Mr. Hogarth's Will," 1865, and "The Author's Daughter," 1868.
Her little book on "The Laws we Live Under," with some chapters on political economy and the duties of citizens, was published under the direction of the Minister of Education in 1880, and is taught in the schools of South Australia.
She has taken an active part in the work of dispersing the Children of the State in natural foster homes, which was initiated first in that province under the leadership of Miss Emily Clark. This was so great a success both socially and financially that it was adopted all over Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand. She has contributed to the Cornhill, Fraser's, and Harper's Magazine and the Arena, as well as to Australian newspapers and to Australian magazines, literary, critical, and social articles, and has generally identified herself with all public movements, political and educational. The main object, however, of her life since the year 1860 has been electoral reform on the lines of equitable representation of minorities, and her "Plea for Pure Democracy," published in 1861, is an argument from the popular side for Hare's system of voting. In 1892 she thought that democratic developments in the colonies made the reform urgently necessary, and changed her position as a writer for that of a lecturer. On this mission she travelled all over her own province with ballot papers to give practical proof of this method of "Effective Voting." Having been appointed Delegate to the Chicago Congress in 1893, and having received a Government commission to inquire into and report on matters of public interest in America and elsewhere, Miss Spence travelled through the United States, and paid a visit to Toronto, in order to explain and advocate this method of voting, as the only means of moralising politics and educating representatives and citizens. She visited England in 1865-66, and again in 1894, when she lectured before the Royal Colonial Institute and other audiences, on Social and Intellectual Aspects of Life in the Colonies. She resides at Eildon, East Adelaide, South Australia.

the Commentators of the New Testament and also of the Old Testament, edited by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Dean Spence is likewise editor and one of the writers of the "Pulpit Commentary on the Old and New Testaments," 47 volumes, and of several works on the Talmud. He is the author of a translation of the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," with excursus and notes (1885). Amongst other works he has written are "Dream-land and History," the story of the Norman dukes, and "Cloister Life in the Days of Cœur de Lion," "The Church of England, a History of the People," in 4 vols., 1898. He married Louise, daughter of David Jones, Esq., of Pantglas, M.P. for Carmarthenshire. Addresses: The Deanery, Gloucester; and Athenæum.

SPENCER, The Right Hon. Charles Robert, M.A., heir to his half-brother, Earl Spencer, was born on Oct. 30, 1857, and is the son of the 4th Earl. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). He represented North Northamptonshire in the House of Commons from 1880 to 1885, and the

He arrived in Dublin Castle on May 6, on the evening of which day Lord Frederick Cavendish, the newly-appointed Chief Secretary, and Mr. Thomas A. Burke, the Under-Secretary, were stabbed to death by assassins in the Phoenix Park, close to the Viceregal Lodge. After this it fell to Lord Spencer to administer the provisions of the Crimes Act. In March 1883 Earl Spencer resigned the office of Lord President of the Council, but still remained a member of the Cabinet, until the close of Mr. Gladstone's Administra- tion in June 1885. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to office in February of the fol- lowing year, Lord Spencer became for the second time Lord President of the Council. By that time he had adopted Home Rule opinions, and his support was of great value to the Government. In August 1892 he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty, and held office until 1895. The University of Dublin conferred on Lord Spencer the honorary degree of LL.D., June 30, 1883. His lordship is Lord-Lieutenant, and was Chairman of the County Council of Northamptonshire. Since 1890 he has been Master of the Pytchley. In 1892 he became Chancellor of the Victoria University, Manchester. His lordship married Charlotte, daughter of Frederick Charles William Seymour, grandson of the 1st Marquis of Hertford. Addresses: 27 St. James's Place, S.W.; and Althorp Park, Northampton.

SPENCER, Joseph William, Canadian geologist, was born at Dundas, Ontario, Mar. 26, 1850. He was educated at M'Gill University and at Göttingen University, graduating at the latter institution in 1877. In the same year he was elected a Fellow of the Geological Society of London (England), and he is also a Fellow of the Geological Society of America and of other learned bodies. He was Science Master in Hamilton College Institute, 1877-79; Professor of Chemistry in King's College, N.S., 1880-82; Professor of Geo- logy in the University of Missouri, 1882-87; State Geologist of Georgia in 1888-93; and is now (1898) conducting geological investigations in the West Indies. His observations on the interesting geological phenomena of his native valley near Dun- das gave rise to enthusiasm in scientific work at an early age, and from his college days until the present time he has been engaged in original geological work. Many papers from his pen have been pub- lished since 1881 up to the present time in the American Journal of Science, the Bulletins of the Geological Society of America, the Journals of the Geological Society of Lon-

SPENDER, John Alfred, born at Bath, 1862, is the eldest son of Dr. J. K. Spender and of Mrs. Spender (author of many novels). He was educated at Bath College and Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1887). He was editor of the Eastern Morning News, Hull, 1886-90, assistant-editor of the Pall Mall Gazette till it changed ownership in 1892, then joined the staff of the Westminster Gazette, of which he became editor in 1896. He is author of the "State and Pensions in Old Age" (Social Science Series), and "The New Fiction and other Papers" (by the "Philistine"), which appeared originally in the Westminster Gazette. The humour of this work depended on the "Philistine's" apparently assumed ignorance of the names and reputations of the best-known younger men in the world of art and letters. He is Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society. His brother, Mr. E. Harold Spender, is a journalist and author. Address: 29 Cheyne Walk, Chelsea.

SPICER, Albert, M.P., J.P., is the second son of James Spicer, J.P., D.L., of Woodford, Essex, and was born in 1847. He was educated at Mill Hill School, and privately at Heidelberg. He is a wholesale stationer and manufacturer, and a member of the firm of James Spicer and Sons, which has seven branches in principal towns in London, &c., and the Colonies. He has been Liberal M.P. for the Monmouth District since 1892, is Treasurer of the London Missionary Society and of Mansfield College, Oxford, and was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1893, and Joint Chairman of the London Congregational Union in 1897. He is the author of several pamphlets on social questions, and was member of special deputations on behalf of the London Missionary Society to India in 1881-82, and to the Samoan Islands in 1887-88. He also accompanied the late Dr. Dale to Australasia on behalf of the Congregational Union. He married a daughter of the late D. Stewart Dykes, Grove Hill, Surrey. Address: 10 Lancaster Gate, W.

SPIELHAGEN, Friedrich, a German novelist, was born at Magdeburg, Feb. 24, 1829, being the son of a Government official. At an early age he accompanied his father to Stralsund, where the sea made a lasting impression on the susceptible mind of the boy, who has in most of his later life and incidents at sea the force and vividness of a first-hand experience. He entered the University of Berlin in 1847, and to Bonn, where he applied himself to the study of the law for a short time, then turned his attention to natural and literary studies, and was distinguished by his energy and with great zeal in both. In 1854 he settled in Bonn, where he taught in the law school. The sudden death of his father in his circumstances and proximity to his adopting literature. Since the year 1854 he has been writing with ever-increasing success novels, which have gained the most place among German fiction. His larger works are "Natural Natures," 1861 (with a sequel, "Through Night," 1862); "Hammer and Anvil," 1863; "Ever Forward," 1864; "The Swallow Song," 1865; "Floods," 1878. He has also written "Hohensteins," 1864; "Parks," 1866; "Low Land," 1871; "Sana," 1880. Among his shorter works are: "Clara Vere," 1871; "Downs," 1878; "At the Tower," 1863; "The Rose of the City," 1868; "Hans and Margaret," 1868; "The Village Captain," 1873; "The Skeleton in the Cellar," 1879; and "Angela," 1881. SPRENGEL, Hermann Johann Philipp, Dr.phil. (Heidelberg, 1858); F.R.S. (London, 1878); Royal Prussian Professor, 1893; was born on Aug. 29, 1834, at Schillerslage, near Hanover, in Germany, where his father owned a property, and received his education first at the family home, by a private tutor, later at school in the town of Hanover, whence he removed to the Universities of Göttingen and Heidelberg, where he studied natural sciences (chemistry and physics in particular), and took his degree Aug. 2, 1858 ("Examine rigoroso summa cum laude superato"). Coming to England early in 1859, he engaged in research work with the Professor of Chemistry at the University of Oxford till the middle of 1862; after which he settled in London, engaged in research work at the laboratories of the Royal College of Chemistry, Guy's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, till the autumn of 1864; and since then in work more or less connected with his inventions and discoveries. These, with some omissions, are: "Über einen neuen Löhrohr-apparat," Pogg. Ann., B. cxii., 1861; "On the Detection of Nitric Acid," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1863; "Researches on the Vacuum," ibid., 1865; "On Determining the Weight of Heterogeneous Liquids," ibid., 1866; "Improvements in Explosive Compounds," Engl. Pat., No. 921 and No. 2642, 1871; "The Water Air-pump," Phil. Mag., 1873; "An Air-bath of Constant Temperature between 100 and 200° C.," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1873; "A Method of Determining the Specific Gravity of Liquids with Ease and great Exactness," ibid., 1873; "A New Class of Explosives, which are Non-explosive during their Manufacture, Storage, and Transport," ibid., 1873; "Use of the Atomiser or Spray-Producer in the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid," Engl. Pat., No. 3189, 1873, and Chem. News, 1875; "Sprengel's Vacuum Pump, commonly called Bunsen's Pump" (London, E. & F. N. Spon), 1881; "Notes on so-called Panclastite," Chem. News, 1886; "The Hell Gate Explosion near New York and so-called 'Rackarock,'" Chem. News, 1885; "Use of Exhaust Steam in the Production of Sulphuric Acid," Engl. Pat., No. 10,798, 1886, and Chem. News, 1887. The more important among these refer to the two extremes in the gaseous state of matter—to vacua and detonating agents. As to vacua he discovered a new method of producing them, viz., by the fall of water or mercury in tubes, a method distinguished by its convenience and effectiveness. Thus we see, Chemical News, vol. xxix., p. 123, that in 1870 his mercury air-pump produced vacua so nearly perfect that the trace of air remaining in the exhausted vessel amounted to only $\frac{1}{1000000}$ part of its original volume, leaving for further cultivation that field which lies between $\frac{1}{1000000}$ and 0. The eyes of the scientific world turned towards this instrument in 1866, after the late Prof. Graham, Master of the Mint, had bestowed upon it (anent his then newly-discovered occluded gases) the following encomium: "The pneumatic instrument of Dr. Sprengel is peculiarly applicable to researches of the present kind. Indeed, without the use of his invention some parts of the inquiry would have been practically impossible" (Philosophical Transactions, vol. clvi., p. 408). Since then this instrument has become a most useful servant both in science and industry, and has been singularly productive of further important results, which to enumerate fully we have no space. Suffice it to point to a few, e.g., to Bunsen's filtering process, to Crookes's radiometer-work, and to Edison and Swan's incandescent vacuum-lamp industry. In researches on explosives he only briefly referred to his first to shake our ears with an infallible means of the non-combustible, by virtue of 1871, which announced of certain nitro-compounds fired by a detonating action contain water up to 10% was the first also who discovered (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1873) now called "cumulative" (Witt's Prometheus, Berlin, 1892, p. 230), by means of sensitive explosives. The discussion such as wet nitro-compound with liquid may readily be exploded, of which every charge of has since been exploded. As wet gun-cotton is now an extensive scale for military purposes, Sprengel's cumulative and first use of a hydrate attained a high degree of success. He was the first (in 1873) to Picric Acid Mel as "a powerful explosive detonator" (The Inventor Standard, April 10, 1890). At this time this material is largely tonating charge for shell, virtue of their prodigious greatly raised the influence modern warfare. A setting [unintelligible] of Gray's ode, "The Bard" (op. 50), was [unintelligible] first given at the Cardiff Festival of 1895, [unintelligible] and in the same year his fifth symphony, [unintelligible] "L'Allegro ed il Penseroso," was pro- [unintelligible] duced by the Philharmonic Society, and a [unintelligible] Pianoforte Concerto (op. 59) was played [unintelligible] by Mr. Borwick at the Richter concerts. [unintelligible] Both these works formed part of a concert [unintelligible] of English music conducted by Mr. Stan- [unintelligible] ford at Berlin in December of that year. [unintelligible] His Irish opera "Shamus O'Brien" was [unintelligible] produced at the Opéra Comique in the [unintelligible] spring of 1896, and after a long run both [unintelligible] in London and the provinces, was given in [unintelligible] New York and other American cities. At [unintelligible] the Norwich Festival of the same year his [unintelligible] choral ballad "Phauidrig Coshone" (op. [unintelligible] 59) was first given. His most recent [unintelligible] works have been a Requiem (op. 63), com- [unintelligible] posed in memory of Lord Leighton, first [unintelligible] performed at the Birmingham Festival of [unintelligible] 1897, repeated by the Royal Academy of [unintelligible] Music and the Bach Choir in London, and [unintelligible] the Apollo Club at Chicago; a String [unintelligible] Quartet, No. 3 (op. 64), composed for the [unintelligible] Joachim quartet, and given by them both [unintelligible] in Berlin and London; a Cycle of Songs [unintelligible] from Tennyson's "Princess," for vocal [unintelligible] quartet; and a Te Deum in honour of her [unintelligible] Majesty's Diamond Jubilee (Leeds Festival [unintelligible] of 1898). In 1897 Mr. Stanford was ap-concerted conductor of the Leeds Philharmonic Society, and besides other concerts directed the Festival, given to the foreign guests of the Society of Naval Architects. In the winter of the same year he conducted two of his symphonies at Amsterdam, and directed one of the series of International Concerts, devoted to music of the British school, given by the Concerts Yague at Brussels. He married Jeanette, fourth daughter of the late Champion Welles, Juddwynds, Surrey. He was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2. Addresses: 5, Holland Street, Kensington, W.; and Athenæum.

STANLEY, Lord, Edward George Villiers, M.P., J.P., D.L., Junior Lord of the Treasury, was born on April 4, 1865, and is the eldest son and heir of the 10th Earl of Derby and Lady Constance Villiers, eldest daughter of the late Earl of Clarendon. He was educated at Wellington College, entered the 2nd Battalion Grenadier Guards, and retired with the rank of Lieutenant in 1896, and was A.D.C. to his father, then Governor-General of Canada, from 1889 to 1891. In 1892 he was returned to Parliament as Conservative member for the West Houghton Division of Lancs., and in 1895 was appointed a Lord of the Treasury. He is a J.P. and D.L. for Lancashire. In 1889 he married Lady Alice Maude Olivia Montagu, daughter of the 7th Duke of Manchester. Addresses: 36, Great Cumberland Place, Hyde Park, W.; and Coworth Park, Sunningdale, Berks.

STANLEY, The Hon. Edward Lyulph, was born in London on May 16, 1839, and is the son of the 2nd Lord Stanley of Alderley, and heir to his brother, the 3rd Baron. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a second class in Classical Moderations, and a first class in Lit. Hum., 1861. In 1862 he was elected a Fellow of his College. In 1865 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and in 1872 was appointed Assistant-Commissioner on the Friendly Societies Commission. In 1880 he was returned to the House of Commons as Liberal M.P. for Oldham, and represented that constituency until 1885. He was a member of the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Poor, 1884; on Elementary Education, 1887; and was a Commissioner to investigate the Royal Liver Friendly Society and Cardiff Savings Bank. In 1895 he was appointed a member of the Departmental Committee on London Poor-Law Schools. He has long been keenly interested in primary education, has sat on the London School Board almost continuously since 1876, and still represents the Division. He may be said to have formed on the amount of industrial education devoted all his life to the London School Board, and of the details of it he has his marvellous memory complete. He married the daughter of Sir Isaac Lowthian and is Mansfield Street, W.

STANLEY, Sir Herbert G.C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., was born near London, Jan. 28, 1841. When at the age he was placed in the charge of St. Asaph, where he remained two years, and received an education which enabled him to teach at the age of fifteen he was a boy in a vessel bound to Here he was adopted by a man named Stanley, who took in place of his original name John Rowlands. He left leaving a will, and passed to his own resources. He joined a Confederate army, was killed and subsequently joined the service as acting ensign. After the close of the war in Turkey as a newspaper correspondent in 1867 was sent by the New York Herald as its correspondent with the in Abyssinia, and subsequently in Spain and elsewhere. He was finally sent by the Herald to find Dr. L. whom nothing had been heard of for more than two years. Stanley sailed for Zanzibar in October 1870, and landed on the east coast of Africa on January 1871, and on N. Livingstone at Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika where he had just arrived. Stanley furnished supplies, explored the northern Tanganyika with him, and returned in February 1872, when Livingstone on the journey from which he had just returned, and Stanley made the first expedition induced by the New York Herald and Daily Telegraph to send him on another African expedition. He reached Zanzibar in 1874, and learning that Livingstone was dead, resolved to go north the region of Lake Victoria. This, after many encounters with the natives and the loss by death of 104 men out of 300, he did in February 1875, and found it to be the largest body of fresh water on the continent, having an area of 40,000 square miles. He then pushed westward towards Lake Albert N'yanza, and was able to convince himself that it was not, as had generally supposed, connected with Tanganyika. Forced by the hostility of the natives to return to Ujiji, he declined to descend the great river discovered by Livingstone, and believed it must be the Nile, but which others thought was the Congo (and Stanley by his journey ascertained it was). It had been named by Livingstone the Luabala, and by Stanley it was named the Livingstone.

The descent, chiefly by canoes, cost him eight months, cost him the lives of thirty-five men, and was accompanied under the greatest difficulties and dangers. On reaching a settlement on the coast, a Portuguese national vessel was sent to St. Paul de Loanda, whence an English vessel conveyed the party to Cape of Good Hope, and thence to England. Here his men were left at their posts; and Stanley reached England in January 1878. He has published an account of his first expedition, under the title of "How I Found Livingstone," 1872. His second expedition an account is given in "Through the Dark Continent," an abridged edition, 1885). The President of the French Geographical Society bestowed the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour on Mr. Stanley at the time, Paris, June 28, 1878. In 1879 he visited Africa again, sent there by the African International Association with a view to developing the great valley of the river Congo. The King of Belgium devoted from his private purse £50,000 per annum towards this enterprise. Stanley completed the expedition in 1884, having established trading posts along the Congo River from its mouth to Stanley Pool, 1400 miles by river.

A description of his labours in this expedition was published by him in 1885 under the title "The Congo and the Founding of its State." On Jan. 13, 1887, he was created with the honorary freedom of the City of London, just on the eve of his departure for a fourth time to Africa. The expedition was made for the purpose of relieving Emin Pasha, Governor of the Sudan in Africa, whose condition was such in Europe to have become precarious. Stanley fulfilled his mission, succoured Emin and brought him and his followers safely back to Egypt, but only at the cost of the most severe hardships endured in any of his explorations, and with a loss of over 400 out of the 650 men he had taken with him. Nearly three years were occupied in the journey. Among the important geographical results of the expedition were the discovery of the Semliki River, of Mount Ruwenzori (thought to be 17,000 feet high), of Lake Albert Edward, and of the south-western extension of Lake Victoria. Lake Albert Edward proved to be the primary source of the White Nile, and it was shown that its waters connect through the Semliki with the Albert N'yanza. Stanley reached Cairo near the close of 1889, and remained there until the following spring in order to write a record of the journey. This was published simultaneously in England, France, Germany, and the United States in June 1890, under the title of "In Darkest Africa" (2 vols.). His return to England was an unending ovation. The Universities of Oxford and Durham bestowed upon him the degree of D.C.L.; that of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge, and every institution and individual sought to do him honour. On July 12, 1890, in Westminster Abbey, he was married to Miss Dorothy Tennant, an artist of considerable talent, and a lady well known in society. She is the daughter of Sir C. Tennant. A controversy subsequently arose relative to certain incidents mentioned in a "Life of Major Barttelot," which amounted to charges against Mr. Stanley. He defended himself from these charges before undertaking a lecturing tour to America. On his return with Mrs. Stanley in 1891, he lectured in many parts of the United Kingdom, and in 1892 paid a visit to Australia. On his return he settled in London and took out a certificate of naturalisation. At the general election in July he stood as a Unionist for North Lambeth, but was not returned. During the controversy about Uganda he was strongly in favour of retaining that country. In November 1893 appeared his book on "My Dark Companions and their Strange Stories." In 1898 appeared his "Through South Africa," being an account of his recent visit to the Cape. He was created G.C.B. at the Birthday, 1899. Addresses: 2 Richmond Terrace, S.W.; and Cadroxton Lodge, Neath, Glamorganshire.

STANMORE, Lord, The Right Hon. Arthur Hamilton Gordon, G.C.M.G., Hon. D.C.L. Oxon., D.L., J.P., Ex-Governor of Ceylon, is the youngest son of the 4th Earl of Aberdeen, and was born in 1829, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1851; Hon. D.C.L. Oxon. 1879). He sat in Parliament as Liberal Member for Beverley from 1854 to 1857; was Secretary to the special mission to the Ionian Islands in 1858; appointed Governor of New Brunswick in 1861; Governor of Trinidad in 1866; Governor of Mauritius in 1871; the first Governor of the Fiji Islands in 1875; High Commissioner for the Western Pacific in 1877; Governor of New Zealand in 1880; and Governor of Ceylon from 1883 to 1890. In 1878 he was made G.C.M.G. In 1879 he received the honour of the Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford University. He was raised to the peerage in 1893. As an author he has published "Wilderness Journeys in New Brunswick," 1864; "Story of a Little War," 1879; "Life of Lord Aberdeen," 1893; together with pamphlets and articles. His wife, who died in 1889, was the eldest daughter of Sir John Shaw Lefevre. Addresses: The Red House, Ascot; and Athenæum.

STANNARD, Mrs. Arthur, "John Strange Winter," F.R.S.L., the popular author of "Bootles' Baby" and many other well-known novels, was born at York on Jan. 13, 1856. She was the only daughter of the late Rev. H. V. Palmer, Rector of St. Margaret's, York, who, before taking Holy Orders, was in the Royal Artillery, and was one of the officers selected to attend the coronation of Queen Victoria. One of her ancestors was the celebrated actress, Hannah Pritchard. Mrs. Stannard began her public literary career in 1874. Her first publication in volume form was a collection of military sketches entitled "Cavalry Life," issued in 1881, for which her publishers induced her to adopt the masculine nom de guerre by which she has since become so well known. In 1885 two stories from her pen, entitled "Bootles' Baby," and "Houp-la," appeared in the Graphic, and attracted immediate attention from the author's evident familiarity with army matters and child life. Up to this time it was universally assumed that the author was a cavalry officer, but when the success of "Bootles' Baby" had established her reputation as a writer on army life, she disclosed her identity. In 1892 Mrs. Stannard became the first President of the "Writers' Club," which is the first women's Press Club ever established. In 1893 she was unanimously elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, an honour which had only once before been conferred on a woman. She was married in 1884 to Mr. Arthur Stannard, a civil engineer, and has four children. Since 1896 Mr. and Mrs. Stannard have lived at Dieppe, and have prominently identified themselves with the interests of that town as a resort for English visitors. It is to their efforts that English tourists owe the Golf Club, of which he is secretary, and the Publicity and Information Committee Mrs. Stannard has put letterpress for a handsome and forth the attractions of the Stannard has published many novels, including: "The Regimental Legends," "Houp-la," "Pluck," "The March," "Army Secrets," "Gossip," "Mignon's Secret," "Mignon's Husband," "A Soldier's Confessions of a Public School Children," "Beautiful Jack Dick," "Harvest," "A Little Buttons," "Mrs. Bob's Story," "Ferrals Court," "He and She," "The Other Man's Wife," "Lumley the Painter," "The Only Human," "My God," "Children," "Three Girls," "Smith," "Aunt Johnnie Man," "The Soul of the Blameless Woman," "The Grip," "Into an Unknown," "Peacemakers," "Heart and Hand." Mrs. Stannard presented the right of "A Soldier's Child" Victoria Hospital for Children, Villa des Rosiers, Dieppe.

STIRLING, James Hutchison, F.R.C.S. and LL.D. Edin., born at Glasgow, June 22, 1820, youngest son of William Stirling, of James Hutchison & Co., Glasgow, was educated at Glasgow University for nine consecutive winter sessions in arts and medicine, and spent six years afterwards in France and Germany. He became LL.D. of Edinburgh, 1867; and a Foreign Member of the Philosophical Society of Berlin, 1871. In earlier days he held appointments as surgeon to the Hirwain and other iron and coal works, South Wales, but he relinquished professional practice in 1851, and went to the Continent to pursue there those literary and philosophical studies for which, as a student at college, he had shown a taste, and in which he had gained distinction. Returning to England in 1857, he devoted himself to the study of philosophy and literary pursuits generally. Leaving earlier contributions out of view, he published in 1865 "The Secret of Hegel," from the appearance of which work there dates in Great Britain, academically and generally, a new movement towards the study of philosophy, more particularly German and ancient. A new edition of this work appeared in 1898. The following are the titles of his other works: "Sir William Hamilton, or the Philosophy of Perception," 1865; "Schwegler's History of Philosophy, translated and annotated," 1867 (11th edit., 1891); "Jerrold, Tennyson, and Macaulay, with other Critical Essays," 1868; "Address on Materialism," 1868; "As Regards Protoplasm," 1869 (2nd edit., 1872); "Lectures on the Philosophy of Law," &c., 1873; "Burns in Drama, together with Saved Leaves," 1878; "Text-Book to Kant," 1881; "Of Philosophy in the Poets," "The Community of Property," 1885; "Thomas Carlyle's Counsels," 1886. In 1888 he was the first appointed Gifford Lecturer; and, as such, he delivered, in the two subsequent sessions, courses of lectures on Natural Theology to the University of Edinburgh. These lectures, under the title of "Philosophy and Theology," were published in 1890. In 1894 he published his "Darwinianism: Workmen and Work." He has also contributed to periodicals. He married Jane Hunter, youngest daughter of William Mair, Irvine, Ayrshire. Address: Laverock Bank, Trinity, Edinburgh.

STOCKHAUSEN, Julius, was born in Paris, July 22, 1825. His father was a harpist, and his mother a well-known singer. Intended at first for the priestly calling, he received his early education at the school of Gebwiller in Alsace, and subsequently attended the College in Strasburg. His mother's success at a farewell concert given in Basle, however, changed the course of his life, and in 1845 he went with his father to Paris, and there became the pupil of Hallé and Stamaty for piano, and of the famous Garcia for singing. In 1848 he sang the part of Elijah in Basel, and with such success that from that time he gave himself up entirely to singing. In 1849 he came to England, where he continued his studies with Garcia, and in 1851 sang in the 9th Symphony in London. From 1857 to 1859 he was engaged at the Opéra Comique in Paris, where he specially distinguished himself in the part of the Sénéchal in Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris." There he formed a close friendship with Ary Scheffer, the painter, in whose house, together with Berlioz, Duprez, Pauline Viardot, and Saint-Saëns, German music was diligently cultivated. Concert tours followed in 1859-60. At Cologne he sang Schumann the first time. In 1860 the second period of his career as leader of the Hamburg Society; and in 1871, with famous Stern Choral Society Great as his success as a teacher has been, Stockhausen's importance culminates in his moments as a singer. His voice perfect, and he had such an instrument that the purity of the intellectual expression could be sacrificed the one to the other, astonishing distinction of diction, as well as its beautiful significance, was due to the standing of the nature of of speech. Nowhere was trace to be detected of an after effect, or a display of Joachim plays the violin Schumann the piano, so defining and interpret the great masters. Seidenberg has the reproductive distinguished for such purity of dignity. In 1878 began the of his artistic career, that first at the newly founded conservatoire in Frankfurt-on-Main; ever, he quitted in the 1880s. Since then he has been at the singing school of his own, repeatedly, up to the most himself sung in concerts. His "Method of Singing," an important work, was published in Leipzig, and translated in 1888.

STOCKTON, Francis, an American writer, was born April 5, 1834. He graduated at Philadelphia Central High School, and began life as an engraver, and devoted himself to journalism. His earliest work, a number of fantastic tales contributed to the Rivier and other periodicals. He became connected with a Philadelphia paper, and afterwards with Home, New York. He was on the editorial staff of St. Nicholas (now the Century), and of St. Nicholas became editor. His "Rudder" which appeared in St. Nicholas first to attract general notice, which he had successfully characterized of the short story, he is chiefly celebrated. The best known of these are: "The Tiger," "The Transference," gage," "The Discourager," "Negative Gravity," &c. published novels entitled: "Null," "The Hundredth's Claverden," and "The Cha," besides "The Casting Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Merry Chanter," "The Syndicate," "The Stories of the Squirrel," "The Squirrel novelettes; also "Pomona's," "The Adventures of Captain 95," "Captain Chap," 1896; "Yacht," 1896; "Stories of 1896;" "The Great Stone of," "A Story-Teller's Pack," "The Associate Hermits," 1898, "The Holt, Convent Station," S.A.

STODDARD, Richard Henry, was born in Amherst, Mass., July 2, 1825. His father moved to New York, and in 1848 he began to write for the press in prose and verse. In 1850 he received an appointment in the Custom-House, which he held until the same time continuing his literary labors. He has published: "Poems," 1849; "Poems," 1852; "The Fairy-Land," 1853; "The Summer," and "Town and Country," 1857; "Life of Alexander von Humboldt," 1859; "Loves and Heroines," 1860; "The King's Bell," 1861; "The Little Red Riding-Hood," 1861; "Under Green Leaves," and "The Poets," 1865; "Melodies," mostly from the Old English, 1865; "The Children in the Wood," 1866; "Putnam, the Brave," 1866; "The East, and other Poems," 1866; new and enlarged editions of "The Poets of America," 1873; "The Poets of America," 1874; "Poets of the Nineteenth Century," 1875; "Memoir of Edgar Allan Poe," 1880; "Henry Longfellow," 1882; "The Poet and other Verses," 1892; and "The Evening Lamp," 1893. He has a series of dainty works, the "Brac Series," 1874-75; and a series, and more recently a series of volumes relating to English literature and memorabilia. In connection with others he published in 1877 a series of "Poets' Homes." He spent some time after leaving the City Librarian, and is now editor of the New York Press.—His wife, ELIZABETH STODDARD, born at Mattachusetts, in 1823, is also a contributor to periodicals, and has published three novels: "The Morgesons," 1862; "Two Men," 1865; and "Temple House," 1867. These novels have recently been reprinted, "Two Men" and "Temple House" in 1888, and "The Morgesons" in 1889, and have met with great critical success.

STODDART, Andrew Ernest, cricketer, member of the Middlesex Eleven, was born in South Shields on March 11, 1863. He was privately educated, and did not enjoy the cricket training which is to be obtained at public schools and at the universities. Indeed, though he played, he was not remarkable at the game. As a young man, too, he devoted his best energies to football, and gained celebrity as a three-quarter before he was ever heard of as a cricketer. He first came into notice as a batsman at Hampstead, where he made some big scores for the Hampstead Club, and thus earned for himself a place in the Middlesex Eleven in the latter part of 1885. From that time, when he was playing football in Australia, to the present day, he has been one of the finest bats in England, a bat second only to Dr. W. G. Grace. His most brilliant English season was in 1893, when both he and William Gunn scored over 2000 runs each in first-class matches, a feat only previously equalled by Dr. W. G. Grace. In a match against Notts at Lord's that summer he scored 195, not out, and 124. This was his highest score in a first-class match up to that date, though when playing for Hampstead Club against the Stoics, in 1886, he made his record score, amounting to 485 in one innings. This was said to be the highest individual innings ever played. In 1894 Mr. Stoddart took an English eleven over to Australia, and captained them throughout with brilliant success. In a match against All Australia, played at Melbourne on New-Year's Day, 1895, he made 173. In the series of five matches between the English team and All Australia played on this tour, victory rested with the English team. During recent years he has again headed English teams in Australia. Address: 30 Lithos Road, N.W.

STOKES, Sir George Gabriel, Bart., M.A., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., Sc.D., ex-M.P., born Aug. 13, 1819, at Skreen, co. Sligo, is the youngest son of the Rev. Gabriel Stokes, Rector of Skreen, and Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. John Haughton, Rector of Kilrea. He was educated at Dr. Wall's school, in Dublin, at the Bristol College, and at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1841, as Senior Wrangler, and was elected to a Fellowship. In 1849 he was appointed death of Mr. Beresford-Hope, in 1884, he was returned as one of the representatives in Parliament of Cambridge University, and sat till 1892. In 1889 he was created a Baronet of the United Kingdom; and in 1892 retired from the Presidency of the Royal Society, and was succeeded by Sir William Thomson, now Lord Kelvin. He has also retired from the Committee of Solar Physics. In 1891 he published "Natural Theology," being the Gifford Lectures for the year, and has at various times contributed short articles on religious topics to periodical literature. He has published many papers on mathematics and physics in scientific journals, especially in the Phil. Transactions of Cambridge and of the Royal Society. In 1887 he delivered the Burnett Lectures on Light, and published them. His jubilee as a Cambridge Professor was celebrated in 1899. In 1857 he married Mary, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Robinson, D.D., Director of Armagh Observatory. Addresses: Lensfield Cottage, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

Francis was educated at Harrow, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He took the Bell University Scholarship and was sixth in the Classical Class. From 1864 to 1875 he was Master at Marlborough College. He went to Merchant Taylors' School after removal from Suffolk Lane Schoolhouse, to preside over the school, then first formed. Mr. Francis was the mainstay of more educational societies than any other teacher in London, among them being the College of Preceptors, the Teachers' Guild, the Modern Language Association, the Assistant-Masters' Association, and the Froebel Society. He is also on the Council of the Authors' Society. His works include editions of many English and foreign classics, such as Cowper's Task and Bacon's Essays. He is a well-known master of the art of translation. Many of his renderings are included in the three volumes of Prize Translations, reprinted from the Journal of Education. He has edited the "Reisebilder," Livy V., Richter's "Schulmeisterlein Wuz," and Lermontoff's "Demon." He has been a constant contributor to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," such articles as those on Academies, Georges Sand, and other foreign littérateurs showing his broad sympathies and fine critical sense. Addresses: 40 Mecklenburgh Square, W.C.; and Athenæum.

STORRS, Richard Salter, D.D., was born at Braintree, Massachusetts, Aug. 21, 1821. He graduated at Amherst College in 1839. He studied law, and afterwards theology at the Andover Seminary, where he graduated in 1845. He was pastor of a church at Brookline, Massachusetts, for one year, and then took charge of the Congregational Church of the Pilgrims at Brooklyn, New York, where he has since remained. Dr. Storrs is noted as an eloquent preacher and as a student of history. For many years he has been President of the Long Island Historical Society, and since 1887 President of the American Board for Foreign Missions. From 1848 to 1861 he was one of the editors of the Independent, a religious weekly. In addition to a number of orations and discourses he has published a "Report on the Revised Edition of the English Version of the Bible undertaken by the American Bible Society," "The Graham Lectures on the Wisdom, Power, and Goodness of God, as Manifested in the Constitution of the Human Soul," 1856; "Conditions of Success in Preaching without Notes," 1875; "The Early American Spirit and the Genesis of It," 1875; "The Declaration of Independence and the Effects of It," 1876; "The Divine Origin of Christianity indicated by its Historical Effects," 1884; "The Puritan Spirit," 1890; and a volume of Eight Lectures on "Bernard of Clairvaux," 1892.

STORY, Mrs. Julian (Emma Eames), was born at Shanghai, on Aug. 13, 1867, and is the daughter of a distinguished American lawyer, employed at the time of her birth in the International Courts at Shanghai. She spent the first five years of her life at Bath, Maine. Her early musical studies were directed by her mother, herself a musician of talent. From 1883 to 1886 she developed her voice under Miss Munger, of Boston, and in the latter year entered the School of Mme. Marchesi, in Paris, under whose tuition and that of M. Pluque of the Opéra, she studied diligently for two years. Her first engagement was at the Opéra Comique in 1888, and in 1889 she made her début at the Grand Opéra in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliette," as replacements to Mme. Patti. She sang with the brothers De Reszke, and her success was immediate and overwhelming. She shortly afterwards still further added to her reputation by her impersonation of Marguerite. The late Sir Augustus Harris engaged her for the Covent Garden season of 1891. She made her first great English success in the part of Marguerite at Covent Garden on April 7, 1891, and at the close of the year won fresh laurels in America, in Mr. Grau's "ideal cast," which included the De Reszkes. She has won her chief successes as Marguerite and Juliette, but has also sung in most well-known operatic parts, is one of the glories of Covent Garden, and one of the world's most admired prima donna. She was decorated at Osborne in 1897 with the Jubilee Medal. In 1891 she married, in England, Mr. Julian Story, son of the well-known sculptor of that name, long a leader of the artistic English colony in Italy. Address: 7 Place des États Unis, Paris.

STORY. The Very Rev. Robert Herbert, D.D., LL.D., Principal of Glasgow University, Queen's Chaplain, was born at Roseneath Manse, Scotland, Jan. 28, 1835, being the son of the Rev. Robert Story, minister of that parish. He was educated in Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and St. Andrews; was appointed assistant-minister of St. Andrew's Church, Montreal, in February 1859; ordained there Sept. 20, 1859; presented by the Duke of Argyll in the same year to the parish of Roseneath on the death of his father; and received the degree of D.D. honoris causa from the University of Edinburgh, April 22, 1874. Besides contributions to current literature of a minor character, including many pamphlets and articles on the ecclesiastical affairs of Scotland, he has published "Life of the Rev. Robert Story, including Passages of Scottish Ecclesiastical History during the Second Quarter of the Present Century," 1862; "Christ the Consoler, being a Manual of Scriptures, Hymns, and Prayers," 1864; "Memoir and Remains of Robert Lee, D.D.," 2 vols., 1870; "William Carstairs; a Character and Career of the Revolutionary Epoch, 1649-1715," 1874;

"Creed and Conduct," 1874; "Haunts of the Robber Ecclesiastical," 1884. He was one of the founders of the Scottish Society, and convener of its committee, and has had the publication of "Euchlogia of the Common Order," now in press, and has assisted in the Liturgical restoration in Scotland. He became minister of the Church, a meeting-house, which was instituted in 1857, and the Church of Scotland merged in 1857 in the same year for some time edited by him, was appointed in 1859 one of the chaplains; was elected to the Assembly to the office of Moderator in succession to Dr. Millar, and subsequently to that of Principal, which he now holds. In the same year he was appointed Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Glasgow. He was appointed in succession to Principal Cooper, D.D., of Glasgow, editor of a work in the Church of Scotland, published in 1890-91; and has been the Baird Lecturer on the Apostolic Ministry in the same year, being the Baird Lecturer, and a member of the "Moderate" Church party. He was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1894. He married, in 1861, Leith, daughter of Captain Aggar, the novelist. Address: College, Glasgow.

Mr. Sir Robert, K.C.M.G., New Zealand, is the eldest son of Stout of Lerwick, in the merchant, was born at Lerwick, educated at Lerwick Parish School, trained for the profession of teaching his pupil-teachership school. Towards the end of 1850 Otago, New Zealand, and on his arrival he obtained an appointment to the Grammar School. He then entered the exercise of his profession until 1867, either in the schools or in private grammar schools. He commenced the study of law, and was admitted to the New Zealand Bar, and before long became a leading member, not only of the colony. In 1872 Mr. Stout was elected to a seat in the Provincial Council. In 1875 he was elected a member of Representatives, as for Otago. In 1876 he was elected a member of the members for Otago, and retained his seat until his death in 1879. He was offered, in 1879, the office of Attorney-General, and Minister of Lands in Sir John Hall's Ministry in 1878. From 1878 Mr. Stout was not engaged in the public service, as before, in the administration of the colony, e.g., the Otago Land Office. In 1884 Mr. Stout was elected a member of the House of Representatives for Dunedin East, and on the 1st of January 1885, when the Atkinson Ministry took office, Attorney-General, and Minister of Education, with Sir Julius Vogel as Treasurer. In 1886 Mr. Stout was elected to the Order of K.C.M.G. In the election of 1887 Sir R. Stout was elected for Dunedin East, but chiefly, it was said, as a protest against the unpopular financial Ministry. He was offered a seat in the Colony, but declined to retire into private life, and taken any active part in the public service. He has been an industrious writer of numerous journals and has also delivered, and lectured and addresses on political and religious subjects. He is a member of the New Zealand University, and has always an interest in education. At the general election of 1890 he was again requested to enter active political life by several constituencies, but declined. When the late Mr. Balance was on his death-bed, he requested Sir Robert Stout to again enter political life. A vacancy occurring at Inangahua in the Nelson District at this time, Sir Robert Stout became a candidate, and was returned in June 1893 by a very large majority, about two to one over his opponent. At the general election in November 1893 he was a candidate for the City of Wellington, which returned three candidates, and he was returned at the top of the poll, obtaining no less than 6200 votes. He held this seat until 1898. He married, in 1876, Anna, daughter of J. Logan, Esq. Address: Watson Street, Wellington, N.Z.

STRACHEY, John St. Loe, joint-editor and part-proprietor of the Spectator, was born in 1860, and is the second son of Sir Edward Strachey, Bart., and Mary Isabella, second daughter of the late J. A. Symonds. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and obtained a first class in Modern History in 1882. He was afterwards called to the Bar, and entered upon the career of journalism. In 1896-97 he edited the Cornhill. He is author of "From Grave to Gay." Addresses: 14 Cornwall Gardens, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

STRACHEY, Lieut.-General Sir Richard, R.E., G.C.S.I., F.R.S., LL.D., third son of Edward Strachey, B.C.S., and Julia, daughter of Major-General Kirkpatrick, Indian Army, was born July 24, 1817, at Sutton Court, Somersetshire. He was educated at a private school and at Addiscombe, and in 1836 entered the corps of Bombay Engineers, from which he was shortly transferred to the Bengal Engineers. He was employed on irrigation works in the N.W.P. from 1840, and appointed executive engineer on the Ganges Canal in 1843. He served in the Sutlej campaign with Sir Harry Smith's division; was in the battles of Aliwal and Sohraon, was mentioned in despatches and received a brevet majority. In 1857 he became Under Secretary to the Government in the Public Works Department; and in the same year was appointed Secretary to the Government of the Central Provinces, which, during the mutiny, were placed under Sir John Peter Grant as Lieut.-Governor. He became consulting engineer in the Railway Department in 1858; Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department in 1862; and Inspector-General of Irrigation in 1866. He was appointed additional Member of the Governor-General's Council in 1860. He took an active part in the organisation of the Public Works Department, and improvement of the System of Accounts, as well as in the formation of the Meteorological and Forest Departments, and originated the scheme for the decentralisation of the finances of India. He also originated the measures taken by the Government for carrying out railway and irrigation works on a large scale by means of borrowed capital. On leaving India in 1871, he was appointed Inspector-General of railway materials and stores at the India Office. In 1873 he retired from the army on full pay as a Lieut.-General; and in the same year was appointed a Member of the Council of India; which post he vacated in 1877, in order to proceed to India on special duty, viz., to arrange for the purchase by the Government of the East Indian Railway. He is Chairman of this railway and of the Assam Bengal Railway Company. He became Officiating Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General in 1878, and Officiating Military Member thereof in 1879; he also presided over the Famine Commission which was then formed. On his return to England, in 1879, he was reappointed to the Council of India, from which post he retired in 1889, and became Chairman of the East Indian Railway Company. He was appointed Grand Commander of the Star of India in 1897, and is in receipt of a good-service pension. In 1892 he was sent as a representative of the Indian Government to the Monetary Conference at Brussels, and became a Member of the Committee under Lord Herschel to report on the Currency of India. Lieut.-General Strachey was employed on a scientific survey of the Himalayan province of Kumaon in 1848 and 1849, and made valuable geological and botanical researches and collections. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1854, and received one of the Royal Medals in 1897. He is Chairman of the Meteorological Council. He was President of the Royal Geographical Society from 1887 to 1890, and is an Honorary Member of the Geographical Societies of Berlin and Italy. He was appointed one of the Delegates of Great Britain at the International Prime Meridian Conference which was held at Washington in 1884. In 1892 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. at Cambridge. He has contributed papers to various scientific societies, and is the author of "Lectures on Geography," and, jointly with Sir John Strachey, of "The Finances and Public Works of India." He married, in 1859, Jane, daughter of Sir John Peter Grant, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., of Rothiemurchus, Scotland. Address: 69 Lancaster Gate, W.; and Athenæum.

Address: 3 St. James's Place, St. James's, S.W.

STRINDBERG, Auguste, Swedish novelist and dramatist, was born at Stockholm in 1849, and having been educated at the public school of his native town he was about to enter the University, when poverty compelled him to earn a livelihood instead, and he was by turns private tutor, theatrical super, telegraphist, and librarian, and even endeavoured to try painting and photography. Finally he resolved to devote himself wholly to literature, and became a successful exponent of poetry, journalism, social satire, romance, and drama. In all of these, however, the bitterness of his early struggles and miseries exhibit themselves in the form of pessimism. This is especially seen in his hatred of women, which has been caused by domestic disappointment. After his first success he left Stockholm, and travelled through Denmark, Germany (where he met and became a disciple of Nietzsche), France, Switzerland, and Italy; everywhere preparing or writing works inspired by the scenes he was observing. He returned to his native country in 1885 to answer an attack upon the supposed atheism displayed in his novel "Mariés," but such was his popularity that the accusation became, for him, a triumph. Among the better-known works of Strindberg are: "Nuits d'un Somnambule," 1885, a set of poems; "La Chambre Rouge," 1879, a novel satirising Swedish Society, so called from the "red room" of a café, which forms the framework of the story: "Le Nouveau Règne," 1882; "Le Fils de la Servante," 1886, with the subtitle of "A Madman's Ancestors"; and "Au Bord de la Mer," 1892, which is regarded as his masterpiece of description and analysis. It is, however, to his dramatic works that Strindberg owes his European reputation, the keynote to them being the notion that the love between the sexes is a fight. The first, "Mademoiselle Julie," a tragedy in prose, was introduced by a preface enunciating his principles, which has been compared to Hugo's preface to "Cromwell," 1888. His other plays are: "Camarades," 1888; "Père," 1888; and "Créanciers," 1889. Some of his plays have been seen in Paris at the Théâtre Libre and in London under the auspices of the Independent Theatre Society.

STRONG, The Right Hon. Sir Samuel Henry. Chief-Justice of Canada, was born at Poole, England, Aug. 13, 1825. He accompanied his father to Canada in 1836, and was educated at the High School, Quebec, and under private tutors. He studied law, and was called to the Bar in 1849, entering on the practice of his profession in Toronto. In 1856 he was appointed on the Commission for the Consolidation of the Statutes of Canada and Upper Canada, and in 1863 he was created a Q.C. On Dec. 27, 1869, he was appointed one of the Vice-Chancellors of the Court of Chancery. In 1874 he was called to the Court of Error and Appeal of Ontario, and the following year was chosen by Lord Duferin to become a Puisne Judge in the newly constituted Supreme Court of Canada. He became Chief-Justice on the death of Sir W. J. Ritchie, Dec. 13, 1892, and received the honour of knighthood, June 1893. He was appointed a Member of the Judicial Committee of H.M.'s Most Honourable Privy Council in January 1897, and proceeding to England was sworn as a Privy Councillor before the Queen at a Council held at Windsor Castle, July 14, 1897. Address: Ottawa.

STROSSMAYER, The Right Rev. Joseph George, D.D., a distinguished prelate of the Roman Church, born at Essak, in Slavonia, Feb. 4, 1815, received his education in the Universities of Vienna and Padua, and on May 20, 1850, was consecrated Bishop of Bosnia and Sirmio. During the sittings of the Œcumenical Council of the Vatican in 1869-70, he was constantly represented as an opponent of the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope. However when certain journals reproduced their alleged to have been before the Council by Mgr. Strossmayer, he addressed to the Fathers of the Council he absolutely denied having taken such discourse. In September 1891, he congratulated the Slav Committee on the conversion of the Emperor to Christianity, was rewarded by the Emperor, and finally elected See in 1891, in order to solve the difficulties of the situation. He published some important works, notably "Monumenta Slavica," "dictionarium historiam Slavica," 1863.

STUART, The Right Rev. Craig, D.D., was born in 1821, son of Alexander Stuart, Esq. He was educated at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., where he obtained a B.A. in 1841, and was ordained in 1842. He held three important positions as a missionary in India, 1842-1872; secondly, as Bishop of Zealand, from 1877 to 1890; and as missionary in Persia since 1890. Address: Julfa, Ispahan, Persia.

STUART, Professor James, LL.D., and M.P., born at Bampton, Markinch, Fifeshire (of which his father, Joseph Gordon Stuart, Esq., Jan. 2, 1843, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards at St. Andrews University, at Trinity College, Cambridge, a Fellow of Trinity College, and Tutor of that College in 1865. He was Professor of Natural Philosophy of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics at the University of Cambridge in 1875. This post he resigned in 1876. He graduated as third Wrangler, M.A. of the University of Cambridge in 1869; LL.D. of the University of Cambridge in 1876. Professor Stuart has taken a leading part in popularizing science. He inaugurated the system of educational lectures of a University standard in connection with Cambridge, Oxford, in Nottingham, Sheffield, and many other towns, on the system introduced by his experiments, and recommended him to the universities. He was instrumental in the foundation of the establishment of several local colleges, taken special interest in women's education, having originated the Ladies' College in 1867, and the Cambridge Higher Education for Women in 1868. He has been a consistent friend of all efforts for the amelioration of the condition of women, and honorary Secretary of the Fédération Britannique des Femmes, Générale pour le relèvement de la morale publique. STUBBS, The Very Rev. Charles William, D.D., Dean of Ely, was born in Liverpool, Sept. 3, 1845, and is de- scended from the same Yorkshire stock as Bishop Stubbs, of Oxford. He received his earlier education at a Quaker school at Southport, and was afterwards sent to the school of the Liverpool Royal Institution, when he was contemporary with the pre- sent Bishop of Ripon. In 1864 he proceeded to Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge (Divinity Prizeman and Scholar of his College). He graduated in 1868, having obtained honours in the mathematical tripos. He subsequently won the Le Bas University Prize for an essay on "Inter- national Morality," which was published by Messrs. Macmillan. Ordained in 1868, he held the curacy of St. Mary's, Sheffield, from that year till 1871, during which period he became intimately acquainted with the labour question among the Shef- field grinders. In 1871 he became Vicar of Granborough, Bucks, on the presenta- tion of the late Sir Harry Verney, and took a prominent part in North Bucks in the agricultural labourers' agitation (1872), of which Joseph Arch was the leader. Whilst at Granborough, his church, on Sunday evenings, became a rallying-ground for the labourers who crowded to hear him; and he published a volume of ser- mons and addresses on "Village Politics." He held the appointment of Commissioner of Education to the Government of Siam (1878-81), and published a report on the training of Siamese students. In 1881 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Stoken- ham, Devon, by Mr. Gladstone. In the same year he was Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge, and in 1883 he occupied the pulpit of St. Mary's at Oxford. These University sermons are published under the title of "Christ and Democracy." In 1888 Canon Warr pre- ferred him to the Rectory of Wavertree. At St. Bridget's, the parish church of Wavertree, he has carried on an active Liberal and Broad Church propaganda, throwing open his pulpit to many leading Liberal preachers. In May 1894 Dr. Stubbs was appointed Dean of Ely, and the honorary degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Cambridge University. He was appointed Lady Margaret Preacher at Cambridge, 1896-97, and is Select Preacher at Oxford for 1898-99. SUMNER, Bishop of Winchester, and nephew of Archbishop Sumner, was born at Windsor, July 18, 1796; was educated at Eton and Oxford, whence he graduated his M.A. in 1818. In 1820 became Deacon, and in 1822 a Fellow of Orders was that of Winchester, and in 1825 held the Rectory of Old Alresford until 1835, for the last years of the time acting as Chaplain to the Archbishop and Bishop of Winchester lifetime. In the year 1836 Proctor in the Lower Convocation of Canterbury University of Winchester, which until his appointment as Bishop of Winchester, in 1844, gave him a seat in Convocation. A year later elected Prolocutor of the succession to Lord Alwyne de Luttrell to the Bishopric of Winchester he had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by decree of the University of Oxford. Winchester also conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity on Winchester. He was Canon of Old Alresford, and resided there until the year 1888 he was appointed Bishop Suffragan of Winchester office he now holds. In 1846 the Bishop edited a volume entitled "The History of Winchester," which passed through two editions; and in 1881 he published "The History of Winchester in the East," by Mr. J. H. Sturt, which also passed through three editions. In 1876 the Bishop published "Charles Richard Sumner, Bishop of Winchester"; and in 1890 he published "Sumner's Manual," showing the privileges, and duties, which were attached to the office. In 1848 he married Mary Elizabeth, younger daughter of Thomas Heywood, Esq., of Weymouth. Address: The Close, Winchester. Athenæum.

n July 20, 1851, and is the son of the 3rd Duke, whom he succeeded in 1892, and Anne, only child of John Hay-Mackenzie, who was created Countess of Cromartie. He entered the 2nd Life Guards in 1870, and retired as a Lieutenant in 1875. From 1882 to 1891 he was Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sutherland Rifles. From 1874 to 1886 he was Liberal M.P. for Sutherlandshire, is Alderman of Longton, and was Mayor in 1895-96, and Lord-Lieutenant of Sutherlandshire from 1892 to 1898; since 1892 has been Hon. Colonel of the Queen's Own Staffordshire Yeomanry, &c. He is a very extensive landowner. In 1884 he married Milli-cent, daughter of the 4th Earl of Rosslyn. Addresses: Stafford House, St. James's, S.W.; Dunrobin Castle, Sutherlandshire, &c.

SUTHERLAND, Sir Thomas, G.C.M.G., LL.D., M.P., son of Robert Sutherland and Christian, daughter of Thomas Webster, was born in Aberdeen, Aug. 16, 1834, and was educated at the Grammar School and University of his native city. At a very early age he entered the service of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company, and before completing his twentieth year he was sent by the Company to Bombay, and subsequently to Hong Kong, where he may be said to have begun his real career. In a few years he rose to be the head of the Company in China and Japan, the various stations in these countries being under a central management in Hong Kong. While in this position Mr. Sutherland not only succeeded in administering the affairs of the P. and O. Company with much success, so far as it lay in his power, but he came gradually to take a leading part in connection with local affairs in China, such as in founding the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, at present the greatest financial institution in the East, and the Hong Kong and Whampoa Docks Company, a corporation which owns the finest system of dry docks out of Europe. In a very large measure Sir Thomas Sutherland may be said to have originated both those important undertakings. In 1864 he was called upon by Sir Hercules Robinson, in highly flattering terms, to fill a vacancy in the Legislative Council of the colony, and serving there he took an active part in promoting the welfare of the colony, but in 1866 he returned to England to become associated with the management of the P. and O. Company in London. He did not, however, settle down in this capacity until nearly two years afterwards, subsequently to having made a complete tour of the whole of the Company's Eastern stations. Scarcely had he commenced his duties in London, when the Suez Canal that which was decided in width and increased in depth without the aid of English money, the tariff was reduced, and the same subject, further reduction, according to the increase of traffic, while a certain number of Legislatures were admitted members of the Board in addition to those representing the states directly to the Government. So C. Sutherland was among the first chosen of these new directors, and has held the position of Chairman of the Board since the third January last, when it was elected five times to Mr. Sutherland, and since then the Board has held this post that of a President. He has served on many public commissions and has held commissions in 1890, Mr. Sutherland and conferred on him a Knight's Commandership of St. Michael and St. George, and in 1897 he was awarded in the rank of Grand Cross of that order. He has also received the Order of the Legion of Merit, and the Legion of Honor, and a year ago the University of Aberdeen conferred on him its honorary degree of D.D. He is married to Alice, a daughter of the late John Macgregor, Vice-President of the same company. Ad-

The Rev. Robert, M.D., son of the late Mr. James Sunderland, and was born on September 1846, at Sheepwash, and. He became a local doctor, and after a short time determined to enter the service of the United Methodist Free Church, going through the usual course he was ordained, and subse- quently served in the Hartlepool and other churches. He then offered him- self for medical work, and was accepted as a medical missionary to China. In that country he served upwards of twenty-four years in connection with the church at Ningpo, which is in a very flourishing condition; the great need of medical work, he entered upon a course of study in London, and then went to the United Medical College at the University of London, where he graduated as M.D. in 1892. On his return to China he opened a medical School in connection with the church at Ningpo. He returned to England on furlough, for the second time in that year was elected to the service of the United Methodist Free Church at the annual Assembly at Nottingham. Address:

John Macallan, A.R.A., born at Old Brentford in 1846, educated at Worcester School of Art, and in Paris at the Académie des Beaux-Arts, and in Paris at the Académie des Beaux-Arts, and Daguerre, who taught him painting, and who was his master in the art, began exhibiting at the Royal Academy in 1878, painting animals and the figure. He has also been an exhibitor at the Old Grosvenor and the New Gallery. He draws his inspiration from the Zoological Gardens, which he constantly visits. His principal works include: "Orpheus," "The Prodigal Son," 1888 (Academy), purchased under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest; "Lioness Defending her Cubs" (Salon picture), "Polar Bears Swimming," "A Dead Hero," &c. In the Royal Academy of 1895 he exhibited "The Goatherd," "Tigers at Dawn," and "Orpheus," a silver statuette; in 1896, "The Lion Hunter," "Study of East African Leopards," "The Sirens"; in 1897, "Tigress and Cubs at a Torrent," and a "Young Indian Leopard and Tortoise," in silver; in 1898, "Fortune and the Boy," and "A Broken Solitude"; in 1899, "Leopard Running," and "Leopard Eating," bronzes. He was elected A.R.A. in 1894, obtained honourable mention at the Salon in 1885, a silver medal in 1889 at the Paris Exhibition, and the first and second gold medals at the Munich Exhibition. He held a special exhibition of his studies at the Fine Art Society in 1897. In April 1899 he was elected a full member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours. Address: 3 Acacia Road, N.W.

SWAN, Joseph Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., the second surviving son of John Swan and Isabella Cameron, was born at Sunderland, on Oct. 31, 1828. He was educated at Hendon Lodge and Hylton Castle, near Sunderland. Mr. Swan is chiefly known as the inventor of the incandescent electric lamp. After many years of tentative experiment he succeeded in producing a lamp of the type now so well known. In 1879 a degree of success was reached that gave complete assurance of the feasibility of electric lighting on the incandescent principle. Early in that year Mr. Swan publicly exhibited lamps having all the essential features of the lamps which are now manufactured so widely, and which have brought electric lighting into general use, incidentally giving a great impulse to the use of electricity for many other purposes. Among other electrical inventions of Mr. Swan are: The miners' electric safety-lamp, improvements in the electric accumulator, and also in electric meters. Mr. Swan's name is equally well known in connection with photographic inventions. Amongst these are the "carbon process," better known as "Autotype," and the modern "dry plate," which has revolutionised the art of photography. He was also co-inventor, with the late Mr. Woodbury, of "Woodbury type," and an early school at the age of thirteen, and after some years of private study, repaired to Berlin, where she studied, not only German, but Greek and Hebrew. On her return to England she joined her family, which then resided in London, and while continuing her philological pursuits she studied the Higher Mathematics under Professor Newman. In 1843 she published a volume of translations, entitled "Selections from the Dramas of Goethe and Schiller." Her translation of Schiller's "Maid of Orleans" was published in 1847; and in 1850 the volume containing her translation of the first part of "Faust," with other master-works of Goethe, "Tasso," "Iphigenia," and "Egmont." In 1878 appeared her translation of the two parts of "Faust," 4to, with Retchs's illustrations, which was followed by a smaller edition in 1879. She was strongly urged by the late Baron Bunsen to undertake the translation of the Great Dramas. Acting upon his suggestion she translated the Æschylean Trilogy, published in 1865, which was followed, in 1873, by her translation of the complete dramas of Æschylus, with Flaxman's illustrations. NE, Algernon Charles, 1st son of the late Admiral Swinburne, by Lady Jane Swinburne, daughter of George, 3rd Earl of Devon and grandson of Sir John Swinburne, Bart., of Capheaton, was born in Chester Place, London, April 5, 1857, and was educated as a commoner at Balliol College, Oxford, in 1875, but left without taking a degree. He visited Florence, and met with Walter Savage Landor's production, "The Queen Rosamond," two plays. He attracted little attention in Calydon, a Tragedy, 1864; "Chastelard," a Tragedy, 1865; and "Poems and Songs," 1866. The latter work was not very discerningly withdrawn from circulation. Moxon. Mr. W. M.

Rossetti then published "Poems and Ballads: a Criticism," and Mr. Swinburne himself "Notes on Poems and Reviews." Among his other works are: "A Song of Italy," and "William Blake: a Critical Essay," 1867 (2nd edit., 1868); "Siena: a Poem," 1868; the second part of "Notes on the Royal Academy Exhibition," 1868, the first part of which was written by Mr. W. M. Rossetti; "Ode on the Proclamation of the French Republic," Sept. 4, 1870; "Songs before Sunrise," 1871; "Bothwell: A Tragedy," 1874; "Essays and Studies," 1875; "Erechtheus," 1876; "A Note on Charlotte Brontë," 1877; "Poems and Ballads: Second Series," 1878; "A Study of Shakespeare," 1879; "Studies in Song," 1881; "Tristram of Lyonesse," 1882; "A Century of Roundels," 1883; another volume of "Prose Miscellanies," and "The Life of Victor Hugo," 1886; "The Armada," 1888; "A Study of Ben Jonson," 1890; "Astrophel, and other Poems," and "Studies in Prose and Poetry," in 1894. Mr. Swinburne is the greatest living English poet. He has not travelled very much, but with his family he stayed at Florence and on the Riviera, and with Sir Richard Burton he visited Vichy. Subsequently he spent some time with Mr. Watts-Dunton in the Channel Islands, and in Paris, where the two friends went to witness the memorable jubilee revival of Victor Hugo's "Le Roi s'Amuse" at the Théâtre Français. There Mr. Swinburne met Victor Hugo for the first time. For twenty years Mr. Swinburne has lived with Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton at the Pines, Putney. He is a good pedestrian, and his physical vigour is exceptional for a man of his years.

SYLVA, Carmen. See ELIZABETH, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

SYMONS, Arthur, was born in Wales, Feb. 28, 1865, of Cornish parentage. He was educated at various private schools, and has lived in many parts of England, in France, and in Italy. His earliest literary work was in connection with Shakespeare; he edited four of Quaritch's Shakespeare Quarto Facsimiles, in 1884-86, and afterwards seven plays in the Henry Irving Shakespeare, 1888-89. He has done literary criticism, chiefly of poetry, in the Athenaeum from 1891, and in the Saturday Review from 1894. He edited the Savoy during the year of its existence, from January to December 1896. His play in one act, "The Minister's Call," was performed at the Royalty by the Independent Theatre, March 24, 1892. He has published, in verse: "Days and Nights," 1889; "Silhouettes," 1892; "London Nights," 1895; "Amoris Victima," 1897; lecture "An Introduction to the Study of Barology" (1860), "Studies in Two Centuries" (1871). Address: Fountain Court, The Temple.

SYMONS, George James, F.R.S., was born in August 1810, and is the only child of Joseph and Georgiana Symons. He was educated privately. Before he was twenty-one he had been elected member of the Meteorological Society, had given several lectures upon the subject, had commenced a series of observations with standard instruments, the records of which were supplied to Mr. Glaisher, F.R.S., for insertion in the "Quarterly Reports" of the Registrar-General, and had started in 1837 an organization for the observation of thunderstorms and the record of injuries by lightning. In 1840 he was elected a member of the General Committee of the British Association, and became a member of the Council. In 1847 he became a member of the British Meteorological Society, issued its first separate publication, "Notes on the Solar Eclipse of July 18, 1846," and accepted the invitation of Admiral Fitzroy, F.R.S., to become one of his assistants at the Meteorological Office, where he continued until nearly the time of his chief's death, being occupied principally with preparing for publication the records of the Anemometers at Bermuda and Halifax. During these years he devoted all his non-official time to collecting details of the fall of rain, and commenced the organization known as the British Rainfall system, which now includes more than 3000 observers. The results have been published in 36 successive volumes of British Rainfall, and in 32 volumes of the Meteorological Magazine, which have been compiled and edited under his direction. With the above exception, Mr. Symons has written few books, but his papers and reports communicated to scientific societies in this and other countries, and his letters to the Times on meteorological subjects, are to be numbered by hundreds. In 1872 he was elected Membre de la Soc. Mët. de France, and has served three times on the Council. In 1873 Mr. Symons was elected Hon. Secretary of the (now) Royal Meteorological Society, which office he has held ever since, excepting during 1880 and 1881, when he was President. In 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and during that and the subsequent year drew up a complete summary of the statistics and bibliography of the meteorology of our Colonial Empire. The results of that inquiry were embodied in a paper which he read before the Royal Colonial Institute in 1877. In the autumn of 1877 another paper was submitted to the Royal Engineers a paper on "Rain in England and Wales," published in the Engineering, for which Mr. Symons received the Telford Premium. In 1878 he was elected to the Meteorological Society, and his attendance at the meetings of the society was fruitful in suggesting, or discussing, a code of rules for the use of barometers and thermometers, and for the use of rain-gauges. The work he extended over four years, working throughout with the assistance of Mr. Glaisher, and editing the "Regulations for the Conference." In 1878 he was President of the Société Nationale de Météorologie, and in 1880 Vice-President of the same society. In 1880 he was elected Membre Correspondant of the Sanitary Institute, and the Health Exhibition of 1884. In 1884 he was elected Membre Correspondant of the Société de Médecine Publique. In 1886 he was elected Knight of the Mitglied der Deutschen Naturforschenden Vereinigung. In the autumn of 1886 he was elected to the Congrès International de Météorologie, which was held at Biarritz, and Mr. Symons was appointed Vice-President, and subsequently Junor of the Congrès, afterwards visited the Pyrenees, and this led to the question of the existence of the temperature of the air. After full inquiry, and construction of the Royal Society special thermometers, and the principal stations in 1887, determining the temperature to all possible precision. Mr. Symons was elected F.R.S. in 1878, and in 1884 a Committee of the Royal Society was appointed to report on the eruption of Krakatoa, he was chosen chairman, and subsequently as report. In 1891 Mr. Symons was elected President of the French Cross of Knight of the Legion of Honour, and in 1898 from H.R.H. the Prince of Wales the Albert Medal for "for the services he has rendered to the United Kingdom by affording, engaged in the water supply of towns a trustworthy work, by establishing and during nearly forty years of observations (now at over 1000) the rainfall of the British Empire, recording, tabulating, and publishing the results of these in the annual volumes published by the Royal Society." Address: 62 Campden Square, N.W.

TAIT, Professor Peter Guthrie, M.A., D.Sc., whose father was private secretary to the late Duke of Buccleuch, was born at Dalkeith, April 28, 1831, and educated at the Academy and University of Edinburgh, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he was Senior Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman. In 1852 he was elected Fellow of Peterhouse, and in 1854 was appointed Professor of Mathematics at Queen's College, Belfast, where he remained until 1860, when he was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in Edinburgh, a post since held by him. He is Secretary of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Professor Tait has published a number of scientific and other works, amongst which are: "Dynamics of a Particle," 1856; "Quaternions," 1867 (translated into French by the late Dr. Gustav Plarr, 1882); "Thermo-Dynamics," 1868; "Recent Advances in Physical Science," 1876; "Heat," and "Light," 1884; "Properties of Matter," 1885; "Dynamics," 1895; besides a large number of papers contributed to different periodicals, among which may be mentioned those on "Knots," on the "Kinetic Theory of Gases," and on "Thermo-electricity." In conjunction with Lord Kelvin (then Sir William Thomson) he published in 1867 a "Treatise on Natural Philosophy." He was also, with the late Prof. Balfour Stewart, joint-author of the essay called "The Unseen Universe." To the Challenger Reports Prof. Tait has contributed an experimental discussion of the "Pressure Errors of the Challenger Thermometers," and of the "Physical Properties of Water." Another experimental work which he carried out in conjunction with the late Dr. Andrews, deals with the "Volumetric Relations of Ozone." His collected "Scientific" papers were published (1898). His latest papers, "On Impact," and "On the Path of a Rotating Spherical Projectile," have very obvious bearings on the game of golf. Professor Tait's son, affectionately known to followers of the game as "Freddy," is champion amateur golfer of Scotland. Address: 38 George Square, Edinburgh.

Tate & Sons, sugar refiners, of Liverpool and London. He has long been engaged in philanthropic enterprises, and has given Lambeth a Free Library, which is equipped on a handsome scale. His libraries are alone sufficient to perpetuate his name, but these have of late years been put in the background by his grand donation to England of the Tate Gallery. Some years ago Sir Henry Tate learnt, to quote his own words, that "a great want was felt of some place where works of modern art could be seen at any time of the year." He decided that if he could succeed in obtaining from the Government a suitable plot of land he would build a gallery for a permanent exhibition of British art. Sir William Harcourt warmly interested himself in his proposal, and, chiefly through that statesman's representations, the Government placed the site of Millbank Prison at his disposal. Here Sir Henry, then Mr. Tate, built what are known as the "Tate Galleries," the architect being Mr. Sidney Smith, and the contractors Messrs. Higgs and Hill. The new galleries contain an overflow of pictures from the National Gallery, the Chantrey Bequest pictures from the South Kensington Museum, a number of his masterpieces presented by Mr. Watts to the nation, and sixty-five modern pictures, chiefly illustrative of the pre-Raphaelite movement, from Sir Henry Tate's own collection. The trustees of the National Gallery have become trustees of the new institution, which Sir Henry Tate has made over to the nation and intends enlarging. The galleries were opened by the Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and other members of the Royal Family, on July 21, 1897, on which notable occasion the beneficent donor stated the objects and history of the gift, and was eloquently thanked, in the name of the British people, by the Prince of Wales, the Right Hon. A. Balfour, and the Right Hon. Sir William Harcourt. Sir Henry Tate received the honour of a baronetcy in 1898. He is one of the newly-created Trustees of the National Gallery. Lady Tate is a daughter of the late Charles Hislop. Address: Park Hill, Streatham Common, S.E.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Charles, M.A., D.D., Hon. LL.D. Harvard, Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and late Vice-Chancellor of the University, was born in Middlesex, May 27, 1840, and was educated at King's College School, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He proceeded to the degree of B.A. in 1862, and in the same year became an editor of the Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin Messenger of Mathematics. In 1863 he published his first work on "Geometrical Conics." He was elected Fellow of St. John's College in 1864, and Master of the same, 1881, and shortly afterwards received the degree of D.D., jure dignitatis. He is the author of numerous articles on Hebrew, geometrical and other subjects; of the Kaye Essay for 1867, on the citations from the Old Testament in the New, published under the name, "The Gospel in the Law," 1869; and of the following works: "The Dirge of Coheleth," 1874, a monograph giving a new and literal interpretation of the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes; "Sayings of the Jewish Fathers," in Hebrew and English, edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, 1877; an "Introduction to the Ancient and Modern Geometry of Conics, with Historical Notes and Prolegomena," 1881. In the Prolegomena he proves that the modern period properly begins with Kepler, who distinctly formulated the principles of infinity and continuity, which differentiate the modern from the ancient geometry. He has given a course of lectures at the Royal Institution on the "History of Geometry," 1886; also on the then lately discovered Διδαχή τῶν δωδέκα ἀποστόλων, 1885; these were published in April 1886, under the title "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, with illustrations from the Talmud; two Lectures on an Ancient Church Manual discovered at Constantinople." More recently he has published "An Essay on the Theology of the Didache," 1889; and "The Witness of Hermas to the Four Gospels," 1892. He was joint-editor of the Messenger of Mathematics from 1862 to 1887. Dr. Taylor received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Harvard (Cambridge, Mass.), 1886; and was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, 1887 to 1888. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1887 and 1893, and delivered the Macbride Sermon at Oxford in 1897; was an Alderman of Cambridge Borough from 1889 to 1895, and Acting President of the Statutory International Congress of Oriental Scholars held in the Temple in 1891. Addresses: St. John's Lodge, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Isaac, M.A. Litt.D., LL.D., Canon of York, born May 2, 1829, at Stanford Rivers, is the eldest son of the late Isaac Taylor, author of the "Natural History of Enthusiasm." Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he obtained the Silver Oration Cup, and graduated as a Wrangler in 1853. In 1854 he edited a translation of Becker's "Charicles." He was ordained in 1857 to a country curacy, and published in 1860 "The Liturgy and the Dissenters." Removing to London, where he successively held two West-End curacies, he published in 1864 a work on the Egyptian Names, entitled "Words and Etymological Illustrations in Ethnology, and Geography," passed through numerous editions. In 1865 he undertook the duties of the poorest parishes in London. His plans and labours for his destitute parishioners are in a little book entitled "The Poor." In 1867 he published Family Pen; Memorabilia of Literary, of the Taylor Family. In 1869 he accepted the living of the church at Twickenham. In 1870 he brought out a paper before the Philological Society, "The Etruscan Numerals," which brought out a volume entitled "Researches," which was a condensed abridgement of his "Etruscan Language." Printed by Earl Brownlow, at Settrington, in Yorkshire. These systematic researches into the history of the alphabet, and these studies appeared in a volume called "Greeks and Greeks and the Runes," in which the mysterious runes received attention, now generally accepted by scholars. Shortly afterwards at Berlin a paper "Ueber die des glagolitischen Alphabets," discussed the origin of the Cyrillic alphabet. In 1879 he received the University of Edinburgh LL.D., honoris causa, in recognition of his discoveries and philological labours. In 1883 Dr. Taylor published two volumes, his most important work, "The Alphabet, an Account of its Origin and Development of Letters, a consideration of its merits in the Classical Studies at Cambridge," was recommended its author degree of Doctor in Letters. In the year (1885) he was collated to the Prebendal Stall in York Minster, two years later was appointed. In 1887 he read a paper at the meeting of the British Association, "The Origin and Primitive of Aryans," which was afterwards into a volume, published in the temporary Science Series in 1889. He received the honour of being made into French by Dr. H. de Vaux, whence he wrote to the St. J. a series of letters recording his conversations with Egyptians on social life, and religion. These letters, which him in considerable controversy published, with additional chapters on the tenets of Islam, in the autumn in a volume entitled "Leave book," with the object of judices as to the beliefs and Mohammedan fellow-subjects and elsewhere. In 1886 he took part in the Domesday and afterwards, in 1888, he the memorial volume called studies," essays on "Domesday," "The Ploughland and the Wapentakes and Hundreds." Address: 27 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.

TERRY, Mrs. Fred. See NEILSON, JULIA.

TERRY, Kate (Mrs. Arthur Levis), was first seen as Arthur in Kean's performance of "King John," on which occasion Lord Macaulay, who was present when the play was represented before the Queen at Windsor, wrote to the effect that "The little girl who acted Arthur did wonders. It is almost worth while to be past middle life to see Miss Kate Terry play this." This was the first of many Shakespearian triumphs. She played as Cordelia to Charles Kean's King Lear, at the Princess's; as Ophelia to Fechter's Hamlet, at the Lyceum; as Ariel, and as the Boy in "Henry V.," at the Princess's; and as Juliet to Henry Neville's Romeo, at the Adelphi. She doubled the parts of Viola and Sebastian in "Twelfth Night." For some time she appeared in romantic drama at the Olympic, and achieved one of her chief successes at the St. James's, when, as understudy to Miss Herbert, she played in Horace Wigan's "Friends and Foes," a version of "Nos Intimes." Other famous impersonations were as Monee in "Up at the Hills," an Anglo-Indian drama; as Lena in "Bel Demoulin," where she played to Fechter, as the original Blanche de Nevers, in that great actor's production of "The Duke's Motto"; and as the original Mary Leigh in Boucicault's "Hunted Down," a play in which Irving took the part of Rawdon Scudamore. She made the part of Alice in Tom Taylor and Dubourz's play of

"A Sister's Persecution," at the Adelphi, and won much success in Charles Reade's play of "The Two Roses," son's poem. She returned to the stage in the spring of 1896 in "The Two Roses," produced by Mr. John Hare.

TESLA, Nikola (Serbo-Croatian), inventor, was born at Smilac, on the border of Austro-Hungary, in 1857. He was educated in the schools, and then at the Polytechnic School at Karistadt, where he graduated in 1873; he devoted himself to experiments in electricity and magnetism against the wishes of his father, a priest of the Greek Church. He intended him for a priest, but his genius was so strong that he turned to mechanics that he was successful in his studies at the Polytechnic School at Graz, and later studied at Prague and Budapest, where he was thoroughly for the engineering. He served a short time in the telegraph engineering department as assistant, and later he went to America, where he was employed by one of the lighting companies in 1881. He later he went to America, where he made his home in the United States, found employment at once in the establishment of Thos. A. Edison, but he has always had the reputation: but later he worked in a different part of the field of investigation. He was the first to find a method of utilising effectively the alternating current, and has made startling innovations and improvements in using currents of high tension. He lectured before the highest authorities in London, Paris, and New York.

William Lusson, manager of the Graphic and Daily, born on Dec. 4, 1830, and privately. He is the younger son of George H. Thomas, the artist, and the youngest son of a shipbroker, of London. At sixteen he went to Paris; afterwards to Rome, drawing with his brother. He returned to London, and was married to James W. Linton, the artist; and two years afterwards began business on his own account. He employed his painting, and was elected a member of the Institute of Painters, and a few years afterwards; since which time he has been a constant exhibitor. The Institute altered their laws and admitted him at their exhibition, it was to build a new gallery for the Water-Colour Art in London to invite the senior society.

Water-Colour to amalgamate. L. Thomas was very active in it, viz., to have only one Water-Colour Exhibition, but, unfortunately, the advancement of Water-Colour was not successful; he, however, succeeded in obtaining the principal large capital required, and was chairman of the Piccadilly Water-Colour. The building embraces the galleries of the Institute and the Art Hall. In 1869 he established the Graphic, and was decorated by the Government "Officier de l'Instruction Publique." In 1890 he attended more formidable task daily illustrated paper—the Graphic, which has long been firmly established. He married, in 1854, Miss Amelia. THOMPSON, Sir Edward Maunde, K.C.B., F.S.A., Hon. LL.D. of St. Andrews, Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford and of Durham, Hon. Fellow of University College, Oxford. Correspondent of the Institute of France and of the Royal Prussian Academy of Sciences, is the eldest son of the late Edward Thompson, Custos of Clarendon, Jamaica. He was born May 4, 1840, in Jamaica, and was educated at Rugby and Oxford. He was appointed an Assistant in the British Museum in May 1861, became Assistant-Keeper of the MSS. in 1871, and was appointed Keeper of the MSS. in 1878, and Principal Librarian and Secretary in 1888. Sir E. M. Thompson, who is a barrister of the Middle Temple, has edited: "Chronicon Anglie, 1328-1388" (in the Rolls Series), 1871; "Letters of Humphrey Prideaux" (for the Camden Society), 1875; "Chronicon Adæ de Usk, 1377-1404" (for the Royal Society of Literature), 1876; "Correspondence of the Family of Hatton" (for the Camden Society), 1878; "Diary of Richard Cocks, in Japan, 1615-1622" (for the Hakluyt Society), 1883; jointly with Professor Jebb, the facsimile of the "Laurentian Sophocles" (for the Hellenic Society), 1885; "Chronicon Galfridi le Baker de Wynebroke, 1303-1356," 1889; and "Adæ Murimuth Continuatio Chroniconum, 1303-1347," with "Robertus de Avesbury de gestis mirabilibus Regis Edwardi Tertii" (in the Rolls Series), 1889. He was joint editor of the publications of the Paleographical Society from 1873 to 1893, and in 1893 published a "Handbook of Greek and Latin Palaeography" in the International Scientific Series. In the summer of 1898 the Trustees of the British Museum changed the official title of Sir Edward Maunde Thompson from "Principal Librarian and Secretary" of the British Museum to "Director and Principal Librarian." This change was effected in order to remove misapprehension as to his actual position at the head of the national collection. He is married to Georgina, only child of George Mackenzie, of Frankfield, Jamaica. Addresses: The British Museum; The Hollies, Brasted, Kent; and Athenæum.

THOMPSON, Francis, the son of a medical man in Lancashire, and the nephew of the Rev. Edward Healy Thompson, one of the Oxford seceders to the Roman Catholic Church, was educated at Ushaw College, near Durham, and subsequently, while studying at Ushaw College, Manchester, he turned himself to literature. He endured a time of suspension from the priesthood ended by the acceptance of his contributions to Mercy England. His poems soon won the notice of Mr. Browning, Mr. Coventry Patmore, and others; and his first volume appeared at the end of 1890. Through edition after edition, an admiration not often accorded a poet by his contemporaries, his volumes are "Sister Poems," "New Poems," 1897. Address: Court, W.

THOMPSON, Sir Henry F.R.C.S., M.B. Lond., born in Suffolk, Aug. 6, 1820, is the son of Thompson, of Framlingham, and daughter of Samuel May. ordained to the ministry in West Calder
United Presbyterian Church in 1852.
There he laboured more than six years;
was then translated to St. Paul's, Birkenhead; and thence, after fourteen years, was removed in 1872 to Westmoreland Road Presbyterian Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Thompson gave his chief strength to ministerial work, and was favoured with much success. At his ordination in West Calder the membership of his church was 250; at his removal it was 375. At his induction in St. Paul's Church, Birkenhead, the members were 33; at his leaving they were 153. In 1872 the members of Westmoreland Road Church were about 130; at the end of 1889 they were over 600. He was unanimously chosen Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England by the Synod of 1890. There he delivered an inaugural address on "The Spiritual Success of Christianity." He has been on the Newcastle-on-Tyne School Board. For many years he has been Chairman of the Works Committee; and throughout his career he has done everything in his power to secure for England the benefits of a liberal education. He published "Life-Work of Peter

THORNYCROFT, John Isaac,
F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., and naval architect, eldest son of Thomas and Mary Thorny-croft, the sculptors, was born on Feb. 1, 1843, in the Via Felice, Rome, where his parents were then studying classic art.
His mechanical training was commenced at an early age by his father, who made a locomotive, on which his children rode round his studio. The cylinders of this locomotive were afterwards adapted by his eldest son to form the engines of a very successful model steamer, which contained several of the most important elements to which the success of the modern torpedo boat is due, the closed stokehole and fan, by means of which air could be forced through the fire, and the relatively large size and low position of the propeller.
Rather later, when eighteen years of age, he constructed a small steam-launch, the Nautilus, which was the first steam-launch
on the Thames that attained sufficient speed to keep up with racing crews. In 1863 he designed the Ariel, which was built at Chiswick, where he started almost as an amateur boat-builder. The Ariel was an example of a very fast steamboat, which was surpassed in speed by only the Miranda. The exact performance of the Miranda was measured by Sir Frederick Bramwell in 1872, and made a considerable sensation when published at a meeting of the Naval Architects. This boat may be considered as the progenitor of the torpedo boats of the present day.
The closed stokeholes, however, were perfected by Mr. Thornycroft only in 1876, in the Gitana, a yacht on the Lake of Geneva, which has never yet been beaten by a boat of similar size. After building the Ariel Mr. Thornycroft went for nine months as a draughtsman to Palmer's Shipbuilding Co., on the Tyne; he then went to Glasgow to go through the engineering course at that University, and obtained the certificate of proficiency in less than the usual time. On leaving the University he spent nine months at Mr.
John Elder's, of Govan, in studying the method of shipbuilding on the Clyde. He then returned to Chiswick, and became a builder of torpedo boats. In this profession he rapidly took the first place; and he has constructed a very large number of such boats for the British and foreign Governments. Among some of the more recent invention of Mr. Thornycroft we may mention a speed indicator which he has perfected during the last few years, and a water-tube boiler, which combines great economy of fuel with lightness of structure, and has been fitted in many torpedo boats with marked success. The turbine propeller, also devised by Mr. Thornycroft for shallow draught vessels, gives results which cannot be obtained by the use of the paddle-wheel. Mr. Thornycroft was elected F.R.S. in 1906, and is Vice-President of the Inst. Naval Architects. Addresses: Eton Villa, Chiswick, Middlesex; and Steyne, Bembridge, Isle of Wight.

THORPE, Professor Thomas Edward, F.R.S., Ph.D., D.Sc., LL.D., was born at Hargreaves, near Manchester, Dec. 2, 1847, being the son of a Manchester merchant. He was educated at private schools, at Owens College, Manchester, and at the Universities of Heidelberg and Bonn. He was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at Owens College in 1870; Professor of Chemistry in Anderson's College, Glasgow, in 1871; Professor of Chemistry in the Yorkshire College at Leeds in 1874; and Professor of Chemistry at the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, in 1883. He at present holds the position of Principal of the Government Laboratories, to which he was appointed in 1894. He is a F.R.S., was a Member of Council, 1890 and 1894, and Vice-President. He is Treasurer of the Chemical Society of London, a Member of the Council of the Society of Chemical Industry, of which he was President in 1904, a Fellow of the German Chemical Society, and of the Physical Society of London, Ph.D. of Heidelberg, and D.Sc. of the Victoria University, Manchester. D.Sc. Honor. of Trinity College, Dublin, LL.D. Honor. of Glasgow, formerly Examiner in Chemistry at, and now Fellow of the University of London, and Examiner to the Victoria University, and the Science and Art Department, South Kensington. He is a Laureate of the Medal of the Chemical Society of London, a Royal Medallist of the Royal Society, 1899, and one of the Bakerian lecturers and is an honorary member of the Philosophical Societies of Glasgow, Leeds, and Manchester. Professor Thorpe is the author of upwards of 100 memoirs on Chemistry and Physical Chemistry, published in the Philosophical Transactions, the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Journal of the Chemical Society, and the British Association Reports. He is also the author of a "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry," 3 vols.; "Inorganic Chemistry," 2 vols.; "Qualitative Analysis," "Quantitative Analysis," "Chemical Problems," "Essays in Historical Chemistry," "Humdrer Dampf, Dampfmaschinen," "The Principles of Naval Architecture." He has likewise written "Water-tube Boilers," a frequent contributor to scientific periodicals. He was a member of the Council of the Royal Society, 1897-1900, American Assoc. West, 1900, when he had been elected to the West Chair of Art, and is one of the Secretaries of the Section of the Advancement of Science, President of the Section meeting at York, 1900, of the Council, and President of the Section at the Leeds meeting. From the April to the August of 1886 he occupied the position of Paymaster-General; and was also, in that year, appointed to represent her Majesty as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which holds its annual meetings in Edinburgh. He was then also sworn a Privy Councillor. He is Chairman of the Salt Union. He has published, among other works, "The Company and the Crown" and "Trades Unions Abroad." In 1864 he married Lady Elma, the only surviving child of the 8th Earl of Elgin by his first wife, Elizabeth Mary, who was the only daughter of Charles Lennox Cumming-Bruce, Esq., M.P., of Roseisle, Dunphail and Kinnaird, N.B. Lord Thurlow assumed in the right of his wife, and by Royal license, in July 1874, the additional names of Cumming-Bruce. Lord Thurlow has six children, and his heir, the Honourable James Bruce, was born in 1867. Address: Dunphail, Scotland.

THURSTON, Professor Robert H., LL.D., formerly of the United States Naval Engineer Corps, late Professor of Engineering, was born in Providence, R.I., Oct. 25, 1839. He is the son of Robert L. Thurston, who built his first engine in 1821, and founded the Providence Steam-Engine Company in 1837. R. H. Thurston was educated at Brown University, and received, during youth, a useful practical education in his father's workshops. When he left college, in 1859, he was familiar with the work of the draughtsman, designer, pattern-maker, moulder, the forge, and machine-shop. Mr. Thurston applied for appointment in the engineer corps of the navy, passed examination in the summer of 1861, and was ordered to duty on board the Unadilla. He was six years continuously on duty at the Naval Academy. In July 1871 Mr. Thurston accepted an appointment at the school of mechanical engineering at Hoboken, and for fourteen years filled the chair of engineering in the Stevens Institute of Technology, resigning his commission in the navy in 1872. He organised, about 1873 or earlier, what was probably the first mechanical laboratory for research in engineering that was ever founded. He was 1-15-71 a member of the U.S. Board appointed to test iron, steel, and other metals, directed the greater part of the work completed by that Board, and as its secretary, edited its reports. His investigations of the laws of friction, and of properties of the alloys of copper, tin, and zinc, which resulted in the determination, by a new and ingenious method, of the relative values of all combinations of these elements, were perhaps the most strikingly original and famous of these researches. In July, 1857, Professor Thurston took charge of Sidney College, reorganised it, and saw immediate results in the rapid growth of the College. Dr. Thurston was the first President of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, has been for many years a member of the American, French, Scotch, German, and Austrian Societies of Civil Engineers, of the British Institution of Mining Engineers, of which he is also past Vice-President, the American and British Associations for Advancement of Science, three times Vice-President of the former, and once of the latter (Montreal, 1884), and of other scientific and technical associations at home and abroad. He is a member of the "Loyal Legion," and is Officier de l'Instruction Publique de France, and was given the degree of LL.D. by his alma mater, Brown University, on the thirteenth anniversary of his graduation. He has been an extensive writer, on professional subjects; mainly, his papers numbering something like 250, and he writes some articles of a speculative character. He is the author of many books, including a "History of the Steam Engine," a three-volume treatise on "The Materials of Engineering," a treatise on "Friction and Lost Work," &c. Address: Cornell University, U.S.A.

THYNNE, The Right Hon. Lord Henry Frederick, J.P., D.L., was born in 1832, and is the second son of the 3rd Marquis of Bath, and uncle of the present Marquis. He represented South Wilts as Conservative in the House of Commons from 1859 to 1885, when he contested West Wilts. From 1875 to 1880 he was Treasurer of the Household. He is Hon. Major in the Wilts Yeomanry, and was sworn of the Privy Council in 1876. He married, in 1858, the Lady Ulrica Frederica Jane St. Maur, daughter of the 12th Duke of Somerset. Addresses: 30 Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.; and Muntham Court, Worthing.

TICHBORNE, Professor Robert, LL.D., F.R.S.E., Institute of Chemists, and Society, Member of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal College of Surgeons, Dip. in Public Health, Birmingham, and Lecturer S. Tichborne, a testimonial line from Sir Robert's name appears in the Charles the First, studied chemistry under Mann, and finally as superintendent the London Apothecaries' Hall. In body he has been about years. He was created and is now their representative General Medical Committee, elected in 1872. Lecturer at the Carmichael College of Medicine in 1874-75 he was Evening Chemistry at the University. He is at the present time under the complete board of Surgeons and Apothecaries retirement of Sir Dominic Professor Tichborne was elected of the Pharmaceutical Society and afterwards made Professor of the School of Chemistry present a gas examiner for Trade, and one of the Council Professor Tichborne began life to write scientific papers most important of which are: "Official Reports upon Section of the International Dublin, 1864"; "Directions in Medico-legal Investigation in Taylor's "Principles of Jurisprudence." He contributed of the Cornhill Magazine a naturally-formed mummy St Michael's Church, Dublin transferred to the pages of Gazette, Sept. 6, 1866. In an analysis of the well-known

which the author discovered waters had previously been Liebig, and, in 1869, Tichborne, in the Transactions of the Royal Academy, a new body, and colophonic hydrate. As Tichborne, the Royal Irish Academy aid him in his researches on Dissociation. In 1870-71 many papers on dust as a particularly street dust. These are briefly described in and Parkes' "Manual of papers on subjects con-harmacy are too numerous to many of the processes in armacopiae are based upon ions. He is now a member of the Armacopia Committee of the Royal Commission of Education, and took an active part in the construction of the Armacopia" of 1898. He was made a time either Honorary or Member of the following Academies: Académie Royale de Pharmacie, Académie des Sciences, Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, and the Chargo College. He has published, in connection with Tichborne, a work entitled "The Chemistry of Europe." Professor Tichborne invented an instrument for determining the relative weights of stones, which was most improved by the Institute of Engineers, and about 1888 he was associated with a syndicate, for the liquefaction, and utilisation of carbonic acid gas given off in the manufacture of soda. This Tichborne process was successfully carried into effect at the largest breweries in London, Guinness's, of Dublin, and the large breweries and distilleries of London, Paris, Melbourne, and Sydney. Professor Tichborne's latest work has been in connection with the use of coal-gas, and are to be published in the Journal of Gas-Lighting, 1893. Tichborne was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences for the year 1899 upon the recommendation of the Microscopical Society. Professor Tichborne is known amongst art circles as a musician. He married, in 1871, the daughter of Surgeon-General Black Rock, co. Dublin, and has three daughters. Address: Pharmaceutical Society, Dublin.

Professor William Tilden, F.R.S., eldest son of John Tilden, formerly of the Bank of England in London on the 15th of January. Having passed through public and private, he was born in his house in London, to be trained as a pharmaceutical chemist. Here he attended the lectures on Physics, Chemistry, and Botany, at the Pharmaceutical Society's School in Bloomsbury Square, and in 1860 followed Hoffmann's lectures at the Royal College of Chemistry. About this time he won the first Bell Scholarship awarded by the Pharmaceutical Society, and after attending courses of lectures on Physics by Tyndall, and Geology by Ramsay, at the School of Mines, he entered, in 1862, the research laboratory of the late Dr. Stenhouse, in the capacity of junior assistant. A year later he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry in the laboratory of the Pharmaceutical Society, where he remained seven years. In 1871 he obtained the D.Sc. degree Lond., and in 1872 was appointed Senior Science Master at Clifton, and there remained till 1880, when he was appointed the first Professor of Chemistry at Mason College. Dr. Tilden was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1880. In 1892 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Sciences from the University of Dublin on the occasion of the celebration of its 300th anniversary. He has completed three years' service as President of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland; he is also a Vice-President of the Chemical Society of London, and has served for two years on the Council of the Royal Society. In 1893 he was elected an Honorary Member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, Corresponding Member of the College of Pharmacy of Philadelphia, Honorary Member of the Society of Public Analysts, and in April 1894 was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Science, London. During his residence in Birmingham he held office as President of the Birmingham Teachers' Association, 1884, and of the Philosophical Society, 1886; as Vice-President of the British Association, 1886; and President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at its meeting in Bath, 1888. Dr. Tilden was for three years Chairman of the Academic Board in the early days of the Mason College. He is the author of some sixty papers in the Transactions of the Chemical Society, the Phil. Trans. of the Royal Society, the Berichte of the German Chemical Society, and other journals. He has also published several text-books, including recently "A Manual of Chemistry," 1896. Addresses: Royal College of Science, S. Kensington, S.W.; and 9 Ladbrooke Gardens, Notting Hill, W.

Count Borosjenő Koloman, Minister of Hungary, was born March 16, 1830, and educated for the law, but his career was upset by the Revolution of 1848. In the next few years he devoted himself to the law. In 1859 first became known as the Government policy of intolerance. In 1860 his independence; he then went to the Hungarian Parliament as a Moderate Radical. In 1875, he became Minister of the Interior, and subsequently Prime Minister of the Hungarian Cabinet. In 1876-78, he opposed Slavism, being less vacillating than Count Andrassy, who kept between the views of Russia on the Eastern Question. With his co-ministers when the Austrians were insufficient to meet the needs of the Bosnian occupation, he returned to his former position. In March 1890 he resigned the office and was succeeded by Count Tisza. On March 11, 1895, he delivered an important speech in Budapest, in the course of which he criticised the attitude of the Liberal opposition in the existing constitutional relations between Hungary and Austria, and gave whole support to the Government of the following year. Mr. Tisza, on the Austro-Hungarian declaration of his strong personal support of Free Trade, and asserted that reasonable claims of Austria were maintained, no alteration remain but that of establishing a customs system for each country. On Dec. 20, 1898, he delivered a remarkable confession of a statesman in a speech in the House. After dwelling on the danger by the vital interests of the country as a consequence of the policy of Austria, he referred to the course Austria had taken in the treaty-making tactics in the House of Commons. "All my life," he said, "I have fought the closure; but should I choose between the Constitution and the closure, I would choose the latter. I am convinced that we cannot give way on this, which would mean the abdication of the majority and the abolition of the cardinal principle of Parliamentary government that the majority must rule. We may learn what true Parliamentary government is from the English." Notwithstanding the compliment to this country in the last sentence, it was ably pointed out at the time that had Hungary copied the example of England, and devoted time and thought to the revision of Rules of Parliament, the constitutional difficulty in Austria-Hungary would never have arisen, and the necessity for government by decrees would have been averted. It has been said that Tisza has neither the glowing temperament of Gladstone nor the wise moderation of Deák. He knows not the art of winning the crowd, and while a truly remarkable man, he is not a great one. Still, the "General," as Tisza was popularly called by the people, has been a keen debater in his time, never at a loss for a reply, surveying his domain with sure gaze, detecting in cool blood the weaknesses of his adversary, and utilising them with patience and self-possession.

TITHERINGTON, The Rev. Arthur Fluit, youngest son of W. Titherington, of Dee Hills, Chester, was born Nov. 14, 1865, and was educated at Arnold House, Chester, Charterhouse, and Magdalen College School, Oxford. He was elected Scholar (Classical) of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1884, took a second class in Moderations in 1886, a second class in Lit. Hum. 1888, and a second class in Mod. Hist. in 1889. After reading with pupils in Oxford, 1888-89, he was appointed to an Assistant-Mastership at Radley in 1889, and was ordained in 1890. In 1895 he was appointed Head-Master of Brighton College. Whilst at Oxford Mr. Titherington stroked the winning trial eight in 1886, and also stroked the University eight in 1887. He married Gertrude, the youngest daughter of W. J. Kent, Heatherley, Grassendale, near Liverpool, in 1891. Address: The College, Brighton.

TODD, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., M.A. Cantab., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., &c., Postmaster-General, Superintendent of Telegraphs, and Government Astronomer, Adelaide, South Australia, was born at Islington, July 7, 1826, and entered the Government Service at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in 1841. In 1848 he was appointed Assistant-Astronomer at Cambridge, under the late Rev. Professor Challis. In 1854 he was appointed Assistant-Astronomer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and in the following year he was offered, by the Secretary of State for

the Colonies. Lord John Russell, and accepted the appointment of Government Astronomer and Superintendent of Telegraphs in South Australia, and left for that colony in July 1855, where he introduced the electric telegraph system. In January 1870 the Colonial Government, having decided upon amalgamating the postal and telegraph services, appointed Mr. Todd Postmaster-General in addition to his duties as Superintendent of Telegraphs and Government Astronomer. Under his direction the telegraph was rapidly extended throughout the colony. His greatest work being the construction of a line from Adelaide through Central Australia, then a terra incognita, to Port Darwin, on the north coast, 2000 miles long, to meet the cable of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Co. This work was carried out, in the face of great natural difficulties, in the space of about twenty months, being completed towards the end of 1872, in which year Mr. Todd rode across the Continent and thoroughly organised the service; and, on his return to Adelaide, received from her Majesty the honour of the Companionship of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Shortly after this, the South Australian section, 1000 miles long, of the telegraph line from Adelaide to Perth was constructed under Mr. Todd's immediate direction. As Government Astronomer, Mr. Todd has carried out an extensive series of Astronomical and Meteorological Observations, the latter affording much valuable information on the climate of Australia, including the dry interior, and the north coast. He determined the position of the eastern boundary line of the colony, or 141st meridian; and, in conjunction with Messrs. Ellery and Russell, the Government Astronomers of Victoria and of New South Wales, he made a careful telegraphic determination of the difference of longitude between Singapore, Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney. In 1886 Cambridge University conferred upon him the degree of M.A., honoris causa; and in 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London. He is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide University; one of the Governors of the South Australian Public Library; has been President of the Royal Society of South Australia; and is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide School of Mines, &c. He was made a K.C.M.G. in 1893. He married Alice, daughter of E. Bell, Esq., in 1855. Address: Adelaide, South Australia.

TODHUNTER, John, M.D., eldest son of the late Thomas Hervey Todhunter, merchant, was born in Dublin on Dec. 30, 1839, and educated in Quaker schools. At the age of sixteen he entered a barrister's career in his father's Dublin and Limerick offices. After he became a student at Trinity College, Dublin, and studied medicine, he obtained a degree of B.A. in 1857, M.D. in 1860, M.D. in 1871. He studied in Paris and Vienna, and returned to Dublin to practice. In 1874 he was Assistant Surgeon in the Cork Street Fever Hospital. At the same time he held the Chair of Literature in Alexandra College, and signing these appointments he came to London, where he devoted himself to literature. His works comprise: "The Last Beautiful, a Saturday Night," "Laurella, and other Poems," "Alcestis," 1879; "A Story," 1880; "The True Tragedy," 1881; "Forest Songs," 1881; "Helena in Transylvania," form, produced at Hengley, 1881, and June 1886, and afterwards at Exeter; "The Bardic Poems," 1888; "A Sicilian," produced at Bedford Park, 1888, the Vaudeville Theatre, and at Campden Hill, between 1888 and "The Poison Flower," 1888; "Sicilian Idylls" at the Vaudeville Theatre. Dr. Todhunter has also produced drama in prose, "The Black," by the Independent Theatre, the Opéra Comique in December, and "A Comedy of Sicily," with Miss Florence Farr's management, at the Avenue Theatre in March 1890. His published work is "Three Irish Tales," 1896. He married Katharine, daughter of the late Ball, LL.D., of Dublin; and Dora Louisa, daughter of the late A. Digby, of Dublin. Address: Bedford Park, W.

TOLSTOI, Count Lyof Nikolaevitch, usually called Count Leo, the most eminent living Russian writer and social reformer, is a descendant of Count Peter Tolstoi, the friend and aide of Peter the Great, and was born Aug. 28, 1828, at Yasnaya Polyana, Government of Toula, but was orphaned at an early age. He received his usual education of a Russian noble privately and afterwards at the University of Kazan. He spent the subsequent years of his life in study till 1851, when, at the age of twenty-three, he entered the army, accompanied his brother to the Crimea. On the outbreak of the Crimean War he was called to Sebastopol and served there, taking the command of a mountain battery, and assisting in somewhat lengthy article. Evidently convinced that speech was denied him in his native land, Tolstoi continued to address

his literary pieces to the English press, notably to the Daily Chronicle and the New Age, the former publishing on March 17, 1896, a long letter of Tolstoi's to a correspondent in England on the Venezuela imbroglio which had recently occurred between this country and America. This letter exhibited that habitual "other-worldliness" of the novelist which distinguishes all his writings, but was without doubt a strong indictment of war, and consequently of patriotism, inasmuch as he argued that the former cannot exist without the latter. Rumours became current during September 1897 that the great novelist was suffering from an illness which necessitated a serious operation, but on a member of the staff of the Odessa Listok visiting the Count at Yasny Polyana he found him quite well. He was then working hard at a preface for a forthcoming book on contemporary science, and was giving the finishing touches to his long-promised and eagerly-expected work on art, which was to be published in London in the Russian original as well as in an English translation. In the following month (October 1897) a complete vindication of Tolstoi's robustness, both physical and mental, was afforded by the appearance in the Peterburghskaya Vedomosti, the organ of Prince Ukhtomsky, who was rigorously condemning the Government religious persecutions, of a daring letter on the fanatical intolerance which incited these outrages. The writer's wrath was fully aroused owing to several cases of children being actually removed from the custody of their parents on so-called religious grounds. It was truly noted at the time by a prominent English journal that the publication of such an epistle from Count Tolstoi in a St. Petersburg newspaper was a significant sign and an unusual event. A few months later was published the before-mentioned work of Tolstoi's on art. This book, "What is Art?" attracted wide-spread attention, and much interesting and suggestive writing was the result. Mr. George Bernard Shaw (q.v.) contributed a striking review to the Daily Chronicle, but the fundamental principles of Tolstoi's essay did not receive any general acceptance. Mention should be made of the issue in the autumn of 1898 of an excellent little monograph on Tolstoi by Mr. G. H. Perris, who had previously written some articles in the Ethical World on "Ethics and Revolution in Russia."

TOMES, Charles Sissmore, M.A., F.R.S. (F.R.S. 1935) was born in Dorset in 1869, and is the son of the late Sir John Tames. He was educated at Rugby College, at Jesus College, Oxford, where he took a first class in natural science in 1891, and at the Manchester Hospital. He graduated as a dental surgeon in London from 1894 to 1897, when he returned to his country practice. He was for many years Lecturer in Anatomy and Physiology at the Dental Hospital, London, and was Nominus to the General Medical Council, was twice Inspector of Dental Examinations in the United Kingdom, and for two years Acting Examiner in Dental Surgery at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, for a period of thirteen years. He is Fellow of the Royal Med. Coll. Soc. Hist. Member of the American Dental Association, etc. He was made F.R.S. in 1935. His principal works are his two editions of his father's well-known "Dental Surgery" (vols. 2 and 3), and his "Manual of Dental Anatomy." He has besides contributed many papers to the Philosophical Transactions in the field of dentistry, etc. Address: 17, Grosvenor Square, W. and 4 Park Crescent, W.

TOMLINSON, Herbert, B.A., F.R.S. was born at York in Nov. 18, 1897, and was educated at St. Peter's School, York, and at Christ Church, Oxford. In 1920 he graduated B.A. with the Mathematics and Natural Science Honours Schools. In 1920 he was Whitworth Exhibitioner, and in the same year was appointed Demonstrator of Natural Philosophy at King's College, London. In 1922 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in recognition of his original researches in physics, and in 1924 was chosen as the first Principal of the South-Western Polytechnic, Gloucester. As a writer on natural science, Mr. Tomlinson is well known through numerous contributions to the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Philosophical Magazine, and the most important of his writings relate to the influence of stress and strain on the Physical Properties of Matter. The following papers may be enumerated: "Effect of M. generation on the Electrical Conductivity of Iron" Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1935; "Increase in Resistance to the Passage of an Electric Current produced in Certain Wires by Straining" Ibid., 1937; "Alteration of Thermal Conductivity of Iron and Steel caused by Magnetism" Ibid., 1938; "Moduli of Elasticity" Philosophical Transactions, 1938; "Electrical Conductivity" Ibid.; "Relations between Moduli of Elasticity, Thermal Capacity, and other Physical Constants" Proceedings of the Royal Society.

1937. The author's work on the influence of stress and strain on the physical properties of matter is of great importance. It is a subject which has not been fully investigated, and the author's work is a valuable contribution to the knowledge of this subject. The author's work is based on a series of experiments which have been carried out on a variety of materials, including iron, steel, and copper. The results of these experiments show that the physical properties of these materials are affected by stress and strain in a manner which is not fully understood. The author's work is a valuable contribution to the knowledge of this subject, and it is hoped that it will lead to further research in this field.

TOMS, Frederick began his career as a chemist in 1910, and was educated at the University of London. He was a member of the Royal Society, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1935. TREDEGAR, Lord, Godfrey Charles

Morgan, Bart., D.L., J.P., was born at Ruperra Castle, Cardiff, on April 28, 1830, and is the son of the 1st Baron, whom he succeeded in 1875, and Rosamund, only daughter of General Godfrey Basil Mundy.
He was educated at Eton, and entered the army, joining the 17th Lancers, and as Captain Godfrey Morgan took part in the famous Balaclava Charge in 1854. In an interview with a representative of the Western Mail he recently gave a graphic account of his experiences. Describing the advance just after Nolan's death, and when the battery of the Russian Horse Artillery opened fire, he said: "I do not recollect hearing a word from anybody as we gradually broke from a trot to a canter, though the noise of the striking of men and horses by grape and round shot was deafening, whilst the dust and gravel struck up by the round shot that fell short was almost blinding, and irritated my horse so that I could scarcely hold him at all. But as we came nearer I could see plainly enough, especially when I was about a hundred yards from the guns. I appeared to be riding straight on to the muzzle of one of the guns, and I distinctly saw the gunner apply his fuse. I shut my eyes then, for I thought that settled the question as far as I was concerned. But the shot just missed me and struck the man on my right full in the chest. In another minute I was on the gun, and the leading Russian's grey horse, shot, I suppose, with a pistol by somebody on my right, fell across my horse, dragging it over with him, and pinning me in between the gun and himself. A Russian gunner on foot at once covered me with his carbine. He was just within reach of my sword, and I struck him across his neck.
The blow did not do him much harm, but it disconcerted his aim. At the same time a mounted gunner struck my horse on the forehead with his sabre. Spurring 'Sir Briggs,' he half jumped, half blundered, over the fallen horses, and then for a short time bolted with me. I only remember finding myself alone amongst the Russians trying to get out as best I could. This, by some chance, I did, in spite of the attempts of the Russians to cut me down.
When clear again of the guns I saw two or three of my men making their way back, and as the fire from both flanks was still heavy, it was a matter of running the gauntlet again. I have not sufficient recollection of minor incidents to describe

Cambridge, where he was second first class in classics. He was member for Tynemouth, in the interest, in 1865, and for the Burghs in 1868. Mr. Trevelyan pointed Civil Lord of Admiralty, Gladstone's Government, in Dec. 1868, but resigned office in July on a point of conscience connected with a Government Education Bill. He effected a sweeping reform of the army, and the abolition of the purchase of commissions, both in and out of Parliament and was for many years the foremost supporter of the extension of the Franchise. Mr. Trevelyan succeeded Mr. Shaw-Lefevre as Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty in Nov. 1870, and held that office until his death, after the murder of Lord Russell, as Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (May 1872). This arduous post he held for two most trying years, and in 1884 he joined the Cabinet as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third administration in 1885, he was appointed to the new post of Secretary for Scotland, resigning on March 27, 1886, in consequence of disagreement with the Prime Minister's proposed scheme for Ireland. He was elected to secure re-election after the dissolution of 1886, but in 1887 he was elected as member for the Bridgeton division of Glasgow. In August 1892 he became Secretary for Scotland in Gladstone's Administration. He reformed Parliament in February 1897. He is author of "Letters of a Competitionist," republished from Macmillan's Magazine in 1864; "Cawnpore," in 1865; "Ladies in Parliament," "Horace at University of Athens," and others, collected and published in 1868; "Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay," 1876 (2nd edit., 1877); and "The History of Charles James Fox." He is married to Caroline, daughter of R. N. Philips, at one time M.P. for Lancs. Addresses: 8 Grosvenor Crescent; Wallington, Cambo, Northumberland; Welcombe, Stratford-on-Avon; and Beaum.

TREVES, Frederick, F.R.C.S., was born at Dorchester on Feb. 15, 1843, and received his medical education at the London Hospital, where he was afterwards Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery. He became F.R.C.S. in 1878, is a Member of Council and Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons, and, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to H.R.H. Duke of York, Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge, and in Anatomy at the Universities of Aberdeen and Durham. He won the Jacksonian Prize Essay at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, in 1884; and as Hunterian Professor of Anatomy lectured in 1885-86, the subject in all cases being the Intestinal Canal. He is author of the following standard works: "Scrofula and its Gland Diseases," 1882; "A Manual of Surgical Applied Anatomy," 1883; "German-English Dictionary of Medical Terms," 1889; "A Manual of Operative Surgery," 1891; "The Surgical Treatment of Typhilitis," 1888 and 1891; "The Student's Handbook of Surgical Operations," 1892. He is editor of "A System of Surgery," 1895; and "A Manual of Surgery in Treatises by various Authors." He has also contributed largely to Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," Morris's "Anatomy," Allbutt's "System," and other standard works of the same nature. Mr. Treves was appointed an Emeritus Professor of Surgery at the London Hospital in March 1899. Address: 6 Wimpole Street, W.

TREVOR-BATTYE, Aubyn Bernard Rochfort, explorer and zoologist, was born at Hever, in Kent, and is the second son of the Rector of Hever, the late William Wilberforce Battye, of Tingrith Manor, Beds., and Harriet, only daughter of Edmund Wakefield Meade-Waldo, of Stonewall Park and Hever Castle, whose ancestress, Ruth Hampden, daughter of the patriot John Hampden, married Sir John Trevor. He was educated at St. Edward's School and Christ Church College, Oxford (B.A.). He studied biology in his college days, under the then Linacre Professor, H. N. Moseley, of Challenger fame. On leaving the University he took to literary and scientific journalism, and wrote for the Saturday; but he is now best known as a zoologist who has travelled widely in little-known countries. He was the first white man to enter the farther parts of North-West Canada after the Riel Rebellion. He has also travelled on the Pacific sea-board of North America, in the north of Africa, Russia, Spitzbergen, Scandinavia, &c. In 1893 he investigated the Dwina Delta, after crossing to the White Sea, and explored the almost unknown Arctic Island of Kolquev, embodying these last experiences in his well-known book, "Ice-Bound in Kolquev," 1895. He has contributed largely to the scientific press, and has published: "Pictures in Prose," 1893; and "A Northern Highway of the Tsar," 1897. He is member of several learned societies. Address: 2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.

TRURO, Bishop of. See GOTT, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN.

TUKE, Henry Scott, was born at York on June 12, 1858, and is the son of the late Dr. D. Hack Tuke. He studied art at the Slade School, in Italy, and for two years under Laurens in Paris. His earliest Royal Academy picture was exhibited in 1879, since which he has been a fairly constant exhibitor there, and at the New, Grosvenor, and some foreign galleries. He is well known for his sea-pieces, &c. His "All Hands to the Pumps" and "August Blue," exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1889 and 1894 respectively, have been purchased under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest, and, in the latter year, his "Sailors Playing Cards" obtained the first gold medal at Munich, and was bought by the Bavarian Government. His more recent Royal Academy pictures have been a portrait of Mrs. George Talbot, and "The Swimmers' Pool," 1895; "Beside Green Waters," 1897; a portrait of Miss Muriel Lubbock, and "An Idyll of the Sea," 1898; and "The Diver," 1899. Address: Lyndon Lodge, Hanwell, W.

TUNIS, Bey of, Sidi Ali, was born in 1817, and succeeded his brother Bey Mohammed-es-Sadok in 1882. The very year of his accession the French estab- lished a Protectorate over Tunis, and reorganised the internal government of the country, under the direction of the Resident-General, M. Paul Cambon, the present French Ambassador in London (q.v.).

TUPPER, The Hon. Sir Charles, Bart., G.C.M.G., C.B., M.D., L.R.C.S. Edin., was born at Amherst, N.S., July 2, 1821. He was a Member of the Executive Council and Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia from 1857 to 1860, and from 1863 to June 30, 1867; and Prime Minister of that Province from 1864 until he retired from office with his Government, on the Union Act coming into force on July 1, 1867; he was a delegate on public business from the Nova Scotia Government, 1858 and 1865, and from the Dominion Government, March 1868; leader of the delegation from Nova Scotia to the Union Conference at Charlottetown, 1864; to that in Quebec in the same year; and to the final Colonial Conference in London to complete terms of Union in 1866-67; he holds patent of rank and precedence from her Majesty as an Executive Councillor of Nova Scotia; was sworn as a Privy Councillor of Canada, June 1870, and was President of that body from that date until July 1, 1872, when he was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue, which office he held until Feb. 22, 1873, when appointed Minister of Customs. He resigned office with Sir John Macdonald in November 1873, and on the return of Sir John to power, was appointed Minister of Public Works in October 1878, and Minister of Railways and Canals in 1879. He represented the county of Cumberland, Nova Scotia, in Parliament for thirty-two years, in the Nova Scotia Assembly from 1855 until the Confederation in 1867, and thence in the Commons of Canada to 1884, when he resigned his seat in Parliament, and was appointed High Commissioner for Canada in London. He was appointed by the Dominion Government Executive Commissioner for Canada of the Antwerp Exhibition, 1885, and of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886, of which he was also appointed Royal Commissioner by the Queen. He received, in 1886, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (Cambridge), and the same day had conferred on him the honorary freedom of the Worshipful Company of Fishmongers of London. Just previous to the Federal elections of February 1887, he re-entered the Cabinet as Finance Minister, which position he retained until May 24, 1888, when he was re-appointed High Commissioner for the Dominion of Canada in London. Sir Charles was appointed one of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries to the Fisheries Conference in Washington in 1887, the result of which Conference was the signature of a treaty on Feb. 15, 1888, subject to ratification, for the settlement of the matters in dispute between Canada and the United States in connection with the Atlantic Fisheries. Sir Charles carried a Bill through the Canadian Parliament for the ratification of a Treaty, where it was passed in both Houses without division. He was created a Baronet under patent dated Sept. 13, 1888. In January 1896 he entered the Bowell Administration as Secretary of State and Leader of the House of Commons, and later in the year succeeded him as Prime Minister of Canada. At the defeat of his party at the polls, June 20, 1896, he resigned office, and was elected to the same position in the new Parliament. Address: Ottawa, Ontario.

TUPPER, Hon. Sir Charles Albert, K.C.M.G., LL.B. (Canadian), Canadian jurist and politician, born at Amherst, N.S., 1834. He was educated at Windsor and at McGill University, and was called to the Bar in 1857. He received his medical education at the General Hospital, where he held a scholarship, and in 1853 he entered the Royal College of Physicians. As a student he won the Gold Medal at the University of London, and took his degree in 1857. In 1854 he was Demonstrator of Anatomy at the University of Edinburgh; and in the death of Professor John Hunter he became Professor of Anatomy. He is Honorary Professor of Anatomy at the Royal Scottish Academy. He has at times held the following positions: Examiner in Anatomy in the University of London, Oxford, and as Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology in the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, and President of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. For many years he has represented the University of Edinburgh on the General Council of Medical Education, and is now the President, having been elected in the spring of 1898. In 1889 he was elected by the Senate of the University as one of their representatives on the University Court. He was made, in 1881, a Member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the Acts affecting the Medical Profession. He has written numerous articles on anatomy, both human and comparative, in the Transactions of various learned societies, in the Reports of H.M.S. Challenger, and in different journals, more especially in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, of which he is one of the founders and editors. Some years ago he was awarded by the Royal Society of Edinburgh the Neill Medal for his contributions to Scottish Natural History. He is a member of many scientific societies, and has received the Honorary Membership of the Royal Irish Academy, the Anthropological Societies of Berlin, Rome, and Paris, and the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society of London, the Royal Academy of Science of Berlin, the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester, the Obstetrical Societies of London and Edinburgh. In 1886 he received the honour of Knighthood, and is D.L. of the City and County of Edinburgh. He joined the Volunteer force at its institution in 1859, and held for thirty years a commission in the Queen's Rifle Volunteer Brigade, Royal Scots, when he retired with the honorary rank of Lieut.-Colonel. In December 1898, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Academy of Medicine, he was appointed an Honorary Member of the Academy. He is married to Agnes, eldest daughter of Abraham Logan, of Burnhouse, Berwickshire. Addresses: 6 Eton Terrace, Edinburgh; and Athenæum.

TÜRR, Gen. Stephen, born at Baja, in Hungary, in 1825, became a lieutenant in the Austrian army in 1848. His regiment was stationed in Italy, and his rooted dislike of the House of Hapsburg inspired him with a strong sympathy for the Italian cause. The Revolutionary Government of Hungary having called of the Vice-Presidents for 1899-1900. He has written largely on the Eye in Heath's "Dictionary of Practical Surgery," Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," the Transactions of the Ophthalmic Society, &c. Address: 100 Harley Street, W.

TWINING, Louisa, was born in London, N. v. 16, 1820, and is the daughter of Richard Twining. She was educated at home, and by attending Lectures at the Royal Institution, Queen's College, Harley Street, and elsewhere. She acted as Guardian of the Poor at Kensington from 1844 to 1860, and of the Tonbridge Union from 1863 to 1896. Miss Louisa Twining has been engaged in Poor-Law Administration during more than forty years. In 1857 she founded the Workhouse Visiting Society, for the purpose of looking after the poor, especially the incurably sick, in workhouses. The Society consisted of ladies, and these aimed, as their prospectus set forth, at the moral and spiritual benefit of inmates, but their labours naturally led to the whole question of pauperism coming before the notice of Parliament and of the nation. In 1858 she wrote an important letter to the Times, which has throughout seconded her in her labours, on workhouse nurses, their habits of intemperance, &c. In 1861, when a Select Committee on Poor-Law Relief had been appointed, she gave important evidence about the work of her society before the Committee. Four years afterwards, in 1865, the Lancet, in obedience, as it stated, to the best traditions of the medical profession, who had played their part for years in establishing kindlier relations between rich and poor, started its Sanitary Commission for Investigating the State of the Infirmarys of Workhouses. The work of this Commission is well known, and was doubtless originally suggested by the labours of Miss Twining. Among books published by the subject of our memoir may be mentioned: "Symbols and Emblems of Early and Mediæval Christian Art," illustrated, 1st edit., 1852; 2nd edit., 1884; "Types and Figures of the Bible," illustrated, 1855; and many writings on the subject of workhouses, including "A Paper on the Condition of Workhouses," read before the Social Science Congress at Birmingham, 1857; "Letter to the President of the Poor-Law Board," "Morning and Evening Prayers for Workhouses," "Readings for Visitors to Workhouses and Hospitals," "Metropolitan Workhouses and their Inmates," "Workhouses and Women's Work," "Recollections of Workhouse Visiting and Management during twenty-five years," 1880; "Poor-Law Relief in Foreign Countries and Outdoor Relief in Eng-

TYLOR, Professor E. B. Tylor, D.C.L., Litt. D. was born at Camberwell, London, in 1832. He was educated at the School of Friends, Grovehill, and his work has been steadily directed to the study of the races of man, their history, languages, and customs, at a time when anthropology was having attained to the position which it now receives, and was the subject for instruction and the fortune of accompanying Henry Christy, on a journey in 1856, the archaeologist, during which he was employed in the Collection in the Ethnological Department of the British Museum. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society, received the Honorary Degree from the University of Oxford in 1873, and of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1875. In 1877 he was Keeper of the Oxford Museum, and Reader in Anthropology, a subject he became in 1880 Professor. In 1888 he was elected Gifford Lecturer by the University of Aberdeen, delivering a two-part "Natural Religion," the results of which still await complete publication. Dr. Tylor has been a Fellow of the Anthropological Institute of London, 1880 and 1891-92. He is the author of "Anahuac, or Mexico and the Aztecs," 1861; "Researches into the History of Mankind," 1865; and "Primitive Civilisation: Researches into the Development of Philosophy, Religion, Art, and Language," 2 vols., 1871 (2nd edit., 1881). His more recent work is an edition of the book of the Science of Man, "Primitive Culture: an introduction to the study of Man and Civilisation," 1881. He was married in 1858, Anna, daughter of John Fox, of Wellington, New Zealand. Address: Museum House, 61, Tottenham Court Road, W.

UDNY, Sir Richard, K.C.S.I., late Commissioner of the Peshawar Division, Punjab, was born in 1847, and is the eldest son of the late George Udney, H.E.I.C.S., Sub-Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, and pursuer in the famous real property case of Udney v. Udney, and Anne Lydia, second daughter of the late Samuel Tomkins, banker, of Lombard Street. He was educated at schools at St. Andrews, and at Aberdeen University, where he took the M.A. degree in 1866, after obtaining first class honours in Mathematics and a second class in Classics. In 1867 he obtained the Fullerton Mathematical Scholarship at Aberdeen, and subsequently spent a term or two at Cambridge. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1869, and has served as political officer with the Jawaki Expedition, 1877-78; the Mahsud Wazir Expedition, 1881; the Samana (Miranzai), 1891, and Isazai or Black Mountain Expedition in 1892, for which he obtained a medal and two clasps. He was appointed on a special mission to the Kurram Valley in 1888, and was Commissioner for the delimitation of sections of the Indo-Afghan Boundary in 1894-95 and 1896-97. From 1891 to 1898 he was Commissioner of the Peshawar Division. His position here has been most responsible. He has been thrown into constant intercourse with wild tribes, members of which have not infrequently shot at him as he has ridden among their mountains. His tact, and his extreme versatility as a linguist, however, have endeared him to the frontier tribesmen, and their revolt in the recent war cannot be laid at Sir Richard's door. He has been repeatedly and violently assailed by a section of the Indian press for allowing weapons to fall into the hands of the enemy, and for refusing help, as he had advisedly refused it before, at a moment when the Khyber was threatened by the tribesmen. But from the vexatious charges of party journalists he was triumphantly cleared by Lord Lansdowne, in his great speech on the Indian Frontier Question, delivered in Parliament at the close of the campaign. Sir Richard Udny was with General Lockhart during the greater part of the war, and was the spokesman of the English Government at a durbar where the rebel chiefs assembled to hear the conditions of peace propounded to them in Pushtu. He was honoured by his old University with the degree of LL.D. in August 1898. He retired in 1898. He is married to Alicia, daughter of the late Samuel Tomkins, jun., banker, of Lombard Street. Address: East Indian United Service Club, 16 St. James's Square, S.W.

UNWIN, Professor William Cawthorne, B.Sc., F.R.S., M.I.C.E., Hon. M.I.M.E., was born at Coggeshall, in Essex, in 1838, and is the son of William Jordan Unwin, LL.D., for many years Principal of Homerton College. He was educated at the City of London School, and was apprenticed in the works of Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester, 1855 to 1862. Professor Unwin was Instructor at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, 1868-72; Professor of Mechanical and Hydraulic Engineering, Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill, 1872-84; and since that time has been Professor of Engineering, Central Institution of the City and Guilds Institute at South Kensington. He is the author of "Wrought-Iron Bridges and Roofs," 1869; "The Elements of Machine Design," 1877 (11th edit., 1890-91); "The Testing of Materials of Construction," 1888; and of various papers in the Proceedings of Societies. In 1893 he delivered the Howard lectures on the "Development and Transmission of Power from Central Stations." In 1895 he delivered the Forrest lecture on "The Experimental Study of Steam-Engines," and in 1896 the Watt Lecture on the life of Hirn. He was Secretary of the International Commission on the Utilisation of Niagara. Address: 7 Palace Gate Mansions, Kensington.

UZÈS, Duchesse d', Marie Adrienne Anne Clémentine de Rochechouart-Mortemart, was born in Paris in 1848, and in 1867 married the Duc d'Uzès, who died in 1878. Her husband was a great supporter of Legitimist principles, and his widow continued his policy, putting her immense fortune at the service of the monarchical party. She came greatly into notice during the Boulangist agitation, 1888-90, by spending vast sums of money in the electoral campaigns. She was reported to have given three millions of francs to aid a party which could not be brought about in favour of the Legitimist cause. Duchesse is also an accomplished sculptor, having been at the Salon. Her husband, Emile Angler, is a distinguished architect, and was the architect of the Congress in Paris, 1894, "Le Voyageur du Monde." Her Paris address is 100 Champs Elysées.

VAMBÉRY, Professor born at Duna-Szentgyörgy in 1832, of very poor parents, was obliged to leave his paternal roof and seek his bread in the world. He studied in the University of Pest, and devoted his leisure to the study of foreign languages. To complete his knowledge of languages he went to the East, and up his residence in Constantinople, many parts of the East, and the disguise of a servant, known to Europeans, the name of the Oxus to Khiva and Bokhara to Samarcand, in 1867. "Travels and Adventures" appeared in London in 1868. He was appointed Professor of Persian at the University of Pest. In town he has for many years sent frequent letters to the Times, in English papers, warning England of the designs of Russia. He has once visited England on a lecture, the last occasion being in 1885, when he was in London at the same time as Lessar, whose diplomacy he went to counteract. His more recent works are "Djagatai Language," and his "Wanderings and Adventures in Persia," 1867; "Sketches of Asia," 1868; "Uigur Linguistics," 1870; "History of Bokhara the Earliest Period down to 1873; "Central Asia and the Russian Frontier Question," 1875; "Sketches of Mantic costumes in Oriental Countries," "Etymological Dictionary of the Tartar Languages," 1878; "Civilisation of the Turco-Tatar," 1879; "Sheibaniname," and "The Struggle for India," 1885. An account of his "Life and Adventures" written by himself, with a des of England, was published in 1889. Since that date he has d "The Story of Hungary," 1877, many essays in English, German, Hungarian, and has written an introduction to the "Voyages and Adventures of Mendez Pinto," in the AdSeries, 1891. Address: The University of Pesth.

VANDAM, Albert Dresden, the "Englishman in Paris," author and journalist, was born in London on March 1843, and is the eldest son of Mark Vandam, District Commissioner for the Dutch State Lotteries. He received a private education in Paris, and in 1866, during the war between Prussia and Austria, began his career as a publicist. During the war of 1870 he was correspondent to American papers. After the war he settled in London, and during ten years published "Amours of Great Men," "An Everyday Heroine," an adaptation, &c. In 1882 he became the Globe correspondent in Paris, which he left in 1887, finally settling in London, and only leaving it on special journalistic missions to France, Germany, &c. The book with which he achieved fame was his "Englishman in Paris," published in 1892, and followed in 1894 by "My Paris Note-Book." Both these works display a penetrating knowledge of French affairs under the Second Empire and in the early days of the Republic. Among his other works we may mention: "The Story of the Coup d'État," 1884; "Behind the Scenes of the Comédie Française," 1889 (both translations); "Undercurrents of the Second Empire," 1896, &c. He ranks with the late Philip Hamerton and with Miss Betham-Edwards and Mr. J. E. C. Bodley as one of those who speak with especial authority on French men, manners, and affairs. Address: 47A Manchester Street, Manchester Square, W.

VAN DYKE, Henry, D.D., LL.D., American author and preacher, was born at Germantown, Pa., Nov. 10, 1852. He graduated at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute in 1869, Princeton College in 1873, Princeton Theological Seminary in 1877, and studied for two years at the University of Berlin. In 1879 he was called to the United Congregational Church of Newport, R.I., and in 1882 to the Brick Presbyterian Church, one of the historic churches of New York City. In 1889 he

in 1875, and at University College, Oxford. Here he obtained a first class in the Honour School of Natural Science (1878), and was Public Examiner in the same school in 1887-90. He was appointed Demonstrator and Lecturer at the University Museum, Oxford, in 1887. Lecturer of Queen's College in 1891, and Tutor to the Delegacy of the Non-Collegiate Students in 1890. He has published numerous memoirs on theoretical, physical, and applied chemistry in the Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Journals of the Chemical Society, and of the Society of Chemical Industry, and the Philosophical Magazine. The most important are the following: "The Rate of Decomposition of Ammonium Nitrate," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1883; "Some Sulphur Compounds of Calcium," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1885; "The Lime Process for Purification of Coal Gas," Jour. Soc. Chem. Indust., 1885; "The Conditions of Evolution of Gases from Homogeneous Liquids," *Phil. VENN, John, Sc.D., F.R.S., is the eldest son of the late Rev. Henry Venn, Prebendary of St. Paul's, who was for many years Hon. Sec. of the Church Missionary Society. He was born at Hull, Aug. 4, 1834, and was educated at the Grammar School, Highgate, the Islington Proprietary School, and afterwards at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1857, and obtained a Fellowship in the same year. He took orders in 1858, and for some years held curacies at Cheshunt, Herts, and Mortlake, Surrey; but later (in 1883) he abandoned the clerical calling. Since 1862 he has resided mostly at Cambridge, being Lecturer in Moral Sciences at Caius College, and frequently an Examiner in the same subjects in the university. In 1869 he held the office of Hulsean Lecturer. In 1883 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is the author of "Logic of Chance," 1866, 1876, 1888; "Symbolic Logic," 1880 (2nd edit., 1891); "Empirical Logic," 1889; and various papers in scientific and other periodicals. In 1891 he edited for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society the Register of Baptisms, &c., in St. Michael's Parish Church, Cambridge, between the years

1588-1837. He married Susanna Carnegie, daughter of Rev. C. W. Edmonstone, 3 St. Peter's Terrace, London.

VENOSTA, Marco, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, born in January 1841, followed a diplomatic career, and was Minister for Foreign Affairs when Italian troops entered Rome. He fell, and during the time Depretis, Cairoli, and others were entirely forgotten. He was Signor Giolitti's personal arbitrator in the Balkans. In 1896, after Cassini had resigned in consequence of objections in the Green Book, Venosta returned to the post, exactly twenty years after he resigned in May 1876. His references of opinion will stand. On the new Cabinet of 1896, being formed in May 1896, he held his old post, succeeding Alberti. His long experience of life and his great moderation gave him greater prestige than that by any other Foreign Minister.

VERBEEK, Reinier Dirck, engineer, was born at Maastricht, Sept. 5, 1841, studied at the University of Liège, Belgium, and at the Academies of Clausthal, Freiberg, Saxony, whence he received a degree of Mining Engineer; the author of several papers on the laws of the Netherlands, the mineral wealth of the Indies, and was the first to draw attention to the occurrence of gold in quantities in the Isles of Borneo. For many years in the Dutch East India he became Superintendent of Survey of Sumatra, and a distinguished important map and the Krakatau eruption was naturally selected by the head of the commission to examine and report upon the phenomenon of the eruption; the report, and a series of maps, sections, and drawings subsequently issued, are proof of his energy and ability. He is Ingénieur-en-chef des Chevaliers du Lion Neerlandais.

VERDI, Giuseppe, composer, from very humble parents; being a peasant in the Roncole, near Busseto, was

9, 1814. He early showed love for music, and his first education was obtained from one organist of the little church position to which Verdi himself when only ten years old. A musical amateur, M. Verini, the boy's genius, gave him a prominent part in his business and afforded him every opportunity of his natural bent. Verdi grew up under Ferdinando Provenzale, organist, until he was twenty, when he gained a Scholarship at the Conservatorio, where he studied for some time, and in 1833, on the death of Provenzale, he was appointed to the post of cathedral organist, vacant by the decease of Provenzale, and stayed at Busseto for five years, where he published his first opera, Il Corsario, and Il diavolo a tre, and Il di San Bonifacio, which were by the impresario, Merelli, at the La Scala Theatre, Milan. This was followed by the comic opera, "Un giuoco," "Nabucco," and "I masnadieri," the last of which gained a great popularity and laid the first basis of his fame. It is curious to note that while at Milan, he was refused admission to the Conservatorio by an old organist on the ground that "you are not fit for music." His best-known opera is "Nabuccodonosor," produced in 1842 at the Venice Theatre; the "Due Foscari," "I masnadieri," the "Masnadieri," the "Robbers" of Schiller, "Rigoletto," the "Trova-tore," "Un Ballo in Maschera," "Un Ballo in Maschera" in London in 1861, and "Aida" (performed at the Royal Covent Garden, in 1867). "Aida," written for her sister, and produced in 1847, in which Verdi's heroine, proved a success, though it has since been largely forgotten. The "Trovatore" and "Aida" have had great success, not only in Germany, France, and Italy, but also in the more recent years. "Il Trovatore," in 1868; "Il Destino," in 1869; and "Aida," in 1869, and produced at the Scala, Milan, in 1869. "Requiem Mass," in honour of his great countryman, was first performed in the Cathedral of Milan, May 23, 1874, and elected a member of the Academy of the Arts in 1871, and in 1871 he was elected in order to assume the position of the Italian Minister of Education, for the improvement of the Italian Musical Education, who is a member of the Legion of Honour, was elected corresponding member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, Dec. 10, 1859; was made Grand Cross of the Russian Order of St. Stanislaus in 1862; Foreign Associate of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, June 15, 1864; and Grand Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy in 1872, in which year the Viceroy of Egypt conferred on him the Order of Osmanieh. King Victor Emmanuel, by decree dated Nov. 22, 1874, created Signor Verdi an Italian Senator. In May 1875 he was nominated a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and the Italian Minister at Paris was charged to present him with the insignia of the order, accompanied by a flattering letter from the Duc Decazes. In the same year he was decorated with the Cross of Commander and Star of the Austrian Order of Franz-Joseph. Signor Verdi completed, in 1878, a new opera in five acts, entitled "Montezuma," which was given for the first time at La Scala, Milan. This was followed in 1886 by "Otello," which was reproduced at the Lyceum in London, in 1889. In 1893, "Falstaff," a new opera, was produced at Milan, and received with great enthusiasm. At its reproduction in Paris in 1894 Verdi himself was present. On his return from Paris to his native country, in April 1880, he received the Order of the Crown of Italy. Verdi is carrying to completion a great scheme of his own for providing a Home of Rest for old Italian artists of all classes. The building, which is situated outside the Gate Magenta, at Milan, was designed by Signor Camille Boito, a brother of Arigo, the librettist of "Otello" and "Falstaff," and is estimated to cost £16,000. The Home will provide shelter for 100 inmates—60 men and 40 women—but the present arrangement is that the Casa di Riposo, as it is to be named, will not be opened until Verdi's death, although the Home will be ready for occupation shortly. The civilised world hopes that the master will long be spared to it, and his recovery from a most serious illness in 1897 gives renewed hope. In May 1898 Maestro Verdi received from the Philharmonic Choral Society of Berlin a magnificent palette of flowers, decorated with ribbons of the German and Italian colours. The affectionate inscription ran: "To the ever-young and incomparably great master, in sign of admiration and homage — The Philharmonic Choral Society of Berlin, May 1898." Address: Genoa.

VERESTCHAGIN, Vassili, Russian painter, was born at Tcherepovets, in Novgorod, Oct. 26, 1842. He entered the navy in 1859, but soon gave it up to enter the Academy of Fine Arts at St. Petersburg. In 1881 he obtained a silver medal with the "Lovers of Penelope slain by Ulysses," which he afterwards destroyed as being too classical. He then went to Paris and studied under Géricault, and in 1866 exhibited "Ulysses, dead, singing the Psalms" at the Salon. He took part in General Kaufmann's Central Asian Expedition in 1871, went to India in 1874, and fought and sketched throughout the Russo-Turkish war of 1878. His pictures of the Turkistan campaign were acquired by the Moscow Museum, and in 1880 he exhibited a large number of his war pictures in Paris, and seven years later in London. In 1885 his exceedingly realistic pictures from the New Testament were removed from the Kunstlerhaus in Vienna by order of the Arch-bishop. He published his "Autobiographical Sketches" in 1887. His great aim in his work is to paint war as he actually sees it. He revisited London in 1888, when he was exhibiting a series of pictures on Napoleon's Russian campaign of 1812.

VERNE, Jules, a popular French writer, born at Nantes, Feb. 8, 1828, was educated in his native town, and afterwards studied law in Paris. Turning his attention to dramatic literature, he wrote a comedy in verse entitled "Les Pailles Rompues," which was performed at the Gymnase in 1850. This was followed by "Onze Jours de Siège," a three-act comedy, brought out at the Vaudeville, and "L'Oncle d'Amérique," and by several comic operas. But his fame rests chiefly on his scientific romances, the first of which appeared in 1863, under the title of "Cinq Semaines en Ballon." Its success led the author to produce many similar works, now numbering nearly sixty, of which the following have been translated into English and other languages, even into Japanese and Arabic: "Five Weeks in a Balloon: a Voyage of Exploration and Discovery in Central Africa," 1870 (2nd edit., 1874); "A Journey to the Centre of the Earth," 1872; "Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea," 1873; "Meridiano: the Adventures of Three Englishmen and Three Russians in South Africa," 1873; "From the Earth to the Moon Direct in Ninety-Seven Hours Twenty Minutes; and a Trip Round It," 1873; "The Far Country: or, Seventy Degrees North Latitude," 1874; "Around the World in Eighty Days," 1874; "A Floating City, and the Blockade Runners," "The English at the North Pole," "Dr. Ox's Experiment," 1874; "Adventures of Captain Hatteras," "The Mysterious Island," "The Survivors of the Chancelor," 1875; "Michael Strogoff, the Courier of the Czar," 1876; "The Child of the Cavern," "Hector Servadac; or, the Career of a Comet," 1877; "the Boy Captain," 1878; "Verd," 1882; "Kamuk," "L'Étoile du Sud," "Les Éléments," 1884; "Le Billet de Loterie," 1884; "Le Chemin de Fer," "Vacances," 1888; "Hélène," 1889; "Mathias Sacré," "Sud," "César Casanova," "of the North Pole," "Bombardac," and "Le Patras," 1892; "Affaire Antifer," 1894; "Fatale," "He lives at Amiens."

VERNON-HARCOBT, George, F.R.S., F.R.I.C., Reader in Chemistry at Oxford, was born in London, 1834, and is the eldest son of Frederick E. Vernon-Harcourt, sister of the 1st Lord Lee, daughter of Admiral Lee. His youngest brother is John Engineering at University Street. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, was a first class in Natural Science and a Senior Studentship at in 1856. He was Scholar of Church from 1871 to 1873, Lee's Reader in Chemistry, Vice-President of the Chemical and Gas Referee for the year, has published, in connection with Madan, of Queen's, "Experimental Chemistry," Addison Grange, Oxford, &c.; and

VERTUE, The Right Rev. D.D., F.S.A., Roman Catholic Portsmouth, was born in London, 1826. He was ordained by Cardinal Patrizi in London, previously studied at St. Edmund's, Hertfordshire, and the University of Rome. Poplar was the secretary of the Apostolic Nunciature in the States and Canada. On the acknowledgment of his services, he was made Chamberlain of Her Majesty, April 18, 1854. Monsignor Vertue was promoted to Aldershot Camp on the 1st of June, 1855; but he was appointed to the Forces, June 24, 1855, held for twenty-seven years, mentioned in General Order; distinguished and meritorious in the epidemic of yellow fever, and was promoted from the third class of army chaplain, 1865, for the services he rendered. Monsignor Vertue was six

was re-appointed Chamberlain to Pope Leo XIII. April appointed the first Bishop of the Apostolic brief of June 13, consecrated by Cardinal 25. He has edited a "Prayer Army," 1859; and a revised shop Challoner's "Meditations" and has contributed various to the Dublin Review and the representation of the English hierarchy at the Centennial celebration at Philadelphia, in 1876. Having a passion for the stage, he went to England, and obtained the acquaintance of Mr. Charles Kean, then at the Theatre Royal, and made his London debut at the Theatre under Mr. Charles Kean. Having visited America occasionally in 1857, he returned a year later, and after several engagements, appeared at the Theatre, London (1859), as Hamlet, Othello, Shylock, King Lear, &c. During Mr. Phelps's management of Sadler's Wells (1860) Mr. Fermann as Orlando, Mark Antony, Cassio. In 1864 they produced Marston's comedy of "The Princess's Theatre," at the Princess's Theatre, London. In 1870 he alternated Othello with Mr. Phelps. Later he produced G. Wills's romantic drama "The Queen's Theatre." In 1876 he played with Phelps, Toole, at the Gaiety Theatre. At 1876, he played Macbeth for the Philadelphia Centennial celebration at the Crystal Palace, and played the "Edipus at Colonus," was assigned to Mr. Vezin. In 1876, he made his first appearance at the Haymarket, in Mr. W. S. Gilbert's "Dan'l Druce." After 106 times, he created the part of De Talidé in an English play "The Danicheffs," produced at the Theatre, 1877. In 1878, at the Court Theatre, Dr. W. G. VIARDOT - GARCIA, Madame Michelle Pauline, vocalist, daughter of the great tenor, Emmanuel Garcia, and sister of the lamented Madame Malibran, born in Paris, July 18, 1821, at four years of age spoke four languages, and at seven was able to play the pianoforte accompaniments for the pupils to whom her father gave lessons. After sharing the family migrations, first to England, and afterwards to the United States, she returned to Europe in 1828, and her education was continued at Brussels. In consequence of her manual facility on the piano, she became one of Liszt's most accomplished pupils. Her father died in 1832 before her voice was formed, and her sister being constantly absent on professional tours, her studies, which included various branches of the arts, drawing and painting, as well as music and singing, were directed by her own tastes and the counsels of her mother. She made her first appearance in London at the Opera House in 1839, in the character of Desdemona. Her voice, like that of her sister, combined the twofold register of soprano and contralto, embracing a compass of three octaves. At the close of the season she joined the Italian operatic company, then acting at the Odéon, in Paris, and was equally successful. In 1841 she reappeared in England, singing with Mario in Cimarosa's opera "Gli Orazi e i Curiazi." Her next engagement was at Vienna; and Rubini, on forming an operatic corps for St. Petersburg, selected her for his prima donna. She afterwards appeared at Berlin, and when Jenny Lind quitted the German Opera, Madame Viardot-Garcia proved herself an able successor in the repertoire, which she greatly extended. Her name is associated with the first performances of "Les Huguenots," in which she took the part of Valentine, and of "Le Prophète," in which she performed the part of Fides, an exquisite impersonation. Madame Viardot is also celebrated for her singing of Spanish songs. She retired from the stage in 1862, and devoted herself to composition. In April 1840 she was married to M. Louis Viardot, Director of the Paris Italian Opera (he died in May 1883).

VIAUD, Louis Marie Julien, known as "Pierre Loti," French naval officer and man of letters, was born at Rochefort on Jan. 14, 1850, and is descended from an old noble Huguenot family long settled in that district. He went to school in his native town, entered the navy in 1867, and went several voyages in the Pacific.

 tained an attack upon the realism of Zola.
 As an author he is indeed the very antithesis of that writer, and his books, with their dreamy and melancholy beauty of style and subject, mark a revival of the spirit of romanticism and mysticism in French literature. His works, which have run through many editions, are: "Azi-financial ability, or at least of financial success, they were obliged to give place to the late Sir Robert Peel. Although he was pledged to maintain the Corn Laws, he found himself compelled, in 1845, to acquiesce in their repeal, which was carried into effect at his instance in 1846. The effect of this change in Sir Robert Peel's policy caused a disruption in the Conservative party, and led to the accession to power of Lord John Russell, who was succeeded in January 1852 by the Earl of Derby. In the following December the Conservative party, beaten on their own budget, resigned, and gave place to Lord Aberdeen and the Coalition Cabinet, which, in February 1855, was dismissed for having mismanaged the Russian war. It was succeeded by Lord Palmerston's first administration, which was defeated on the Conspiracy to Murder Bill, in March 1858, and Lord Derby held power for the second time, until June 1859, when Lord Palmerston formed his second Cabinet. On his death, October 1865, the Ministry was remodelled, Earl Russell assuming the post of Premier. His Ministry having decided upon introducing a Reform Bill, the duty of conducting it through the House of Commons devolved upon Mr. Gladstone. Having been defeated on an important clause in June 1866, Ministers resigned. Lord Derby formed his third administration, and during the session of 1867 carried a Reform Bill, thereby settling a question which had long been a stumbling-block impeding the progress of legislation. The Conservatives being placed in a minority at the general election of 1868, Mr. Disraeli resigned office, and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Mr. Gladstone. The chief events of Mr. Gladstone's administration were the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the passing of the Irish Land Act and the Elementary Education Act, the abolition of purchase in the army, the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington respecting the Alabama Claims, and the passing of the Ballot Act. At the general election of February 1874 the Conservatives again came into power, and a new administration was formed by Mr. Disraeli, afterwards Lord Beaconsfield. By virtue of the power conferred by an Act of Parliament passed in the previous session, her Majesty was, on Jan. 1, 1877, proclaimed Empress of India, by the Governor-General, at the durbar at Delhi, before an imperial assemblage of all the governors, lieutenant-governors, heads of Government, princes, chiefs, and nobles of India. On the defeat of the Conservatives at the general election of 1880 Mr. Gladstone formed another Liberal administration, which continued in office until June 1885, when it was succeeded by a Conservative Government under Lord Salisbury. After the general election of November 1885 the Liberals again came into power, and the spring of 1886 was devoted by Mr. Gladstone to the consideration of the Irish question. His Home Rule Bill, however, met with so much opposition that the Government decided to appeal to the country, and the result of the general election of July 1886 was an immense Conservative majority. Lord Salisbury's second Government came into power on Aug. 3, 1886. In April 1882 an attempt on the Queen's life was made at Windsor by one Roderick Maclean, who after trial was ordered to be confined during her Majesty's pleasure. "The Early Days of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," compiled under the direction of her Majesty, by Lieut.-General the Hon. C. Grey, was published in July 1867, and was followed, in 1869, by "Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands"; and in 1874 by the first volume of Mr. (now Sir) Theodore Martin's "Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort," of which the fifth and concluding volume appeared in 1880. In 1885 her Majesty published a second volume, entitled "More Leaves from the Journal of our life in the Highlands." In 1887 her Majesty celebrated the Jubilee of her accession to the throne. A Thanksgiving Service was held in Westminster Abbey, and was attended by her Majesty and all the Royal Family, the Indian Princes, the King of Denmark, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King of Saxony, the King of the Hellenes, the Crown Prince of Austria, the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Infante Don Antonio of Spain, Prince Ludwig of Baden, the Crown Prince of Greece, the Grand-Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the Queen of Hawaii, with her attendants in cloth of gold, and representatives from every nation upon earth. The service in the Abbey was conducted by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury in the presence of 10,000 spectators. Since the Jubilee of 1887 her Majesty has travelled abroad more than formerly, and has generously patronised music and the drama, on many occasions summoning eminent singers and actors to perform before her at Windsor and even at Balmoral. She has paid several visits to Florence or to such places in the south of France as Cimiez, and has made prolonged stays there. In 1892 the Queen addressed a letter to the nation thanking her subjects for the sympathy they had shown her at the time of the Duke of Clarence's death. Lord Salisbury's Government went out of office in 1892, and the Queen summoned Mr. Gladstone to form a Cabinet. In March 1894, on Mr. Gladstone's retirement from office Lord Rosebery became Premier, and some months later in the Ministry. On her return to Florence in 1894 she visited Coburg, on April 10, attended by the Grand-Duke of Hesse and Prince Melita of Coburg, her son-in-law. She spent some time at Coburg, but did not again reach Windsor. Later her Majesty met with a very enthusiastic reception in Munich on May 21, she opened her eyes in person. The Rosebery administration was of very short duration. On May 21, 1895, the Government fell upon a question of the supply of money to the army. The following day Lord Rosebery placed his resignation in the hands of the Queen, by which it was accepted. Lord Salisbury returned to the Cabinet, and duly formed an Administration consisting of no less than thirty-four members, of whom fifteen were Conservative and four Unionists. Mr. George Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Chamberlain Secretary for India. One notable event of the year 1895 was the disappearance of the illustrious Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone from Parliamentary life. Her Majesty was visited by the Shah of Persia, and also by the Shah of Afghanistan, son of the Amir of Kabul. In January 1896 Prince Heinrich of Prussia died, having contracted malaria at Ashanti, where he went on a punitive expedition against King Prempeh. He was much attached to the Queen, and died very keenly. In April 1896 the Queen conferred the Order of Knighthood was instituted. It has long been considered desirable to reward some special mark of distinction to British subjects who have rendered important or persons of high rank. The Sovereign, and the Queen, and the Queen Victoria Order for its peculiar feature is its classes, the first two of which are knighthood upon the receipt of the Queen invited to Windsor and Honourable Artillery Company, Boston. She held a review of the troops in the Park, and they to march past fully armed in full colours. The gracious manner of the Queen received them, and the welcome which London gave great satisfaction in this time much indignation in England by the crime of Armenians which was going on in the alleged Sultan of Turkey. Many have advocated independent action try to put a stop to these in the hope of ameliorating of the sufferers, the Queen graph letter to the Sultan special effort in respect of a difficulty. In September and Czarina of Russia paid Queen at Balmoral, staying a Lord Salisbury was summoned by an audience with the many political questions, particularly to Eastern affairs, and. In May 1897 the Queen left Sheffield on her way to after opening the new Town and Messrs. Armstrong's works and viewed the rolling of a steel plate as armour for a battleship. Her Majesty completed the duties of her occupation of the Empire by establishing the longest reign of a monarch in the history of modern Europe. It may be said that the whole world participated in Jubilee celebrations which were the honour of the event. The Jubilee was begun on Saturday, with a military tattoo attended by the troops of the garrison the same day a route march was made by Imperial troops. The force was composed of representatives from all the numbered 2500 officers and men on the anniversary of the Queen's reign upon a Sunday, the day which had throughout the Empire by giving services. Her Majesty at Windsor and attended divine service at George's Chapel, the congregation limited to the Court and members of the Royal Family staying at St. Paul's Cathedral. At St. Paul's Cathedral an immense gathering, including the Prince of Wales and every Royal personage, foreign Ambassadors, peers, fifty peers, two hundred knights and members of the Bar, and representatives from all the learned societies. Services of a special kind were held in all the principal churches of every denomination. On Monday afternoon the reception, which was followed by a banquet. In the House of Commons a congratulatory address was presented by the Marquis of Salisbury and Kimberley, and in the House of Lords a similar address was moved by Lord Salisbury and Sir William Harcourt. Honours were announced on that day, including peerages and fifteen appointments to the Privy Council, including colonial Premiers. Many promotions in the various branches of the civil service and the army and navy were made. On Tuesday, Diamond Jubilee Day, the principal event of the celebration took place. An immense procession was organised, comprising representatives of all the naval and military forces of the Empire. It started from Buckingham Palace, followed by the Queen at 10 A.M. The morning was fine, and dense crowds of spectators lined the whole route, and thanks to the admirable arrangements of the police, the day passed off without any serious accident. The novelty and variety of the uniforms, many of which had never been seen before in London, gave a picturesque charm to the procession. The vociferous cheering all along the line left no doubt as to the loyal sentiments of the people, the greeting of the royal carriages being especially enthusiastic. Her Majesty's carriage was preceded by one containing the royal grandchildren, and this was followed by a conclave of forty Princes on horseback, mostly representatives of foreign Kings and Governors. Just before leaving the Palace the Queen telegraphed to all parts of her dominions the message, "From my heart I thank my beloved people. May God bless them." Upon the arrival of the Royal Procession at Temple Bar, the Lord Mayor, Sir F. Faudel-Phillips, and his deputation, on foot and bareheaded, met the Queen and presented to her the historic sword. Her Majesty touched the hilt, and commanded the Lord Mayor to lead the way into the City. He thereupon mounted his horse and preceded the Queen, bareheaded and holding the sword aloft. The great episode of the procession was the Thanksgiving Service outside St. Paul's Cathedral. An immense concourse was assembled there, including dignitaries of the Church in their robes, and City officials. A short service was held, and the benediction pronounced by the Archbishop of Canterbury; then the whole assembly joined in singing the Old Hundredth. On Wednesday the Queen received the addresses, and afterwards the Members of both Houses of Parliament at Buckingham Palace. It was remarked at the time that the restrained simplicity of the Parliamentary procession, headed by the Speaker in his ancient coach, did honour to the best traditions of English Parliamentaryism. Thursday was marked at Windsor by the reception of the Lords of the Admiralty and of the Admirals of the foreign warships lying at Spithead. In the evening a carnival procession was held, and the Castle illuminated. In London interest chiefly centred in the Jubilee dinners given in fifty-six different districts to over 300,000 people. The scheme had been promoted at the suggestion of the Princess of Wales. Among the subscribers were Sir Thomas Lipton, who gave £25,000, and the Australian Colonies, which sent 20,000 carcasses of mutton. Friday was a day of social royal gatherings. The naval review, which took place on Saturday, June 26, as an historical event was the most striking and important of the national celebrations in connection with the Diamond Jubilee. Between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight was moored the most magnificent and efficient fleet that has ever been got together. The fleet was moored in five lines, each line extending nearly five miles, and with regard to the ships assembled it is important to point out that no single vessel had been recalled from a foreign station to swell the numbers at Spithead. The Prince of Wales, representing the Queen, at 2 P.M. began a procession between the lines, and following him in various vessels were Indian Princes, Colonial Premiers, foreign Ambassadors, and Members of both Houses of Parliament. As the Prince passed each ship a royal salute was fired, the whole fleet cheering lustily when the royal yacht anchored. The illumination of the fleet at night was a perfectly unique sight. At a given signal the whole fleet instantaneously burst into light, every ship being illuminated with lines of incandescent lamps, tracing out the hulls, barbettes, bridges, funnels, and masts. Just before midnight the Prince again passed down the lines, and again received a royal salute. The firing of the guns, combined with the illumination, made an exceedingly grand spectacle. The Queen afterwards expressed to Admiral Sir Nowell Salmon, V.C., the Commander-in-Chief, her entire satisfaction with the management of the review. The number of vessels of all kinds was 150, manned by nearly 40,000 officers and men, and representing in money value a sum of £38,000,000 sterling. Not only our own countrymen, but foreigners of all nations were present, and expressed their admiration in no measured terms, and, taken as an exhibition of British naval power, the review made a deep impression upon the mind of Europe. In conclusion it may be mentioned that her Majesty has outlived all those members of the House of Lords who sat there at her accession, and all the members of her first House of Commons. She has seen six Archbishops of Canterbury, the same number at York, five Bishops of London, and every Episcopal See vacated at least twice. Eleven Lord Chancellors have received the Great Seal at her hands. Ten Prime Ministers and six Speakers of the House of Commons have taken office during her reign, and she has survived every member of her first Privy Council. To find in the closing years of her long reign

VILERS, Charles Marie de, was born in 1802 in a family. He began his career at the age of sixteen, and at twenty-six received the Legion of Honour. He entered the Civil Service as Préfet at Joigny and was promoted in 1837 to the position of des Affaires Civiles in Algeria. For his gallantry in Paris, on the special retirement of Admiral Sassier, he became a part of the Legion of Honour in 1839, the Cabinet then determined to appoint him as plenipotentiary to the Government of Cochinchina. In June of that year, he was appointed plenipotentiary to the Government. He made himself extremely popular and introduced many measures, repressing a serious insurrection, and to be constructed the first railway in the colony. In 1842 he became acquainted with the chief of the Navy with respect to the appointment of an officer, and was recalled to France. He lived quietly until 1848, when Freycinet was desirous of making war with Madagascar to attain the conclusion of a treaty with that island, which was duly ratified by the Government, but would need most delicate handling to carry out. In the spring of 1888 M. de Vilers for Antananarivo as Minister plenipotentiary, being fully aware of the nature of his task. The Malagasy Minister, a clever and astute diplomat, soon found he had a stubborn antagonist to deal with, and as the terms of the treaty had been so vague, the Résident-General insisted on the rights of his country. The Government requiring funds to pay the indemnity due to France, he insisted on establishing a National Bank, entered into communication with the English syndicate for a loan of 100 francs. The French Envoy, however, right, and insisted on his appointing French for the loan. After discussion the Prime Minister accepted the offer made by the Comptoir d'Escompte at Paris, which advanced 100 francs at 6 per cent., to be repaid in 25 years by levies on the certain selected seaports. The question that arose between M. de Vilers and the Malagasy Government it of a mission to Europe entrusted to an Englishman in the service of the Hovas. This was General Willoughby, M. de Vilers desired to see banished from the island, and he had at last the satisfaction of seeing him embarked for Madagascar. M. de Vilers openly displayed his feeling towards the English element at Antananarivo, especially against the French marines, who are very influential.

From the first he kept entirely aloof from the British colony, and endeavoured to prevent British enterprise from getting a footing in the island. The Governor-General refused to recognise the authority of the Hova Government to grant asylum to representatives of foreign powers, alleging that the French Envoy had the right to do so. In 1887 Lord Dufferin, the British Consul, took notice of this requirement of M. de Vilers and applied for it to the Hovas. Many interviews took place, but at last the French Envoy broke off all negotiations, hauled down the tricolour, and ordered his escort of marines to Tamatave, prepared to leave the capital with all his staff. The Prime Minister, in the consequences of his leaving, immediately sent for the French Plenipotentiary, and complied with all his demands; but it is nevertheless a question which will always be mooted, and has more than once nearly caused a rupture between the two countries. In 1888 M. de Vilers returned to France, and was promoted to be Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. He went back to Madagascar, but a few months later resigned his appointment there, and was elected Deputy for Indochina in September 1889. In 1890 he was sent to negotiate the convention with Siam, and successfully achieved his mission. In September 1894 he was once more appointed Envoy to settle affairs in Madagascar, and reached Antananarivo in October. With his accustomed promptitude he at once started thither on his journey to Tamatave. On Tuesday, October 10, M. Raichot, and the Vicomte de Sade, had an audience of the Governor and the Prime Minister, and opened negotiations and put forward demands which, if acceded to, would have the effect of constituting Madagascar a French colony.

VILLARI, Pasquale, Italian writer, born at Naples in 1827, and having studied for the law, in 1847 became involved in revolutionary politics, for which he was imprisoned. He then retired, and devoted himself to historical research. In 1859 he was appointed Professor of History at the University of Pisa, and in 1862 came to London as the Italian delegate to the Universal Exhibition. On his return he was promoted to be Professor of History at Florence. In 1884 he became Minister of Public Instruction in the Rudini Cabinet, and has distinguished himself by his reforms in education. His best-known works are: "Vita di Savonarola," Florence, 1859, "Antiche Leggende e Tradizioni che illustrano la Divina Commedia," 1865; "Insegnamento della Storia," 1869; "Niccolo Machiavelli e suoi Tempi," 1877. Most of these have been translated into English by his wife, née Linda White. His last book has been "The First Two Centuries of Florentine History," published in 1895.

VILLIERS, Frederic, was born in London on April 23, 1852. He is the son of Henry Villiers, by Caroline, daughter of Thomas Bradley, and was educated in the north of France at Guines. Afterwards he studied in the Schools of Art at South Kensington, and became a student of the Royal Academy in 1870. In 1876, as a special artist and correspondent to the Graphic, he went through the Servian campaign with Mr. Archibald Forbes. He was with the armies of the Timok, Drina, Eber, and with Tcherniaieff on the Morava; was decorated with the Order of the Takova, and received a war medal for this campaign, being recalled in November to Constantinople. He then travelled in Roumelia and Bulgaria, examined the Turkish army, re-crossed the Servian lines, and returned with the Turkish troops to Constantinople. Having been ordered to go into Russia, he, in January, started for Kishineff, and saw the mobilisation of the Russian troops in Bessarabia. Mr. Villiers returned to England in February 1887. The day on which war was declared between Turkey and Russia, he started for Bucharest, where he joined Mr. Forbes and was present at all the chief engagements. When the armistice was declared, he was the only English correspondent who accompanied the Russian army to enter Constantinople, and was present at San Stefano when peace was signed and announced to the Russian Guard by the Grand-Duke Nicholas on Sunday, March 3, 1878. Mr. Villiers received the Cross for the passage of the Danube, and the war medal. In June of that year he went to Malta, and was present at the review of the Indian Contingent by the Duke of Cambridge. In November he left England for Afghanistan. He went through the first part of that campaign till the signing of the Treaty of Gandamak; then left for Australia; was at the opening of the Sydney Exhibition; travelled through New Zealand; and returned to England via San Francisco and New York, thus making a journey round the world. Mr. Villiers left England for Egypt immediately on receipt of the news of the massacres at Alexandria, of June 11, 1882; was on H.M.S. Concor during the bombardment of that city; and landed with the marines. Afterwards he followed the army to Ismailia; was at the first fight at Tel-el-Mahouta, and was with the Highland Brigade during the night march and subsequent attack on Tel-el-Kebir. Mr. Villiers remained in Cairo till the trial and banishment of Arabi and his confederates. He received for this campaign the order and rosette of the Medjidieh, and the Egyptian war medal from the hands of the Khedive. In May 1883 he was one of the English correspondents invited to attend the coronation of the Czar at Moscow; received silver medal and badge. In February 1884 Mr. Villiers left for Suakim to join General Graham, who had gone to avenge the defeat of General Baker at the first battle of Teb. Mr. Villiers was present at the Arab defeat at the second battle of Teb. On March 13 he was at the battle of Tamai, and subsequently, as special correspondent of the Daily News, accompanied Admiral Sir W. Hewett on his mission to the court of King John of Abyssinia. In the autumn of 1884 and the spring of 1885, Mr. Villiers was with the Nile Expedition for the relief of Khartoum, being present at the battle of Abu-Klea and the advance upon Metemmeh. Returning to England, he started almost at once for Ireland, where he witnessed the manoeuvres of the Evolutionary Squadron in Bantry Bay, in June 1885. A period of rest followed, and in November 1885 Mr. Villiers started for Serbia, and was with the Serbian forces at all the chief encounters with the Bulgarians. An armistice being declared, he started on his homeward journey. At Venice he found a telegram from the proprietors of the Gryphic, telling him to go to Burma. He accomplished the journey from Venice to Rangoon in one month—arriving just in time to accompany Lord Dufferin on his journey up the Irawaddy to Mandalay. When Lord Dufferin returned to India, Mr. Villiers left for Constantinople, to await the development of events in the Balkan Peninsula. He eventually joined the Greek army, and was in Athens during the blockade of the Greek ports. As a peaceful solution of the Turko-Greek question took place, Mr. Villiers returned to England. Since 1887 he has been lecturing in England, the United States, and Canada, on his varied experiences during the last decade. In August 1889 Mr. Villiers was invited by the Governor-General of Canada to accompany his Excellency on his official tour through the Atlantic. He is a Canadian principal of the F. Japanese illustrated at the bat-vance on F place. He turning tour his paper. He repres-war betw-and visite-joined the Omdurmar and Must campaign. Sept. 2, 18 service. (

1872; gave numerous lectures on Armies at the Royal United Institution between 1872 and 1878; Commissioner of the Daily on the outbreak of the Turco-Russian war in 1877; and assembled a force upon the requirements of the war, leading to considerable success in 1878, and obtained like results in military action in 1887. He died, March 4, 1878, to reorganise the System of the Metropolitan Police, the designation of Director of Investigations, and with absolute control of the criminal administration. He resigned in 1884, in order to be a Member of Parliament, and was appointed Solicitor-General of the Queen's Bench, which post he still held, the regiment being one of the best in the country, and selected for the inspection of the German Emperor. In 1888 he was elected a Member of the Board of Works for the City of London, and in 1889, 1892, was returned unopposed for a constituency to the London County Council. In 1895 he was returned for a contest, but resigned in 1900. He is a magistrate for Westminster, and Berkshire, a tenant for London, and has been in the whole world. In 1885 he was elected as Conservative Member for the Division of Sheffield by a majority of 1149, and by 1195 in 1886, 1892, and again unopposed in 1900. In Parliament he is identified with the Home Movement, United Empire League, British Labour Questions, for the Probation of First Offenders, the first nine years of which were saved under it from imprisonment. £100,000 was not spent in the year, Saving Life at Sea, Schools, the appointment of Trustees, and prohibiting the sale of Prison-Made Goods are due to him. In 1886 he was created Baron of the Bath, and K.C.M.G. In 1899, for his services as representative at the late Anarchist Congress in Rome. In 1895 he was elected to the Council of the National Conservative Associations, and appointed to the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition of 1900. He founded the United Empire League, and has since acted as its Secretary, succeeding in 1897 in the treaties of 1862 and 1864 and was knighted by the Queen in 1896. He is also a knight of the German Crown and of the Kingdom of Italy. His published works are: Reports upon the Prussian Army," 1871; "Elementary Military Geography, Reconnoitring and Sketching," 1872; "Russia's Advance Eastward," 1873; "The Law of Criticism and Libel," 1876; "The Improvement of the Volunteer Force," 1878; "Procédure d'Extradition," 1880; and "A Police Code and Manual of Criminal Law," which has gone through ten editions, and has been adopted as the text book of all English-speaking police. Sir Howard Vincent married, in 1882, Ethel Gwendoline, daughter and co-heiress of Geo. Moffatt, Esq., M.P., of Goodrich Court, Herefordshire, a great traveller and authoress of "40,000 Miles over Land and Water," "Newfoundland to Cochinchina," and "China to Peru over the Andes," by whom he has an only daughter, Vera Howard, born 1883. Addresses: 1 Grosvenor Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

VINCENT, Sir Edgar, K.C.M.G., youngest brother of the above, was born at Slinfold, Sussex, on Aug. 19, 1857. He was educated at Eton, and passed an examination for the appointment of Student Dragoman at Constantinople, in October 1877, but did not take up the appointment. He was subsequently appointed 2nd Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards (1877), and resigned (1882). In May 1880 he was appointed Private Secretary to Lord E. Fitzmaurice, Commissioner for Eastern Roumelia; and in June 1881, Assistant to Her Majesty's Commissioner for the evacuation of the territory ceded to Greece by Turkey. He was appointed British, Belgian, and Dutch Representative on the Council of the Ottoman Public Debt at Constantinople, March 1882; President of the Council of Ottoman Public Debt at Constantinople, March 13, 1883; and Financial Adviser to the Egyptian Government, Nov. 4, 1883. He has received the first class of the Medjidieh, and was made a K.C.M.G. in August 1887. It was mainly owing to his efforts that Egyptian finance was restored to prosperity. When the financial difficulties of Egypt were overcome, Sir Edgar Vincent resigned the post of Financial Adviser and was appointed Governor of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, a post he held till 1897. As evidence of the progress of Egyptian credit during the six years that he was Financial Adviser, it may be stated that the selling value of Egyptian securities in 1883 was £76,251,678, and in 1889 had risen to £103,362,730, this result having been obtained with a diminution of the charges of the Egyptian Government and of the taxpayer. While in Egypt, Sir Edgar Vincent undertook and carried out with success a reform of the Egyptian currency. Since his appointment, Turkey has regularly paid

"Syrie, Palestine, Mount Athos," 1876; "Histoires Orientales," 1879; "Le Fils de Pierre le Grand," 1884; "Histoires d'Iviver," 1885; "Le Roman Russe," 1886; "Souvenirs et Visions," 1887; "Remarques sur l'Exposition du Centenaire," 1889. Vicomte Melchior de Vogue was elected a Member of the Académie Française in November 1888. He was promoted Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1879.

VOULES, Horace St. George, journalist and editor of Truth, was born at Windsor on April 23, 1844, and is the son of Charles Stuart Voules, solicitor, Windsor. He was educated at private schools at Brighton and Eastbourne. He began life in 1864 in the printing trade at Cassell, Petter, & Galpin's, and in 1868 originated for them the Echo, the earliest halfpenny evening paper. When, in 1875, the paper was sold to the late Albert Grant, he continued as editor and manager of the same till it passed into the hands of its present proprietor, Mr. Passmore Edwards, in 1876. In that year he arranged with Mr. Labouchere to start Truth, which was issued in January 1877. He has remained in this post ever since, and has been sole editor for several years. He at one time, during a year or more, assisted in the reconstruction of the Pall Mall Gazette, from which Mr. Greenwood had then seceded. Addresses: Truth Office, Carteret Street, S.W.; and Uplands, Brighton.

VOYSEY, The Rev. Charles, B.A., was born in London, March 18, 1828, being the youngest son of the late Mr. Annesley Voysey, architect. He was educated partly by private tuition, partly at Stockwell Grammar School, and afterwards at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851. From 1852 to 1859 he held the curacy of Hessele, near Hull, after which he was curate (under the Crown) of Craigton, Jamaica, for fifteen months. In 1861 he was appointed curate of Great Yarmouth, but in the same year was transferred to St. Mark's, Whitechapel. Being ejected from that curacy in consequence of a sermon against endless punishment, he was recommended by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait) to the curacy of the well-known Victoria Dock parish, under the Rev. H. Boyd, Vicar. After six months' service there he was invited by the patron and Vicar of Healaugh, Yorkshire, to accept the curacy of that parish, and at the expiration of six months the Vicar resigned and presented Mr. Voysey to the benefice (1864). Mr. Voysey began his career as a religious reformer by the sermon entitled "Is not the Bible about Our strictly true?" This was issued in 1855, by "The Society," which first appeared in 1854, and was continued through 1855 to the present time for the issue. The opinions were denounced as heretical by the orthodox parties in the Anglican Church, and eventually in the spirit of the proceedings were instituted by the bishop of York's secretary, Mr. Voysey. The case was brought in the Chancery of the Minster, Dec. 1, 1860, when it was pronounced against Mr. Voysey, appeal, confirmed by the committee of the Privy Council, sentenced the appellant to be kept living, and to pay the costs. In October of that year Mr. Voysey held Theistic services in London, first at St. George's at Langham Hall, and then at the Theistic Church, 30, Piccadilly. The religious movement which he is associated with is the "Voysey Establishment" in 1880, at his own request, and congregation entered into the "Theistic Church" been properly settled by a Trust Deed. For the first of his preaching in London, his sermons were published in Eastern Post, and frequent papers in England, in America, and India. Every sermon was preached since October 1877 printed and circulated in the world. The issue is 1200, the total number of sermons reprints, is over 1,250,000. The Theistic Church in two has cost over £40,000, and a of £2653 has been collected. Mr. Voysey is the author of work, entitled "The Mystical Death, and Sin"; and he issued what may be regarded works on the religion which entitled "Theism, or The Common Sense" and "The Science"; also an important book, entitled "The Test of Four Gospels concerning Jesus Christ." By the aid of a munificent friend Mr. Voysey has been able to over 14,000 volumes of his Public Free Libraries, College, &c., besides many thousands pamphlets and sermons. He was educated at the Westminster School, at Trinity College, Cambridge, and at St. Thomas's Hospital. He is joint-editor of the Lancet with his father, and is a Fellow of the Medical Society of London, and the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society, and Member of other Medical Societies. Addresses: 5 Queen's Gate, S.W.; and 1 and 2 Bedford Street, Strand, W.C., &c.

WALDECK-ROUSSEAU, Pierre Marie, French politician and lawyer, was born on Dec. 2, 1846, and is the son of the famous politician who died in 1882. Like his father, he chose the profession of the law, and in 1879 was elected a member of the Chamber of Deputies for Rennes. There he sat among the United Republicans, and introduced a Bill for the Reform of the Judiciary. Re-elected in 1881, he became Minister of the Interior in Gambetta's Cabinet of that year, and endeavoured to keep the administration of the country free from political interference. He resigned with the rest of the Ministry in January 1882, but accepted the same post in Jules Ferry's Cabinet of 1883, and retained it until March 1885. In the next year he became a member of the Paris Bar, and there acquired a great success, being engaged in all the famous cases, notably in the defence of De Lesseps in the Panama scandals of 1893. So great was his work that in 1889 he did not come forward as a Parliamentary candidate, although he was elected a Senator a few years later. He had completely severed himself from political life, when at the fall of the Dupuy Cabinet in June 1899 over the riot at the Auteuil racecourse, President Loubet (a fellow-lawyer) appealed to M. Waldeck-Rousseau to form a Coalition Cabinet to see the Dreyfus rehabilitation through. After a first failure, he succeeded in his task, having the former Imperialist, General de Gallifet, as Minister of War, and the Socialist, M. Millerand, as Minister of Commerce. Despite these heterogeneous ingredients, he succeeded in gaining a vote of confidence in the House, and speedily dissolved the Chambers in July, having the support of all right-thinking Frenchmen. His Paris address is 35 Rue de l'Université.

LES, H.R.H. Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.B., I., G.C.M.G., &c., Heir-Apparent to the British Crown, eldest son of her Majesty the late Queen Consort, was born at Buckingham Palace, November 9, 1864. He was created Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall, by patent under the Great Seal, December the 4th of the same year. His early education was entrusted to the Rev. Henry M. Birch, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, London; Mr. Gibbs, Barrister-at-law; Mr. C. F. Tarver; and Mr. H. W. H. Having studied for a session at Rugby, he entered Christ Church, Oxford, where he attended the public lectures for a year, and afterwards resided at the University for four terms at Cambridge for the same purpose. His Royal Highness spent most of the summer of 1866 in a tour to Canada, subsequently making a tour through the United States, where he was most enthusiastically received. In November 1868 he was appointed a brevet Colonel in the Army, and in June 1869 he was sent to the Curragh, Kildare, to undergo a course of military training. He was promoted General in November 1870 and attained the rank of Field-Marshal in May 1875. His Royal Highness was also Colonel-in-Chief of the Household Cavalry, the 10th Hussars, and the 1st Brigade; Captain-General of the 1st Artillery Company, and Colonel of the London Highlanders. In the German

Army he holds the rank of Field-Marshal, and is also Colonel-in-Chief of the 5th Pomeranian Blücher Hussars. In the Austrian Army he is Colonel of the 12th Regiment of Hussars. Accompanied by Dean Stanley the Prince, in 1862, travelled on the Continent, visiting Germany and Italy; thence he journeyed through Egypt and Syria, to Jerusalem. Upon his return he was introduced at the Privy Council, and took his seat in the House of Lords as Duke of Cornwall. His Royal Highness is also Prince of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, Duke of Saxony, Duke of Rothesay, Earl of Garrioch, Earl of Dublin, Baron of Renfrew, Lord of the Isles, and Great Steward of Scotland. He is also patron of twenty-six livings, chiefly as owner of the Duchy of Cornwall. On March 10, 1863, His Royal Highness married, at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, Princess Alexandra, eldest daughter of the King of Denmark, and was at once granted an income of £40,000 per annum, exclusive of the revenues of his Duchy, making an aggregate of about £100,000 a year. At the same time he relinquished his right to the succession of the throne of Saxe-Coburg Gotha in favour of his younger brothers, by a formal act. In the following year he visited Denmark, Sweden, and Russia. Between the years 1864 and 1870 the Prince visited many parts of the United Kingdom, opening Exhibitions, laying foundation stones, and performing other civic functions, being always most warmly received. He went to Egypt for the second time in 1869, and examined the Suez Canal, afterwards departing for Constantinople, Sebastopol, and Athens. In July 1870 His Royal Highness inaugurated the Thames Embankment, and opened the Workmen's International Exhibition at Islington. Towards the close of 1871 the Prince was attacked with typhoid fever, and for some weeks his life was despaired of; but he slowly recovered, and was able to take part in the memorable Thanksgiving Service in St. Paul's Cathedral, on February 27, 1872. He was elected Grand Master of the Freemasons in England, in succession to the Marquis of Ripon, in 1874, and during April of the following year was admitted to the office at a Lodge held in the Albert Hall. In May 1875 he was installed at the Freemasons' Hall, as First Principal of the Royal Arch Freemasons. About this time Parliament voted over £100,000 to enable His Royal Highness to visit India. He left Dover on October 11, and landed at Cairo on the 25th, and invested Mohammed Tewfik, son of the Khedive, with the Order of the Star of India. He arrived at Bombay in November, and then proceeded to Ceylon and Calcutta. After visiting all the principal pal cities of the Empire, the Prince arrived in London in May 1876. He brought home with him about 5000 animals, and these he presented to the Zoological Society's Gardens. In the following July he reviewed 30,000 Volunteers in Hyde Park. His Royal Highness was appointed President of the British Commissioners at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, in which he took a great interest. He attended the Court festivities held in Berlin in March 1883, to celebrate the "Silver Wedding" of the Crown Prince of Germany with the Princess Royal of England. During 1885, in company with the Princess of Wales, he made a tour through Ireland, visiting Dublin, Killarney, and Limerick, and everywhere received a most enthusiastic welcome. The Prince and Princess celebrated their "Silver Wedding" in 1888. Their Royal Highnesses and their two sons visited the Paris Exhibition of 1889, the Prince at that time evincing an active interest in the promotion of the series of Exhibitions which were being held in South Kensington. The establishment of the Imperial Institute was, in a large measure, due to the efforts of the Prince, and in spite of a good deal of opposition and hostile criticism, he succeeded in obtaining a royal warrant for its constitution. In May 1891 His Royal Highness was made a grandfather by the birth of the Duchess of Fife's daughter. He was appointed a Member of the Poor-Law Commission in 1893, and attended its sittings with great assiduity. During the summers of 1893 and 1894 the Prince raced his yacht, the Britannia, in most of the chief regattas round the coast, and secured many victories. He was present, in April 1894, at the wedding of Princess Victoria Melita at Coburg; and also, with the Princess of Wales, attended the marriage of the late Czar's daughter at St. Petersburg. In the following July the Prince and Princess were present at the Welsh Eisteddfod, on which occasion the Princess was admitted a Bard. During the autumn, accompanied by the Duke of York, he hastened to join the Russian Imperial family, on the occasion of the decease of the late Czar; and the Prince, by his courteous attention to Russian etiquette and constant attendance at the prolonged funeral ceremonies, gained the affection of the Russians to a marked degree. During 1896 His Royal Highness won most of the principal turf races, securing the Derby at Epsom with his horse "Persimmon," amid a scene of unparalleled enthusiasm. In June of the same year he was installed as Chancellor of the new University of Wales, and in the following month attended the marriage, at Buckingham Palace, of his second daughter, the Princess Maud, to

Prince Charles of Denmark. In the Jubilee year, 1897, he took part in the inauguration of the Imperial Hospital Fund. His Royal Highness appealed to the public feeling to enable him to raise a fund to be devoted to the permanent relief of the London Hospital, and to free them from debt. Before the Jubilee year, he received £250,000, including £100,000 which were promised as donations. The Prince took a prominent part in the Jubilee celebrations, and on the 20th, attended service at St. Paul's Cathedral, at which his personage in London was the following day he was appointed Master and Principal Knight of the Bath. In the morning of June 20, the Prince rode in the Queen's carriage, the Prince and Princess of Wales, with a very distinguished party, were the guests of the Earl of Mansfield House. The next day, in connection with the fleet, was the Naval Review, at which the Prince represented the Queen. The fleet, moored in the Solent, in the opposite Portsmouth. It was ships of all classes, in number and was considered the greatest ever got together. The Prince, in the Victoria, accompanied by a great number of people in other vessels, stood by the lines and reviewed the fleet. He afterwards held a reception on the Royal yacht, to which all the officers taking part in the review, as the English admirals, were invited. Admiral Sir N. Campbell, Commander-in-Chief, made a signal during the reception, commanded by the Prince of Wales, to the Queen, to express satisfaction with the magnificent display at Spithead, and in a manner in which all the ships were carried out; at his order the mainbrace to be spliced 1898, while on a visit to Baden Rothschild at Waddesley. The Prince had the misfortune to fall, fracturing his arm, and Sir William MacCormac and members of the medical staff called in, and operative intervention was decided against. A moderate enforcing prolonged rest, and though many weeks later His Royal Highness could not be expected that no permanent result obtain as a result of the accident.

always taken a great interest in, and was Executive President of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, the Queen in May 1886. He was created the Royal College of Physicians President of St. Bartholomew's Hospital and of the Society of Antiquaries of Cambridge. Honorary degrees have conferred upon him of LL.D., and Oxford that

The Prince for several years a Bencher of the Middle Temple and also an Elder Brother of the Society. He is President of the Royal Agricultural Society. In the Navy he holds the rank of Admiral of the Fleet, and Captain Royal Naval Reserve.

S. Her Royal Highness a Caroline Marie Charlotte Lie, the Princess of, is the daughter of Christian IX., King of Denmark, was born at Copenhagen, Dec. 1, 1845, was married at Windsor on June 25, 1863, to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and has children: Albert Victor Christian Prince of Clarence and Avondale, born at Marlborough House, June 3, 1865; George Ernest Albert, born at Marlborough House, June 3, 1865; Louise Alexandra Dagmar (Duchess of Fife) at Marlborough House, Feb. 20, 1867; the Duke of Fife in July 1867; Maria Alexander Olga Marie, born at Marlborough House, July 6, 1868; Maud Marie Victoria, born at Marlborough House, Nov. 26, 1869, married to the second son of the Crown Prince of Denmark, in July 1896, and Prince who died shortly after his death in 1871. Her Royal Highness accompanied the Prince of Wales to Russia on the death of Alexander III., and prolonged stay with her sister, with whom she attended the ceremonies at St. Petersburg. In 1898, the late Queen of Denmark's death took her to her native land of Denmark, and, with the Prince, she was subsequently present at the funeral ceremonies of a whom she had been tenderly loved. The Princess is well known for her interest in all kinds of benevolent work, and as an accomplished pianist, holding the degree of Honorary Doctor of Music as a collector of old lace and tapestries, and a devotee of country life in Wiltshire, where her dairy is a grimage.

WALFORD, Mrs. Lucy Bethia, novelist, was born on April 17, 1845, and is the youngest daughter of the second son of Sir James Colquhoun of Colquhoun and Luss, 10th baronet of the name, and brother of the unfortunate Sir James who was drowned in Loch Lomond, within sight of his own door, some years ago. Her mother was the daughter of E. Fuller-Maitland, Esq., of Stanstead, Essex, and this lady—as is little known—was the writer of the principal portion of those verses, now in every hymn-book, and usually attributed to H. Kirke White—

Of these Kirke White wrote only the first six lines, and the poem was finished by Miss Frances Fuller-Maitland, then only in her sixteenth year. From both parents Mrs. Walford thus inherits literary tastes, as her father's comprehensive sporting work, “The Moor and the Loch,” lately gone into its seventh edition, is considered a classic among lovers of the rod and the gun. It was not until four years after her marriage, in 1869, to Mr. Alfred Saunders Walford, that Mrs. Walford published “Mr. Smith,” her first serious attempt. It was sent anonymously to Mr. John Blackwood, and by him was accepted and published at once. Mr. Blackwood, on the success of “Mr. Smith,” urged Mrs. Walford to write for the “Maga” (Blackwood's Magazine), and the result was a series of short tales, beginning with “Nan: a Summer Scene,” which has lately been brought out under this heading in book form. They comprehended “Bee or Beatrix,” “Lady Adelaide,” “Fashion and Fancy,” “Eleanor: a Tale of Non-Performers,” and “Mattie: the History of an Evening,” all which made their first appearance in Blackwood. “Pauline,” Mrs. Walford's first Blackwood serial novel, ran its course in 1877; “Cousins,” her third novel, was published by the same firm in 1879. “Troublesome Daughters” followed in 1880; “The Baby's Grandmother” was the Blackwood serial in 1885; and “A Stiff-Necked Generation” completed its course in the same pages in 1888. Alongside of these, her larger works, Mrs. Walford wrote a series of biographical essays for Blackwood, which were afterwards published under the title of “Four Biographies from Blackwood”; “Dick Netherby,” a one-volume tale of humble Scottish life, for Good Words, in 1881; and “Dinah's Son,” on the same lines, for Life and Work, also in 1881; “The History of a Week” formed the Christmas number of the Graphic in 1885; and all these have also been republished in book form. Other novelties are: "A Mere Child," "The Havoë of a Smile," "A Sage of Sixteen," "A Pinch of Experience," "The One Good Guest," and two collections of short magazine stories. In 1891 Mrs. Walford's novel, "The Mischief of Monica," formed the serial for the year in Longmans' Magazine, and was re-published by the same firm, who have brought out several succeeding editions. Messrs. Longman also published in the autumn of 1892 "Twelve English Authoresses," being a collection of biographical essays written for Far and Near, an American monthly, and contemporary with this appeared a small volume of "Stories for Grown-up Children," illustrated by T. Pym. This was followed by "A Question of Penmanship," 1893. In 1894 "The Matchmaker" ran as a serial for the year in Longmans' Magazine. "Ploughed" appeared in 1894; "A Bubble," and "Frederick," 1895; "Successors to the Title," 1896; "Iva Kildare," 1897; "The Intruders," and "The Archdeacon," 1898. In 1869 Mrs. Walford was married to Mr. Alfred Saunders Walford, of Cranbrooke Hall, Essex, where she resides.

WALKER, Frederick William, High Master of St. Paul's School, only son of Mr. Thomas Walker, of Tullamore, was born in London, July 7, 1830, and educated at Rugby, under Dr. Tait. WALKLEY, Arthur Bingham, only son of the late Mr. A. H. Walkley, of Bristol, was born there on Dec. 17, 1855. He was educated at Warminster Grammar School, and, after matriculating at Oxford as Exhibitioner of Balliol College in 1873, was elected Mathematical Scholar of Corpus Christi, graduating in honours in 1877, in which year he was appointed, after an open competitive examination, to a Clerkship in the Department of the Secretary to the Post Office. In 1897 he was Secretary of the British Delegation to the Postal Congress held at Washington, U.S.A. Under the pseudonym of "Spectator" he became dramatic critic of the Star on the foundation of that journal, and subsequently of the Speaker and Cosmopolis, joined the leader-writing staff of the Daily Chronicle, and is a regular contributor to the literary columns of other newspapers and reviews. He is the author of a collection of theatrical essays entitled "Playhouse Impressions," 1892. Address: Devonshire Club, St. James's, S.W.

WALLACE, Alfred Russel, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., born at Usk, Monmouthshire, Jan. 8, 1823, of Scottish descent, was educated at the Grammar School, Hertford, and articulated with an elder brother as land surveyor and architect, but gave up that profession in order to travel and study nature. In 1848 he visited the Amazon with Mr. Bates. Returning in 1852, he published his "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro," and a small volume on "Palm-Trees of the Amazon and their Uses." In 1854 he visited the Malay Islands, where he remained eight years. He published "The Malay Archipelago," 2 vols., in 1869 (10th edit., in one volume, 1890), and a volume of essays entitled "Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection" in 1870, as well as a large number of papers in the publications of the Linnean, Zoological, Ethnological, Anthropological, and Entomological Societies. In 1868 he was awarded the Royal Medal of the Royal Society, and in 1870 the Gold Medal of the Société de Géographie de Paris. In 1875 he printed a small volume "On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism." His elaborate work, in two volumes, on "The Geographical Distribution of Animals," was published in 1876, in which year he was President of the Biological Section at the meeting of the British Association at Glasgow. In 1878 he published a volume on "Tropical Nature," containing, besides a description of the equatorial climate and aspects of nature, his views on the colours of natural objects, on sexual selection, the geographical distribution of animals and plants,

Member of the National Assembly in 1849, but resigned in 1850. After the fall of the Empire he was again returned, as a moderate Conservative, by the Department of the Nord, but he joined the Lavergne group on the question of the Constitutional Laws. To his moderation and vigour was due the definite establishment of the Republic—indeed, he is still commonly called Father of the Republic—and accordingly M. Buffet, on forming his administration in March 1875, nominated him Minister of Public Instruction. It was he who proposed the clauses which first gave constitutional shape to the Republic. M. Wallon is a Member of the Institute, and Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. He was a candidate for the seat in the French Academy that had been vacated by M. Claude Bernard, but M. Renan defeated him by 19 to 15 (June 13, 1878). He was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1886. M. Wallon is a sound historian. His chief works are "Richard II.," "Histoire de l'Esclavage dans l'Antiquité" (3 vols.); "Jeanne d'Arc"; "St. Louis et son Temps" (2 vols.); "De l'Autorité de l'Evangile" (1 vol.); "Le Tribunal Révolutionnaire de Paris" (6 vols.), 1886; "La Révolution du 31 Mai et le Fédéralisme en 1793" (2 vols.); "Les Représentants du Peuple en Mission et la Justice Révolutionnaire dans les Départements en l'An II." (5 vols.), 1889-90. Paris address: 25 Quai de Conti.

WALPOLE, Sir Horatio George, K.C.B., Assistant Under-Secretary for India, was born in 1843, and is the second son of the Right Hon. Spencer Walpole, Q.C., and Isabella, daughter of the Right Hon. that body. He became a Member of the Chapter of Dublin on the accession of Cardinal MacCabe to the archiepiscopal throne. On the death of that prelate in February 1885, Dr. Walsh was elected Vicar Capitular; and in the June of the same year he was appointed to the See of Dublin. Since his appointment as Archbishop he has taken an active interest in the leading questions of the day in Ireland. He has warmly advocated an amicable settlement of the Land Question through the establishment of some system of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between landlords and tenants. He was a witness before the Parnell Special Commission of 1888-89, in connection with which he also had a prominent part in the exposure of the forger, Richard Pigott. He gave important evidence before the Evicted Tenants Commission in 1892, in the course of which he insisted strongly on the injurious bearing of our present monometallic system of currency upon the agricultural interest, especially in Ireland under the land legislation of 1881 and subsequent years. But the principal subject of Dr. Walsh's public action, outside the strictly religious sphere, has been the Irish education question: he has made many suggestions for its settlement, the keynote of his numerous letters and addresses on the subject being a demand for equality between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Ireland in the matter of educational endowments and privileges. He has also taken an active part in the settlement of trade disputes and strikes in Dublin: he opportunely intervened in the great strike on the Great Southern and Western Railway in 1890, and secured its amicable settlement, a public service for which he has received the honorary freedom of the city of Cork. His interest in the cause of temperance is warm and practical; in addition to a widespread temperance organisation in the diocese of Dublin, there has been created under his guidance a similar organisation throughout all the dioceses of his archiepiscopal province. In addition to his appointment as a member of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland, a position which he resigned in 1884, he has been appointed by successive Governments to various public positions of importance; since 1892 he has been a Commissioner of Intermediate Education in Ireland; since 1893, a Commissioner of Charitable Donations and Bequests; and since 1895, a Commissioner of National Education in Ireland. As a Commissioner of National Education he has laboured strenuously to effect a reform of the existing system of primary education in Ireland by the introduction of various suitable forms of manual training, and other changes in the direction of practical usefulness to the children attending the National schools. He has also taken a prominent part in the work of a Commission issued by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in 1897, for the investigation of this subject of educational reform. Dr. Walsh has contributed many articles to the periodical press, especially to the Contemporary Review, the Dublin Review, and the Irish Ecclesiastical Record. He is also the author of several works on subjects of general public interest in Ireland, as well as on important branches of theological and scriptural science. Of his published works the principal are an ethical treatise in Latin on "Human Acts," a "Harmony of the Gospel Narrative of the Passion," "The Liturgical Music of the Office and Mass of the Dead," a "Grammar of Gregorian Music," a "Plain Exposition of the Land Act of 1881," "Bimetallism and Monometallism," a volume of addresses on various subjects of general interest, "Addresses on the Irish University Question," a "Statement of the Chief Grievances of the Catholics of Ireland in the Matter of Education, Primary, Intermediate, and University," and his most recently published work, "The Irish University Question," 1897. His address is: Archbishop's House, Dublin.

WANKLYN, James Alfred, M.R.C.S., London, 1856, chemist, was born

at Ashton-under-Lyne, in the year 1834. He studied chemistry under Bunsen at Heidelberg, and became Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh in 1859, was Professor of Chemistry at the London Institution from 1863 to 1870, and Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics at St. George's Hospital from 1877 to 1880. He has held office as Public Analyst for the county of Buckingham, and for the boroughs of Buckingham, Peterborough, Shrewsbury, and High Wycombe. In the year 1856, whilst he was assistant to Dr. Frankland, he turned his attention to the organo-metallic bodies, and, treading in the footsteps of that eminent chemist, produced cadmium-ethyl by the well-known method of acting upon iodide of ethyl by the metal. Next year he devised an original and entirely new method of obtaining the organo-metallic bodies, and produced first sodium-ethyl, and continuing the work during the next few years, formed potassium-ethyl, lithium-ethyl, calcium-ethyl, and strontium-ethyl. These substances are the most combustible known to chemists, and possess the unique property of decomposing carbonic acid at ordinary temperatures, and by their action on carbonic acid yield propionic acid, as was shown in 1858 when Professor Wanklyn made propionic acid in that manner, giving the first example of the artificial production of an organic substance directly from carbonic acid. In 1861, in conjunction with the late Lord Playfair, then Dr. Lyon Playfair, he communicated to the Royal Society of Edinburgh a paper "On a Mode of taking the Density of Vapours of Volatile Liquids at Temperatures below the Boiling-Point." Subsequently he pursued, conjointly with Dr. Emil Erlenmeyer, a series of researches which, besides settling the formula of mannite and the relation of the sugar group to the alcoholic series, afforded one of the earliest complete studies of isomerism among the alcohols. In 1867 he prepared propione, by the action of carbonic oxide on sodium-ethyl, and together with the late Mr. E. T. Chapman and Mr. Miles H. Smith invented the well-known ammonia process of water analysis. Some years later, conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he brought out the moist combustion process. In 1871 he conducted for the Government an investigation into the quality of the milk supplied to the London workhouses. Conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he made periodical analyses of the London Water Supply, which were regularly published by the late Government's Water Examiner in his official returns. Mr. Wanklyn is author of five text-books for Chemists and Medical Officers of Health, viz.: a "Treatise on Water Analysis," a "Treatise on Milk Analysis," 1878; "Coffee, and Cereal Analysis," 1881; and in 1890, the two last-named the joint production of Mr. W. and himself. He is also the "Gas Engineer's Chemical." In 1859 he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Sciences. He was an honorary member of the Edinburgh Chemical Society, and belongs to none of the other societies.

WANTAGE, Lord, Robt. Lloyd-Lindsay, O.B.E. The second son of the late Dr. James Lindsay, of Balerno, was born on April 17, 1862, educated at Eton, and then at Sandhurst. Obtaining a commission in the 1st Grenadier Guards in 1880, he served throughout the Crimean War, and was decorated with the Victoria Cross for his bravery at Alma. He became Lieutenant of the Scots Guards in 1887, and retired from the army. He was Equerry to the Prince of Wales from 1887 to 1891, and was Colonel of the New Volunteers from 1891 to 1895. He was of the Hon. Artillery Corps from 1881. He sat in the House of Commons as member for Berks. from 1885, and was Financial Secretary to the War Office, in Lord Salisbury's Government, from 1887 to 1891, when he was raised to the Peerage in the title of Baron Wantage. Chairman of the Committee Recruiting in the Army, and was a Member of the Royal Commission on the Poor Law, and Chairman of the English Education Society, and in this capacity visited Paris during the siege of 1870, and was present during the War of 1876. An extensive landowner in Berkshire and other counties, he has himself the farming of his estates, and in 1894 he was before the Royal Commission on Agriculture, and also before the Commission on Agricultural Holdings by Mr. Chamberlain. Lieutenant of Berkshire General of Volunteers, and was created a Knight of the Prince of Wales. He has published articles in The Century and in other popular magazines on Volunteer matters, on Agriculture, and on farming management. Addresses: 20 Grosvenor Street, S.W.; Locking House, Woking, Surrey; and the Athenaeum.

Adolphus William, Litt.D., born at Hampstead, Dec. 2, educated in Germany (where he held Consular and diplomatic posts), and at Bury St. Edmunds School. In 1854 he entered at Cambridge, of which College he was Fellow in 1860, having graduated Classical Tripos of the previous year. In 1866 he was appointed Lecturer in History and English Literature at Owens College, Manchester. He held Examinerships in the Universities of Cambridge and London, and was elected an hon. LL.D. of Glasgow, and Litt.D. of Cambridge. He took part in the movement for the re-organization of the Victoria University, 1889; and afterwards succeeded, in the new University, the late Sir John Lubbock as Chairman of the General Board of Studies (during three periods) of the University. In December 1888, he was elected Principal of Owens College. He held the Principalship at the close of the occasion of his resignation of the office of the city of Manchester conferred upon him. Dr. Ward's English translation of Curtius's Greece, 5 vols., 1868-73; and of the following works: "A History of English Dramatic Literature to Queen Anne," 2 vols., 1875; "History of Austria in the Thirty Years' War," 1869; "Chaucer," 1880; "The English Language," 1882, in Morley's English Language series. He edited the 4th edition of "Pope's Poetical Works," the Clarendon Press edition of "Doctor Faustus" and "The Merchant of Venice," 1878 (2nd edit. 1892); the Chetham edition of Byron's Poems, 2 vols., 1878; "Sir Henry Wotton," a biographical sketch, 1898; and has contributed to the "Dictionary of National Biography," the Encyclopædia Britannica, Edinburgh, and English Reviews, Herbst's Encyclopædie der Geschichte, the Saturday Review, Manchester Guardian, and others. He is Litt.D. of the University of Glasgow, Hon. Litt.D. of the University of Manchester, and Hon. LL.D. of the University of Glasgow, a Life Governor of Owens College, Manchester, an honorary member of Peterhouse, and Hon. Member of the German Shakespeare Society. In 1879 he married Adelaide, daughter of the Rev. J. B. Lancaster, Rector of Grittleton, Wilts. He has two sons, The Hon. William, Fallowfield, Manchester, and The Hon. Athol, Manchester.

Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge, is the eldest son of Francis Marshall Ward, Esq., and was born in 1854, and educated at the Owens College, Manchester, and at Christ's College, Cambridge. He commenced his scientific career as a Field Botanist, after the model of the older school of naturalists, his studies being incited by his early life having been spent in the country. About 1870 he came under the influence of Darwin's writings and teachings, and in 1874 he entered more formally on a scientific career by attending Professor Huxley's Biology course at South Kensington. Since that period he has worked especially as a Cryptogamic and Physiological Botanist and Pathologist. In 1875 he entered the Owens College, Manchester, and obtained distinctions under Professors Roscoe, Gamgee, and Williamson. In 1876 he gained an entrance Scholarship in Natural Science at Christ's College, Cambridge, and remained a scholar of that College until 1879, when he took his B.A. degree, having obtained first class honours in the Natural Science Tripos for that year. He proceeded to the M.A. degree in 1885, and in 1892 was made Doctor of Science of the University of Cambridge. Meanwhile he had assisted in the teaching of Botany at South Kensington, and at the Owens College, and had delivered a course of lectures on Botany at Newnham College, Cambridge. Besides coming under the influence of the late F. M. Balfour and others at Cambridge, he had also studied in Germany during vacation, and especially in the laboratories of Professor Sachs of Würzburg; he had also published the results of original investigations into the embryology of Angiospermous flowering plants, the researches having been carried out in the laboratory at Würzburg and in the Jodrell laboratory at Kew. Immediately after taking his degree in 1879, Mr. Ward was appointed by the Colonial Government to proceed to Ceylon on a scientific mission, to investigate and report upon the causes of the coffee leaf disease, which was then devastating that island. This investigation occupied two years, and he returned to England in 1882, having meanwhile published several Reports and Memoirs on his discoveries connected with the parasitic fungus which caused that disease, and the measures necessary to combat its ravages, as well as on other botanical subjects. During his travels in the tropics he also made observations and collected material and notes for subsequent publications. Some of the principal were on the structure and morphology of Asterina, and of Meliola, and other tropical fungi, and especially of the curious epiphyte Strigula, an epiphyllous lichen. On his return in

John Quincy Adams, sculptor, was born at Urbana, 1830. In 1850 he entered the late H. K. Brown, an artist, where he remained six years. He opened a studio in New York, where he modelled his "Indian and the Good Samaritan," "Commodore Perry, with reliefs, "The and many busts and small figures. He built a studio in Forty-second Street, New York, where he made "The Soldier," and statues of Gen. Reynolds, Gen. Washington, Gen. Putnam, an equestrian statue of Gen. Thomas, Gen. Daniel B. F. Johnston, Lafayette. He built a larger studio at 107 West 12th St., where he has made the statue of Washington for the New York City building, a colossal seated statue of Garfield, with three figures on the pedestal; "The Pillar of Henry Ward Beecher," statues, a seated statue of Garfield, &c. He visited Europe in 1887. For three years he was president, and for one term President of the National Academy of Design.

Mary Augusta, or, as the poet Elsmere" prefers to call her, on the title-page of her autobiography, is a granddaughter of Dr. Arnold, of Rugby. Her father was his eldest son. The other Thomas Arnold, the son of Dr. Arnold, at one time held a position in Tasmania. There is a granddaughter of Governor Brough, at Hobart, several of his children, among them (in 1851)

his eldest daughter, Mary Augusta. Mrs. Ward, who at that time devoted much attention to early Spanish literature and history, contributed a large number of articles on Spanish subjects to the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," edited by Dr. William Smith and Dr. Wace. She also, up to 1885, wrote many critical articles for Macmillan's Magazine. Her first volume was a child's story—"Milly and Olly," 1881, illustrated by Mrs. Alma Tadema. Her first novel was "Miss Bretherton," 1884, which was favourably received but made no particular noise in the literary world. The story is a mere sketch by the side of the later novel. Mrs. Ward's next volume was the translation (1885), of that very remarkable book, Amiel's "Journal Intime." In February 1888, she published her novel of "Robert Elsmere," which was widely read and much discussed. It passed, in five months, in the three-volume form, through seven editions; and since that time over 80,000 copies of the one-volume edition have been sold in this country, and about half a million in America, the sale in this latter case consisting largely, of course, of pirated editions. It has been translated into German, Dutch, Danish, and Spanish. During 1892 appeared her second long novel, "The History of David Grieve," which was followed in 1894 by "Marcella," by "Sir George Tressady" in 1896, and by "Helbeck of Bannisdale" in 1898. In the spring of 1890 Mrs. Ward took part in founding a settlement for social work amongst the crowded working-classes of South St. Pancras. That was known for some years as University Hall. Gradually, however, the work of the settlement outgrew the limits of the small and dingy hall in Marchmont Street, in which, up till June 1897, the social work was carried on by the Warden and residents from the hall in Gordon Square. An appeal was made for funds with which to build a new settlement, and owing to the munificence of Mr. Passmore Edwards, the fine building in Tavistock Place which bears his name was begun in 1896 and opened informally in October 1897, and formally by Mr. John Morley in February 1898. Combined with the social and educational work of the settlement is an annual lectureship, named after Dr. Jowett, the aim of which is to further an improved historical teaching of the Bible. Mrs. Ward remains the Honorary Secretary of the Settlement. She married, in 1872, Mr. Thomas Humphry Ward, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford (see following memoir).

formerly Vicar of St. Barnabas, King Square, E.C., and was born at Hull on Nov. 9, 1845. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated (first class Final Classical School) in Mich. Term, 1868. Before this he had been a candidate for the Civil Service of India, and in 1866 was placed first in the Open Competition. He resigned, however, without proceeding to India, and in February 1869 was elected Fellow of Brasenose, of which College he was Tutor from 1870 to 1880. He then engaged in literary work in London. In 1880-81, with the aid of the principal critical writers of the day, he brought out "The English Poets: Selections with Critical Introductions" (4 vols.); in 1884 he published "Humphry Sandwith, a Memoir"; in 1885 he edited "Men of the Reign"; and in 1887 the 12th edition of "Men of the Time." In 1886, with the help of various writers on Art, he brought out "English Art in the Public Gardens of London," a work illustrated with 120 photogravures; and in 1887 he published "The Reign of Queen Victoria: a Survey of Fifty Years of Progress." In this work he had the assistance of Mr. Matthew Arnold, Professor Huxley, Lord Wolseley, Sir Henry Sumner Maine, and others. It should be added that as an undergraduate he was (with the late Edward Nolan and R. S. Copleston, now Bishop of Colombo) joint author of "The Oxford Spectator." Mr. Humphry Ward is a member of the staff of the Times. In 1872 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Arnold, Mary Augusta, the authoress of "Robert Elsmere" (q.v.). Addresses: 25 Grosvenor Place, S.W.; Stocks, Tring; and Athenæum.

WARDELL, Mrs. E. A. See TERRY, ELLEN.

WARDEN, Florence (Mrs. James). is the daughter of C. W. Price, of the London Stock Exchange, and was born at Hanworth, Middlesex, on May 16, 1857. She was educated at Brighton, and in France, was engaged in teaching from 1875 to 1880, and was on the stage from 1880 to 1885. She then devoted herself to writing, and a large number of popular novels are the result of her work, amongst which there may be mentioned: "At the World's Mercy," "The House on the Marsh," "A Prince of Darkness," "A Witch of the Hills," "St. Cuthbert's Tower," "Ralph Ryder of Brent," "A Woman's Face," "A Spoilt Girl," "A Passage through Bohemia," "A Perfect Fool," "Kitty's Engagement," "A Dog with a Bad Name," "Our Widow," "Pretty Miss Smith," "Forney and Furnace," "A Sensational Mystery of Dudley Heath by the Shore," "A Lady in 1897," "Girls will be Girls," "The Romp," 1897. Mr. Ward married in 1887 to Mr. James

WARDLE, Sir Thomas of the Chemical, Geological, and Mining Societies, and of the Imperial Society, and of the Royal Society, Chevalier of the Honour of France, Officier de la Légion d'Honneur, and of the Ordre de la Soie aux Expositions de Paris, 1875 and 1889, was born at Leeds in 1831, and was educated at the Leeds School and Leek Grammar School. He is in business as a silk and calico printer. He is acquainted with the history and manufacture of silk, and was honorary superintendent of the Silk-Culture Court in the Colonial Exhibition of 1884, and Chairman of the Silk-Museum at Manchester Royal Jubilee in 1887, besides being Chairman of the St. James Square in 1887, and that held at the Duke of Devonshire in 1894. He has written several monographs, chiefly on the history of silk. He married Elizabeth Ward in 1861. Address: 54 St. Edward's

WARE, The Right Rev. D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Exeter, was born in London, the youngest son of Mark Ware, of Russell Square, London. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and first class in Divinity, D.D. 1889; Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, from 1855 to 1858; and of Kirkby Lonsdale from 1858 to 1861. He was Proctor in Convocation from 1861 to 1868; Bishop Suffragan of Exeter (Diocese of Carlisle) from 1868 to 1879; and of Carlisle from 1879 to 1888. He married (1) Elizabeth Sarah, daughter of G. Hornby; and (2) in 1888, the daughter of Harvey Goodwin, B.A. Addresses: The Abbey, How Foot, Grasmere, R.S.

WARINGTON, Robert F.C.S., F.I.C., &c., eldest son of William Warington, F.R.S., was born Aug. 22, 1838, and educated at the Royal College of Chemistry, has held appointments, first as Chemist at the Royal College, Cirencester, 1863; and

Professor George Charles
A., was born on May 23, 1845.

at Oakville, Toronto, and is the son of the late Canon Warr, M.A., Vicar of Childwall, Lancs. His maternal grandfather was Henry Denny, of Waterford, Ireland, founder of the firm of H. Denny & Sons. He was educated at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and at the University of Cambridge, as a foundation scholar of Christ's, and subsequently of Trinity College. He was first Bell (University) Scholar in 1866, Porson and Members' Prizeman in 1868, third in the first class of the Classical Tripos in 1869. He was elected by competition to a Fellowship at Trinity College, 1870, but refused it on the ground of the religious tests then in force, to which he objected as restricting liberty of conscience, and as debarring Nonconformists from the benefits of the national universities. Mr. Warr otherwise took a prominent part in the Liberal movement which led to the abolition of the tests in 1871. He was Secretary of the Cobden Club from 1871 to 1874, and he has been active in popular educational work. He was on the staff of St. Paul's School from 1870 to 1872, Lecturer at Garrick Chambers from 1872 to 1881, and was elected to the chair of Classical Literature in King's College, London, 1881, having previously been Classical Lecturer in the same college. He is also Professor of Latin at Queen's College, London, and assisted Bishop Barry in founding the Ladies' Department of King's College in 1877. He has advocated the establishment of a Teaching University in London, and in connection therewith, the restoration of Gresham College according to the founder's design, as a department of research and higher (post-graduate) instruction. In 1883 he wrote the "Tale of Troy," a classical masque founded on Homer, which he produced with the co-operation of the late Sir Charles T. Newton, at Cromwell House; this was followed in 1886 by the "Story of Orestes," from Æschylus. The mise-en-scène was designed by Lord Leighton, P.R.A., Sir E. J. Poynter, R.A., Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., Mr. Henry Holiday, Mr. George Simonds, and Mr. Walter Crane. The two plays, with introduction and sonnets by the author, and the music (chiefly composed by Sir Walter Parratt), are published in a volume entitled "Echoes of Hellas" (Marcus Ward, 1888), elaborately illustrated by Mr. Crane. Mr. Warr is also the author of a work entitled "The Greek Epic," 1895, and has translated from the German Teuffel-Schwabe's "History of Roman Literature" (Bell, 1890). He has contributed articles to the Classical Review, and poems and translations to the Academy. He married, in 1885, Constance Emily, daughter of the late Thomas

Keddey Fletcher. Address: King's College, Strand, W.C.

WARRE, The Rev. Edmond, D.D., Head-Master of Eton College, was born in London, on Feb. 12, 1837, and is the second son of the late Henry Warre, of Bindon, Somerset, and Mary Caroline, third daughter of Nicolson Calvert, Hunsdon, Herts. He was educated at Eton, where he obtained the Newcastle Scholarship in 1854, and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a Scholar. He obtained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1856, and in the final Classical Schools in 1859. He rowed in the Oxford University eight against Cambridge at Putney in 1857-58, and was President of the O.U.B.C. in 1859. He was elected Fellow of All Souls in the same year, and retained his Fellowship three years. He assisted in raising the University Volunteer Corps, and was Senior Captain of the Battalion, 1859-60. He was also one of the Committee which formed the N.R.A. He commanded the 2nd Bucks Eton Coll. Volunteer Rifle Corps, 1878-84, and is Hon. Colonel of the corps and V.D. In 1860 he went to Eton as Assistant-Master, a post which he held under Drs. Goodford, Balston, and Hornby, until the appointment as Provost of the last-named in 1884. At that date, Mr. Warre was designated by general opinion as the most likely successor to the vacant post, for which his services and his great popularity at Eton seemed specially to qualify him. He was accordingly elected Head-Master by the governing body, and shortly afterwards he took his degree of D.D. at Oxford. He became one of her Majesty's Honorary Chaplains in 1885, and was elected an Honorary Fellow of Balliol College in 1896. He married, in 1861, Florence Dora, second daughter of Lieut.-Col. C. Malet, of Fontmeil Parva, Dorsetshire. Addresses: Eton College, Windsor; Baron's Down, Dulverton; and Athenæum.

WARREN, Lieut.-General Sir Charles, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., R.E., F.R.S., late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, was born at Bangor, on Feb. 7, 1840, and is the second son of the late Major-General Sir Charles Warren, K.C.B. He was educated at Cheltenham College, Sandhurst, and at Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1857, became Captain in 1869, Major and Lieut.-Colonel in 1878, and Colonel in 1882. From 1867 to 1870 he conducted a series of excavations in Palestine, chiefly round the walls of the enclosure of the Temple of Jerusalem; and wrote "Underground Jerusalem," 1876; "The Temple or the Tomb," 1880; and, in conjunction with

Captain Conder, "Jerusalem," 1876. He was Special Commissioner to settle the boundary of the State; and in the same year settle the Land Question in the land. He commanded the Horse during the operations of the Field Force in Egypt in the same year. During the year he organised a Volunteer Force of the Transvaal in the capacity of Officer and Administrator of the Major Warren returned in 1880, and was appointed Surveying at Cheltenham, went to Egypt, and was on duty in restoring in the authority of the Khedive to justice the murderers of the party. From 1884 to 1885 was commander of the Bechuanaland; and in 1885 commander of the forces at the stationer in the same year of the Metropolitan Police, which he resigned in 1885. He was appointed to command the Straits Settlements with rank of Major-General, and returned to England, and he was appointed to command the Thames District. He married, in 1861, Fanny de Havdon, Esq. of Gillingham, 16 Charing Cross, S.W.

WARREN, Thomas, President of St. Mary's, Oxford, since 1885, was born at Bristol, Oct. 21, 1834, a surviving son of Algernon J.P., merchant in that city, daughter of Thomas H. gadock, Carmarthenshire, educated at Manilla Hall, then at Clifton College, was Scholar of Balliol, 1872-76. He won the H. ship in 1872, took a first Moderations in 1873, won Prize for Greek Verse in the first class, Lit. Hon. obtained the Craven Scholarship and was Fellow and Tutor of College from 1877 to 1885. President of Magdalen, 1875 to 1876. on and notes, Macmillan, 1888 (re-l, 1892 and 1898); "Education and City," an address on secondary education, Stanford, 1895; "By Severn Sea and Poems," printed at the private press of H. O. Daniel, of Worcester, Oxford, 1897, and published by John Murray, London, in 1898 (two editions). He has also ten introductions to the poems of J. Keats and Robert Bridges for A. H. Maudslayi's "Poets of the Century," and has edited "Selection of Poems of G. J. Keats, F.R.S.," Longmans, 1896. He married, on Dec. 16, 1886, to Mary, the youngest daughter of Sir Benjamin Sturges, 2nd Baronet. Address: The Rectory, Magdalen College, Oxford.

WARRY, George Deedes, Q.C., is the son of George Warry, of Shapwick, Dorset, and was born on June 7, 1831. He was educated at Winchester and Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1856. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and practised on the Western Circuit. He was appointed Recorder of Portsmouth in 1879, and became a Q.C. in 1888. He is the author of "Treatise on Rating." Mr. Warry was married, in 1860, to Catherine Emily, daughter of the late John Clitstone Esq., of Taunton. Address: 1 Essex Street, Temple, E.C.

WATERHOUSE, Alfred, R.A., LL.D., was born July 19, 1830, at Liverpool, and is the eldest son of Alfred Waterhouse, of Liverpool, and White Knights, Reading. He studied architecture in Manchester, under Richard Lane, where he began to practise his profession, after travelling, chiefly in Italy. His first considerable work was the Manchester Assize Courts, the result of a hardly-contested competition. In that city he has also been the architect of the County Jail, the Owens College, the National Provincial Bank of England, the Refuge Assurance Company's Offices, and the Town Hall, the result of another competition. In Liverpool his works comprise the London and North-Western Hotel, the Seaman's Orphanage, the Turner Memorial Home, the Royal Infirmary, and University College; in London, the Natural History Museum, the Prudential Assurance Company's Office in Holborn, the New University Club, the New St. Paul's School, the Central Institution of the City and Guilds of London Institute, the National Liberal Club, the New Weigh-House Chapel, the Surveyors' Institute, University College Hospital. At Bushey the Clergy Orphan School was built by him. Balliol College at Oxford, Caius and Pembroke at Cambridge, have been partly rebuilt from his designs. At Leeds the Yorkshire College of Science and W. W. Brown & Company's Bank have been erected from his designs. The Hotel Métropole, Brighton, is also an example of his work. Among mansions may be mentioned Heythrop, Oxon., Eaton Hall, Cheshire, Iwerne Minster, Dorset, as his most conspicuous works. Mr. Waterhouse was honoured by receiving a grand prize for architecture at the Paris Exhibition of 1867, and a "Rappel" at that of 1878. He is a Member of the Royal and Imperial Academy of Vienna; an Associate of the Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres, et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique; an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts at Brussels, Antwerp, Milan, and Berlin; also Correspondant d'Académie des Beaux-Arts (Institut de France). He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts, England, Jan. 15, 1878, and became a full member on June 4, 1885. He received the Royal Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1878; and has filled the President's chair of the same body during 1888, 1889, and 1890. He was made LL.D. of Victoria University in 1895. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Hodgkin, barrister, in 1860. Addresses: 20 New Cavendish Street, W.; Yattendon Court, Berks; and Athenæum.

WATERHOUSE, John William, R.A., was born in Rome in 1849. His first important picture was "Sleep and his brother Death," exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1874. This was followed by "Miranda," 1875; "After the Dance" (hung on the line), 1876, and "The Emperor Honorius," a classical picture, the most important he had as yet painted, which is said to have been suggested by a passage in the "Antonia" of Wilkie Collins. The "Oracle" and the "Lady of Shalott," and "Circe" followed among many other works, and in 1895 Mr. Waterhouse achieved fame with his "St. Cecilia," and with his "Pandora" in 1896. "Hylas and the Nymphs" was exhibited in 1897, and "Flora and the Zephyrs" and "Ariadne" in 1898. In 1899 he exhibited a portrait of Miss Molly Rickman. He was elected an A.R.A. in 1885, and R.A. ten years later. In April 1899 he was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2. Addresses: 6 Primrose Hill Studios, Regent's Park, N.W.; and Athenæum.

WATERLOW, Ernest Albert, A.R.A., is the son of the late A. C. Waterlow, lithographer, and was born in London on May 24, 1850. He was educated at Eltham Collegiate School, at Heidelberg, sociation for the Advancement; and one of the governors of Birkbeck Institution. Mr. the author of "Taxation," "Our Railways: should we have National Property?" "Rates and Fares," "Our Progress," "The Progress of British Elementary Education at Road," "Technical Educational Employment of France, with England," "The Employment of Women Abroad," "French Silk Manufactures," "Industrial Employment of the Colonies," "Geographical Aspects of Commercial Geography," "The Essence of Art: is it a Mystery?" "Manual or Mechanical Instruction, a Necessary or a Compulsory System of Technical Education and Precious Stones." "The Necessity of the Advocacy of the Necessity of Technical Education is founded on investigation; he has visited all the great capitals and cities of the world. In 1878 an extended tour of the United States and Canada. He was a Captain in the Royal Artillery, and has served in Hong-Kong, India, and in Africa. He is now at Arkston Gardens, S.W.

Sir Edward William Watkin, Bart., Knight of the Order of the Most Honourable Order of Greece, and of Leopold, the eldest son of the late Sir Edward Watkin, who was born in Manchester in 1800, began business as a merchant in 1809 till his death in 1861. Sir Edward William Watkin, Bart., died on September 26, 1819, and was first employed as his father's counting-house clerk (coming a partner), until the year 1819 he was appointed to the management of the Trent Valley Railway. He joined the London and North Western Railway Co., and to his various offices which he has now retired, he was, and afterwards as a chairman of the Manchester, Lincolnshire Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, and was the first Chairman of the South-Eastern Railway. He was Director of the Great Eastern Railway Companies. He became one of the directors of the Manchester Athenæum, and was secretary of the committee organised to extricate the institution from its pecuniary embarrassments, suggested and carried out the scheme of the soirées of that institution, held in the Free Trade Hall, and was, however, by Mr. Charles Dickens, and Serjeant Talfourd, in the years 1843, 1844, and 1845 respectively. In 1843 he wrote a pamphlet entitled "A Plea for Public Parks," and became one of the honorary secretaries of the committee which followed, through whose efforts the three existing parks (viz., the "Queen's," "Peel" and "Philip's") were obtained for Manchester and Salford. In 1843 he and a few other members of the Manchester Athenæum started the "Saturday half-holiday" in Manchester, which resulted in the general closing of the warehouses for business at 2 P.M. every Saturday. In 1845, Mr. Watkin was one of the originators of the Manchester Examiner newspaper. In 1861 he undertook a private mission to Canada, at the desire of the Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the object of bringing the five British Provinces into union, and the establishment of a connection between Canada and the Atlantic by an independent railway system, which he successfully accomplished. Mr. Watkin was first elected to Parliament in 1857, but was afterwards unseated. He was returned to Parliament, unopposed, for Stockport, in 1864, and again returned at the head of the poll in 1865. He was defeated, however, by a narrow majority in 1868, and contested East Cheshire unsuccessfully in 1869. Whilst in Parliament in 1866-67, he obtained, as the Chairman of two Select Committees, important alterations in the laws affecting railways, and especially the change in the law of limited liability, which enabled companies to reduce the capital by mere resolution, and without winding up. In 1868 he received the honour of knighthood. Sir E. Watkin was again returned to Parliament at the general election of February 1874, for the united boroughs of Hythe and Folkestone, and was returned unopposed for the same boroughs, at the general election of 1880. In that year he was created a baronet. He was High Sheriff of Cheshire, 1874. He has done much to improve the harbours of Boulogne and Calais, so as to establish fixed services by large steamers, to increase the comfort of the transit, and to have already reduced the time between London and Paris to seven hours; this movement is progressing. The proposed tunnel under the Channel to connect England and France is an enterprise with which he has been connected in conjunction with the late Michel Chevalier, M. Léon Say, and other eminent French and English public men. Assuming that the experiment would succeed, Mr. Watkin recommended Mr. Gladstone to approach the European and American powers with a view to the complete neutralisation of the work, believing that this would do away with governor for the University of Cambridge, of King Edward VI.'s School, Birmingham, and was joint founder of the Birmingham Philosophical Society in 1879, and President of the same, 1880 and 1881. The Rev. H. W. Watson was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1881, and Examiner in Mathematics in the University of London in 1893. He is one of the original founders of the Alpine Club. Address: Berkswell Rectory, Coventry.

WATSON. Rev. John ("Ian Mac-laren"), M.A. Edin., D.D. St. Andrews, son of John Watson, collector of Inland Revenue, Edinburgh, was born on Nov. 3, 1850, at Manningtree, Essex, and was educated at Stirling and Perth Grammar Schools, and at Edinburgh University; New College, Edinburgh; and Tübingen. Adopting the ministry as his profession, he was licensed in 1874, and became Assistant at Barclay Free Church, Edinburgh. He was ordained in 1875, and has been minister at Logiealmond, Perthshire; at Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, 1877-80; at Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, from 1880 until the present time. Under his pen name of "Ian Mac-laren," he has published the following famous studies of Scottish rural life: "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," 1894; "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," 1895; "Kate Carnegie and those Ministers," 1896; "A Doctor of the Old School," 1897; "Afterwards, and Other Stories," 1899. As John Watson he has written: "The Upper Room," 1895; "The Mind of the Master," 1896; "The Cure of Souls" (Yale Lectures on Practical Theology), 1896; "The Potter's Wheel," 1897; "Companions of the Sorrowful Way," 1898. His works have enjoyed an immense popularity, and have run through many editions. Address: 18 Sefton Drive, Liverpool.

WATSON, John Crittenden, American naval officer, was born in Kentucky, August 24, 1842, and appointed to the Naval Academy in Sept. 1856, graduating there in 1860. From 1862 to 1864 he was aide to Admiral Farragut on the Hartford, and took part in the forcing of the Mississippi River and capture of New Orleans in April 1862, and the subsequent operations in that vicinity. In 1864 he was in the battle of Mobile Bay, and was wounded there; from 1865 to 1867 he was attached to the Colorado, in the European Squadron, being made Lieut.-Commander in July 1866, and Commander in 1874. He was Lighthouse Inspector from 1880 to 1886, and became Captain in March 1887, and Commodore in November editor to that paper. He is author of various plays, including "A Pretty Bequest," "In Cupid's Court," "Tally-Ho!" "Wanted—an Heir," "Tuppins & Co.," "Carnival Time," "Killicrumper," "An Odd Pair," "A Big Bandit," and "Melodrammie," written for the German Reeds. "Held Asunder," his first important piece, in four acts, was produced at the Prince of Wales's Theatre in April 1888. Subsequently, "Christopher's Honeymoon," three-act farce, was played at the Strand in 1889; "Calumny," an adaptation of José Echegaray's "El Grase Galeoto," at the Shaftesbury in 1889; "The Pharisee," in association with Mrs. Lancaster-Wallis, at the Shaftesbury in 1891; "For Love and Liberty," at the Union Square Theatre, New York, in 1891. "Joseph" (1895) was played over a twelvemonth throughout the United States. "The Haven of Content" was played at the Garrick in 1896. He is also author of a number of one-act pieces, WATTS, George Frederick, R.A., D.C.L., LL.D., born in London on Feb. 23, 1817, first exhibited at the Academy in 1837. In addition to portraits, he made some historical attempts, such as "Isabella finding Lorenzo dead," from Boccaccio, in 1840, and a scene from "Cymbeline" in 1842. At Westminster Hall, in 1843, his cartoon of "Caractacus led in Triumph through the Streets of Rome," obtained one of the three highest class prizes of £300, and created sanguine hopes for his future career. Having spent upwards of four years in Italy, he again obtained, in 1847, the highest honours at the competi- tion in Westminster Hall. His two colossal oil-pictures, "Echo" and "Alfred inciting the Saxons to prevent the Landing of the Danes," which secured for him one of the three highest class prizes of £500, were, with the pictures of Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. Cross, purchased by the Commis- sioners. The latter is in one of the com- mittee-rooms of the new Parliament Houses. Mr. Watts exhibited his "Paolo and Fran- cesca" and "Orlando pursuing the Fata Morgana" at the British Institution in 1848, and his full-length portrait of Lady Holland at the Royal Academy in the same year. "Life's Illusions," a picture of the class of "Fata Morgana," exhibited in 1849, was followed in 1850 by "The Good Samaritan," painted in honour of Thomas Wright, of Manchester, and presented by the artist to the Town Hall of Manchester. For the Houses of Parliament Mr. Watts has executed one of the frescoes in the Poets' Hall, "St. George overcomes the Dragon," from Spenser, finished in 1853, and he has painted in fresco the west end of the new hall at Lincoln's Inn. For some time he has exhibited regularly at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery. His principal productions have been por- traits and ideal or mythological subjects, such as the well-known "Love and Death"; "Endymion"; "Orpheus and Eurydice"; "Daphne"; and (1886) "Hope." In 1882 an exhibition of Mr. Watts's works was held at the Grosvenor Gallery, and in February 1897 another exhibition of his works was held at the New Gallery. Reaching the age of eighty in this month, he was pre- sented with a congratulatory address, signed by several hundreds of names, the foremost in the country, and representa- tive of the most divergent interests. The banquet to Corot in the last year of his life can alone be compared to this presentation. Mr. Watts originally painted for his own house some forty portraits of the most eminent of his contemporaries in public life, literature, and art, and these he has now bequeathed to the nation. He executed the portrait of Lord Tennyson in 1860. Mr. Watts is still at work, either at his easel or at an immense equestrian statue, which he hopes to be the crown of his career. The Watts portraits are now placed in the National Portrait Gallery. They include portraits of Tennyson, Matthew Arnold, and a number of other great Englishmen of modern times, and are unquestionably the prime glory of this section of the national collections. Mr. Watts has also presented to the Tait Gallery a number of his finest allegorical paintings. In 1869 he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait of the Rt. Hon. Gerald Balfour, M.P. In 1880 the honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon Mr. Watts by the University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. was offered by the University of Cambridge in 1882, and conferred the following year. In 1885 Mr. Gladstone was empowered to bestow the honour of a baronetcy upon Mr. Watts, which honour was declined by him. He is a member of foreign academies, and has received the Cross of the Légion d'Honneur. In 1886 Mr. Watts married Mary, third daughter of the late Charles Edward Fraser Tytler, Esq., of Aldourie, Inverness-shire. London address: Little Holland House, Melbury Road, Kensington, W.

WATTS-DUNTON, Theodore, poet and critic, was born at St. Ives in 1836, but has spent most of his life in London. He received a somewhat elaborate private education at Cambridge. Originally trained as a naturalist, his father having been an active member of scientific societies, he was afterwards brought up to the law, and passed his legal examination in 1863. He first attracted the attention of the literary public as a writer of sonnets. One of the chief of those who took an interest in his early poetical work was Dante Rossetti, whose intimate friend Mr. Watts became. Under Mr. Rossetti's influence he made a critical study of the Old Masters in Florence, Venice, and Rome. After Rossetti's death he expounded the principles of his art in the Nineteenth Century and elsewhere. Mr. Watts-Dunton, then Mr. Watts, became literary and artistic critic to the Examiner at a time when that paper was being brilliantly conducted by Prof. Minto, who numbered among his contributors such men as Mr. Swinburne and Mr. W. Bell Scott. When Prof. Minto left the Examiner Mr. Watts-Dunton and became the literary critic of the Athenaeum, in the well as in the Examiner. He first attracted criticism with his efforts by the Examiner. Mr. Watts-Dunton's cycle of poems are volume form and his "Reminiscences" are short. Athenaeum. He has to the Quarterly Century, and Watts. , LL.B., is the son of Webb, and was born in 1859. He was educated at private schools in London, in Switzer- land, at the Birkbeck Institute, and the City of London College. After spending three years in an office in the City, he entered the Lower Division of the War Office in 1878, became a Surveyor of Taxes in the following year, and in 1881 gained a place in the Colonial Office (Class I.), by open competition; he resigned, however, in 1891. He then lectured on Political Economy at the City of London College, and the Working-Men's College, and he now is a Lecturer in the same subject at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He was called to the Bar in 1885, has devoted a good deal of time to writing on economical subjects, and still continues to do so. He has a seat on the London County Council as Progressive Member for Deptford. Amongst his many works there may be mentioned: "Socialism in England," 1890; "The Eight Hours' Day," which he published in 1891, conjointly with Mr. Harold Cox; "The London Programme," 1892; "The History of Trade Unionism," 1894, con- jointly with his wife; also with her, in 1898, "Industrial Democracy," and "Problems of Modern Industry" (a reprint of essays and studies written during the last ten years); and "Labour in the Longest Reign," 1898. Mr. Webb was married, in 1892, to Beatrice, daughter of the late Richard Potter, who is herself deeply interested in matters relating to Trade Unionism and labour problems, and who wrote the "Co-operative Movement in Great Britain" in 1891, and also con- tributed to Charles Booth's "Life and Labour of the People." Address: 41 Grosvenor Road, Westminster Embank- ment.

WEBBER, The Right Rev. William Thomas Thornhill, D.D., Bishop of Brisbane, is the son of the late William Webber, surgeon, of Norwich, by Eliza, daughter of the late Sir Isaac Preston, Bart. He was born in Upper Grosvenor Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Jan. 30, 1837, and educated first at Tonbridge School, and afterwards at Norwich, under the late John Woolley, D.C.L. (who was subsequently head of Sydney University), and at Pembroke College, Oxford. B.A. 1859, M.A. 1862, D.D., honoris causa, 1885. He was ordained by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait), deacon, 1860; and priest, 1861. He was assistant curate at Chiswick from 1860 to 1864, when he was put in charge of the newly-constituted district and parish of St. John the Evangelist, Red Lion Square, Holborn, which he held up to 1885. Here he built the noble church in Red Lion Square, together with clergy- house attached, and schools with accommodation for 700 children in three departments. The site, church, clergy-house, schools, &c., cost £49,000. This large sum of money was collected and administered by Mr. Webber, in the course of an exceedingly busy life of public usefulness. He was one of the Governors of Sion College from 1882 to 1885, and represented Finsbury on the London School Board from 1882 to 1885; was Chairman of the Local Managers of the Board Schools from 1877 to 1885, and Guardian of Holborn Union from 1874 to 1883. He was also connected very prominently during these years with the Charity Organisation Society, the Working-Men's Club and Institute Union, the Girls' and the Young Men's Friendly Societies, and many other institutions and societies. On the resignation of Bishop Hale he was appointed to the vacant See of Brisbane, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), on St. Barnabas's Day, 1885. When the Bishop took charge of the diocese in 1885 there were but 33 clergy and 39 churches; these, as the result of five years' work, have been increased to 67 clergy and 75 churches. Address: Bishopsbourne, Brisbane.

WEBER, Sir Hermann, Kt., M.D., F.R.C.P., received his medical education at Bonn University, of which he is M.D., and at Guy's Hospital. He is a Fellow of the Royal Med. Chir. Soc., Consulting Physician of the German Hospital, London, and of the Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor. He received the honour of knighthood at New Year 1899. Together with Mr. Rube, Dr. Hillier, and Dr. Malcolm Morris he was appointed by the Prince of Wales as representative of the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption and Other Forms of Tuberculosis at the Berlin Congress for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, May 24-28, 1899. In conjunction with his son, Dr. Parkes Weber, he has published a work, now in its second edition, on "The Mineral Waters and Health Resorts of Great Britain." He is also author of "Notes on the Climate of the Swiss Alps," 1864; "Klimato - Therapie," in Ziemssen's "Handbook of Gen. Therap.," 1880; the Croonian Lectures for 1885 on "Hygienic and Climatic Treatment of Phthisis"; and of many contributions to Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," Allbutt's "System," the Transactions of the Royal Med. Chir. Soc., &c. Address: 10 Grosvenor Street, W.

WEBSTER, Hugh Alexander, born April 21, 1849, at Laurencekirk, Kincardineshire, is the second son of the Rev.

David Webster, Canon and Isabella Mackinnon; the most part of his father had spent the early part of his life as a schoolmaster, he attended the University of Edinburgh in 1872 and 1880. After having voted to scholastic and literary, he joined the editorial staff of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and contributed to the successive editions in biography, literature, and geology, geography. For the geographical department he has written, among others, "Europe," "Italy," "Patagonia," as well as papers of the geographical work. He has contributed also to the Encyclopædia, the Geographical Magazine, the Ordnance Gazetteer, and well as for many years to the press. He was one of the Scottish (now Royal) Geographical Society in 1884. He was the first honorary editor of the Geographical Magazine (1885-87), and his services were elected first Vice-President of the Society. He was a member of the University of Edinburgh in 1887, and was elected Fellow of the Society of Edinburgh in 1887. Address: Edinburgh University.

WEBSTER, Sir Richard K.B., G.C.M.G., Q.C., General, second son of Sir Richard Webster, Esq., Q.C., and daughter of Richard Calvert Abbey, Lincolnshire, was born in 1842. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, gained a Foundation, and graduated in both the Classical Tripos. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1864, the south-eastern circuit. He was afterwards an ancient but honorary office Postman in the Court of Westminster. He was made Counsel in 1878, and is the only man who has past received that hono- age. He has been extensively in most of the heavy commercial cases of the day, and in a large general practice, in numerous appeal cases before the Lords. He is one of the Charterhouse. He contested the election of 1880, and was appointed Attorney-General of the first Government of Lord Salisbury, having up to that date held the same office from 1886 and was reappointed in 1895. In July to November 1885 he was at Llancauneston, and at the general election of 1885 he successfully stood for Wight, defeating Mr. John Lubbock, former Liberal member, by 436. In 1886 he was again elected a majority of 1258, and still at constituency, where among others he is extremely popular. Secretary-General in the late Conservative Government, he appeared in the Times before the Parnell case. In 1893 he was one of the representatives in the Behring Commission. He married, in the month of June, the only daughter of William Calthrop, Esq., M.D., of the county of Lincoln; she died in 1877. Addresses: Hornsey, Kensington, W.; 2 Pump Court, E.C.; Winterford, Cranford; and Athenæum.

WEDDERBURN, Alexander Dunlop, Q.C., was born in 1854, and was the surviving son of the late James Wedderburn, of the Madras High Court (see Burke's "Baronetage," 1896). He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and at Balliol College, Herts, and at Balliol College, where he graduated in 1877. He was called to the Inner Temple in January 1880; Q.C. in May 1897, and Re-elected in November 1897. In 1887, Mathilde, only child of William Segelcke, Esq., Ad-Cadogan Place, S.W.; Chambers Building, Temple, E.C.

WEDDERBURN, Sir William, was born in Edinburgh on 1838, and succeeded his father as 3rd, and succeeded his father as 3rd, in 1882. He was educated at Edinburgh, and Edinburgh University. He obtained the third place in open competition for the Indian Civil Service in 1860, and in the Bombay Civil Service in 1860 to 1887, became a Judge of the Court at Bombay, and finally acting as Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay. He was the Indian National Conference, was a member of the Royal Commission on Indian Expenditure in 1882, and acted as Chairman of the Indian Parliamentary Committee. After leaving Ayrshire unsuccessfully he was elected Liberal member for Glasgow in the following year. Sir W. has written numerous papers on Procedure, Arbitration Courts, Banks, Village Communities, and matters of Indian interest. He was married, in 1878, to Mary Blanche, daughter of H. W. Hoskyns, of North Perrott Manor, Somerset. Address: 84 Palace Chambers, Westminster.

WEDMORE, Frederick, born at Richmond Hill, Clifton, July 9, 1844, is the eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Wedmore, of Druid Stoke, Stoke Bishop. He is of an old Quaker family, and was educated at a Quaker private school, and studied afterwards at Lausanne and Paris. Resolved upon the pursuit of journalism and eventually literature, he entered, for a while, a Bristol newspaper office, but in 1868 came to London and wrote occasionally in the Spectator. His novels of "A Snapt Gold Ring" and "Two Girls," published in 1871 and 1874, were, at the time, well reviewed, but are understood to be works on which Mr. Wedmore sets small store. He has never been willing to reprint them, and it is no doubt by his volumes of short stories, "Pastorals of France," "Renunciations," "English Episodes," and "Orgeas and Miradou," that Mr. Wedmore takes serious rank as an imaginative writer. But about the time of the appearance of the first of these volumes, "Pastorals of France" (1877), he had become known to the public by his contributions to art-history and criticism; "Studies in English Art" showing his familiarity with the earlier masters of the English School, the "Masters of Genre Painting" (1880), evincing an appreciation of Dutchmen such as Terburg and Metz, and of the elegant and penetrating art of the French Eighteenth Century; while, a little later, "The Four Masters of Etching," and a much-remarked study in the Nineteenth Century of the great French etcher, Meryon, proved Mr. Wedmore's knowledge of the principles and history of the art of etching. More recently, his volume called "Fine Prints," in the Collector Series, dealt likewise from the point of view of the connoisseur with mezzotint and line-engraving, and in a manner singularly lively and vivid. Mr. Wedmore occasionally contributes a paper on art or dramatic subjects to the reviews, and the more important art criticisms in the Standard, with which journal he has been connected in this matter since 1878, have for years been known to proceed from his pen. He has nevertheless found time to produce an original study on the chief French novelist, Balzac, in the Great Writers Series (1889), to edit the English edition of M. Michel's "Rembrandt" (1893), and to write since that time the later and most characteristic volumes of his imaginative work. It should be added that Mr. Wedmore has not only given readings of his short stories before distinguished audiences in England, but that he has visited America and lectured at Harvard and the Johns Hopkins University in 1885. He is an Honorary Fellow of the Royal Society of Painters, Etchers, and Engravers, and a member of the Committee of the Burlington Fine Arts Club. He is married to the youngest daughter of the late Mr. John Peele Clapham, a Yorkshire magistrate and Treasurer of County Courts of the West Riding, and by her he has one daughter. Club: Burlington Fine Arts.

WEIR, Harrison William, born at Lewes, May 5, 1824, second son of John Weir and Elizabeth Jenner, at an early age showed a great inclination for drawing animals and birds, and the study of natural history. He was, in 1837, articled to Mr. George Baxter to learn designing on wood, colour-painting, and wood-engraving. This proving quite a different kind of work to what it was represented, he used means to have his articles cancelled, but having in vain endeavoured to get released from his engagement, he of necessity served his time; thus seven years of his life, as far as the work of an artist was concerned, were entirely wasted, and therefore he, in his profession, is self-taught. He was elected a member of the new Society of Painters in Water-Colours in February 1849, and some time before exhibited his first picture, the "Dead Shot," at the British Institution. He also exhibited in Suffolk Street and at the Royal Academy, his pictures of animals, birds, domestic poultry, fruit, &c., being much sought after. Among his best are "Startled," "The Forester," "A Servant of all Work," with several of birds singing; "The Christmas Carol"—a robin, published by the Illustrated London News. Mr. Weir's first wood drawings appeared in the Illustrated London News, also the Pictorial Times; he was one of the original staff of the Field, and also the Graphic and Black and White. He has been connected, either by his pencil, pen, or both, with over one hundred and twenty books, his best known being "Routledge's Natural History," "Poultry Book," "Funny Dogs with Funny Tales," "The Adventures of a Bear," also those of "A Dog" and "A Cat." His later works, which are written by himself as well as illustrated, are: "Every Day in the Country," "Animal Stories, Old and New," "Bird Stories, Old and New"; but what he considers his chief book is, "Our Cats, and All About Them," a quite original production, and one that will last as a work of reference, the standard of excellence being given in it, as laid down by Mr. Harrison Weir for judging at shows. He also gives rules for breeding cats; among others the

WELLS, Henry Tanworth, R.A., was born in London on Dec. 12, 1828, and is the only son of Henry Tanworth and Charlotte Wells. His first practice in art was as a miniature painter. When only seventeen years of age he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait of "Master Arthur Prinsep," a brother of Mr. Valentine Prinsep, R.A. Steadily, if at first slowly, the young artist advanced in this difficult branch of art. From the year in which he first exhibited till 1861 he never ceased to be fully represented as a miniaturist on the walls of the Academy; and in this long series were a portrait of Princess Mary of Cambridge, painted for her Majesty, 1853; a group of the painter himself and his wife in tourist costume, 1860; together with full lengths of the Duchess of Sutherland and Frances, Countess of Waldegrave. In the Academy Exhibition of 1861 he made his first appearance as an oil-painter with a full-length portrait of the volunteer colonel, Lord Ranelagh. A prominent place was awarded in 1865 to his "Preparing a Tableau Vivant"—a portrait group of three sisters; and he also painted a landscape, entitled "The Old Garden at Twilight." In 1866 he painted a large picture of "Valentine Prinsep, Point," and in May 1867 was elected A.R.A. Since that time he has been a constant exhibitor of pictures, some of which are mentioned, as "The Rides Past and Present," 1867; "The Earl of Spencer and their Friends," 1868; "Letters and Notes," 1868; "Lord Clarendon and his Attendants in the House of Lords," 1868; "The Fishmongers' House, York," 1868; "Lord Chancellor Selwyn's Mercers' Company," 1868; "A November Morning at the Mall," 1868; "The Old Stonebreaker," 1868; "The Old Stonebreaker's Walk," 1869. In 1870 he painted a large painting of "Victoria presenting the Queen in the year of June 20, 1837, receiving the death of William IV. and the Archbishop Howley and the Earl of Berlain. In 1882 was exhibited at Yewden, a group of artists (including the painter himself) and friends, painted for the artist G. C. Schwabe. This was a group of subjects of labour. "Loading," 1884; and "Quarrying," 1885. In 1887 appeared his painting "The Queen and her Judges" in the ceremonial of the opening of the Courts of Justice. Since that time he sent a succession of portraits to the Academy Exhibitions, among them Drury Lowe and his brother Drury Drury-Lowe, Mr. T. N. of Hounds, Mr. Justice Lowthian Bell, Bart., Sir V. Beach, the Bishop of Ripon, Pembroke, (in 1890) Sir C. (presentation portrait), at Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Solicitor, the Grillon Club Series, and was elected a Royal Academician in 1870. He married Joann, an accomplished artist, whose addresses: Thorpe Lodge, W., &c.; and Athenæum.

WHARTON, The Right Hon. John Lloyd, M.P., is the son of the late J. T. Wharton, of Dryburn, Durham, and was born in 1837. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1862. He represented Durham in the House of Commons from 1871 to 1874, and he has, since 1886, been Conservative member for the Ripon Division of Yorkshire. He received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Durham in 1887. Mr. Wharton is an Alderman, and Chairman of the Durham County Council, a Director of the North-Eastern Railway, a Deputy-Lieutenant, and Chairman of Quarter-Sessions. He was married, in 1870, to Susan, daughter of the Rev. A. D. Shafto. Addresses: 42 St. James's Place, S.W.; and Dryburn, Durham.

WHARTON, Rear-Admiral Sir William James Lloyd, K.C.B., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., is the second son of the late Robert Wharton, County Court Judge, of York, and was born in London, March 2, 1843. He was educated at the Rev. Philip ia, Sept. 10, 1836, and graduated at Point Military Academy in 1859. He was Lieutenant of Cavalry until 1861, when he resigned and entered the Confederate service for the war between the States, where his abilities had ample opportunity, and his rise in rank was rapid. He soon became Colonel of an Infantry Regiment, and then Brigadier-General, Major-General, and Lieut.-General of the Army. He commanded the Cavalry Corps of the Western Army in 1862, and was made Senior Cavalry General of the Confederate Armies, May 11, 1864. After the close of the war he became a lawyer and settled in Alabama in 1869, and was elected to Congress, serving in the Lower House of the Forty-seventh, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. On the outbreak of war between the United States and the United States in 1898 he was one of the first to offer his services to the Government, and received an appointment as Major-General of Volunteers. He was second in command of the force sent to invade Cuba, and his energy, bravery, and ability were conspicuous in the operations resulting in the capture of Santiago, July 1, 1898. In August he returned with his troops to the United States to superintend, after a severe campaign in all regions in the sickly season.

WHISTLER, James Abbott (1834-1903), painter, was born at Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1834, and is the son of an engineer. He studied first at the Military Academy of West Point, and afterwards, in 1857, under Gleyre, the artist, in Paris. There he was a fellow-student with George du Maurier, who has amusingly caricatured him in "Trilby." In 1859 he began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, and in 1863 settled in London. His more important paintings are: "The White Girl," 1862; "The Last of Old Westminster," 1863; "At the Piano," 1867; "Portrait of my Mother" (an arrangement in grey and black, now in the Luxembourg, in Paris) and "Portrait of Thomas Carlyle" (bought by the Glasgow Corporation in 1891), 1872, two of his most famous portraits; "Nocturne in Blue and Silver," 1882; "Arrangement in Black" (Lady Archibald Campbell), and the still better known "Arrangement in Grey and Green" (Miss Alexander), both exhibited in Munich in 1888. Of later portraits, that of Señor Sarasate is the most famous. His fame as an etcher is even higher than his fame as a painter; and he has also issued some wonderful lithographs on the architectural beauties of London, especially the picturesque side of river life. His theories on art are eminently original and individual, and in consequence have been the subject of much criticism; he has made most interesting experiments in colour, generally succeeding best with the more subdued. In 1878 he sued Mr. Ruskin for disparaging his art in "Fors Clavigera," and at the end of a very lengthy trial he was awarded one farthing damages. He became President of the Royal Society of British Artists, and obtained for it a Royal Charter. In 1888 he married the widow of the late E. W. Goodwin, architect and writer, and a daughter of Mr. J. B. Philip the sculptor. In 1895 he was sued by Sir William Eden for not delivering up a portrait of Lady Eden which had been paid for. He was allowed to keep the portrait, but amerced in damages. Besides being a painter, Mr. Whistler has published one of the most amusing books of modern times, "The Gentle Art of making Enemies," 1890, which is in every way a remarkable human document. He has also written "Ten o'Clock," 1888. In 1898 he was the President of the International Exhibition of Art which was held at Knightsbridge. Paris address: 110 Rue du Bac.

WHITAKER, William, B.A. (London), F.R.S., F.G.S., Assoc. Inst. C.E., was born in London, May 4, 1836, and educated at St. Alban's Grammar School and at University School, London. He was appointed to the Geological Survey, April 1, 1857, and retired from the service in 1896. He has written many Geological survey memoirs, notably "The Geology of the London Basin," 1872; and "The Geology of London, and of Part of the Thames Valley," 2 vols., 1889; also many papers in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, in the Geological Magazine, and in several other scientific publications, ranging from 1860 to 1898. Mr. Whitaker was Murchiston Medallist of the Geological Society, 1886; and received a medal from the Society of Arts in 1890. He was editor of the Geological Record for several years, and is hon. member of the Geologists' Association, of the Geological Societies of Manchester and of Liverpool, and of various other local societies. He has been President of the Norwich Geological Society, of the Hants Field Club, of the Hants Lit. Phil. Soc., of the Geological Section of the British Association, 1895, and of a Section of the Congress of the Sanitary Institute, 1886 and 1897. He was elected President of the Herts Nat. Hist. Soc. in 1897, and of the Geological Society in 1898. Permanent address: 3 Campden Road, Croydon.

WHITE, The Hon. Andrew Dickson, American educator and statesman,

Stanford University, in California. In 1892 he became American Minister to Russia, and in 1897 he was again sent to Germany as American Ambassador. President White gave very largely of his own means to Cornell University, and endowed the school of history and political science in that institution with his own valuable library, comprising 30,000 vols. and 10,000 pamphlets. Besides contributions to periodicals he has written "Outlines of a Course of Lectures on History," 1861; "A Word from the North-West," 1863; "Syllabus of Lectures on Modern History," 1876; "The Welfare of Science," 1876; "Paper Money Inflation in France," 1876; "The New Germany," 1882; "On Studies in General History and in the History of Civilisation," 1885; "A History of the Doctrine of Comets," 1886; "European Schools of History and Politics," 1887; and "A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in

Sir William Henry, K.C.B., O., F.R.S., &c., Director of truction, and Assistant Con- e Navy, was born at Devon- 2, 1845, and educated at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, when that institution was under the direction of the Lords of the Council, the Admiralty supporting it. He graduated at the head of the list of students in 1867, and received the highest diploma as naval architect (Fellow of the Royal School of Naval Architecture); was at once appointed to the Constructive Department at the Admiralty, where he remained until 1883, rising through the various grades to the rank of Chief Constructor. He was appointed Professor of Naval Architecture at the Royal School in 1870, and held that position there and at the Royal Naval College, concurrently with his Admiralty appointment, until 1881. He resigned his position in the Admiralty in March 1883, receiving a special letter of thanks from the Lords Commissioners for past services. From March 1883 to October 1885 he was engaged in the organisation and direction of the shipbuilding department of the Elswick Works of Sir William Armstrong and Co. During that period he designed and built a number of warships for foreign navies, with speeds exceeding any previously attained. He was invited by the Admiralty, in 1885, to assume the office of Director of Naval Construction, which he now holds, in conjunction with that of Assistant Controller of the Navy. He is the professional chief of the Royal Corps of Naval Constructors. During the period he has occupied this position there has been unprecedented activity in shipbuilding for the Royal Navy. The special programme of construction proposed by Lord Northbrook in 1885 was in its early stages at the date of his appointment, and he had responsible charge of its execution. Sir William White has been responsible for the designs and supervision of the construction of all the ships laid down for the Royal Navy since 1885. These number 216, with an aggregate displacement tonnage of 1,200,000 tons, 2,000,000 horse-power, and over 2000 guns. This great fleet cost nearly seventy millions for hulls, propelling machinery, armour, &c.; and the outlay on their armaments probably brings the grand total up to nearly ninety millions sterling. It includes various special programmes of new construction. That under the Imperial Defence Act of 1888 involved an expenditure of £850,000 on eight vessels built for service in Australasian waters, and maintained by grants made by the Colonies. The Naval Defence Act of 1889 provided for the construction of seventy ships at a cost of £22,500,000. These were practically finished in five years, and represented the greatest feat in new construction accomplished up to that time. Subsequently the "Spencer Programme" of 1895, and the "Goschen Programmes," from 1896 to 1899, threw the Naval Defence Act into the shade. The average annual rate of expenditure on new construction has been more than trebled during the period Sir William White has held office, and in the current financial year (1899-1900) is to exceed £8,800,000, whereas, prior to 1887, the yearly average was only about £2,250,000. Amongst the vessels designed by Sir William White are some of the largest, swiftest, and most powerful battleships and cruisers existing in modern war-fleets. His services in connection with the Naval Defence Act were recognised by his appointment as C.B. in 1891. In January 1896 he was created K.C.B. His Majesty the King of Denmark has conferred the distinction of Knight Commander of the Dannebrog on him. The University of Cambridge has given him the honorary degree of Doctor of Science, and the University of Glasgow that of Doctor of Laws. He is also a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh; President of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers; Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Institution of Naval Architects; Past President of the Institute of Marine Engineers; Member of the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition of 1900; Honorary Member of the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland, the North-East Coast Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders, the Liverpool Engineering Society, and the Society of Engineers; Member of the Association Technique Maritime of France, the Royal United Service Institution, and the Royal Institution; Fellow of the Royal School of Naval Architecture, and of the Imperial Institute. He is the author of a "Manual of Naval Architecture," which has become a standard work, and has been translated into Russian, German, and Italian, and officially approved as a textbook for the English, German, Italian, and other navies; also of a "Treatise on Ship-building," and of numerous memoirs and papers on the science and practice of ship-building, either published separately, or appearing in the Proceedings of the societies of which he is a member. Addresses: The Admiralty, S.W.; 39 Roland Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

WHITEHEAD, Right Rev. Henry, M.A., was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he was a Scholar of his College, took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1874, and a first class in the final school of Lit. Hum. in 1877. He graduated B.A. in the same year, and was also elected a Fellow of his College. From 1878 to 1883 he was a Lecturer and

Tutor of Trinity College and as an Oxford Don he was at St. Nicholas, Abingdon, was appointed Principal of College, Calcutta, becoming a Fellow of the University. He became Examining Bishop of Calcutta in 1887, the Oxford University Master in 1890. Mr. Whitehead was in 1899 consecrated Bishop of

WHITEHEAD, Sir Jas. D.L., J.P., F.S.A., F.R.S. Lord of Wilmington Manor, youngest son of the late Mr. head, of Appleby, Westmorland, born March 2, 1834, and was the Appleby Grammar School, one of the leading schools. He was engaged for many Bradford merchant in the City. In 1879 he was largely engaged in founding the Rowland Hill Fund for Aged and Distress Servants, of which he is a many years he has taken as political matters, his views an advanced Liberal; and in other constituencies, he was invited to contest the West of Kent. At that time, declined to stand, his being precarious as to necessary voyage; and in 1881 the business. In 1882 a request nearly all the electors of Cheap was presented to be elected Alderman of that ward. In 1884-85 he was Sheriff of London and Middlesex, decorated by the King with the Knight Order of Leopold on his visit to the Congo in the same year the King of him with the Knight Companion of the Order of Takovo, for his services to the Servian Minister and for his warm advocacy of the Federation. In 1885 he was the Fanmakers' Company. Her Majesty's Lieutenant of London; a Deputy-Lieutenant of Westmorland; a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Westmorland, and London. He was Chairman of the Visiting Committee of the London Prison, and one of the City of London Asylum many years he was a Governor of Anne's Bounty, of Christ's Hospital, St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas's, and St. George's hospitals. He is a Fellow of Antiquaries, and of the F

Statistical, and other learned. In 1884 he was induced to be Liberal candidate for North and; and after the Redistribution of 1885, and again in 1886, he that constituency, on each offering defeat by a small mass hands of the Hon. The great Fruit Show held in the London Guildhall in the autumn of 1890 was organised by him, and in many other ways he has contributed to the advance- ment of fruit culture in this country. For the famine in China he raised a larger sum than was ever collected for sufferers in any foreign country, with the excep- tion of the fund organised after the capitu- lation of Paris; and as a mark of appreciation he received a magnificent Tablet of Honour from the Viceroy of the two Kiang pro- vinces of China. As chairman he estab- lished and organised a penny-a-week collection in London factories, shops, workshops, and warehouses in aid of the Hospital Saturday Fund, from which there has been a large increase in the income of the hospitals. To meet the deficiency in the equipment of the Metropolitan Volun- teers he raised another fund, by which he was enabled to award to all the Metro- politan regiments sums sufficient to com- plete their equipment and to pay off all debts which had been incurred by them in the purchase of accoutrements. In July 1889 he established the Mansion House Association on Railway and Canal Traffic, to watch over the interests of agriculture and commerce in the revision of railway rates; and after his election to Parliament he took a prominent part in this and other important commercial matters, and was the acknowledged repre- sentative of the traders and agriculturists in the matter of railway rates. When in Sep- tember 1889 the prolonged Dock Strike had dislocated the trade of London, he formed a small Committee of Mediators which was ultimately enabled to bring the con- flict to a close. In addition to these more noticeable features, his mayoralty was distinguished by an extraordinary activity in educational, philanthropic, and other meetings of public utility, by an unusual number of banquets and entertainments, and by an entire abstention from political controversy. At the end of his year he was created a baronet on the recommenda- tion of Lord Salisbury; not, as has often happened, in connection with a royal visit, but "for highly valuable services during an eventful mayoralty." In 1889 he was further decorated by the King of Servia with the Grand Cordon of St. Sava for his efforts in the cause of education. In January 1890 he retired from his candida- ture in North Westmorland; but in March he was induced to accept a unanimous invitation to stand for Leicester, for which he was returned unopposed at the general credibility of the Greek historians, the scientific knowledge of the ancient world, and the Semitic traditions associated with the name of Joseph. He discovered the Raiyan depression in the Egyptian desert, established its identity with the lost lake Moeris of the Ptolemaic maps, and drew plans for its restoration, claiming it as the missing factor in Egyptian prosperity; and, by putting Goshen to the south of Memphis, explains in a new and material sense the Semitic traditions, Hebrew and Arabic. Numerous papers by him, or relating to his works, have been published (see Catalogue of British Museum), in various European languages, including Greek and in Arabic. He is a member of many learned societies, and was created Commander of the Osmanieh, 1888, for his services to Egyptology and exertions on behalf of the better control of the Nile.

HEER, Edward, F.R.S.E., traveller, second son of an engraver and water-colourist; born in London, April 27, 1841, educated at Clarendon House under private tuition. He was a draughtsman on wood, and active to sedentary employment. He undertook a series of journeys which usually changed the course of his life. In 1861 he ascended Mont Blanc, reputed to be the highest mountain in France, and discovered from another mountain 500 feet above the Pointe des Ecrins—which is of the French Alps, and was first ascended by Mr. Whymper between the years 1861-65, in a series of expeditions remarkable for boldness, he ascended one peak after another till then inaccessible. These expeditions included the ascent of the Mont Blanc (14,780 feet), July 14, 1865, on which his companions, the Rev. Canon Hadow, and Lord Dufferin, and one of the guides, were. In 1867 he travelled in the Alps with the intention of collecting fossiliferous deposits, and of penetrating into its interior. He was characterised by Sir John Lubbock as “truly the ne plus ça change geographical adventure on an individual.” No account of his published, although upon it he obtained cones of magnolia, and of other trees, which defied the former existence of luxuriance in these high northern Alps. This fine collection of fossil plants described by Professor Heer in the Transactions of the Royal Society in the first set was secured for the British Museum, South Kensington, where it is now exhibited. In 1871 Mr. Whymper published an account of his Alps under the title “Scrambles in the Alps in the Years 1860-69” (1871). In recognition of his work its author received the decoration of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Elizabeth. In May 1872 he again left for North Greenland, and soon among the mountains, returned Nov. 9 to Denmark, bringing with him, his second exploring Greenland, rich collections, among them fine specimens of fossil wood. In the years 1879-80 Mr. Whymper travelled in the Republic of Ecuador, exploring, ascending, and measuring the Great Andes on and near the Equator. On that journey he made the first ascents of Chimborazo (20,517 feet), Sincholagua, Antisana, Cayambe, and Cotacachi. The results were published in 1891-92 in three volumes, namely: (1) “Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator,” containing the narrative of the expedition; (2) “Supplementary Appendix to Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator,” containing descriptions of 133 new genera or species discovered on the journey; and (3) “How to Use the Aneroid Barometer,” giving the results of prolonged investigation into the behaviour of this instrument in the field and under the air-pump. On the publication of these works the Patron’s Medal was awarded to Mr. Whymper by the Royal Geographical Society. The botanical collections made on this journey are incorporated in the British Museum, South Kensington, and the antiquities in the British Museum, Bloomsbury. Mr. Whymper is an F.R.S.E.; Corresponding Member of the Société de Géographie de Paris; Hon. Member of the French, Swiss, and Italian Alpine Clubs, and numerous other kindred associations. In 1896 he published “Chamonix and Mont Blanc,” which has already got into its third edition; and in 1897, “The Valley of Zermatt and the Matterhorn.”

WHYTE, Rev. Alexander, D.D., was born at Kirriemuir, Forfarshire, on Jan. 13, 1837, and was educated at Aberdeen University and New College, Edinburgh. After being ordained, he began work as a minister at Free St. John’s, Glasgow, in 1866; but four years later he was transferred to Free St. George’s, Edinburgh, where he is now the senior minister. Dr. Whyte was Moderator of the Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland for 1898-99. He is the author of: “Commentary on the Shorter Catechism,” 1882; “Characters and Characteristics of William Law,” 1893; “Appreciation of Jacob Behmen,” 1895; “Bunyan Characters,” vols. i.-iii.; “Samuel Rutherford and Some of his Correspondents,” 1894; “Lancelot Andrewes and his Private Devotions,” 1895; “Bible Characters,” 1897; “Father John,” and “An Appreciation of the ‘Religio Medici,’” 1898. He is married to Jane, daughter of the late George Barbour of Bonksheid, Pitlochry, N.B. Address: 7 Charlotte Square, Edinburgh.

He has shown that the Faiyum depression is the same as the Goshen of the Bible, established its identity with the Moeris of the Ptolemies, and plans for its restoration as the missing factor in Egyptian history by putting Goshen to the Nile. He explains in a new and convincing manner the Semitic traditions, the numerous papers by him and his works, have been translated into the language of British and European languages, and into Arabic. He has been a member of learned societies, and a member of the Egyptian services to Egypt, and on behalf of the Government.

WILHELMINA, Hélène Pauline Marie, Queen of the Netherlands, the only child of King William III., by Queen Emma, his second wife, sister to the Duchess of Albany, was born at La Haye on Aug. 31, 1880, and succeeded to the throne, on the death of her father, on Nov. 23, 1890, her mother having shortly before, in consequence of the King's illness, been appointed Queen Regent. Accompanied by her mother, she visited this country some years ago, and spent several weeks in London, during which she visited the more important museums and public buildings of the metropolis. In April 1898 the young Queen and her mother, the Queen Regent, visited Paris, where a very favourable opinion was formed of the youthful sovereign. On August 31 of last year she reached her eighteenth birthday, and thus, according to Dutch law, attained her majority. She made her State entry into Amsterdam on September 6, and on the following day she assumed her regal responsibilities in the Nieuwe Kerk, wherein were gathered a brilliant and representative assembly. Queen Wilhelmina possesses simple tastes, is an accomplished linguist, and an experienced horsewoman.

WILKIN, Sir Walter Henry, K.C.M.G., D.L., was born in 1842, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1875. He was elected Alderman of the Lime Street Ward, in the City of London, in 1888, served the office of Sheriff in 1892, and was Lord Mayor from 1895 to 1896. He is the head of the firm of David Wilkin and Co., yeast importers, was knighted in 1893, and was created a K.C.M.G. in 1896; he is also a Knight Commander of several foreign orders. In 1896, on the occasion of the Hungarian Millennium Exhibition at Budapest, Sir W. Wilkin warmly interested himself in the matter, and originated a Mansion House committee, which materi-

my assisted the objects of the undersigned, and to which he gave his strong support. In April 1867 the Emperor of Austria, through the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, Count Deym, sent his best and kindest thanks to Sir Walter Wilkin, and expressed his conviction that to him was principally due the numerous attendance of British visitors at Budapest at the time of the exhibition. Address: 43 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park, W.

WILKINS, Mary E., author, was born at Brattleborough, Vermont, and was left an orphan at an early age, but was fortunately not thereby reduced to struggle for existence. At the age of sixteen she won a prize of fifty dollars offered by a Boston paper for a children's story. Her principal tales of New England life are: "Pembroke," "Jane Field," "A New England Nun," "Young Lucretia," "Madelon," "A Humble Romance" (perhaps her best book), "A Faraway Melody," "A Pot of Honey," "Jerome," 1897; and "Silence and other Stories," 1898. She travels much in the States, and enjoys the society of cultured Bostonians. She has been described, by perhaps rather enthusiastic admirers, as "the American Loti," but the comparison is not quite fair to either writer. Address: Randolph, Mass.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. George Howard, Bishop of St. Andrews, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1855, M.A. 1859). He was curate of Kensington, 1857-59; perpetual curate of Seaham Harbour, 1859-63; and of Auckland, Durham, 1863-67. In 1867 he was appointed incumbent of St. Peter's, Great Windmill Street, London, and in 1870 he became vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton Square. He was also an Honorary Canon of Truro Cathedral, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of that diocese. He was Select Preacher at Oxford, 1879-81. In January 1883 he was appointed to the See of Truro, which had become vacant by the promotion of Dr. Benson to the Archbishopric of Canterbury, and he was consecrated by the new Primate in St. Paul's Cathedral on April 25. On Feb. 9, 1893, he was elected Bishop of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane. He is the author of several works on devotional and other religious subjects, some of which have passed through very numerous editions. He married, in 1857, a daughter of Lieut.-Colonel Benfield des Vaux. This lady died in 1877. Addresses: Grigmoir, Birnam, Perthshire; and Athenæum.

WILKINSON, James John Garth, F.R.G.S., eldest son of James John Wilkinson, of Durham, born in Acton Street,

Gray's Inn Lane, London, and was educated at a private school, Hill, and Totteridge, Hereford, for the profession of a student. He was the first of whom he profoundly impressed representative Men. WILKINSON, The Rev. Thomas, D.D., Roman Cath

d Newcastle. He is the son of John Wilkinson, Esq., Newcastle, and its first County member who married Miss Elizabeth heiress of Harperley Park, in the county of Durham. He was born at Harperley on April 5, 1825. His education was in the house of Mr. Ovingham, on the river Tyne. At the age of thirteen he went to Harrow. Having finished his studies at Harrow four years at the University of London. His intention then was to enter the Church of England, but he found a community of young men at Harrow at the Church of St. James. After many doubts of his position, unsatisfied by the views of Dr. Pusey and others, he, with several of his friends, joined St. Saviour's, and was received into the Catholic Church on December 1, 1845. After a course of theological study he was ordained priest at Harrow, near Durham, on December 1, 1845. From that time till 1871 he led a life of constant toil among the poor, first at Wolsingham, and then at Harrow, both places in the immediate neighbourhood of his father's estate. He was elected Canon of the Cathedral of Durham. At length, in 1871, from constant labours of his mission his health broke down, and he was obliged to seek absolute rest. His health having been partially restored was again brought to the Continent, and he died at Harrow, near Durham, on December 1, 1886, and was buried at Harrow, the Vicar-Capitular, was elected to the diocese during the year 1887. In the election of the latter the unanimous vote of the Chapter fell on Canon Ovingham from that time governed the diocese till the arrival of the new Bishop, Callaghan, in March 1888, when he was Vicar-General and Provost of the Cathedral. In consequence of the death of Dr. O'Callaghan, Provost of the Cathedral in May 1888 appointed by the Pope as Auxiliary with administrative powers, and was consecrated at Harrow on July 25. On the death of Dr. O'Callaghan he was made Bishop of Harrow and Newcastle, and in his Cathedral Church at Harrow. He died on Feb. 18, 1890. Joseph Barber Wilks, Treasurer of the East India Company. He was educated at University College, London. He was created M.D. of the London University in 1850, became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1856, a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1870, Physician to Guy's Hospital and Lecturer on Medicine, President of the Pathological Society, a Member of the Senate of the University of London and of the General Medical Council, President of the Royal College of Physicians, Physician Extraordinary to the Queen, and Physician to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Sir Samuel Wilks is the author of "Lectures on Pathological Anatomy," and "Lectures on Diseases of the Nervous System," and a "Biographical History of Guy's Hospital." He was formerly for many years editor of the "Guy's Hospital Reports." He was member of the Medical Commission on the Contagious Diseases Act, 1868; a member of the Royal Commission on Contagious Diseases Act, 1871; was formerly Examiner in Medicine at the Royal College of Surgeons and at the University of London. Dr. Wilks has contributed papers on Alcoholism and Vivisection to the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. He delivered the Harveian Oration at the Royal College of Physicians June 26, 1879. He was created a Baronet in 1897, and in March 1899 was succeeded in the Presidency of the Royal College of Physicians by Dr. William Selby Church. Address: 72 Grosvenor Street, W.

WILLARD, E. S., was born at Brighton in 1853, and from an early age was bent on becoming an actor. His family had a certain old-fashioned horror of the theatre, and it was with much difficulty that the stage-struck boy induced them to let him enter upon a dramatic career. Mr. Willard obtained his first engagement at the Theatre Royal, Weymouth, and served an orthodox seven years' apprenticeship as a "stock" actor, playing every imaginable part from Macbeth to Claude Melnotte. During this period of his life he met Mr. Sothorn at Glasgow, and went on tour with him, playing Captain de Boots in "Dundreary Married and Settled," Sir Edward Trenchard in "Our American Cousin," and Mr. Smith in "David Garrick." On Boxing Day, 1875, he made his first appearance before a London audience, at Covent Garden, as Alfred Highflyer in "A Roland for an Oliver." He was then for some years in the country, played a variety of parts, and fell in with such actors as Charles Mathews, Phelps, Toole, Helen Faucit, and Barry Sullivan. In 1881 he returned to London, and took part with Miss Helen Barry in a series of matinees at the Imperial Theatre. In the September of that year he was engaged to play Clifford Armitage in "The Lights of London," at the Princess's. This was "the first of the long series of gentlemanly villains that promised to claim Mr. Willard as their perpetual impersonator. He next played Philip Royston in "The Romany Rye," and the Spider in "The Silver King" at the same theatre, Mr. Wilson Barrett taking the title-rôle in the latter play. This latter part made Mr. Willard famous; and he followed it up by such notable impersonations as the wicked lawyer in "Hoodman Blind," the title-rôle in "Jim the Peuman," and Geoffrey Delamayn in "Man and Wife." In 1888 Mr. Willard became lessee of the Shaftesbury Theatre, and as an "actor-manager" achieved a popular success in Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's "Middleman," in which play he created the part of Cyrus Blenkarn, the potter. "The Middleman" was succeeded by two other notable plays, "Dick Venables" and "Judah," in both of which Mr. Willard appeared in the title-rôle. On Nov. 10, 1890, Mr. Willard, having taken an engagement under Mr. A. M. Palmer, the New York manager, appeared in "The Middleman" at Palmer's Theatre, N.Y. Between this year and 1894 he made three consecutive tours in the United States, adding Hamlet to his repertory at Boston in October 1893, and bringing out "John Needham's Double," by Joseph Hatton, "Wealth," by Henry Arthur Jones, "A Fool's Paradise," by Sydney Grundy, and "The Professor's Love Story," by J. M. Barrie. In the summer of 1894 he returned to London, and brought out the latter play at the Comedy and then at the Garrick Theatre, where it enjoyed a long run. At the same theatre, in August 1895, he appeared in "Alabama." He pays constant professional visits to the States, and has lately been in Australia for a considerable time.

WILLETT, Alfred, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, at which he is now Surgeon and Demonstrator of Practical Surgery and joint Lecturer on Surgery, as well as Warden of the College. He became Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Eng., in 1862, Member of Council in 1887, and was Vice-President in 1897, when he delivered the Bradshaw Lectures on "The Correction of certain Deformities by Operative Measures upon Bones." He is Surgeon to St. Luke's Hospital for Lunatics, and to the Evelina Hospital, Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., &c., and has been Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge and the Royal College of Physicians. He has contributed on cases of malformation to Roy. Med. Chir. Soc. Address: 20, Pole Street, W.

WILLIAM II. Frederick Victor Albert, King of Prussia, Emperor of Germany, is the second son of Her Majesty the Queen Victoria, being the son of the Emperor Frederick. He was born in Berlin, Jan. 6, 1859, educated at Cassel, and passed the ordinary discipline of the Prussian Government until 1877, when he entered the University of Bonn. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Emperor Frederick, June 15, 1888. His Majesty was married in Berlin, Jan. 10, 1881, to Augusta Victoria, Princess of Sleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, a niece of Prince Alfred. He has six children. In August, 1890, the Emperor returned to the Queen at Osborne, and in October, 1891, to Berlin. In 1889 he received the King of Sweden, the Emperor of Austria, the King of Italy, the Emperor of Russia, the Emperor of Austria, and the Czar of Russia. Subsequently he visited Athens, Constantinople, at the marriage of his sister, Princess Sophie, to the Crown Prince of Greece. Thence he proceeded to Constantinople on a visit to the Sultan. He then made state visits to Heligoland and the Netherlands, and then crossed to England, accompanied by the Empress. The Imperial pair were splendidly entertained in London and the country. The Emperor was presented with the Freedom of the City. In 1892 the Emperor visited the Czar at Kiel, and the Emperor and Czar of a cordial character. In July, 1893, he visited Norway, and took part in the expedition, and in the autumn of 1893 he crossed to Cowes and took part in the regatta, at the same time visiting the Queen at Osborne. In October, 1893, he visited the Emperor of Austria. In 1893 he attended the silver wedding of the King and Queen of Italy, and in 1894 he visited Leo XIII. In 1894 he crossed to Cowes and worked in the regatta. During 1894 he visited Italy at Venice, and in April, 1895, he visited the Emperor of Austria. In 1894 he came to Cowes, but before, victorious in the regatta, he won the Queen's Cup. He afterward shot, and was present at the regatta. While at Aldershot he called on the Empress of the French. On the Emperor accepted the Count von Caprivi, whom he had chosen to succeed Bismarck. He is, indeed, in no sense depicted as a particular minister. He aims at the

ernment in a manner unusual in this of constitutionalism. Thus he has ated many laws, notably those for the session of drunkenness and immorality, ight before the Reichstag in 1892; and his frequent speeches to the army or to subjects he has shown himself a con- pous imitator and ardent admirer of his like and despotic ancestry. In a famous 1 characteristically Prussian speech, de- 1892 in 1892 at the annual banquet of Brandenburg Diet, he urged all grum- 1892 against him and his government to 1892 the dust of the Fatherland off their 1892 as soon as possible, and at the same 1892 reaffirmed his determination to press 1892 ward "on the path Heaven had laid out 1892 him," knowing that "He, our old ally 1892 Rossbach and Dennewitz, will not now 1892 me in the lurch." On a subsequent 1892 he urged the sons of Prussia to 1892 trustfully await the results which I may 1892 succeed in achieving in the course of the 1892 some years to come." The Emperor, in 1892 addition to being a firm governor, is a man 1892 the most varied interests and activities. 1892 1890 he inaugurated an International 1892 abour Conference. In 1892 he interested 1892 himself in Primary Education, and intro- 1892 duced a Primary Education Bill, which he 1892 afterwards abandoned in the face of vio- 1892 t popular opposition. In 1893 he let 1892 plainly understood that he intended 1892 new Army Bill to become law. Army 1892 1892 ers naturally interest him more than 1892 others. He has constantly issued 1892 ders of the day to the army, or made 1892 em speeches tending to keep up an in- 1892 sely martial spirit among them. A 1892 pical rescript (January 1895) bids them 1892 the standards of certain regiments 1892 d in the Franco-German war with 1892 leaves on public occasions. But he 1892 at bottom no hater of France or con- 1892 mner of things French. At the time 1892 President Carnot's death he showed his 1892 ncere sympathy with France by setting 1892 ee two French officers imprisoned as 1892 pies in German fortresses, and he is re- 1892 orted to be a constant reader of French 1892 terature. German colonial politics have 1892 artially engrossed his attention during 1892 cent years. In 1890 he personally took 1892 ossession of Heligoland, ceded to him 1892 y England, and considered it of great 1892 trategic importance. He has also con- 1892 cluded commercial treaties with Austria, 1892 witzerland, Italy, and other powers. To 1892 he cause of German culture, especially 1892 cience, he has been a liberal patron, and 1892 recent years has ennobled many pro- 1892 nent scientific men. He is a good 1892 olinist, and has composed a song, "Sang 1892 n Ägir," which has had an enormous sale. 1892 he has even ventured into the domain of 1892 eology, and has published a collection of sermons delivered by him to the men of his yacht, Hohenzollern, and in February 1892 he presented a richly-bound copy of the same to the Pope. In January 1895 the Emperor delivered a speech at a parlia- mentary soirée on the necessity for enlarg- ing the navy, a subject very near his heart. In the following month he read an address to the Military Association of Berlin, referring particularly to the need for co-operation between land and sea forces, and again emphasising the need of an enlarged navy, especially with reference to the equipment of cruisers. The Emperor showed his interest in the agricultural movement by his severe reproval of a de- putation of the Agrarian League for their methods of agitation, and by a promise that, if their tactics were changed, he would take a fatherly interest in them. He visited Cowes for the regatta week in August, being attended by a squadron of the Ger- man navy. In January 1896, subsequent to the defeat and capture of Dr. Jameson in the lamentable fiasco in the Transvaal, the Emperor caused much ill-feeling in this country by sending a congratulatory and laudatory telegram to President Kruger on the political situation. The relations between England and Germany were, for a time, somewhat strained. In April 1896 the Emperor made state visits to King Humbert at Venice and the Emperor Francis Josef at Vienna, being warmly received on both occasions. A rumour that the Emperor intended to visit Cowes for the regatta caused much angry demon- stration in the Berlin journals. Dining at Brandenburg, the Emperor made an important speech, in which, in an unmis- takable manner, he showed himself to be a socialist. He asserted that his great object was to continue the work of his grandfather, and bind closer the threads which knit the empire, and declared that he, the Emperor, would clasp hands with any man, be he workman or other, pro- vided he were willing to assist his king in so great a work. In April the Emperor paid a semi-state visit to Vienna, where he was again well received by the Emperor Francis Josef, and the populace. On his return journey he was present at the birth- day celebrations of the King of Saxony. The Berlin journals quite gratuitously gave this visit to Vienna a momentous political significance, which subsequent events have shown to be unwarranted. It was stated that as the visit was paid on the eve of the Austrian Emperor's de- parture for St. Petersburg, clear evidence was furnished of identity of aim between the three powers with regard to the Eastern Question. On August 25 the Emperor unveiled, with great ceremony, a statue of the Emperor William I. at Magdeburg. He visited Kiel on December 15, 1897, for the purpose of bidding farewell to Prince Henry of Prussia on his departure for China. This event was the occasion of a remarkable speech relative to German commerce and German outposts generally. During September and October 1898 extensive preparations were made for the Emperor's proposed visit to Palestine. The imperial party arrived in Turkey in the early days of October, and were welcomed with great éclat, and many brilliant scenes were enacted during the progress of the visit, which had the temporary effect of drawing together the two military despotisms, of which Kaiser and Sultan are the respective heads. The ostensible object of the pilgrimage was to lay the foundation stone of a Lutheran church at Jerusalem, for which purpose the German Gustavus Adolphus Society placed 30,000 marks at the Emperor's disposal. On October 25 the Imperial cortège entered Jerusalem, and spent days visiting the various places of interest about the city. The church was consecrated by the Emperor on the 21st with much solemnity, and the spectacle was said to be one of the most impressive in modern times. The Emperor and party left Damascus on Nov. 5, 1898, and travelling via Malta and Crete returned overland to Potsdam. In the summer of 1899 the Emperor emphasised his desire to visit Paris during the French Exhibition of 1900 by visiting a French man-of-war and commenting eulogistically on the French navy.

WILLIAMS, Charles, "the doyen of the Press," as he has been called, was born at Coleraine, Ireland, May 4, 1838, of a family originally of Penrhyn and Worcestershire. He was educated at Belfast Academy under Dr. Bryce, and at Greenwich under Dr. Goodwin, and was appointed leader-writer and reviewer on the Evening Herald in 1859. He became a special correspondent of the Standard in October 1859, and was senior special correspondent of that journal till Jan. 1, 1870, when he accepted the first editorship of the Evening Standard, but he resigned in 1872 to resume his old post. He retired from the Standard in 1884 in consequence of a change of management. Mr. Williams saw some service while young in Central America, and in 1859-65 was a devoted volunteer, while, as a holiday task, he accompanied the headquarters of the army of the Loire at the beginning of the second phase of the Franco-German War, and was one of the first two correspondents in Strasburg after the fall of that city in 1870, and he witnessed the final fighting in front of Le Mans in January 1871, while on a brief holiday. In 1877 he went to Armenia as correspondent of Ghazi Mushtar Pasha, an account of his journey entitled "The Armenian Diary of the Campaign in Armenia and Kurdistan" London, afterwards as a special correspondent of the defence by Military lines of Constantinople and headquarters of General Bismarck when the treaty of peace was signed. He subsequently took the task of recording the Berlin Congress, and then proceeded to Afghanistan as Candahar, and wrote the Frontier Transport in India, accompanied the Nile Expedition, and attracted some attention by a series of articles on the Bulgarians under Prince Charles Wilson for his conduct told off to advance upon the frontiers. He was the only Englishman to join the British Brigade in the spring of 1877, and made the campaign in the Balkans against the Greeks in the spring of 1878, and joined General Gatacre in the Bulgarian campaign, returning thither in the same year. He is the correspondent of the Times supplied that paper with a paper of Omurman, &c., although forced to complain of the censorship of war correspondents. Altogether, he has taken part in nine campaigns. Among his short treatise on "English Life of Sir Evelyn Wood" military questions in the Magazine, the Fort, the National Review, and some ecclesiastical questions, and stories in Times, Fort, Review, and other latest publication is a book of soldiers, original and selected. Messrs. G. Routledge & Co., for a time the managing Evening News, and was once Chairman of the London Institute of Journalists during which the Conference met in London. He was also chosen as President of the which he was a founder, in permanent address: Constitute Northumberland Avenue.

WILLIAMS, C. Greville, the son of S. H. Williams, was born at Cheltenham on . He was educated privately near Cheltenham, and then went to Dr. Anderson, Chemistry in the University for several years aided the progress of his chemical investigations. Eventually he became an assistant to Lord Playfair, who was at that time Professor of Chemistry at Edinburgh. At the present time Photometric or to the Gas Light and Coke Co. Williams has published numerous papers which have appeared in the Transactions of the Royal Society of London, Edinburgh, the Quarterly Journal of Chemical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, Comptes Rendus de l'Académie des Sciences, &c. Amongst his scientific papers may be mentioned the discovery of lepidine and numerous others of cyanine, and the hydrocarbon. He has of late years interested himself in Egyptology. Address: 36 St. John's Avenue, Wimbledon.

WILLIAMS, Dawson, M.D., F.R.C.P., his medical education at University College Hospital, and graduated M.D. with great distinction. He was House Physician and Obstetrical and Ophthalmic Assistant at University College Hospital, Registrar and Pathologist at St. Thomas's Hospital for Children, and Clinical Assistant at the Brompton Hospital. He is at present attached to the East London Hospital for Children, as well as Fellow of the Royal Society, and member of other societies. He was appointed Editor of the British Medical Journal in 1894 to the late Mr. Ernest Hart and has published "Medical and Surgical History of Infancy and Childhood," 1898, and "On 'Attenuation of Virus and Vaccination' in Cheyne's 'Bacillary Disease'" (New Sydenham Society), as well as various contributions to the Transactions of the Pathological Society. Address: 101 St. John's Street, W., &c.

WILLIAMS, Sir Edward Leader, M.E., and M.Inst.C.E., was born April 28, 1828. His father, the Rev. Sir Edward Williams, was the engineer of the Severn Navigation, and it was through his works that he began his professional career, which has from the first been devoted to river and canal improvements. He worked under his father until 1850, when he was appointed Engineer of the Great Northern Railway, time being cut through Lincolnshire. He was then employed on the River of Shoreham Harbour, and was for several years attached to the works of the Admiralty Pier at Portsmouth. In 1856 Mr. Leader Williams was appointed Engineer to the River Weaver where he completed important and extensive works, during the latter course of which he was appointed Engineer to the Bridgewater Navigation Company, which had bought the Bridgewater Canals and the Mersey and Irwell Navigation from the Bridgewater Trustees. During his tenancy of this new position Mr. Leader Williams had under consideration the possibility of so improving the Mersey and Irwell Navigation as to open it to large sea-going vessels. On June 27, 1882, a meeting was held at the house of the late Mr. Daniel Adamson, which led to the formation of a Provisional Committee "to consider the question of providing a waterway for large vessels from Manchester to the sea." Mr. Hamilton H. Fulton, C.E., and Mr. Leader Williams were subsequently invited to assist in a preliminary survey of the Irwell and Mersey Navigation, and were then appointed as joint engineers to the projected undertaking. But they differed considerably as to the best course to be pursued; Mr. Fulton advocating a tidal waterway, whilst Mr. Leader Williams suggested a scheme for using the tidal estuary for some distance, and from that point cutting a canal with four sets of locks to raise ships gradually to the level of Manchester (i.e. some sixty feet above the sea). Mr. Williams's scheme at last triumphed, and on Sept. 26, 1882, it was resolved to construct what is now known as the Manchester Ship Canal. For twelve years, till the formal opening of the canal by the Queen in the summer of 1894, Mr. Leader Williams was its chief engineer, and is now the consulting engineer. He had to surmount every variety of obstacle, but the triumphant completion of his vast design marks him out as one of the ablest and most practical men in his profession. He received the honour of knighthood in July 1894. Address: The Oaks, Altrincham, Cheshire.

WILLIAMS, Sir George, was born in 1821, and was educated at Tiverton Grammar School. He is a member of the firm of Hitchcock, Williams, & Co., warehousemen, and he holds the position of President of both the Young Men's Christian Association and of the Band of Hope Union. He received the honour of knighthood in 1894, and was married, in 1853, to Helen, daughter of George Hitchcock. Address: 13 Russell Square, W.C.

WILLIAMS, Sir John, Bart., M.D., F.R.C.P., is the third son of David Williams, of Blaenllynant, Carmarthenshire, and was born on Nov. 6, 1840. He was educated at the Normal College, Swansea, and at University College, London. He took the M.B. degree at the London University in 1866, and the

M.D. in the following year, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1879. He is a Fellow of and Emeritus Professor of Midwifery at University College, and is Consulting Obstetric Physician to University College Hospital. Formerly President, and still a Fellow, of the Obstetrical Society, he is also a member of numerous other medical societies, and he is an Examiner in Midwifery at the Conjoint Board in England. Sir John Williams holds the appointments of Physician to H.R.H. Princess Beatrice, and of Physician-Accoucheur to H.R.H. the Duchess of York. He is the author of "Structure of the Mucous Membrane of the Uterus, and its Periodical Changes," and "Cancer of the Uterus"; and has contributed many articles to obstetric journals. He was married, in 1872, to Mary, daughter of Richard Hughes, of Enistawe. Addresses: 63 Brook Street, W.; Plas Llanstephen, Carmarthenshire; and Athenæum.

WILLIAMS, John Carvell, M.P. for the Mansfield Division of Nottinghamshire, of Crouch End, Hornsey, is the eldest son of the late Mr. John Allen Williams, of Putney, by his marriage with Mary, daughter of the late Mr. John Carvell, of Lambeth, and was born in 1821. He was educated at a private school, and afterwards spent some years with a firm of proctors in Doctors Commons, where he acquired considerable knowledge of ecclesiastical matters. It was the opposition of the Nonconformists to the Factories Education Bill of Sir James Graham in 1843, and afterwards to the Minutes of Council on Education, which first brought Mr. Williams into prominence. In 1847, when but twenty-six years of age, he was appointed Secretary to the "British Anti-State Church Association," afterwards designated the "Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control," but popularly known as the "Liberation Society." That office he held for thirty years, and on his resigning in 1877 he was appointed Chairman of the Society's Parliamentary Committee, and Deputy-Chairman of the Executive Committee; and in 1898 he became Acting Chairman. At the general election of 1885 he stood as the Liberal candidate for the newly-created Southern Division of Nottingham, and was returned by a majority of 363. During the short time that Parliament lasted he succeeded in passing the Act for extending the hours within which marriages may be celebrated from twelve (noon) to three o'clock in the afternoon. At the dissolution of 1886 he was defeated by the Conservative candidate whom he had previously opposed; but shortly after he was invited to come the Liberal candidate for the Mansfield Division of Nottinghamshire, in prospect of the retirement of Mr. Foljambe. At the election he was returned for that constituency by a large majority of 2496. In 1893 the Liberal party were defeated, but his vote was reduced to 1385, though he lost 61 fewer votes. He is an active member of the Committee of the Disestablishment League for protecting the rights of Dissenters, and the Congregationalists, and other public bodies, and is President of the Hornsey Liberal Association. Ecclesiastically he is a Congregationalist, and has been deacon of St. Paul's, Surbiton and Stroud Green. He is one of the authors of "Disestablishment: the Imperial Parliament Series," edited by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P., and also written several pamphlets on Burials question, and various tracts, and is a contributor to the public journals, besides being one of the editors of the Liberator. Mr. Carvell Williams married, in 1849, the third daughter of the late Mr. Goodman, of Hornsey, by whom he has had five sons and three daughters, of whom only one survives. He resides at Serjeant's Inn, Fleet Street, and at Rise Gardens, N.

WILLIAMS, Joseph Powell, J.P., is the son of Mr. William Vinegar Brewery, Worcester, and was born in that city on Nov. 18, 1818. He was educated at the Edgbaston School, Birmingham. He entered the office of Mr. Graham, of 1, Birmingham, and shortly afterwards went to America on the business of the firm. On returning to England in London, and accepted an appointment under Sir Rowland Hill, the Postmaster-General, as a clerk in the Post-Office. He was employed by the Post Office Savings Bank, and began also to read for the Bar in this direction were, however, by his promotion to the Surveyor-General. In 1873 Mr. Powell returned to Birmingham, and associated himself with the work of the party. In 1877 he was elected Councillor, and soon afterwards became Chairman of the Finance Committee, in which position he held for many years, proving himself of inestimable assistance in establishing the City Corporation. He was recently elected a City Alderman, and gave great assistance in establishing the Birmingham Fire Brigade upon a permanent basis. Until the poll of 1886 Mr. Williams was Hon.

ingham Liberal Association and onal Liberal Federation; he then chairman of the Executive of the Liberal Union, and Vice-President of Birmingham Liberal-Unionist. He has represented South in the House of Commons as Unionist member since 1886, acted as Financial Secretary to Office since 1895. He is the pamphlets on "County Govern-," "The Ballot Act," and of an he Nineteenth Century on "The f Ground Rents." He is married daughter of the late S. A. Bind-S. Address: 6 Great George stminster, S.W.

Ordained was Curate of Rhos-Llaner- enbighshire, for two years, and in 1872 he became Vicar of Bodelwyddan, Flintshire. He was appointed Chaplain to the Bishop of St. Asaph in 1889, and in the same year also became Archdeacon and Canon of St. Asaph. In 1892 Mr. Williams was offered, and accepted, the Deanery of St. Asaph, whilst only a few months ago he was appointed Bishop of Bangor in succession to Dr. Lloyd, who has been compelled to resign in consequence of illness. He is the author of "The Duties of Churchwardens," 1890; and he was married, in 1879, to Alice, daughter of the late General Monckton. Address: The Palace, Bangor.

WILLIAMSON, Emeritus Profes- sor Alexander William, Ph.D., F.R.S., LL.D. Dublin and Edinburgh, born May 1, 1824, was educated chiefly in his father's house, by masters in London, Paris, and Dijon, and for a very short time at Kensington Grammar School, and at foreign schools. From the age of seventeen he studied in the Universities of Heidelberg and Giessen under Gmelin and Liebig. At Giessen he published his first chemical researches. He afterwards spent three years in Paris studying the higher mathematics. In 1849 he was appointed Professor of Practical Chemistry in University College, London; and in 1855, Professor of Chemistry in the same college, while still retaining the chair of Practical Chemistry. Soon after his first appointment at University College, Professor Williamson published his researches on "Etherification and the Constitution of Salts." The result of these researches had a considerable influence on the theories of chemical action, and they have been since adopted by the chief English and foreign chemists. For these important and successful labours the Royal Medal of the Royal Society was awarded to him in 1862. He has twice been President of the Chemical Society. In 1873 he was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. The same year he was elected Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society, a Corresponding Member of the French Academy, and a Fellow of the Berlin Chemical Society. In 1874 he was elected Treasurer of the British Association on the retirement of Mr. Spottiswoode. In November 1875 the Royal Academy of Science at Berlin elected him a Corresponding Member of the Section of Physics and Mathematics. He was appointed member of the Senate of the University of London. In April 1876 he was appointed Chief Gas Examiner to the City of London. The University of Dublin conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878, since which date the University of Edinburgh turned to England in 1893, and doing temporary work at Merchant Street at Rugby, he was appointed in 1894 to the Headmastership of Rugby College, Sussex. He married, in 1895, Miss Mary, daughter of Dr. Henry of George, South Africa. Addressing College, Sussex.

N, Rear-Admiral Sir Arthur K.C.B., V.C., was born on March 1, 1835, and entered the navy in 1855. He was midshipman in H.M.S. Algiers in the Mediterranean Sea during the Russian war, so present at the bombardment of the Crimean Peninsula. He received the Victoria Cross and other medals. His next war service was as midshipman of H.M.S. Thetis. There he took part in the capture of the Peiho forts and landed with his brigade at the attack on Canton, China. He was awarded the China Medal with two clasps. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant in 1861, Commander in 1873, and Captain in 1880. As Captain of the Albatross he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria in 1882, and reconnoitered Egyptian waters during the same year.

He received the Egyptian Medal with one clasp, and the Order of the Medjidie in the third class. In the Soudan Expedition of 1895 Admiral Wilson served in the Albatross, and was present at the battle of El Teb. During this fight he performed an act of gallantry which Sir John Bull described as one of the noblest he had ever witnessed.

On July 29, 1897, a gap in the square, and five or six enemy seeing it, rushed forward, to pierce the ranks. There Sir Arthur advanced to meet them, breaking his sword in his effort to hold them down, would not retire from his ground, knocking them with his fists. Either by a miracle or the surprising nature of his attack he escaped with a few wounds, and the square rescued him. He was mentioned in the despatches, and received the V.C. and a third Suakim and El Teb clasps for his services. He was also presented with the torpedo officers of H.M.S. Albatross in admiration of his gallantry at the battle of El Teb. He was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen in 1897, and was created a C.B. in 1887, and also he became Assistant of Torpedoes at the Admiralty, C.B., 1897. He was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1895, and commanded the torpedo squadron at the close of that year. In the year of 1896 he was Second-in-Command of the Reserve Fleet, and was appointed Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty and Controller of the Navy in August 1897. He is also the inventor of double-barrelled torpedo tubes. Address: 15 Ermin's Mansions, S.W.

WILSON, Sir Charles Rivers, G.C.M.G., C.B., was born in London, Feb. 19, 1831, and educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford. He was appointed Clerk in the Treasury in February 1856; was Private Secretary consecutively to Mr. James Wilson and Mr. George Alexander Hamilton, Secretaries of the Treasury; Acting Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, from August 1867 to February 1868; Private Secretary to Mr. Lowe, Chancellor of the Exchequer, from December 1868 to April 1873; and was appointed Comptroller-General of the National Debt Office in April 1873. Mr. Wilson represented (with the late Professor Graham) her Majesty's Government at the International Coinage Commission in 1867, and acted as Secretary to the Royal Commission appointed to examine the question of an International Coinage in 1868. On the return of Mr. Cave to England from his financial mission to Egypt, Mr. Rivers Wilson, at the request of the Khedive, went to Egypt in March 1876, with the view of his acceptance of a financial post in that country; but after the issue of the decree of May 7, 1876, by which an arbitrary readjustment of the Public Debt of Egypt was proposed, he returned to England, and resumed his post at the National Debt Office. On July 29, 1876, he was appointed one of the British Government Administrators of the Suez Canal Company; on Jan. 22, 1877, he was appointed a Royal Commissioner for the Paris Exhibition of 1878; on March 30, 1878, he was appointed Vice-President, and in the absence of M. de Lesseps, acted as President, of an International Commission of Inquiry, instituted by the Khedive at the instigation of the foreign governments, to examine the resources of Egypt, and propose measures for remedying the financial disorder in that country. The Report of the Commission, Aug. 19, 1878, traced the whole of the mischief to the system of personal administration by the Viceroy, and proposed that his Highness should surrender his estates and those of his family to make good the deficit in the revenue, and pay the large floating debt of the country. The immediate consequence of the presentation of their Report was an acceptance by the Khedive of all its conclusions, and a formal announcement to Mr. Rivers Wilson of the determination of his Highness to abandon his actual system of government for one more in conformity with European experience, and to govern in future by means of a

WILSON, James, American political leader and agriculturist, was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, Aug. 16, 1835. He went to America with his parents in 1852, settling in Connecticut. In 1855 he removed to Iowa, locating in Tama County, where he engaged in farming. He served three terms in the State Legislature, being Speaker of the Lower House on the third occasion. He was elected to Congress in 1872, and served in the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-eighth Congresses. From 1870 to 1874 he was a Regent of the State University, and for several years has been Director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, and Professor of Agriculture at the Iowa Agricultural College at Ames. He became Secretary of Agriculture in President McKinley's Cabinet, Mar. 4, 1897.

WILSON, The Ven. James Maurice, was born on Nov. 6, 1836. His father, the Rev. E. Wilson, who was a double first-class at Cambridge in 1825, and a Fellow of St. John's, was for many years Vicar of Nocton, Lincoln, and honorary Canon of Lincoln. Mr. Wilson was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at Sedbergh Grammar School, and went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1855. He was bracketed for the second Bell Scholarship in 1856 with Henry Sidgwick, who was afterwards Senior Classic. He took his degree in 1859 as Senior Wrangler. He was appointed by Dr. Temple to the post of Natural Science Master at Rugby, and in that capacity, and subsequently as Senior Mathematical Master, he worked at Rugby for twenty years. During those years he was an occasional contributor to the Geological and Astronomical Societies' journals, and founded the Temple Observatory at Rugby. His chief astronomical work is one in which he was associated with two other amateurs, the "Handbook of Double Stars." In 1879 he was offered the Headmastership of Clifton College, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Percival. Since that time until 1890, when he retired from that position, he had been more before the world as the Headmaster of a large and very active school, and as a preacher and writer, than as a scientific man. A volume of his school sermons in two series, of which the second appeared in 1891, has been published by Macmillan; also volumes of Essays and Addresses and Contributions to Religious Thought. He is understood to have taken much interest in Bristol, in its religious and philanthropic and educational work. He was Chaplain to the present Archbishop of Canterbury from 1885 to 1890. In 1890 he was presented to the living of Rochdale, in the Diocese of Manchester, and in the same year became Archdeacon of Manchester, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Manchester. He has since published (Paul) a volume of "Rochdale Sermons." Many separate addresses are published in the S.P.C.K. Address: The Rochdale.

WILSON, William Edwa J.P., is the son of John Wilson of Daramona House, Streete, Westmeath, and was born on July 18, 1831. He was educated privately, and devoted himself to investigating and connected with Astronomy and Science. He built a private observatory at Daramona in 1871, and there he constructed a larger observing also a physical laboratory and mechanical workshop. Mr. Wilson published numerous papers in Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and has also Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society. He served the office of Sheriff for Westmeath in 1881, married to Carolina Ada daughter of R. C. Granville, in 1856. Daramona, Streete, co. Westmeath, the Athenæum.

WILSON, Hon. William, American statesman, was born in Albemarle Co., Virginia, May 3, 1843, educated at Charlestown Academy, Columbian College, District of Columbia (where he graduated in 1869), University of Virginia. He served in the Confederate Army during the war, and for several years after was Professor in Columbian College, subsequently resigned, and practiced law in Charlestown. In 1882 he was President of the West Virginia Convention, relinquished this position upon the opening of Congress in 1883, where he remained until 1895. He was Postmaster-General in Cleveland's Cabinet from 1897, when he was elected to the Senate from Washington and Lee University. Wilson was Chairman of the Revenue Commission which framed the Revenue Act of 1894, which became law in August 1894, and hence became known as the Wilson Tariff. The degree of Doctor of Laws conferred upon him by Columbia University in 1883, and by Hamilton College in 1886.

WINCHESTER, Bishop DAVIDSON, THE RIGHT REV. THOMAS.

tria. His father was one of the generals who suppressed the Revolution of 1848, and his uncle married the daughter of the Taglioni, a niece of the great Taglioni. He was born about 1852, and was educated at the Universities of Bonn and Göttingen, where he studied for the law, and entered the army. In 1877 he made a Doctor of Laws and a member of the Imperial Court of Justice. He sat in the Austrian Reichsrath since 1876 as a Conservative and Clerical, and also a member of the Bohemian Diet. When Count Taaffe resigned in November 1878, owing to the defeat of his Electoral Reform Bill, Prince Windischgrätz formed a coalition ministry of Poles, Conservatives, and German Liberals. However, the Conservative element prevailed, and the Prince no longer having the confidence of his liberal followers in questions of electoral reform, &c., he resigned June 19, 1895, and was succeeded by the provisional Government of Count Kilmansegg.

WINDSOR, Lord, The Right Hon. Arthur George Windsor Clive, D.L., M.P., is the son of the Hon. Robert Windsor Clive, M.P., was born on Aug. 27, 1857, and succeeded his grandmother, Baroness Windsor, as 14th Baron, in 1869. He was educated at Eton and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. He was Paymaster-General from 1891 to 1892, and as Mayor of Cardiff from 1895 to 1896, and has been Lord-Lieutenant of Glamorganshire since 1890. He is Hon. Colonel of the 2nd Glamorgan Volunteer Artillery, of the 2nd Battalion of the Worcestershire Regiment, and of the 3rd Battalion of the Welsh Regiment. Lord Windsor was married in 1883 to Alberta, daughter of the Right Hon. Sir Augustus Ashley Paget, K.C.B. Addresses: St. Asaph's Castle, Cardiff, &c.

LATE, Colonel Sir Francis Wingate, K.C.M.G., C.B., D.S.O., late Director of Military Intelligence in Egypt and Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, was born in June 1861, and is the son of the late Andrew Wingate. He entered the army as a Lieutenant of Royal Artillery in July 1880, and soon afterwards selected for employment with the Egyptian Army. He took part in the Sudan Campaign of 1884-85, and served in the Nile Expedition, acting as Aide-de-Camp and Military Secretary to the Major-General on the Lines of Communication. He was mentioned in despatches, and obtained the brevet of Major. In April 1886 he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the General Commanding the Eastern District, but in the following month he returned to Egypt. Major Wingate took part in the operations on the Soudan Frontier in 1889, including the engagement at Toski, for which he obtained the D.S.O. He was also present at the capture of Tokar in February 1891, after which he received the Medjidieh of the third class. He served with the Dongola Expedition under Sir Herbert Kitchener as Director of Military Intelligence, and was present at the engagement at Firket and the operations at Hafir; he was mentioned in despatches, and obtained the brevet of Lieut.-Colonel and two clasps to his medal. He has also served in a similar capacity in the Omdurman Expedition, and has had control of the press censorship. Colonel Sir Francis Wingate was created K.C.M.G. in 1898, and is in possession of the Order of the Iron Crown of the second class and the Osmanieh of the fourth class, and is qualified to act as interpreter in Turkish. He is the author of "Ten Years in the Mahdi's Camp," and "Mahdism and the Egyptian Soudan." He married, in 1888, Catherine Leslie, daughter of the late Captain J. S. Rundle, R.M. Address: Cairo.

WINGFIELD, Sir Edward, K.C.B., fourth son of John Muxloe Wingfield, of Walcot, near Bath, was born in 1834, and educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, where he took seconds in Mathematical Mods. and firsts in Classical Mods. and Lit. Hum. He was a Fellow of his College from 1850 to 1872, and became S.C.L., 1853; B.C.L., 1857; M.A., 1859. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859. He was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary at the Colonial Office in 1878, and recently succeeded Sir Robert Meade as Permanent Under-Secretary of State in the same Department. He was created a K.C.B. in January 1899.

WINNINGTON-INGRAM, The Right Rev. Arthur Foley, D.D., Bishop of Stepney, Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, was born in Worcestershire on Jan. 26, 1858, and is the fourth son of the Rev. E. Winnington-Ingram, of Stanford Rectory, Worcestershire, and Louisa, daughter of Bishop Pepys. He was educated at Marlborough College and Keble College, Oxford, where he took a first class in Classical Moderations and a second class in Lit. Hum. He became Curate of St. Mary's, Shrewsbury, in 1884; was Private Chaplain to the Bishop of Lichfield, 1885-89; in 1889 was appointed Head of Oxford House, Bethnal Green, and Chaplain to the Archbishop of York and to the Bishop of St. Albans; in 1895 became Rector of Bethnal Green; in 1896 Rural Dean of Spitalfields; and in 1897, having gained a wide experience of the East End and its needs, both spiritual and social, was appointed second Bishop of Stepney, and Suffragan to the Bishop of London. In 1891 and 1892 he was Select Preacher at his old University, and in 1893 and 1897 at Cambridge. His works include: "Work in Great Cities," "Old Testament Difficulties," "New Testament Difficulties," "Church Difficulties," "The Men who Crucify Christ," 1896; "Christ and His Friends," 1897, &c. Address: 2 Amen Corner, St. Paul's, E.C.

WINTER, The Hon. Sir James Spearman, K.C.M.G., colonial statesman, was born at Lamaline, Newfoundland, Jan. 1, 1845, and received an academic education at St. Johns. He studied law, and was called to the Bar in 1867, becoming a Q.C. in 1880. He entered the Legislature in 1874, and sat continuously up to 1889, shortly after which he was elevated to the Bench; he filled successively the offices of Speaker of Assembly, Solicitor-General, and Attorney-General, and was for a time leader of the Opposition. He served as a delegate to London on the French Fisheries question in 1890, and was agent for Newfoundland at the Washington Fishery Conference, 1887-88. In November 1896 he voluntarily resigned from the Bench and resumed the practice of the law, and not long afterwards re-entered political life, and was elected leader of the Opposition. In October 1897 he was called to the Premiership after the general elections in that month, and assumed office November 17. In 1898 he was a member of the Anglo-American International Conference at Quebec. He was created a K.C.M.G. for his public services in 1888. Address: St. Johns, Newfoundland.

WOOD, Rev. Joseph, D.D., Head-Master of Harrow, was born in 1843, and is the second son of John Wood, of Manchester. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he was an Exhibitioner, took a First Class in Classical Moderations in 1863, and a First Class in the Final School of Lit. Hum. in 1865. He was also in the latter year elected a Fereday Fellow of St. John's College (M.A. 1868, B. and D.D. 1879). He was ordained in 1865, became an Assistant Master at Cheltenham College in 1867, and three years later he was appointed Head-Master of Leamington College. He took the degree of D.D. in 1879, and he acted as a Classical Moderator at Oxford from 1876-77. After a period of twenty years' successful work at Leamington, Dr. Wood was, in 1890, appointed Head-Master of Tonbridge School, where he quickly made his influence felt, and where in the course of some six or seven years he raised the numbers from 200 to 450. In November 1898, on the nomination of Dr. Welldon as Bishop of Calcutta, he was selected by the Governors of Harrow School as his successor. Address: Harrow School.

WOODHEAD, German Sims, M.D., F.R.C.P. Edin., F.R.C.S., Prof Pathology, Cambridge, was born ldersfield on April 29, 1855, and is et son of Joseph Woodhead, J.P., at one time M.P. for the Spen Valley, and editor of the Huddersfield Examiner, and of Catherine, eldest daughter of James Booth Woodhead, of the Ridings, Holmfirth. He was educated at Huddersfield College, and at Edinburgh University, where he was Thesis Gold Medallist in 1881, and in London and Vienna (M.D. Edin., 1881; M.B. and C.M., 1878; M., 1880, F.R.C.P. Edin., 1882). In 1878 he was President of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh, and is President of the British Medical Temperance Association, Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., and fellow or member of numerous other medical and scientific societies. In 1879 he began to teach Anatomy and then Pathology, and to carry out original investigations on these subjects in the principal medical institutions of Edinburgh, and in 1890 was appointed Director of the Laboratories of the Conjoint Board of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons in London. His work on the Embankment has been of the greatest scientific and national usefulness and importance, the laboratories there established in great measure taking the place of that Pasteur Institute for which English medical science still waits. In February 1899 Professor Sims Woodhead was appointed Professor of Pathology at Cambridge University in succession to his former colleague in London, the late Professor Kanthack, and received the thanks and congratulations of the two Colleges with which he had been so long honourably associated. From 1892 to 1895 he was Assistant-Commissioner to the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis. His works on Bacteriology and Pathology are numerous, and include "Practical Pathology" (col. illustrations), 1883, edit. 3, 1892; "Bacteria and their Products," 1891; and, with Arthur W. Hare, "Pathological Mycology: an Inquiry into the Etiology of Infective Diseases," part 1, 1885; besides a report to the Royal Commissioners on Tuberculosis, 1895, and numerous contributions to the scientific journals and to systems of medicine and surgery. Professor Sims Woodhead is editor of the Journal of Pathology and Bacteriology. He married, in 1881, a daughter of James Yates, Esq., of Edinburgh. Address: Cambridge.

WOODS, Sir Albert William, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., F.S.A., was born April 16, 1816, and is a son of Sir William Woods, who filled the office of Garter King-of-Arms from 1838 until his death in 1842. He entered the College of Arms as Portcullis Pursuivant in 1838 (and has been, therefore, a member of the Corporation for upwards of sixty years), was promoted to the office of Lancaster Herald in 1841, and became Registrar of the College in April 1886. He was advanced to the office of Garter Principal King-of-Arms, Oct. 25, 1869, in succession to his father's successor, Sir Charles George Young, and received the honour of knighthood on the 11th of the following month. He was attached to the missions for investing the King of Denmark, the King of the Belgians, and the Emperor of Austria with the Order of the Garter, and, as Garter, was joint plenipotentiary for investing the King of Italy, the King of Spain, and the King of Saxony. Sir A. W. Woods holds the office of Registrar and Secretary to the Order of the Bath, Registrar to the Order of the Star of India, King-of-Arms to that of St. Michael and St. George, and Registrar to that of the Indian Empire. He married, in 1848, Caroline, daughter of Robert Cole, of Rotherfield. Addresses: College of Arms, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.; and 69 St. George's Road, Warwick Square, S.W.

WOODS, Henry, R.A., born April 23, 1847, at Warrington, in Lancashire, is eldest son of the late Mr. William Woods, of that town, was educated at the local grammar school, entered the Warrington School of Art as a pupil at nine years of age, and remained there until he went to London, in the winter of 1864, having obtained a "National Scholarship" in the Art Training Schools at South Kensington. Mr. Woods held that scholarship for three years, working in the Antique and Life Schools, and at the study of stained glass. When he left South Kensington, the latter study was not proceeded with, but he began to illustrate for various periodicals, painting during the greater part of his time. When the Graphic started, Mr. Woods was one of the first members of its staff. His first picture exhibited at the Royal Academy was a little landscape at the first exhibition held at Burlington House. Since then he has been a regular exhibitor. His first pictures of any importance were Thames subjects—"Going Home," "Haymakers," &c. In 1876 Mr. Woods first went to Venice, and joined the group of artists who have made modern Venetian subjects so popular; his earliest pictures of everyday Venetian life were: "A Venetian Ferry" (purchased for the Cape Town Gallery), "Street Trading in Venice," "A Gondolier's Courtship," "The Ducal Courtyard," and "Preparing for the Festa." He was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1882. Since then Mr. Woods has painted: "Bargaining for an Old Master," "Preparations for First Communion," "Il Mio Traghetto," "Cupid's Spell," "Choosing a Summer-Gown," "The Water-Wheels of Savassa," position he still holds, and in 1884 he became a Vice-President of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain. From 1884 to 1887 he served on the Board of Ashton, and in November 1887 he was elected as a District Councillor for the township where he lives. Woods was returned to Parliament in 1890 as a Liberal and Labour member for the Division of Lancashire, and for three years he sat in the House of Commons, actively advocating the interests of the miners, and consistently supporting the Government. During this time he was employed on Government work, the Post-Office employees; he was appointed a member of the small committee which was sent to inquire into the wages of the men employed at the Wigan Arsenal. It was Mr. Woods who had charge of the Miners' Eight Hours Bill, which, however, was lost in the second reading stage. In 1894 Mr. Woods was elected Secretary of the Trades Union, a post which he still holds. At the general election he lost his seat in Wigan, but, at a bye-election in February 1895, he was returned once more to the House of Commons as Labour and Liberal member for the Walthamstow Division of London.

He gained a first-class mine workers' certificate, by public examination in 1886, and he has travelled in America and on the Continent, in connection with the International Miners' Congresses. Mr. Woods is a Baptist and abstainer. Addresses: Rose Villa, near Wigan, Lancs.; and 19 Waltham Street, Strand, W.C.

WOODVILLE, Richard Caton, is the son of an artist who was born in Waltham, but who died in London. He was born in London on Jan. 7, 1856, and was educated at Düsseldorf, Germany. He became an artist, and made a speciality of battle pictures, exhibiting his pictures at the Royal Academy in 1879, and then annually. He has painted large pictures for the Queen, which are in Windsor Castle, viz.: "The Battle of Whippingham Church," "The Death of General Howard," and "The Death of Tel-el-Kebir." He was present at the Turkish war of 1878, and in the Crimean war of 1882, and has received the rank of Commander of the Order of the Medjidieh, and of Daniello, Montenegro. He has also illustrated numerous stories, appearing in magazines, and has himself written articles on sport and travel. Mr. Woods was married, in 1883, to Mrs. Edithington, née Curtis. Address: 10, St. James's Gate, W.

WOODWARD, Henry, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., F.R.M.S., Pres. Pal. Soc., Keeper of the Department of Geology, British Museum (Natural History), is the sixth son of the late Samuel Woodward, of Norwich, author of "The Geology of Norfolk," 1833; a "Synoptical Table of British Organic Remains," 1830, &c. His eldest brother, Mr. B. B. Woodward, B.A. Lond., F.S.A., was for some years Librarian to her Majesty at Windsor Castle. His second brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, F.G.S., for seventeen years in the Department of Geology, British Museum, was a geologist and naturalist of eminence, and author of a "Manual of the Mollusca," 1851-56, which has reached a sale of upwards of 12,000 copies. The subject of the present notice was born at Norwich, Nov. 24, 1832. His father died when he was only five years of age. Henry Woodward was educated at the Norwich Grammar School, and at the Grammar School, Botesdale, Suffolk. Thence, in 1846, he went to reside with his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, at that time Professor of Natural History at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, where he entered as an out-door student at the College, and worked diligently for three years. There he imbibed that knowledge of geology and love of natural history which, inherited from his father, needed only opportunity and encouragement to develop. In January 1858 Professor Owen, the Superintendent of the Natural History Departments in the British Museum, wrote offering him a junior assistant's post in the Geological Department, under Mr. G. R. Waterhouse, where his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, was already a senior assistant. His ready acceptance of this small post evinced his anxiety to take up geology as a profession, and he entered on his new duties with alacrity. In 1859 he was made a second-class assistant, in 1865 a first-class, and in 1867 he entered the first-class upper section, a proof that his services met with favourable official recognition. In the spring of 1860 he accepted an invitation to join Mr. Robert MacAndrew, F.R.S., on a dredging expedition to the south coast of Spain and the Mediterranean; and at Malaga and Gibraltar he made excellent zoological and geological collections. In 1863 he again joined MacAndrew in a dredging expedition along the north coast of the Spanish peninsula from Bilbao to Coruna. Excursions were also made into the interior to Vittoria, Burgos, &c. In 1864 Mr. Woodward commenced, and still continues, to edit the Geological Magazine, a monthly journal of geology, now in its thirty-fifth year. Dr. Woodward's contributions to scientific literature number nearly 300; he has also published a monograph on the "Fossil Merostomata," and one on "Carboniferous Trilobites," in the volumes of the Palaeontographical Society; a Catalogue of British Fossil Crustacea, published by the Trustees of the British Museum; articles on "Mollusca" and "Crustacea," in "Cassell's Natural History"; and on "Crustacea," in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." In 1873-74 Mr. Woodward was elected President of the Geologists' Association. In February 1893 he assisted in founding the Malacological Society of London, and was its first President, from 1893 to 1895, and now is Vice-President; and was from 1894 to 1896 President of the Geological Society, and since June 1896 President of the Palaeontographical Society of London. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1878 the University of St. Andrews conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. On June 23, 1880, on the retirement of Mr. George R. Waterhouse, the Principal Trustees of the British Museum appointed Dr. Henry Woodward Keeper of the Department of Geology, in which he had served as an assistant for twenty-two years, a promotion which was received with satisfaction among scientific men generally. In 1857 Mr. Woodward married Ellen Sophia, only child of Fountain Page, Esq., of Norwich, by whom he has two sons and five daughters. Dr. Woodward's eldest son, H. P. Woodward, J.P., Assoc. Memb. Inst. C.E., F.G.S., is now Honorary Gov. Geologist for Western Australia; and the younger, M. F. Woodward, is Demonstrator in Biology in the Royal College of Science, London. Dr. Woodward's daughters are very successful artists and book-illustrators; and one is a member of the British College of Physical Education. Address: 129 Beaufort Street, Chelsea, S.W.

WOODWARD, Horace Bolingbroke, F.R.S., F.G.S., born at Barnsbury, London, Aug. 20, 1848, is the second son of the late Dr. S. P. Woodward, F.G.S., of the British Museum, and author of a "Manual of the Mollusca." He was educated at private schools, and was appointed an assistant in the Library and Museum of the Geological Society, then at Somerset House, in 1863. He joined the staff of the Geological Survey of Great Britain in 1867 as Assistant Geologist, was promoted to be Geologist in 1875, and District Surveyor in 1896. He is author of "The Geology of England and Wales," 1876 (2nd edit., 1887); also of several memoirs of the Geological Survey, on the "Geology of East Somerset, &c.," "Norwich," "Fakenham," "The Jurassic Rocks of Britain," and "Soils and Sub-soils from a Sanitary Point of View," 1876-97. He was Norwich Geological Society, the Norfolk Naturalists' and of the Geologists'. 94, was elected a Fellow of the Geological Society in 1896, and Murchison Medal by the Geological Society in 1896. Museum, Jermyn Street, Inglewood Road, West.

WOOLLEY, Celia, a writer, was born at Tolleshott, Dorset. When she was quite young she moved to Coldwater, Middlesex, and after spending a few months spent at a Seminary (Plainesville, N.Y.), she returned to England, educated, graduating from the Seminary in 1866. She began with occasional contributions to periodicals. For eight years she was a Chicago correspondent of the Register (a Boston Unitarian paper) from 1884. Lippincott's published her story, and a few others in the same magazine. She issued in 1887, and was very successful. It was under the title of "Love and the Love of Love," and was changed in later editions to "Armstrong." She has two others, "A Girl and a Boy," and "Roger Hunt." She was married to D. J. L. in 1876 and went to Chicago. She was a member of the Women's Club for two years she was before which she founded. For a period of nearly ten years she was assistant editor of a radical Unitarian paper. Mrs. Woolley's mind was chiefly engaged in religious questions, and in 1887 she accepted a call to the Unitarian Church, Gower Street, London, the duties of which she engaged.

WORDSWORTH, John, was educated at Cambridge, where he was a Scholar in 1867, and LL.D. in 1871. In the latter degree, and was ordained in 1877 he was a Fellow of the University College, Cambridge, to 1877 he also acted as Rector of Galston, Rutland.

preferred, after a period of twelve to the Rectory of Tyneham, near Blandford. He was installed a Prebendary of Salisbury Cathedral in 1886, and he is at present Rector of St. Peter's, Marlborough. He is the author of "University Society in the 18th Century," 1874; and "Scholæ nicæ," or "University Studies in the 18th Century," 1877; and he has been engaged in editing "Breviarium ad usum S. A.D. 1531," 3 vols., 1879-86; "Liturgiale Ecclesiæ S. Andreae," 1885; and "Salisbury Cathedral Statutes," vol. i., "Coronation of King Charles I., 1626," 1892, &c.

WORDSWORTH, Elizabeth, daughter of Christopher Wordsworth, late Bishop of Lincoln, eldest sister of the late Bishop of Salisbury, and great-niece of the late Bishop of Exeter, was born at Harrow June 22, 1812, and was educated mainly at home. She was the daughter of the late foundation of Lady Margaret Hall at Oxford, in 1879, Miss Wordsworth was appointed its first Principal, a position which she still holds. In 1886, the need being felt of supplying a college for women, students, unable to bear the expense of Lady Margaret Hall, might have equal educational advantages, she founded St. Hugh's Hall, which now contains about twenty-five students within its walls. Miss Wordsworth has written many poems and tales of considerable interest, and very popular papers for Church magazines of women and girls, e.g., "Rights for the Chimney Corner," a remarkable short volume on William Wordsworth, and three valuable series of essays, entitled "Illustrations of the Bible," "The Decalogue," and "The Prayer," and a Life of Bishop C. Wordsworth. Address: Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford.

WORDSWORTH, The Right Rev. D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Salisbury, son of the late Right Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, and nephew of the late Bishop of Exeter, and therefore great-nephew of the late Bishop of Salisbury, was born at Harrow, Sept. 21, 1812, and educated at Ipswich, Winchester, and at New College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1865. In 1866 he became Rector at Wellington College, which brought him into close relation with the late Archbishop Benson, and in 1867 he acted as Fellow, and in 1868 Tutor of New College, Oxford. He was appointed Prebendary of Lincoln in 1870; Preacher at Oxford, 1876; Bampton Lecturer, 1881; Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, with

Canonry of Rochester annexed, 1883. On the death of Dr. Moberly in 1885 he was appointed Bishop of Salisbury. The Bishop has interested himself in a variety of subjects of a literary and religious character, of which the following are the principal. His chief publications are noticed under each head. 1. Latin Classical Literature—"Lectures Introductory to a History of Latin Literature," 1870; "Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin," 1874. 2. The Latin New Testament—He has long been engaged upon a critical edition of St. Jerome's Vulgate for the Oxford Press, and has published the first volume, containing the four gospels, in conjunction with the Rev. H. J. White, now Fellow and Chaplain of Merton College, Oxford. Subsidiary to this are a series of "Old Latin Biblical Texts," Oxford, 1883, &c., and "The Corbey St. James," in the first volume of the "Studia Biblica," Oxford, 1885. 3. The Education Question—He published several pamphlets at Oxford on the subject of religious education in the Universities, and has since interested himself largely in the cause of voluntary schools, particularly during a school crisis at Salisbury in 1888-89. His Bill for Freedom of Religious Instruction in Board Schools, passed the House of Lords in 1893. His "Prayers for all in College" reached a second edition in 1890. He founded a useful higher-grade Elementary and Science School at Salisbury, and is Visitor of the New City Grammar School. 4. The Old Catholic Movement—He attended his father at the second Old Catholic Congress held at Cologne in 1872, and has since continued a warm friend of the work. He was present at the Congresses of Cologne in 1890, and Lucerne in 1892, and has personally visited the chief centres as well as the leaders of the different Churches in Holland, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. After the Lambeth Conference of 1888 he was appointed to translate the Encyclical Letter into Greek and Latin, and was asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury to act as Episcopal adviser to Count Compello and the Italian Reformers. In this capacity he has assisted in the revision of the Italian Liturgy (Italian, Bennet Bros., Salisbury; English, Gilbert and Rivington, for Anglo-Continental Society, 1893). 5. The Colonial Churches—In 1894-95 he made a journey of nearly six months' duration round the world through Colombo, Adelaide (S. Australia), Melbourne, Tasmania, New Zealand (where he spent two months), Sydney, Fiji, Hawaii, Vancouver, and back by the Canadian Pacific Railway and New York. It was probably in consequence of this that he was elected Chairman of the Committee of the Lambeth Conference of 1897 on and turned his attention to the Antiquities of Devonshire, his county. Since 1871 he has been a contributor of valuable articles on general antiquarian, historical, and logical matters, to magazines and papers, and has obtained a reputation for special knowledge of English history. From 1876 to 1886 he was member of the Council of the Devon Association, and the author of many in its Transactions. Prior to 1879 for some time Honorary Local Surveyor at Ashburton, under the Science and Art Department. He received the thanks of the Lords of the Committee of the Council, "for valuable assistance rendered," in 1884. He has also thrice received the thanks of the Chapter of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, for the Lists of Arms, 1882-89; those of the Lists of the British Museum in the year 1887; and the thanks of the Society of Antiquaries under their great seal, 1873-8. In 1875 he published "Ashburton and its Neighbourhood," "The Antiquities and History of Fourteen Parishes in the Borders of Dartmoor," fcap. 4to; "Manor of Winkleigh, the Ancient Manor of the Honour of Gloucester," 8vo, "Local Guide to Ashburton and its Neighbourhood," 1879; "Memoir of Walter Raleigh, Bishop of Exeter (1308)"; "The House of Bideford and the House of Bideford," (reprinted from Transactions of the Devonshire Association), 1876 and 1884. He was coadjutor to the late Stephen Somers, Somerset Herald, from 1879-1882. He published a volume of "Devonshire Parishes, Antiquities, Heraldry, and Family History of Twenty-eight Parishes in the Deanery of Totnes," appeared in 1887. In the following year he published some of English armoury under the title "Practical Heraldry" (1 vol. cr. 8vo, 1887; vol. ii. of "Devonshire Parishes" published in 1889 (2 vols. rl. 8vo, pp. 766). He revised the 1887 edition of his "Hand-book for Devonshire," and printed a small work on "The Lord Iddlesleigh, with a Genealogical History of the Northcote Family," 1887, a pamphlet, which ran to a second edition within three days. In the revised portions of White's "Devonshire," for which he had previously contributed in 1879, "An Analysis of the Domesday," and the "History of the Cathedral of Exeter." In 1892, revised and edited Messrs. A. & C. "Devonshire Guide Book." In 1893 he published the "History of the County of Exeter," with "A Digression on the Noble Houses of Redvers and of the Earls of Devon" (cr. 8vo, pp. 120), during the same year, he revised and edited the 12th edition of

Black's "Guide to Kent." His "Folk Tales of the West" appeared periodically during 1894, and these, with his very numerous similar articles, on subjects affecting the general history of England, to which he is still constantly adding, are alone sufficient for several interesting and important volumes in the future. His "Devonshire Wills," a rl. 8vo vol. of 531 pages, appeared in 1896, and includes his "Gentle Houses of the West," which gives, as the outcome of independent research, the origin and history of some of the most ancient and illustrious English families. Permanent address: Heavitree, Exeter.

WRENFORDSLEY, The Hon. Sir Henry Thomas, Knight, was educated in France, and having been called to the English Bar, practised for some years on the old Norfolk Circuit. He contested the city of Peterborough, in the Conservative interest, in 1868; and again in 1874, but without success. In 1876, he was appointed acting Deputy County Court Judge for the Metropolitan districts of Marylebone, Brompton, and Brentford. In 1877, he became Puisne Judge in the Colony of Mauritius; and in June 1878 he left the Bench, and became Procureur-General. Before leaving the Colony, he received a vote of thanks from the Legislative Council in respect of his public services in connection with the passing of the Labour Law, and reforms introduced into the judicial administration of the Colony. In 1880, he was appointed to the Chief Justiceship of Western Australia, and received the Dormant Commission from the Crown to administer, in case of need, the Government of that Colony. He was appointed Delegate to represent the Colony at the Intercolonial Conference held at Sydney in 1881; and subsequently he administered the Government from February to June 1883. During that period, he organised and started the first Expedition to the Kimberley, or northern district, and named the first town "Derby," by permission of the Secretary of State. A further expedition was despatched for the purpose of extending the telegraph system about 900 miles further north. He received the honour of knighthood and several public addresses before leaving the Colony. In 1883, Sir Henry proceeded in H.M.S. Diamond to Fiji, as Chief Justice of that Colony, and also held the appointment of Judicial Commissioner for the Western Pacific. In 1884, he left Fiji on leave, in consequence of bad health. Before leaving the Colony, he was entertained by the leading merchants and others at the largest banquet ever given in that part of the Pacific. Subsequently, and by permission of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, he became acting Puisne Judge in the Colony of Tasmania. In consequence of the action of the Colonial Office in having filled up his appointment in Fiji, Sir Henry was called to the Bar of Victoria and became a Queen's Counsel. In 1888, he was invited by the Government of Victoria to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court in the absence of one of the Judges, for which duty he received the thanks of the Colonial Government. In 1890, he was appointed by the Secretary of State, acting Chief Justice of Western Australia, and he held that appointment at the time when that Colony received a new Act of Constitution, and became for the first time a responsible Government Colony. In 1891, he was appointed Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands. Sir Henry has thus served the Crown as a Judge of the Supreme Court in six of her Majesty's Colonies; viz., Mauritius, Western Australia, Fiji, Tasmania, Victoria, and Leeward Islands, besides having held the appointments of Procureur-General in Mauritius, and Deputy Governor in Western Australia. Address: St. John's, Antigua.

WRIGHT, Charles Romley Alder, D.Sc. Lond., B.Sc. Vict., F.R.S., was born at Southend, Essex, on Sept. 7, 1844, being the son of the late Romley Wright, C.E., and Elizabeth Alder, of Hull. As a boy, Dr. Alder Wright was greatly attracted by chemical and physical science, attaining some degree of proficiency by self-tuition; so that when subsequently he attended classes at Owens College, Manchester, 1861-65, he was enabled to take and maintain throughout his entire curriculum the highest place in the examination lists. He graduated as B.Sc., Lond., in 1865, and as D.Sc., Lond., in 1870. After taking the former degree he became Assistant to Prof. (now Sir Henry) Roscoe, F.R.S., whom he assisted in the prosecution of the earlier portion of his classical researches on Vanadium. During 1866-67, Dr. Alder Wright filled the position of Chemist in the works of the Runcorn Soap and Alkali Co., Weston, Cheshire, and was engaged in technical work of various descriptions. In 1867 he came to London as Assistant, first to the late Dr. A. Bernay, of St. Thomas' Hospital, and subsequently to the late Dr. A. Matthiesen of St. Mary's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, with whom several scientific memoirs were published conjointly. During 1869-71, he was engaged in co-operating with Mr. (now Sir) Lowthian Bell, F.R.S., in the prosecution of his elaborate investigations on the Chemistry of Iron Smelting. In 1871 he was appointed Lecturer on Chemistry, Physics and Practical Chemistry in the medical school of St. Mary's Hospital, London, which appointment he held since which he has been practicing as Consulting Teacher, besides devoting much of his time to chemical research. In 1871 he became a Fellow of the Royal Society, and held the posts of Examiner to the University of Durham, and of the Royal College of Physicians, on subjects of "Iron and Steel," and "Manufacture" to the City of London Institute. Since then, in 1866, of his first researches in the laboratories of Owens College, Manchester, Dr. Wright has contributed to scientific societies upwards of 100 reports and memoirs on various investigations, besides numerous minor researches on many papers on theoretical subjects. These investigations have been done in almost every branch of Chemical Science, especially Organic, Analytical, and Organometallic Chemistry, and various Technical and Applied Chemical researches include those connected with the metallurgy of aluminium, various alloys, the preparation of water-proof paper and ("Willesden" products), no materials, and disinfectants in connection with these subjects, many of which are in successful operation. Various communications have appeared in the Royal Institution, the Society of Chemical Industry, and the form of a series of lectures. The chief books and monographs published by Dr. Alder Wright are the following: "Metals and their Applications" (Lecture Notes, the Royal Institution), 1871; articles in "Muspratt's Dictionary of Chemistry," 1874; Coal-Tar Distillation and thence derived, Anthracene, 1874; Monograph on "Iron and Steel," 1874; other articles, "Encyc. Brit.", Cantor Lectures, Society of Chemical Industry, "Manufacture of Toilet Soap," 1892; "Threshold of Science," 1892; on "Soap," "Sulphur," and "Acid," Thorpe's "Dictionary of Chemistry," 1893; "Fire Bricks, Butters, and Waxes, and their use in the manufacture of Candles, Soap, and other products," 1894. The list of Mr. Wright's contributions to scientific literature for the years 1874 and 1882 is given in a half column of the "Catalogue of Scientific Papers," published by the Chemical Laboratory, St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, W.

WRIGHT, Charles Theodore Hag- born in Yorkshire, Nov. 17, 1863, is the son of the Rev. C. H. H. Wright, and grandson of Nils Wilhelm, Governor of the Royal Mint, and, and Knight of the North Star. He was educated privately in France, Italy, and Russia, and also at the Academe de Saint-Thomas, Belfast, and the degrees of B.A. (first class) and M.A. at Trinity College, Dublin. After returning to the East of Europe for a number of years he was appointed in 1890 as Librarian in the National Library of the University of London. In 1893 Mr. Wright was appointed Secretary and Librarian to the British Museum Library. During Mr. Wright's tenure of office the Library has been rebuilt and completely reorganised at a cost of about £100,000, five thousand pounds of which have been subscribed by the members of the Library, which is now the leading institution of its kind, and indeed without doubt the most important in the United Kingdom. Mr. Wright has written articles on Russian literature, &c., in the National Review, Review, &c. Address: Marlborough House, 83 Victoria Street, S.W.

WRIGHT, The Hon. Sir Robert Peel, M.A., B.C.L., was born in 1839, the eldest son of the Rev. Henry Wright, of Litton, Somersetshire. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he had a distinguished career. He took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1859 and in Literæ Humaniores in 1860. In 1862 he gained three University prizes—the Latin Verse prize, the English prize, and the Arnold Essay; he was elected to a Fellowship at Oriel, of which he is now an honorary Fellow, and he received the Craven Scholarship in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June 1865, and joined the Bench in 1866. He has held the office of common law junior counsel to the Treasury for several years. He succeeded the Baron Huddleston as one of the Judges of the High Court in December 1891. He married, in 1891, a daughter of the late Rev. R. S. Chermiside. Address: 14 St. James's Place, S.W., &c.; telephone 1111.

WURTEMBERG, King of, Charles Henry Frederick William II., born at Stuttgart on Feb. 25, 1848, is the son of Prince Frederick. He succeeded to the throne on Oct. 6, 1891. He was colonel of several regiments in Prussia, Russia, and Germany, and was formerly Colonel of an Austrian Hussar Regiment. He married (1), the Princess of Waldeck and Piarmont, Feb. 15, 1873, and (2), the Princess Charlotte of Schaumburg-Lippe, April 8, 1886, who was born Oct. 10, 1864. By his first marriage he had one daughter, the Princess Pauline Olga Helen Emma, born Dec. 19, 1877. His heir, the Duke of Wurtemberg, died in November 1896.

WYLLIE, William Lionel, A.R.A., is the eldest son of the late William Morrison Wyllie, and was born in London in July 1851. He was educated at Heatherley's, and entered the Royal Academy Schools in 1866, gaining the Turner medal three years later. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1889, and amongst his pictures, which have been recently exhibited, there may be mentioned: "London's Water Gate," "The Opening of the Tower Bridge" (a notable picture), "The Union Liner SS. Norman leaving Southampton," "Bound for the Rio Grande," "A Southerly Gale, Brighton," 1895; "London Bridge," "Rearing the Lion's Whelps," "A Silent Highway," "Crippled, but Unconquered," 1896; "The Winding Medway," "Barry Docks," "The Liner's Escort," 1897; "Commerce and Sea Power," "Union Liner Briton off Calshot," "The Harbour Bar," "Entrance to Barry Dock," and "R.M.S. Valhalla," 1898; "Peace and Plenty" and "The Battle of the Nile," 1899. Mr. Wyllie spends a good deal of time in yachting, and is the Commodore of the Medway Yacht Club. He was married, in 1879, to Marian Amy, daughter of Captain Carew of the Indian Marine. Address: Hoo Lodge, Hoo Street, Werburgh, near Rochester, Kent.

WYNDHAM, Charles, was born in 1841, and was educated for the medical profession. He went to America in 1862, and made his first appearance as an actor at Washington with John Wilkes Booth (the assassin of President Lincoln), playing Osric to his Hamlet, and subsequently, Glauco to his Claude Melnotte. On the termination of his engagement he returned to the army, in which he had already served as a surgeon, and was concerned in some engagements that took place in the Civil War. He was attached to the 19th Army Corps, having at one time the medical charge of a brigade, and at another charge of a regiment. On returning to England he went to Liverpool, to the Old Amphitheatre, where his success was such that it led to a highly remunerative engagement of several months' duration. In May 1868 he made his first London appearance as Sir Arthur Lascelles in "All that Glitters is not Gold." He returned to America in 1869, and appeared with distinction at Wallack's Theatre as Charles Surface in "The School for

Scandal." Coming home again, he reappeared at the St. James's Theatre in 1872, then under Mr. Stephen Fiske's management, as Rabagas. A provincial tour followed this engagement, and in 1873 he played "the lead" at the Royalty, appearing there notably in the character which he revived in 1886 in "Wild Oats." A version of Mr. Bronson Howard's comedy "Saratoga," called "Brighton," was produced at the Court Theatre in 1874, with Mr. Wyndham in the principal character. In 1875 he went to Berlin and produced a version of "Brighton" in German. From 1876 the Criterion Theatre, under Mr. Wyndham's management, was distinguished by pieces of lively character, until in 1886 he made trial of old comedy. In the year 1887 another visit to Germany was paid, embracing the cities of Berlin, Frankfurt, and Liegnitz, during which "David Garrick," in German, under the title of "Auf Ehrenwort," was played, and proved such a success that an invitation from the Emperor of Russia extended the tour to St. Petersburg and Moscow. On the occasion of his performance in the Russian capital, Mr. Wyndham was presented by the Czar with a magnificent sapphire and ruby ring in recognition of the pleasure which his acting had afforded his Majesty. Two years later another tour to America followed, when Boston, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, and Philadelphia were visited, the repertoire including such plays as "David Garrick," "The Candidate," "Wild Oats," "Still Waters Run Deep," and an eccentric comedy, written specially for Mr. Wyndham by F. C. Burnand, editor of London Punch, and entitled "The Headless Man," when fresh laurels were gathered, resulting in a cordial invitation on the part of the American public to revisit the United States at no very distant date. One of the latter characterisations with which Mr. Wyndham has identified himself is Young Marlow in "She Stoops to Conquer." He has also achieved great success in "Rosemary," where he figures as a man in early middle age in 1837, and as a very old man in 1887. In May 1896 two gala performances were given, in which nearly every English actor and actress of note took part, in order to celebrate the attainment of his twentieth year of management at the Criterion. At the close of the two performances the popular actor, who had appeared as Charles Surface, came forward to thank his enthusiastic audience, and to announce that the proceeds of the two performances, amounting to £2300, would be handed over to the Actors' Benevolent Fund. In July 1899, at a crowded performance, at which the Prince of Wales and other distinguished persons were present, Mr. Wyndham bade good-bye to his old theatre, he will continue to manage in the new theatre shortly. Address: 39 Finch

WYNDHAM, George, son of the Hon. Percy Wyndham, born in London on Aug. 2, 1852, educated at Eton and the College, Sandhurst, and for a time he served in the 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards, taking part in the Campaign of 1885. He was Secretary to Mr. Balfour, and held the offices of Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1887-91, and Financial Secretary to the Treasury, 1891-92. Mr. Wyndham was in Parliament in 1889, when, as Conservative member for Salisbury, he has since represented that constituency. In October 1894 he was appointed Parliamentary Under-Secretary for War. Since 1894 he has been in the Cheshire Yeomanry, and a Justice of the Peace for the County of Chester. In 1887 Mr. Wyndham married Countess Grosvenor, daughter of Earl of Scarborough, and daughter of Grosvenor, eldest son of the Duke of Westminster. Address: 3

YEAMES, William Frederick, R.A., born on Dec. 18, 1835, at Taganrog, Sea of Azoff, South Russia, of which his father, Mr. William Yeames, was Russian Majesty's Consul. He belonged originally to the county of Devon. During the years 1842 and 1843 he travelled with his family through France.

After returning to Russia and spending the winter at Odessa, the family moved to Dresden, and there remained till the summer of 1848, when they removed to London.

Mr. Yeames received his first instruction in art from Mr. George Scharf, who taught him drawing and anatomy. Mr. Yeames was also practised drawing in the studio of Mr. J. Sherwood, of London. In 1852 Mr. Yeames left London in order to advance his art in Italy, and studied at Florence for two years under the direction of Professor Pollastrini, of the Florence Academy, afterwards under Signor Raffaello Menghi. Subsequently he spent eight months in Rome, and at last, in 1858, returned to England. In 1859 he was elected to the Royal Academy a portrait painter. His first subject, "The Staunch Friends," a subject of a jester and monkey. In 1861 he was represented there by works entitled "Il Sonetto," with illustrative lines of "Petrarch," and "The Toilet"; in 1862 by "Rescued," a boy saved from drowning; in 1863 by "The Meeting of Thomas More with his Daughter after the sentence of Death"; in 1864 by "La Malheureuse," Queen Henrietta taking refuge from the fire of the Parliament ships in Burlington Bay; in 1865 by "Arming the Young Knight"; and in 1866 by "Queen Elizabeth receiving the French Ambassadors after the News of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew." In June 1866 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. Since then he has exhibited "The Dawn of the Reformation," 1867; "The Chimney Corner" and "Lady Jane Grey in the Tower," 1868; "The Fugitive Jacobite" and "Alarming Footsteps," 1869; "Maundy Thursday" and "Love's Young Dream," 1870; "Dr. Harvey and the Children of Charles I.," 1871; "The Old Parishioner," 1872; "The Path of Roses," 1873; "The Appeal to the Podestà," "Flowers for Hall and Bower," and "The Christening," 1874; "Pour les Pauvres" and "The Sutor," 1875; "La Contadinella," "The Last Bit of Scandal," and "Campo dei SS. Apostoli, Venice," 1876; "Waking" and "Amy Robsart," 1877; "When Did You Last See Your Father?" 1878; "La Bigolante: Venetian Water Carrier," his diploma work, deposited on his election as an Academician, 1879; "The Finishing Touch," green-room at private theatricals, 1880; "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" and "Il Dolce far Niente," 1881; "The March Past," "Prince Arthur and Hubert," and "Welcome as Flowers in Spring," 1882; "Tender Thoughts," 1883; and "St. Christopher," 1887. Recently he has painted some portraits. His latest success was "Le Roi s'Amuse" (Henry III. of France and his pet dogs), in the Academy of 1894. He exhibited "Defendant and Counsel," 1895; a portrait of Mrs. Winfield, 1896; "Children of the Chapel" (Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace), 1898; and two portraits, 1899. Mr. Yeames has also exhibited in Paris and other foreign capitals, and has taught in the Royal Academy Schools and examined in the Science and Art Department. Mr. Yeames was elected a Royal Academician June 19, 1878, and is Librarian of the Royal Academy. He married a niece of Sir David Wilkie. Address: 4 Campbell Road, Hanwell, W.

YEATMAN-BIGGS, The Right Rev. HUYAHE Wolcott, M.A., D.D., Bishop-Suffragan of Southwark, was born Feb. 2, 1845, at Manston House, Dorsetshire, and is the son of Harry Farr Yeatman, J.P., thus belonging to an old Dorset family. He was educated at Winchester, where he became a Prefect, was captain of the second six at football, and shot in the Wimbledon eleven for two years, and at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was Dixie Scholar, and graduated in 1867. Although originally intended for the diplomatic service, he went in for a course of

YEATS, W. B., Irish poet, was born on June 13, 1865, at Sandymount, Dublin, and is the son of J. B. Yeats, portrait painter and illustrator. He spent the greatest portion of his childhood at Sligo with his grandparents, but joined his father and mother in London when about nine years old, and then for some years attended the Godolphin School, Hammer-smith, as a day scholar, spending his holidays usually in the west of Ireland. When he was fifteen he removed with his parents to Dublin, and there attended the Erasmus Smith School in Harcourt Street. When about nineteen he began studying art at the Royal Dublin Society, but soon gave up this for literature, contributing n to King's College Hospital, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of England. While in Dublin published in the local medical journals his papers, chiefly of a pathological nature.

Since coming to London most of his papers have been physiological. But his work on the application of aseptic principles to cranial operations gave some impetus to cerebral surgery, and a report on the Pathology of Bovine Pleura-pneumonia undertaken for the Royal Agricultural Society, may have had some influence in the application of the "stamp-system," by which this disease has been practically exterminated. Some of his researches were communicated to the Society, and have appeared in the Transactions and Proceedings of that body; the greater part of his contributions published in the Journal of Physiology.

He is the author of a well-known treatise on Physiology for the Use of Students of Medicine. He has held the position of Examiner in the Universities of Cambridge, and London, the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Veterinary College. He acted as Secretary of the Physiological Society from its foundation in 1875 until 1889. It is a strange coincidence that the names of the medical men of the same surname in England should both be of King's College, London; but Mr. Gerald Yeo is in no way related to Dr. Isaac Burney. In 1890 he resigned his Chair of Physiology, being made Emeritus Professor, and since that time has devoted himself to agricultural and horticultural pursuits. Address: Bowden House, Totnes, Devon.

Dr. Isaac Burney, M.D., Professor of Principles and Practice of Medicine in King's College, London, and Physician to King's College Hospital, descended from an ancient Cornish family already in Cornwall in the reign of Edward I. He was born at Stonehouse, Devonshire, educated privately, until, in 1858, he became a student in King's College, London, where he rapidly distinguished himself, and obtained three scholarships, and other distinctions. At the close of Medicine's examination, in London University, he obtained the first marks qualifying for the Gold Medal.

In 1866 he was appointed Reader in Medical Tutor in King's College; but he resigned in 1871, and began his career in Mayfair, having about that time been elected one of the physicians in residence at King's College Hospital. He was elected Fellow of the College of Physicians (1876), Honorary Member, and Professor of Clinical Therapeutics in King's College, London (1885), and Physician to King's College Hospital.

Dr. Yeo has contributed largely to medical literature, and has furnished numerous lectures, commentaries, &c., to the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c. Dr. Yeo has devoted himself, with much success, to the examination and development of methods of treating disease, the branch of medical science known as therapeutics. His well-known work on "Climate and Health Resorts" has gone through three editions, and had for its object the investigation of the influence of climate and mineral water and baths in the cure of disease. This work was followed by a treatise on "Food in Health and Disease," since become the accepted authority on subjects connected with diet and regimen in health, as well as diseased states. Dr. Yeo's last contribution to medical literature (1893) is a "Manual of Medical Treatment, or Clinical Therapeutics," a work dealing adequately with the wide subject of the best methods of treating all forms of what are known as Medical Diseases, as distinguished from Surgical Maladies. The article on "Nutrition and Food, including the Treatment of Obesity and Leanness," in Hare's "System of Practical Therapeutics," published in America, is from the pen of Dr. Burney Yeo. In 1882 he published some lectures on Consumption, in which he drew attention, prominently, to the discovery of Professor Koch, and pointed out the probability that this disease is propagated by contagion, a view which is now generally accepted. He is the translator of Oertel's "Respiratory Therapeutics" in Ziemssen's "Handbook of General Therapeutics," and of articles in Ziemssen's "Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine." He has also contributed several articles to the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century. Dr. Yeo has been for more than ten years the Medical Adviser in London to the Life Association of Scotland. Address: 44 Hertford Street, Mayfair, W.

YERBURGH, Robert Armstrong, M.P., D.L., J.P., is the son of the Rev. Richard Yerburgh, Vicar of Sleaford, Lincolnshire, and was born on Jan. 17, 1853. He was educated at Rossall, Harrow, and University College, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1880. He acted as Private Secretary to Mr. Akers-Douglas, when Patronage Secretary, from 1885 to 1886, and was Assistant Private Secretary to Mr. W. H. Smith when First Lord of the Treasury in 1887. He was elected as Conservative member for Chester in 1886, and has represented that constituency ever since; he is also a County Councillor and a Justice of the Peace for Lancashire. Mr.

Yerburgh is President of the Agricultural Bank Association, Hon. Secretary of the Recreation Evening Schools Association, Vice-Chairman of the National Home Reading Union, and a Member of Council of the Statistical Society. He has published articles advocating National Granaries for storage of corn, in order to complete our system of home defence, and has also written pamphlets on agricultural banks. He married, in 1888, the great heiress Elma Amy, daughter of Daniel Thwaites, of Billings Scarr, Blackburn, formerly M.P. Addresses: 25 Kensington Gore, S.W.; and Woodfold Park, Blackburn.

YONGE, Charlotte Mary, only daughter of the late W. C. Yonge, Esq., of Otterbourne, Hants, a magistrate for Hampshire, was born in 1823. She is the authoress of many works of fiction, in which the plot is made to enforce, in a plain and sober manner, the doctrines of what is called the High-Church school of opinion. She has always lived at Otterbourne, and had no events to record. Her best known works are: "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Amy Herbert," "Katherine Ashton," "Heartsease," "Dynevor Terrace," "The Daisy Chain," "The Young Stepmother; or, a Chronicle of Mistakes," "Hopes and Fears; or, Scenes from the Life of a Spinster," "The Lances of Lynwood," "The Little Duke," "Clever Women of the Family," "Prince and the Page: a Story of the Last Crusade," and "Dove in the Eagle's Nest." Most of these have gone through several editions, and have been reprinted in a cheap form. It has been stated in the public papers that she gave £2000, the profits of her "Daisy Chain," for the building of a Missionary College at Auckland, New Zealand, and devoted a great portion of the proceeds of "The Heir of Redclyffe" to the fitting out of the missionary schooner Southern Cross, for the use of Bishop Selwyn. Miss Yonge has also published "Marie Thérèse de Lamourons," a biography abridged from the French; "The Kings of England," "Landmarks of History: Ancient, Middle Ages, and Modern," forming a compendium of Universal History for young people; "History of Christian Names and their Derivation," 1863; "The Story of English Missionary Workers," in Macmillan's Sunday Library, 1871; "Lady Hester," 1873; "Life of John Coleridge Patteson, Missionary Bishop of the Melanesian Islands," 2 vols., 1873; "Stories of English History, 1874; "Stories of Greek History for the Little Ones," 1876; "Aunt Charlotte's German History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Aunt Charlotte's Roman History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Unknown to History: a Story of the Mary of Scotland," a novel, 1882; "Stray Pearls; Margaret de Ribamont, Viscountess de laise," 2 vols., 1883; "The Shield" and "Nuttie's Fate," "The Reputed Changeling," "Penniless Princesses," "That Grim of the Ben Beca," "The Release," Ten pages for the National Society, Elderfield, Otterbourne.

and afterwards to H.M.S. Alexander, flagship of the Mediterranean fleet, on his uncle, the Duke of Edinburgh, then Commander-in-Chief. In 1889 presented with his first command, torpedo-boat No. 79, for the period naval manœuvres. While in charge of small craft he was able to afford efficient help to a vessel in distress. On July 6, 1890, he commissioned the first submarine boat Thrush, and in her he spent time on the North American station, in Canada and Jamaica, where he gave the exhibition, gaining much popularity as well as afloat. Upon his return to England in 1891 Prince George promoted Commander, and in October of the same year, while staying with his father in Dublin, contracted a dangerous illness. In August 1892 he commissioned a second-class cruiser Milampus, and took command of the naval manœuvres. His latest command afloat was H.M.S. Crescent, a torpedo vessel, and during the commissioning in 1898 he visited many seaport towns in England and Ireland. Prince George created Duke of York, Earl of Inverness and Baron Killarney in 1892, in the year he became heir to the Throne following the lamented death of his elder brother. He was promoted Captain in the royal navy in January 1893, and the following year his engagement to Princess Victoria (Princess May) of Teck was publicly announced, and the marriage was celebrated on July 6, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The ceremony was a very brilliant affair, all the members of the Royal Family being present, together with the Emperor of Russia, at that time Czar, and the King and Queen of Denmark. The Duke and his heir was born to the Duke and Duchess on June 23, 1894, and was christened after the patron saints of these names and his grandfather, Edward Christian George Andrew Patrick. Another son, Prince Albert, was born in December 1895, and a daughter, Princess Victoria, in April 1897. In January the Duke of York was compelled to accept an invitation to visit Australia, which was conveyed to him through the Emperor of Victoria, but in November he sailed with the Prince of Wales at the funeral of the Czar at St. Petersburg. In 1895 he presided at the 6th International Geographical Congress, which was held at the Imperial Institute. In August 1897 the Duke and Duchess visited Ireland, and were received with the utmost enthusiasm in all parts of the country. They visited Dublin, where they opened the Textile Exhibition, Killiney, the Shannon District, Kerry, and so on. His Royal Highness holds the Grand Cross of the Sultan of Turkey and the Grand Cross of the Orders of the Black and Red Eagle of Germany. He is also Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Colonel of the Royal Sussex Hussars Yeomanry Cavalry, and Colonel of the 3rd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers. In 1894 he was elected an Elder Brother and Master of the Corporation of Trinity House, and is annually re-elected. He is also a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, an LL.D. of Cambridge, a Fellow of the Royal Society, and has been appointed (March 1899) President of the Royal Humane Society in succession to the Duke of Argyll, who for forty years occupied that position.

YORK, H.R.H. Victoria Mary, Duchess of York, is the daughter of H.R.H. Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, cousin of her Majesty the Queen, and was born on May 26, 1867. She was married on July 6, 1893, to H.R.H. the Duke of York, and she has three children, viz., Prince Edward, born June 23, 1894; Prince Albert, born Dec. 14, 1895; and Princess Victoria Alexandra, born April 25, 1897. Her Royal Highness possesses the Royal Order of Victoria and Albert, and the Imperial Order of the Crown of India.

YORKE-DAVIES, Nathaniel Edward, L.R.C.P. Lond. 1871, M.R.C.S. Eng. 1866, L.S.A., 1865, and L.M. Dub. 1865, was born April 26, 1841, at Llanwrst, where his father was Head-master of King Edward the Sixth Grammar School. Prior to entering St. Bartholomew's Hospital he was educated at Cheltenham and other schools. After a brief period of service in the Egyptian navy he applied himself to the special study of dietetics, upon which subject he is now generally recognised as one of the greatest living authorities. There can be no doubt that his careful investigations will greatly tend to promote the increase both of health and longevity. Mr. Yorke-Davies is the author of numerous and valuable works upon the topic to which he has devoted the greater part of his leisure during the past quarter of a century. The most important of these are: "One Thousand Medical Maxims and Surgical Hints," 1885; "Aids to Long Life," 1886; "Foods for the Fat," "Dietetics of Obesity," 1889; "Living to Eat and Eating to Live," 1891; "Health and Condition," 1894; "Homburg and its Waters," 1897; "On the International Consumption of Meat in its Relation to Obesity," Lancet; "Thyroid Tabloids in Obesity," Brit. Med. Journ., 1894; "500 Cases of Obesity successfully treated by Scientific Dieting, with Table of Results," Prov. Med. Journ. 1893, &c. His work on "Health and Condition" has passed through several editions. Address: 44 Harley Street, W.

LAND. Again, in 1870, he returned the Pandora for a second attempt, with the same objects in view; but the Admiralty having been unexpectedly called upon to communicate with the depots of the Government Expedition in Smith's Sound, Captain Young readily responded to an invitation to fulfil that important duty, which he did at no small risk, and in a manner which was deemed thoroughly satisfactory. In recognition of this service the Queen conferred on him the honour of knighthood, March 12, 1877. An account of the "Two Voyages of the Pandora in 1875 and 1876" was published in London in 1879. In 1882 he commanded the Hope, sent out in search of the Eira Arctic ship, which had been lost in Franz Joseph Sound, and rescued the crew of the latter vessel. During the Egyptian war he was present at the operations at Suakim as commissioner allot to the National Aid Society. Sir Allen Young was created C.B. in 1881, and is Knight Commander of the Imperial Order of Franz Joseph of Austria, Commander of the Order of the Dannebrog, Denmark, and of the Order of ster, M.P., in 1884. He is the author of several works relating to the Colonies generally, including, among others, "Reasons for Promoting the Cultivation of New Zealand Flax," "Transplantation: the System of Emigration," "Long Ago and Now," "New Zealand: Past, Present, and Future," "England and her Colonies at the Paris Exhibition," "On the Political Relations of Mother Countries and Colonies," "An Address on Imperial Federation," "Emigration to the Colonies," and as editor of an important work entitled "Imperial Federation," published in 1876, and another entitled "A Senate for the Empire," published in 1895. "A Winter Year in South Africa" was published in 1900. Sir Frederick Young was created C.M.G. for his services on behalf of the Colonies. He was for many years Honorary Secretary, and afterwards one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal Colonial Institute. He is also on the Commission of the Peace for Middlesex, Westminster, the County of London, and Liberty of the Tower, and a Deputy Sheriff of the Tower Hamlets. He died in 1845, Cecilia, daughter of Mr. Drane, of Torquay; she died in 1900. Addresses: 5 Queensberry Place, W.; and Athenæum.

YOUNG, Sir George, Bart., LL.D., A., J.P., Charity Commissioner, was born at Cookham on Sept. 15, 1837, and is the eldest son of the second baronet, whom he succeeded in 1848, and of a daughter of William Mackworth Praed, Esq., at-Law. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected Fellow in 1862. While at the University he gained the Leake Prize for an essay on "Greek Literature in England," and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1864. He has served on various Royal Commissions, and was Secretary of the Factory and Workshops Acts Commission in 1875, and of the Irish Land Acts Commission in 1881. He was appointed a Charity Commissioner in 1882, and was President of the Senate of University College, London, from 1881 to 1886. He has been a leader in the movement in favour of a Teaching University for London. He is the author of a Report to Government on Friendly Societies, has published essays, "Political Poems," 1888, and is editor of the poems of Winthrop Mackworth Praed. Addresses: Formosa Place, Cookham; and Athenæum.

bright, born 1819, educated at Dumfries and Edinburgh, was called to the Scotch Bar in 1840; Solicitor-General for Scotland 1862-63, and again 1868-69. He was Lord Advocate 1869-74. Mr. Young was Sheriff of Inverness-shire from 1853 till 1860, and of Berwick and Haddington from 1860 till 1862. In April 1865, on the retirement of Sir W. Dunbar, Bart., he was elected member in the Liberal interest for the Wigtown Burghs, and was again returned in 1865, 1868, and 1874. He was raised to the Bench in 1874. In 1872 he was made a Privy Councillor. In 1846 he married Janet, daughter of G. Graham Bell, Crurie, Dumfriesshire. Addresses: 28 Moray Place, Edinburgh, &c.; and Athenæum.

YOUNG, Sydney, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.O.S., F.I.C., third son of Edward Young, a Liverpool merchant and Justice of the Peace for the county of Lancashire, was born on Dec. 29, 1857, at Farnworth, near Widnes, Lancashire. His early education was conducted at a private school in Southport, and at the Royal Institution, Liverpool. After spending two years in business, Sydney Young entered the Owens College in 1876, and studied there for five years, becoming an Associate of the College in 1880. He matriculated with honours at the London University in 1877, passed the 1st B.Sc. with honours in Physics in 1879, and was awarded the Scholarship in Chemistry at the final B.Sc. examination in 1880. He obtained the degree of Doctor of Science in 1883. During his stay at the Owens College a Chemical Society was founded by the students, and he and Arthur Smithells, now Professor of Chemistry at Leeds, were elected joint Secretaries of the Society. It was at this time that Professor Carnelly made the discovery that ice, when exposed to very low pressures, could not be liquefied even on the application of great heat, and at Sir Henry Roscoe's suggestion Mr. Young showed the experiment to the Society, and at the same time drew attention to the probable explanation of the behaviour of ice under these conditions. Afterwards in Bristol, in conjunction with Professor Ramsay, he obtained an experimental verification of this explanation. After undertaking an investigation on "Alcoholic Fluorides" at the Owens College, Mr. Young spent a year in Professor Fittig's laboratory at the University of Strasburg, and there carried out a research on "Ethyl-valero-lactone" and other compounds. In 1882 Dr. Young was appointed Lecturer and Demonstrator of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, and during the following five years he was engaged in original work, chiefly in physical chemistry, jointly with Professor Ramsay. On the retirement of Dr. Williamson in 1887 from the Professorship of Chemistry at University College, London, Professor Ramsay was appointed as his successor, and Dr. Young was then elected to the chair of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, a post which he still retains. Dr. Young was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1893, a Fellow of the London Chemical Society in 1881, a Member of the Berlin Chemical Society in 1882, a Member of the London Physical Society in 1886, and a Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry in 1888. He served on the Council of the Chemical Society from 1894 to 1898, and of the Physical Society from 1894 to 1897. He was President of the Bristol Naturalists' Society from 1894 to 1897, and of the Physical and Chemical Section of the Society from 1893 to 1896. He was External Examiner in Chemistry for the Victoria University from 1893 to 1896. Dr. Young is the author of numerous memoirs in Inorganic, Organic, and Physical Chemistry, which have been published by the Royal Society, the London and Berlin Chemical Societies, the Physical Society, the Society of Chemical Industry, and in the Philosophical Magazine and Nature. Many of the researches are on the vapour pressures, specific volumes and critical constants of inorganic and organic compounds, and on the generalisations of Van der Waals regarding corresponding temperatures, pressures, and volumes; and he has described new methods and apparatus for determining the specific volumes of liquids and saturated vapours, for fractional distillation, for the preparation of ketones, for showing the volatilisation of ice, &c. He is also the author of "Questions on Physics" (Rivingtons, now Longmans), and of articles on "Distillation," "Sublimation," and "Thermometers," in Thorpe's "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry." Addresses: 10 Windsor Terrace, Clifton, Bristol; and University College, Bristol.

YOUNG, Sir William Mackworth, K.C.S.I., M.A., the third son of Sir George Young, Bart., was born in 1849, and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. He entered the Indian Civil Service in 1862, and was sent to the Punjab as Assistant-Commissioner, 1868. He became Deputy-Commissioner in 1875, and in the same year Superintendent of the State of Kapurthala. Two years later he was Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, and was promoted to be a Commissioner in 1887. In 1890 he was a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and President of the Indian Hemp Drugs Commission in the same year. Having been Resident at Meerut from 1897, he was appointed to the post of Lieut.-Governor in the latter year, resigning in 1901. K.C.S.I. He married, in 1871, the eldest daughter of Sir John K.C.S.I. Address: Lahore.

YOUNGHUSBAND, Lieut. Charles Wright, C.B., F.R.S. of the late Major-General Younghusband, R.A., and was born at Fort, N.B., on June 2, 1840. He was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the Army in 1857. He was employed in the Magnetic and Meteorological Department of the Ordnance Survey from 1849, and during the same period assisted the late Sir E. Sabine in arranging the results of the observations taken at various observatories through the Crimean Campaign, sent at Iskerman, and later with two classes. He joined the Royal Artillery Regiment in 1857, and was occupied from 1857 to 1860 in searching for swords, bayonets, and other articles in Germany. General Younghusband, member of the Ordnance Survey from 1860 to 1870, and later acted as Commissioner for the material at the Paris Exhibition of 1867 to 1870. He was Superintendent of the Royal Gunpowder Magazine at Waltham Abbey, and following five years he acted as capacity at the Royal Gunpowder Arsenal, Woolwich, and retired in 1880. He married Mary, daughter of the Hon. of Toronto, she died in 1880. 12 Castle Hill Avenue, E. the Athenaeum.

YOUNGHUSBAND, Capt. Cecil Edward, C.B.E. was born in 1861 and is the second son of J. W. Younghusband, C.S.I. the 1st Dragoon Guards in 1880, and entered Staff Corps. He was attached to the Political Agent and British Agent in China, known for his explanation in 1893, and has received the of the Royal Geographical Society in 1891 he was created C.B.E. Important works are "Heat and Light" and the "Relief of China" latter work was written in with Captain G. J. Younghusband.

YOXALL, James H., M.A. (son of J. H. Yoxall, Cambr., was

57, at Redditch, Worcestershire, he attended a public elementary school. In his fourteenth year he came to become a pupil-teacher, and an assistant-teacher, in a Sheffield School. For two years he was a member of the Westminster Training College. Returning to Sheffield, he was promoted to a headmastership, under his charge the Sharrow Lane School became well known for the success of the educational system he originated there, bringing art and music to bear on the various subjects of instruction, and attracting from educationalists from all parts of the United Kingdom and abroad. By articles in magazines, lectures on many platforms, he contributed materially in the downfall of the system known as "Payment by Results" and much of the reform accomplished since 1890 has been due to his efforts.

In 1892 the members of the National Union of Teachers elected him president, and a few months later named him General Secretary of that union, which under his care has rapidly grown in influence, and has now doubled in numbers. He was successful as a parliamentary candidate in 1892, but the efforts he made secured for him an invitation to stand for Nottingham (West), a seat he won in 1895. In 1894 he was elected a Royal Commissioner on Secondary Education in England, and has since been regarded as an authority on all matters pertaining to schools, both in the House of Commons and in the country.

He received the degree of M.A. (honoris causa) conferred on him by the University of Cambridge in recognition of his services to the cause of public education. He is the author of "Secondary Education," 1896; "The Lonely Pyramid," 1890; "Nut-brown Roger and I," and editor of "The Children's Stories for the Schoolroom," addresses: 7 Pagoda Avenue, Richmond, Surrey; and 71 Russell Square, London, rising which took place in March 1849. He escaped, and in consequence of the amnesty granted by the Austrian Government, subsequently returned to Brescia, where, from 1851 to 1859, he lived as a private teacher of jurisprudence. When Lombardy became free in 1859 Zanardelli sat in the Piedmontese Legislature in several Parliaments for Isco. In 1866 he became commissario regio of the Province of Belluno, under the Ministry of Ricasoli. In 1869 he sat on the commission of inquiry into the tobacco Regia. At the Lombard bar Zanardelli enjoyed a very high reputation as an advocate. After the Ministerial crisis of 1876 he became Minister of Public Works in the first Depretis Cabinet, which portfolio he resigned in November 1877, in consequence of differences with Depretis, which made it impossible for him to sign, as Minister of Public Works, the Railway Convention arranged by the latter. He was appointed to the Home Office in the Cairoli Ministry in March 1878, and went into opposition on its fall. He was Minister of Justice and Cults under the various Crispi Ministries, and the new Italian Penal Code, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1890, is chiefly due to him. In 1894, on the fall of the Giolitti Ministry, he tried to form a Cabinet, but had to give place to Signor Crispi, whose bitter and factious enemies he then joined. This hostility caused him to be beaten in a provincial election at Brescia, his own home, in May 1895. The general election immediately ensued. After the general election of March 1897 the Marquis di Rudini has mainly relied for support in Parliament on the combined parties of Giolitti and Zanardelli.

ZANGWILL, Israel, was born in London of poor Jewish parents in 1864, but his early childhood was passed mainly in Plymouth and in Bristol, where he attended the Red Cross Street Middle Class School, reaching the highest class but one before his parents returned to London, in his ninth year. The boy was placed in the Jews' Free School, an immense institution in Spitalfields, where in due course he became head boy, thrice carrying off the scholarships and medals founded to commemorate the admission of Jews into Parliament. He remained at the school as a teacher, and after the laborious work of the day studied for a degree at London University, where he graduated B.A. with triple honours before he was twenty-one. He also took the highest possible teachers' certificate. He had scribbled from childhood, and in his sixteenth year a prize serial from his pen ran through a London weekly, but it was not till he had graduated that he was able

of the second, whom he succeeded

He was created Marquis in 1892. He had been a lieutenant in the Royal Artillery, a captain in the Yorkshire Artillery, a Lord-in-Waiting, and Lord Chamberlain of Ireland in Lord Salisbury's administration, when he succeeded his father as Marquis of Londonderry, 1886-92. He was a Member of Parliament for North Riding, and a Colonel in the Royal Artillery. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1889. In 1871 he married Lady Elizabeth Lumley, daughter of the Earl of Scarborough. Addresses: Grosvenor Street, S.W.; and Aske, Richmond, &c.

ZIMMERMANN, Agnes Marie, was born in Cologne on July 5, 1847. At four years of age she came to England, and after her father's death, under her father and one or two masters, was entered at nine years of age as a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where Cipriani Potter was her teacher at the piano, and Dr. Steggall her harmony. On Cipriani Potter's death in 1860, Herr Ernst Pauer, the young student's piano master, then began to study composition with Professor Macfarren. She continued to study hard, and while yet a pupil composed several works, instrumental and vocal, which were performed at the Royal Academy Students' Concerts. In 1860 she won the King's Scholarship, and the next year she won the Silver Medal. In 1861 she made what may be termed her first appearance, at a Palace concert. In 1864 Miss Zimmermann went to Germany, where she studied at the Leipzig Gewandhaus Conservatory, the Court of Hanover, and elsewhere. Returning to England, she continued to play in public favour. In 1879, 1881, 1882, and 1886 Miss Zimmermann played at many public concerts in England—at Hamburg, Düsseldorf, Brunswick, Berlin, Frankfurt, Leipzig, Halle, and elsewhere—as privately to the Courts at Berlin, Darmstadt, and Brussels. In many seasons she has regularly taken part on Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts, and has played in most of the principal cities and at the principal places abroad. Miss Zimmermann's own compositions are well known to musicians, and her editions of Beethoven's and Chopin's Sonatas are standard works for students. She has been engaged on editions of Schumann's works, the first of which was published in 1890. Address: 13 Portman Square, W.

ERN, Helen, was born in the town of Hamburg, March 25,

1846, but has lived in England since 1850, and is a naturalised British subject. She is the author of "Stories in Precious Stones," 1873; "Schopenhauer, his Life and Philosophy," 1876; "Gottfried Ephraim Lessing, his Life and his Works," 1878; "Half Hours with Foreign Novelists," 1880; "Tales from the Edda," illustrated by Kate Greenaway, 1882; and a paraphrase of the Persian poet, Firdusi, issued under the title of "The Epic of Kings," and illustrated with etchings by Alma-Tadema, R.A., 1882; "Life of Maria Edgeworth," 1883; "The Hanse Towns," 1889; an edition of the "Comedies of Goldoni," 1892; and a translation of the "Pentamerone," new edition, 1893. She also writes much for periodicals and for English, American, German, and Italian newspapers. Address: 2 Via Leone Decimo, Florence.

ZOLA, Émile, French novelist and patriot, was born in Paris, 10 Rue St. Joseph, April 2, 1840, of a French mother, Emilie Aubert, and an Italian father, an eminent civil engineer, whose work, "Un Traité de Nivellement," gained him the membership of the Academy of Padua. François Zola is best known by the "Canal Zola" at Aix; he was born in 1796 at Venice, and died at Marseille in 1847, leaving his family very badly off. His more famous son, Émile, passed his boyhood at Aix, where he studied at the local college, and came to Paris in February 1858. He obtained a scholarship at the Lycée St. Louis, where he was a pupil of Levasseur, who predicted the success of the future novelist on reading an essay of his on "Milton dictating to his Daughter." All the same he failed to pass his baccalauréat, being rejected in literature in the second vote. In 1860 he left the Lycée, and after working at the docks for two months, he preferred starvation and threw up his post. Towards the end of 1861 he obtained an introduction to Messrs. Hachette, the well-known publishers, and started in their office, first as a shopman at £4 a month, and afterwards as a clerk, when they saw his worth. He employed his leisure in writing short tales, which were afterwards published under the title of "Contes à Ninon" (Oct. 24, 1864). During the next year he wrote tales for the Petit Journal and La Vie Parisienne; and a collection of articles for the Salut Public of Lyon, which were afterwards published under the title of "Mes Haines." This same year (1865) saw the publication of "La Confession de Claude," and on Jan. 31, 1866, he resigned his position at Hachette's, convinced that he could earn his living by his pen. Villemessant employed him to write reviews for the Événement, and afterwards a set of articles novels of the nineteenth century, second only to Balzac's "Comédie Humaine." Up to now Zola had achieved no great success, in spite of his six published volumes. Then came to him the idea of bringing the scientific laws of heredity within the scope of romance, and he drew up, after eight months' hard work in libraries, museums, and the streets, the now famous genealogical tree of the family of the Rougons (to be found in "Une Page d'Amour" and in "Docteur Pascal"). In 1869 he went to his publisher, Lacroix, and offered to write twelve volumes of a series to be styled "Les Rougon-Macquart," and the contract was signed in May of that year. He applied his theory to the document humain, and in doing so he had to master the technical details of most professions, trades, and occupations. In June 1870 the Siècle began the publication of the first of the series, "La Fortune des Rougon"; but the war soon interrupted its course, and it appeared in volume form in 1871. In his preface he explains his object to be to show how a family can produce ten or twenty individuals representing all the first more justly proud of the efforts of his own brain, and his publishers gave him the Légion d'honneur at which all literary Parisians esteem. On July 14, 1888, he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour; and five years afterwards an Officer.

From 1891 till 1894 he was President of the Société des Gens de Lettres. In the years that the Rougon-Macquarts was appearing M. Zola also published many critical articles, which were published as "Le Roman Experimental," "Les Romanciers Naturalistes," and "Documents Littéraires." We must not forget to mention here that most of his short stories "L'Attaque du Fort," published in a book entitled "Contes de Médan," 1880, a volume after his home near Paris, in which appeared Guy de Maupassant's "Boule de Suif." It is a pathetic incident of the Franco-Prussian War, and has been made the subject of a well-known opera. A new critical article appeared in the Revue during 1880-81, which have been called "Une Campagne." In 1893 he visited London on the invitation of the Institute of Journalists, whom he addressed on the subject of "Anonymity in Journalism." The next year he commenced writing three novels, which he called "Les Trois Villes"—Lourdes, Rome, and Paris. The first was a lurid picture of pilgrimages to the southern coast, the next, a book upon the Eternal City, and the last, a mass of documents do not give a very clear idea of Le roman expérimental. In these three works he tried to represent the progress of an inquiry, the Abbé Pierre Froment, a freethoughter, after discovering the salvation of society is not to be found by Catholic faith. It must not be forgotten that although a just appreciation of Zola is a commonplace of literary criticism in these days, very few years ago since his translators and publishers were treated as common law. In 1897 he achieved the unusual distinction of having a whole book written about his brain. This was a study by Dr. J. Toulouse, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine, entitled "Enquête Médico-Psychologique sur les Rapports de la Supériorité Intellectuelle avec la Névropathie," is an inquiry similar to that published by Mr. J. F. Nesbit's well-known work on the "Insanity of Genius." In it we find every possible particular of the novelist's physical and mental life from its cradle to the date of publication. In that, as in early years he endured privation, he was correspondingly rewarded. With increased prosperity came inavoidable idleness, until in 1887 he devoted himself. Dr. Toulouse

ascribes M. Zola's best work to the period when he was still a fat man; that is, anterior to "La Terre." He now diets himself rigorously: at nine, on rising, he partakes of a crust of dry bread, drinking nothing with it; he lunches lightly at one, again taking nothing to drink; immediately after this meal he goes out of doors, so as to avoid falling asleep; at five he has tea, and he dines, lightly and without drinking, at half-past seven. At ten he drinks two cups of tea. He has given up smoking, and he refrains entirely from wine except for an occasional glass after bicycling. The year 1898 was a momentous one in the novelist's life. Captain Alfred Dreyfus, condemned in 1894, had been languishing for three years off the fever-stricken coast of Cayenne; during those three years his devoted family and friends had been struggling to obtain a revision of his so-called trial. They could gain no hearing, but Zola, once convinced of the injustice that had been done, and supremely careless of all personal consequences, compelled France and the entire world to listen to his case. His letter j'accuse was published in M. Clémenceau's journal L'Aurore on January 13, 1898. It had been preceded by two letters, "Lettre à la Jeunesse" and "Lettre à la France." The sensation created was enormous, and he was immediately prosecuted for having said that the judges who tried Esterhazy had acquitted him by order. The trial took place in Paris from 7th to the 23rd of February, and was the one subject of interest at the time. People waited for hours for a chance of a peep into the court, and the courageous author had to be protected by the police from the attacks of a brutal mob. The evidence was strongly in favour of M. Zola's contentions, namely, that Dreyfus had been condemned illegally, that the facts against him had been without significance, and that the bordereau was written not by Dreyfus, but by Esterhazy. But General de Boisdeffre, the chief of the General Staff, came forward and threatened the jury with the resignation of the whole staff if Zola were acquitted, and in the end he was condemned to the maximum penalty, in spite of the heroic efforts of his counsel, M. Labori (q.v.). He appealed against this decision, and the trial was quashed on an informality; again the military authorities decided to prosecute him, and he was again condemned, this time by default, at Versailles. Whereupon he left the country and came to England, where he lived in retirement in a village near Birmingham until the Court of Cassation gave its judgment on the whole question of revision. In consequence of his condemnation the Chancellor of the Legion of Honour erased his name from the roll, and François de Pressensé (q.v.) and others voluntarily gave up the order as well. His technical offence was defamation of a tribunal, i.e. saying Esterhazy had been acquitted by order; but his real offence was making himself the mouth-piece of the intelligent and thoughtful portion of the French public. He has dared to stand up for truth and liberty at a moment when many saw the peril of such conduct, but no other was ready to brave the extremity of personal danger in order to aid in averting it. Posterity will look beyond the studied intemperance of his language and will see in him a man who refused to sit still while a great wrong was being perpetrated. He challenged the corrupt Jesuits, and rabble-roused the people. His novel, "Fécondité" is a feuilleton in the life led by the hero is Mathieu, a factory, and the priest, Pierre, the protagonist of "Trois Villes." English is by London, 1893), and books have been written against him during his life in France. His death was at Brussels.

UL AZIZ, Sultan of Morocco, was 1880, and at the age of fourteen, was unexpectedly raised to the succession to his father, Muley whose death from dysentery was very suddenly on June 7, 1894.

Sultan, whose succession was in accordance with his father's wishes, claimed at Fez on June 12. For a position was threatened by Muley Ismail, the eldest son of the late Sultan, but the rebel was seized and imprisoned on the 19th. On the 25th he released the daughter of Muley Ershid, his uncle. Subsequently he dismissed his Vizier and the Grand Chamberlain and replaced them by friends. The ministers were then arrested on a charge of plotting to murder the Sultan. A energetic boy despot entered Fez popular rejoicing in July, and firmly established himself on the throne by the death of Muley Omar, his uncle (July 23). The Sultan, usually termed "Emperor" by Europeans, is at the head of religion as well as of the State. He is absolute ruler of his people, but many outlying tribes do not acknowledge his authority. His intercourse with foreigners is chiefly with our own ministers, Sir Satow and Sir Arthur Nicolson, he is in the main most cordial. He is officially recognised a British Viceroy at Fez.

Dr. Carl, Dr. Ph., M.S.G.L., Professor under the Prussian Government, Minister of Public Instruction, the son of a Berlin banker, was born at Berlin, July 1837; studied Philology, National History, and History at the Universities of Berlin, Munich, and Tübingen; travelled for the purposes of linguistic study in England, France, Switzerland, Russia, and America. He has devoted himself chiefly to the comparative study of significations and the more recent branches of national psychology dependent upon the appreciation of meanings. He showed linguistic concepts to be chiefly national, and their comparison the best means of gauging the intellectual development of a race; examined the historical stages of significative development; inquiry into sundry linguistic concepts of the English, French, German, Russian, Polish, Egyptian, and Hebrew idioms; analysed the prehistoric origin of meanings through a combination of Indo-Germanic and Egyptian etymology; disclosed in the course of these labours an identity of roots, stems, and primary phonetic and conceptual laws in the two families of speech; proved these common primary laws, while they did not interfere with the separate laws of later times, to reveal a much more ancient and more perspicuous period of etymology, which unfolds the prehistoric growth and history of reason; demonstrated the primitive variability of sound and sense, the inversion of both and the multiplicity of etymological connections and transitions resulting therefrom; extended his investigations to Semitic affinities; sifted, on the basis of facts established, the origin of language, the growth of signification, and the theory of synonyms. Professor Carl Abel has acted as Ilchester Lecturer on Comparative Slavonic and Latin Lexicography at Oxford University; lectured on various etymological and semasiological topics at the Royal Asiatic Society, the Royal Literary Society, the Berlin Philological, Philosophical, and Anthropological Society; taught, as Ordinary Docent, Philosophical and Comparative Linguistics as well as English, French, German, and Latin Synonymy in the Berlin Humboldt Academy of Science; was linguistic assistant to the German Foreign Office and the Berlin Law Courts; served as Berlin Correspondent to the Times and Standard; was a contributor to various English and German philological and general periodicals. Professor Carl Abel reads all European and several Oriental languages. The following is a list of his principal writings: "Linguistic Essays," London, 1880 (history and theory of signification, synonymy, countersense, origin of language, Latin order of words); "Sprachwissenschaftliche Abhandlungen," Leipzig, 1885 (an amplified German edition of the foregoing); "Slavic and Latin," Ilchester Lectures on Comparative Lexicography delivered at the University of Oxford, London, 1881; "Gross- und Klein-Russisch. Aus Ilchester Vorlesungen übersetzt von R. Dieltz," Leipzig, 1882 (German translation of the foregoing); "Koptische Untersuchungen," Berlin, 1878, two volumes (grammatical and semasiological); "Einleitung in ein ägyptisch - indoeuropäisch - semitisches Wurzelwörterbuch," Leipzig, 1886 (Egyptian, phonetic and conceptual change, with specimen of application to the two other families of speech); "Wechselbeziehungen der ägyptischen, indoeuropäischen und semitischen Etymologie," Thiel 1, Leipzig, 1889 (Comparative Egyptian and Indo-European analysis of the root "ker," crooked, with generic conclusions); "Ägyptisch - Indoeuropäische Sprachverwandtschaft," Leipzig, 1890 (concise summary of the foregoing, with amplified general conclusions); "Ägyptisch und Indogermanisch Vorlesung vor den Sprachwissenschaftlichen Sectionen des Frankfurter Freien Deutschen Hochstifts," Zweite Auflage, Frankfurt, 1890 (introductory and defensive); "Zur Geschichte der Hieroglyphenschrift. Nach dem Holländischen des Dr. W. Pleyte," Leipzig, 1890; "L'Affinité étymologique des langues égyptiennes et indo-européennes, Mémoire destiné au Congrès International des Orientalistes," Lisbonne, 1892; "Letters on International Relations contributed to the Times," London, 1871, two volumes; and "Russland und die Lage," Leipzig, 1888 (linguistic and national psychology applied to history).

ALI PACHA, a Turkish diplomatist, commenced his political career by being one of the referendaries of the Imperial Divan. In 1858, when Fuad Pacha went to Paris as Plenipotentiary representing the Porte at the Conference which had assembled to draw up the conventions respecting the United Principalities, he attached Ali Bey to his mission, and the latter rendered himself conspicuous by his general intelligence and aptitude for diplomacy. In 1861 he was appointed First Secretary of the Ottoman Embassy in Paris, and when, in 1862, he went on leave of absence to Constantinople, the Government entrusted him with the delicate mission of Commissioner to Servia after the bombardment of Belgrade. Owing to his address and tact he succeeded in settling nearly all the difficulties. Whilst performing these functions he was, in 1865, placed in charge of the political direction of the province of Bosnia. In 1868 he was appointed Member of the Council of State, and afterwards undertook several other missions. In 1869 he was nominated to the post of Under-Secretary of State at the Ministry of Public Works. He remained in that office until 1870, when he was made Governor of Erzeroum, and afterwards of Trebizond, on which occasion he was raised to the dignity of Pacha. In 1872 he became Prefect of Constantinople, where he introduced several reforms, and in September 1873 was sent as ambassador from the Ottoman Empire to the French Republic. He died at Paris on January 1876, and was buried in the cemetery of the Holy Innocents before his deposition. He was appointed Ali Pacha Scutari, in Northern

BISMARCK-SCHÖNHAUSEN, HERBERT VON, son of Prince Bismarck, was born at Berlin, Dec. 28, 1849. He served the German Empire in various diplomatic capacities, and was first Secretary in London, and later at the Hague. He has sat in the Reichstag as one of the members for Schleswig-Holstein, and in 1886 was Secretary of State and Assessor to the Chancellor. On his father's retirement he was initially charged with the direction of foreign affairs, but preferred to follow the family into private life. In January 1889 the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Red Eagle, First Class. He holds the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the army. In the summer of 1899 it was announced that the Emperor intended to confer on him the high office. In 1901 he married, in Vienna, the Princess Hohenlohe, daughter of Count George Hohenlohe and controller of the ex-Imperial Whitehead torpedo works at Fiume.

BLAKE, The Hon. Edward, Q.C., M.P. (Canada), M.P., late Canadian Minister, was born at Adelaide, Ontario, Dec. 3, 1833, and became M.A. of Toronto University, 1858. He began the practice of law in 1859, and in 1864 became a Queen's Counsel. In 1867 he was elected to the Ontario Legislature and also to the Dominion Parliament, and in 1871–72 was Premier of Ontario. This position he resigned for only one session, being obliged to resign on account of the passage of the representation Act. He became Minister, in 1873, of the Canadian Cabinet under the Mackenzie administration. He served for various periods as Minister of Finance and as President of the Council. He was Chancellor of Ontario and the Justiceship of the Supreme Court of Ontario. Dominion were offered to him, but he declined both. In 1878 he, with many other members of his party, was defeated at the election, but he re-entered the Parliament in the following year, and was in office until 1887 generally recognized as the leader of the Liberal party. He was chosen Chancellor of the University of Toronto in 1876, and has held the office since. The honour of knighthood was declined by him in 1877. In 1901 he resigned the position of leader of the Liberal party, but retained his seat in the Dominion Parliament until 1891, when he retired from Canadian political life. He entered the British House of Commons in 1892 as member for South Longford, Ireland, having contested that constituency at the request of the leaders of the Irish Nationalist party. He was re-elected in 1895, and has taken an active part in advancing the cause of Home Rule for Ireland. He is a member of the Nationalist Parliamentary Committee. In 1889 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Toronto. He married a daughter of the Bishop of Huron.

BRETT, John, A.R.A., sea-scapist, was born in 1830, and at an early age came under the influence of Mr. Ruskin and the Pre-Raphaelites. A picture painted under this influence was the "Stone-breaker," 1858, followed in 1859 by the "Val d'Aosta." From 1870 onwards, however, he became enamoured of sea-subjects, and he has now for many years painted scenes, chiefly on the Southern and Cornish coasts, in a spirited manner not in the least suggestive of his early penchant. His principal works at the Royal Academy's Exhibitions have been: "Spire and Steeples of the Channel Islands," 1875; "Sir Thomas's Tower," 1876; "Mount's Bay," 1877; "Cornish Lions," 1878; "Carnarvon: Stronghold of the Season and Camp of the Kittywake," 1879; "Britannia's Realm," 1880 (a picture bought by the Royal Academy); "Golden Prospects: St. Catherine's Well," 1881; "The Grey of the Morning," 1882; "These Yellow Sands," 1883; "M'Leod's Maidens, Skye," 1884; "The Norman Archipelago," 1885; "Kyle-Akin," 1887; "The Earth's Shadow on the Sky," 1888; "The Outlook from My Native Cliffs," "The Isles of the Sirens," "The Sear, the Yellow Leaf," "Probably some Rain," 1895; "A Friend in Need," "North Devon Cliffs," "From the Balcony of Cliff Cottage, Lee," and "Loch Braccadaile, Skye," 1896; "Castel Moel, Isle of Skye," "The South Stack Lighthouse: the Wind Athwart the Tide," "Distant Capri," and "Whiteshell Point, Caswell Bay (limestone)," 1897; "Among the Rocks at Trevone (quartz veins in the slate)," "Trevone Head, Cornwall," "Trevone Bay: north-westerly showers," and "Where you had better not come ashore: North Cornwall," 1898; "Kylesrome, Sutherland," "Summer on the Cliffs," "The Island off Padstow," and "Etretat (west)," 1899. BROGLIE, Charles Jacques Victor Albert, Duc de, eldest son of the eminent French statesman Achille Charles Léon Victor, Duc de Broglie (who died his name in "Dorothy" and other musical pieces. In 1891, at the short-lived Royal English Opera, he created the part of Ivanhoe in the opera of that name, has sung Faust in Italian at the Opera, and was offered an engagement at La Scala, Milan. He has latterly devoted himself solely to concerts, where his perfect voice and style have won him many laurels. He has toured with great success in Germany and the United States, and in 1894 made his first appearance at the Handel Festival. Address: 6 Cork Street, W.

DAVIES, Sir Robert Henry, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born in 1824, and is the son of the late Sir David Davies, M.D. He was educated at the Charterhouse and at Haileybury College. He was Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab from 1871 to 1877, and a member of the Council of India from 1885 to 1895. He was created K.C.S.I. in 1874, and C.I.E. in 1877. He is a widower, and has been twice married. Addresses: 38 Wilton Place, S.W.; and Athenæum, &c.

DILLMANN, Christian Friedrich August, Ph.D., D.D., was born April 25, 1823, at Illingen, in the district of Maulbronn, in Würtemberg, and was educated in the Gymnasium at Stuttgart, and the Lower Evangelical Theological Seminary at Schönbühl. From 1840 to 1844 he studied philosophy, Oriental philology, and theology, in the University and in the Higher Theological Seminary at Tübingen. In the autumn of 1844 he passed the first theological official examination, and then devoted another year to the study of the Oriental languages. In 1845 he became a parish vicar in Tersheim, in the district of Vaihingen, in Würtemberg. From 1846 to 1848 he made a scientific tour, visiting the libraries in Paris, in London, and at Oxford, where he received from the authorities of the libraries the proposal that he should draw up catalogues of their Æthiopic MSS. In April 1848, having returned to Würtemberg, he became Repetent in the Theological Seminary at Tübingen, and as such discharged at the same time the professorate of Old Testament Exegesis in the University for the four years during which, through the departure of Ewald, the office was vacant. In 1852 he became Privat Dozent in the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen, and in 1853 was nominated by the king a Professor Extraordinary in the same Faculty. After filling various posts at Kiel and Giessen he became Professor in Ordinary of Old Testament Exegesis in the Theological Faculty of the Metropolitan University of Berlin, which office he held till May 1846 he graduated in the University of Tübingen. In 1862 Professor Dillmann received a honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Leipzig. He has written or edited: cum MSS. Orientalium. I. annico a-servantur. I. Æthiopicis continetur. Codicum MSS. Biblicæ Oxoniensis, Pars VII. ELLIS, Alfred, A.R.A., R.I., was born on Dec. 15, 1849, and was educated at the Government School of Art, Glasgow, and the night-school conducted by Mr. Greenlees. His father had not intended him for the profession of an artist, although he had drawn very well from his earliest years, but was only the chance of residence in Paris, where he made the acquaintance of artists, which decided the direction his career should take. After leaving Glasgow, he studied at the École des Beaux-Arts under Tony Fleury and Bougereau. His first Royal Academy picture, "Dewy Morning," was painted at Barbizon, of which school he was an idealising landscapist. Mr. Eastlake was his adherent. He next painted in Paris, and came under the influence of the young Glasgow colourists, but, being himself a brilliant master of colour, cannot be described as of any school. Removing to London, he found that the artistic landscape the order of the day, and he gradually made his mark, and became one of the leading landscape painters of England. Soon after his marriage he exhibited his studies at the Royal Art Society at Bond Street. A journey in Japan further influenced his style and method. He has exhibited at the Royal Academy for many years. His recent pictures are: "Autumn Haze," "Midland Meadows," 1895; "A Landscape," and "The Valley of the Chess," 1896; "The Sleepy River Somme" and "Silence of Morning," 1897; "An English Song" and "Opulent Autumn," 1898; and "The Monks' Pool, Beardsall," 1899. "A Combe in the Cotswolds," "The Shepherd's Walk, Windermere," and "The Miller's Daughter," 1899. He is a member of the Royal Institute of Water-Colour Painters and of the Council of the Royal Academy of Painter-Etchers, and became a full member in 1899. He is also a member of the Honorary Council of the Japan Society, and a Gold Medalist of Paris and Munich, and has won "Grand Concours" at the Salon. Address: 2 Spencer Street, Victoria Street,

ELLIS, Major-General Sir Arthur Edward Augustus, K.C.V.O., C.S.I., Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Lords, was born at Gibraltar Dec. 13, 1837, and is the second son of Colonel the Hon. Augustus F. Ellis. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the 33rd Regiment in 1854, serving in the Crimea, and being present at the siege of Sebastopol, and at Kertch. He was A.D.C. and Military Secretary to Lord Elphinstone, Governor of Bombay from 1858 to 1862, when he exchanged as Captain to the Grenadier Guards. In 1867 he was appointed Equerry to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and was well known in that capacity until he resigned (November 1898), and was appointed Extra Equerry, January 1899. In November 1898 he was appointed Sergeant-at-Arms in Ordinary to her Majesty the Queen in the House of Lords. He is Secretary to H.M. Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1881. HAFFKINE, Waldemar Mordecai Wolff, C.I.E., son of the late Aaron Haffkine and Rosalie, daughter of David Landsberg, of Odessa, was born in Odessa on March 15, 1860, and is a Jew by birth and religion. He was educated in the Classical College of Berdiansk, on the Sea of Azoff, and in the University of Odessa, where he took his degree in Science in 1884, and has published, up to 1888, the following: "Recherches biologiques sur l'Astasia ocellata, n.s.," in the Annales des Sciences Naturelles, Paris, 1885; "Recherches biologiques sur l'Euglena viridis, Ehr.," ibid. 1886; "On the Nutrition of Euglenae and Astasiae," in the Memoirs of the Society of Naturalists of Nova-Rossia, Odessa, 1886 (in Russian); "On the Laws of Heredity in Application to Monocellular Organisms," ibid. 1887, and Archives de Zoologie expérimentale et générale, Paris, 1888; and a translation from the German into Russian of Klaus's text-book, "Zoologie," by Haffkine and Schulgin, Odessa, 1888. In the latter year M. Haffkine was appointed Assistant to Professor Moritz Schiff in the chair of Physiology in the University of Geneva, and in 1889 went to Paris, where he published, in the Annales de l'Institut Pasteur, 1890, articles "Sur les maladies infectieuses chez les Paramécies" and vaccination against plague, has since then been applied to tens of thousands of individuals of various races and nationalities in India. The reduction in plague mortality effected by inoculations is estimated to average eighty per cent., approaching often ninety per cent. He published during that period: "Plague Prophylactic," Indian Medical Journal and British Medical Journal, 1897; "Report on the Epidemic of Plague at Bombay," by Haffkine and Haffkine, Bombay, 1897, and Indian Medical Journal, 1897; "The Protective Inoculation against Plague," Poona, 1898; "Experiment on the Effect of Protective Inoculation against the Epidemic of Plague in Undhera, Baroda," Bombay, 1898; "The Protective Inoculation against Plague in the Community of Bombay during the Epidemic of 1897-98," Bombay, 1898; "Communicated a summary of the results of the Edinburgh Meeting of the British Medical Association of 1898, published in the British Medical Journal under the title of "The Testing of Haffkine's Prophylactic in the Plague-Stricken Communities in India," by Haffkine and Haffkine. The Government Plague Research Laboratory, founded and organised by Haffkine, manufactures the prophylactic at present at the rate of some ten doses a day, and has supplied, in addition to Indian demands, those also to the Transvaal, Cape Colony, Mauritius, Zanzibar, the Gold Coast, Ceylon, Hong-Kong, and Russian Asia. In April 1899 he returned to England on leave, and delivered at the Society a discourse "On Preventive Vaccination," published in the Lancet and Medical Journal of June and July, which will appear also in the Proceedings of the Society. This address, he says, "places preventive inoculation on a higher plane than it has hitherto occupied." What Jenner was to smallpox, Pasteur to anthrax, that M. Haffkine is to plague and cholera. In addition to the publications above mentioned, Haffkine contributed to the Journal of the Norwegian Ministry of Public Instruction, in Christiania, in 1889, a paper under the title "Les nouvelles Écoles de Vaccination en Russie"; to the Journal of Education, in Odessa, 1889, a series of articles "On the Primary Schools of Scandinavia" (in Russian), and translated Norwegian, together with B. Minoff, Schuebeler's "Horticultural" published in St. Petersburg in 1890 (in Russian). M. Haffkine was elected a member of the Society of Naturalists of Odessa, in 1885; Member of the Société de Zoologie de France, Paris, in 1890; and Hon. Member of the Calcutta

Microscopic Society in 1894. In 1897, on the occasion of her Majesty's Jubilee, he received the order of C.I.E., but his exhaustive and magnificent labours have, we understand, been almost honorary.

HARTLEY, Sir Charles Augustus, K.C.M.G., F.R.S.E., was born at Heworth, co. Durham, in 1825, being the son of W. A. Hartley, Esq., iron merchant, of Darlington, by Lillias, daughter of A. Tod, Esq., J.P., of Borrowstounness, N.B. In 1845, after a practical course of instruction in mining and railway engineering at Bishop Auckland and Leeds, he was appointed one of Messrs. Stevenson, Brassey & Mackenzie's district engineers on the Scottish Central Railway, and held that post till 1848, when he was nominated Resident Engineer at Sutton Harbour, Plymouth, under Mr. J. Locke, M.P. In June 1855, on the completion of the Sutton Harbour works, he accepted a commission as Captain in the Turkish Contingent Engineers, and served at Kertch with that force until the end of the Crimean War, for which he received the Turkish war medal. In December 1856 he was elected Engineer-in-Chief to the European Commission of the Danube, on the recommendation of Major (now Lieut.-General Sir John) Stokes, K.C.B., and General Sir John Burgoyne, Bart. In March 1861 he inspected the early works of the Suez Canal, and reported favourably on that scheme to the English Government. In September 1862 he received the honour of knighthood. In 1867 he was awarded the Emperor of Russia's "Grand Competition Prize" of 8000 silver roubles, for which there were twenty competitors, for his plans for enlarging the harbour of Odessa. In 1872, when the depth at Sulina had been increased, by natural scour only, to 20½ feet, and many important river improvements had been effected, he ceased to reside at Sulina, and became Consulting Engineer to the Danube Commission, a post which he still retains. During his residence abroad he was also employed by the Austrian Government to report on various schemes for improving the port of Trieste; by the Turkish Government, to report on dock accommodation at Constantinople; by the Russian Government, to survey and report on the mouths of the Don; by the British Government, to report on an international question of engineering connected with the Scheldt; by the Indian Government, to report on the Hooghly; by the Khedive, to report on the "barrage" across the Nile; and by the Roumanian Government, to prepare surveys and drawings for a harbour on the coast of Bessarabia. In January 1874 he was the first engineer to recommend the improvement of the South Pass and Mouth of the Mississippi in preference to either of the other mouths. In August 1875 he visited the South Pass as a member of Mr. J. B. Eads' Advisory Board, and remained in constant communication with that distinguished engineer till the summer of 1879, when Mr. Eads' well-planned operations to deepen the South Pass and Mouth, by means of parallel jetties, as at Salina, were crowned with complete success. In 1875-77 he acted as Consulting Engineer to the Cattlewater Commissioners for the Cattlewater Breakwater at Plymouth. In May 1879 he was appointed a member of the Panama Congress, but abstained from voting in favour of M. de Lesseps' Panama-Colon project, as he considered that the engineering data collected up to that time were insufficient to determine satisfactorily the best route for a ship canal across the isthmus. In 1881 he prepared detailed surveys, plans, and estimates for the enlargement of the harbour of Kustendjie, in Roumania, and in 1889 for the construction of a commercial harbour at Bourgas, in Bulgaria. In 1884 he was created a Knight Commander of SS. Michael and George. In 1884-85, on the recommendation of H.M. Government, he acted as one of the English members of the International Technical Commission appointed by the Suez Canal Company to report on the best means of improving the Suez Canal. He is the author of papers on the "Delta of the Danube," on "Public Works in the United States and Canada," and on "Inland Navigations in Europe." He has been decorated with the Orders of the Medjidieh and the Star of Roumania, and has received the Stephenson prize, the Telford medal, the Watt medal, the Telford premium, and the Manby premium from the Institution of C.E. Address: 26 Pall Mall, S.W.

HENRICI, Olaus, F.M.E., Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born March 9, 1840, at Meldorf, in Holstein, and received his early education in the gymnasium of his native town. In 1856 he left Meldorf in order to study for some years in the workshops of a mechanical engineer. In 1859 he proceeded to the Polytechnic School in Karlsruhe, where he remained until 1862, when he entered the University of Heidelberg. Here, in 1863, he graduated with special honours as Ph.D. Dr. Henrici next proceeded to Berlin in order there to prosecute his mathematical studies. In 1865 he became Tutor in the University of Kiel, but left soon afterwards for London. In 1869 Dr. Henrici was appointed Professor of Pure Mathematics in University College, London; and, in 1884, Professor of Mechanics and Mathematics in a State resting on a voluntary, impulsive basis. He constantly expresses his views in his paper, The Free Press, and is an occasional correspondent of the Times. He has published many volumes in support of Voluntaryism, and has written a volume of poems. He married Florence, daughter of the 6th Duke of Devonshire. She died in 1886. Address: 11, Bedford House, Ringwood, Hants.

L. Frank Harrison, born at Lincoln, Lincolnshire, Feb. 6, 1830, was educated at Manchester New College, and received B.A. in the London University, and was afterwards called to the Society of Lincoln's Inn. He acted as one of the secretaries of the London and Westminster Anti-Slavery Union Committee of the Social Science Association, to the printed volumes of which he furnished, among other contributions, a paper on "Trade Unions in Sheffield." In the same year he went to Ireland as editor of the Irish Whig. This post he held until the beginning of the year 1866, when he became one of the assistant-editors and principal writers of the Daily News, of which journal he was, from 1870 to 1886, the chief. He is the author of "Political Portraits," 1873, consisting of sketches of English statesmen, which appeared originally in the Daily News, a "Life of William Pitt" in the English Worthies, a series of papers in the Fortnightly Review entitled "The Political Adventures of Beaconsfield," since collected and issued as a volume in the United States; an essay on Ireland, published in the Irish Whig, and "Questions for a Reformed Government," 1867. Mr. Hill is the author of a great number of articles on literary and political subjects in the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary, Universal, Fortnightly Review, National, and Saturday Review, and other periodicals. Address: 11, Bedford House, Victoria Street, S.W.

HOHENLOHE-SCHILLINGSFURST, Prince, born at Rothenburg, March 31, 1819, second son of Francis Joseph, Prince of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst (of the line of the Hohenlohe family). On the death of his father, Prince Clodwig had just begun his judicial and historical studies in the University of Göttingen. A year later, after having passed his examination with distinction, he held a subordinate position in the service as Auscultator in the Office of the Ehrenbreitstein. He next held the position of Referendary of the Government at Bonn. While working thus diligently post in Prussia, the Landgrave of Hesse-Rheinfels-Rothenburg died, and the noble family of Hohenlohe succeeded to a rich inheritance, including the lordships of Ratibor and Corvey. The event, however, did not alter Clodwig's position. His elder brother took the domains of Ratibor and Corvey, to which the King of Prussia, William IV., added the title of Duke. In 1845, on the death of his brother, Philip Ernest, Clodwig succeeded, with the consent of his elder brother, to the old family seat of Schillingsfurst, and forsaking the Prussian service, took up his permanent residence in Bavaria. Thus at twenty-seven years of age he became a hereditary member of the Bavarian Parliament. The ministry, meanwhile, in Frankfurt sent him as Ambassador to Athens, Florence, and Rome. In 1849 he returned to Frankfurt. Having married the Princess of Sayn-Wittgenstein, by whom he has a numerous family, he retired for some ten years into private life, paying frequent visits to England, France, and Italy. In 1860 the prince again entered upon parliamentary life, and favoured throughout an alliance with Prussia. Towards the end of 1866 the youthful king requested Hohenlohe to prepare and lay before him a programme of the principles which were to serve eventually as a ministerial policy. Prince Hohenlohe fulfilled his commission to the satisfaction of the king, and on Jan. 1, 1867, succeeded Pfordten as Bavarian Minister. The whole of Germany at last adopted the Hohenlohe programme. In 1868 and 1869 Prince Hohenlohe was elected Vice-President of the Customs Parliament of the German Federation. In his capacity as Foreign Minister of Bavaria he issued his famous circular of April 9, 1869, directing the attention of the European cabinets to the serious consequences likely to arise from the decrees of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican. Hoping to get the Pope to withdraw his political opposition, and viewing mere religious innovations with extreme indifference, the Prussian Government slighted the warnings of the Bavarian minister, and refused to take action against the contemplated decrees. In consequence of this desertion by the principal exponent of the Unity party, Prince Hohenlohe could not hold out against the attacks of the combined Particularists, Catholics, and Austriacanti in the Bavarian Parliament, and had to resign, March 7, 1870. He then resumed his seat in the Munich House of Peers; and in a few months, on France threatening war, made himself conspicuous by insisting upon the participation of Bavaria in the great national feud. Upon the successful termination of the war in 1871 he was elected member of the first German Parliament, and in recognition of his patriotism immediately became Vice-President thereof. In May 1874, after the deplorable exit of Count Harry Arnim, Prince Hohenlohe was chosen German Ambassador in Paris. He was one of the German Plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. In August of that year he was re-elected to the Reichstag on the second ballot, at Forchheim, Kulmbach, Bavaria, polling 9800 votes, while his Catholic competitor had 8600. After the death of Marshal Manteuffel, Prince Hohenlohe was appointed Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, a position which he held till October 1894. During his administration he enforced the strictest passport regulations at the French frontier, until in September 1891 the emperor issued a rescript rendering it somewhat less difficult for Frenchmen to visit Alsace-Lorraine. In October 1894 he was appointed Chancellor of the German Empire and Prussian Prime Minister in succession to Count von Caprivi and Count von Eulenberg.

HOHENZOLLERN, Hereditary Prince of, H.R.H. Leopold-Etienne-Charles-Antoine-Gustave-Edouard-Thassilo, Prince of Hohenzollern, Burgrave of Nuremberg, Count of Sigmaringen and Veringen, Count of Berg and Seigneur of Haigerloch, &c., is the eldest son of the late Prince Charles Antoine of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and was born Sept. 22, 1835, and studied in the Universities of Bonn and Berlin. His Royal Highness succeeded his father on June 2, 1885; is a hereditary member of the Chamber of Seigneurs of Prussia; General of Prussian infantry in the suite of the first regiment of Foot Guards; chief of the "Prince Charles Antoine de Hohenzollern" regiment of Fusiliers; and Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle, &c., and is well known in connection with his candidature for the throne of Spain, which ultimately gave rise to the Franco-German war. On Sept. 12, 1861, the Prince married, at Lisbon, the Princess Antonia of Portugal, Duchesse de Saxe, born Feb. 17, 1845, by whom he has three sons, of whom the second, Prince Ferdinand, is heir to the Roumanian throne, and husband of Princess Mary of Edinburgh.

HOLMES, Emra, F.R.Hist.S., F.R.S. Ant. Ireland, C.W.R., is a member of the Civil Service, and an enthusiastic Freemason. He was born in 1839, and is the son of Marcus Holmes, a well-known Bristol artist, a descendant of Admiral Sir Robert Holmes, Governor of the Isle of Wight temp. Charles II. His mother, Elizabeth Emra, daughter of the Rev. John Emra, a native of St. Kitts (the family being, it is supposed, of Spanish descent), and Elizabeth was the authoress of "Parish," and other works. He was educated at Cuthbert's Grammar School, Somerset. He left in 1854, and three years later to a clerkship in the H. pool. He became subsequently at W. Barnstaple, Kirkcaldy, Limerick, Newhaven, &c. He has published "Amabel Vaughan," "The Worshipful Notes on Freemasonry," "United Orders of the Temple," and lately "Oakenholt," and "Notes on the Temple Freemasonry," and remained months in the cell brought down upon the Protestant organ St. John of Jerusalem, were translated and published in the pages of American journals. story, "The Worshipful," and subsequently in the N.S.W., New Zealand Craftsman, the American Masonic Herald, journals nearer home constant contributor of Masonry, and his in the Toronto Mail, Port Hope Times, and journals all over the world writes in favour of the Unity of Christ and the Holland House, Dover

JOINVILLE, Prince Ferdinand - Philippe d'Orleans, son of the king of the French, was born Aug. 14, 1818. Soon after his accession to the throne, his naval studies, was age of thirteen, received the Dukes of Orleans, Aumale, a liberal education at colleges of France, and examination at Brest. He devoted himself to the French navy. The of the service was not his ardent desire to di with the Mediterranean squadron, he disembarked and rode up to Antine, in the hope of taking part in the storming of that stronghold, but just too late. Not long afterwards he received the command of the corvette and joining the fleet of Admiral , was entrusted with the difficult task of obtaining reparation from the new Government. The Créole took a prominent part in the bombardment of San d'Ulloa, and at Vera Cruz she was at the head of the storming party, the first to enter the gates, under a heavy fire, and was only saved from certain destruction by the devotion of one of his officers. When he was selected by the king to command the La Belle Poule frigate, charged with the service of conveying to France the remains of the Emperor Napoleon, and arrived, at Rio Janeiro, May 1, 1843, Francisca de Braganza, sister of Pedro II., Emperor of Brazil. Becoming Rear-Admiral, he took part in the operations of the Admiralty; and the French Emperor was deeply indebted to him for the assistance in which he helped to solve the question of the adaptation of steam engines to the needs of war in 1845. When war broke out between France and Morocco he commanded a squadron, with which he reduced Tangiers and took Mogador. His decisive expedition he was raised to the rank of Vice-Admiral. Being almost constantly on active service, the Prince de Joinville was in Algiers with his brother the Duc d'Aumale when the Revolution of February 1848 overthrew the constitutional monarchy. Resolving to share the misfortune of their family, the two princes sought refuge in England, and King Louis Philippe at Claremont. The Prince distinguished himself by his aid in the rescue of many of the sailors and crew of the ship Ocean, when burning off Ormes Head, Feb. 4, 1848. Driven suddenly from a prominent position into the narrow limits of private life, he accepted his new situation with simplicity and dignity, and remaining true to a French sailor, endeavoured to make himself useful to the navy of his country by his pen, if not by his sword. He already in 1844 began publishing the Revue des Deux Mondes his studies of the French navy. One of his articles, published in 1865, was a comparative study of the fleets of the United States and France, and excited much attention at the time. Happening to be in the United States about a twelvemonth after the breaking out of the Civil War, he visited his nephews, the Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, to the aid of General McClellan, with whose operations he witnessed the principal actions of the Virginian campaign of 1862, and gave an account of the events in a well-written and impartial article published in the Revue des Deux Mondes in 1863. After the downfall of the Napoleonic dynasty he went back to France with the other Orléanist princes, the Law of Exile having been abrogated. He and the Duc d'Aumale took their seats in the National Assembly towards the close of 1871, after their election had been declared valid. In 1873 he assisted at the downfall of M. Thiers, but did not vote the constitution, and in 1876 begged the electors of the Haute-Marne not to re-elect him. He retired into private life, but remained on the books of the navy till the members of former reigning houses in France were expelled from all public employments in 1886. His eldest son, the Duc de Penthièvre, at that time a naval lieutenant, suffered at the same time. The Prince de Joinville has written on naval topics, and has published a work on England and self-government. His seat is the Château d'Arc-en-Barrois, France.

JOPLING, Louise (Mrs. Rowe), was born on Nov. 16, 1843, and is the fifth child of T. S. Goode. She studied painting for eighteen months in Paris in the studio of the late Mr. Charles Chaplain, and has been the first to bring the Paris atelier system to England. Her painting class is very large, and she instructs it personally, working rapidly from the model in the presence of her pupils, who thus may be said to study their art as do Parisian art students. She has exhibited constantly at the Academy and Grosvenor, and in the new and old Paris Salons. During recent years she has been represented at the Royal Academy's exhibitions by her portrait of Mr. Alfred Lys Baldry, 1895; by "Blue and White" and portraits, 1896; by portrait of Viscountess Maitland, 1897; and by "The Spirit of the Woods" and "At the Gaiety," 1898. She is married to Mr. Rowe, a lawyer, but Jopling is the name of a previous husband. Address: 3 Pembroke Road, Kensington, &c.

KELLY-KENNY, Major-General Thomas, C.B., was born in February 1840. He entered the Army in 1858 as Ensign of the 2nd Foot, the Royal West Surrey Regiment. He was promoted Captain in July 1866, Major in September 1877, and Lieut.-Colonel in July 1881. He has served as an A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief at the Cape, and also as Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General in Bombay. He has seen active service both in China and Abyssinia. In 1887 he was appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General in Scotland, and has held the same appointment at Headquarters and at Aldershot, where he was also Major-General on the staff. General Kelly-Kenny has passed the Staff College, and in July 1897 was appointed Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces and Recruiting at Headquarters.

KUHNE, Willy K., F.R.S., LL.D. Camb., Professor of Physiology at the University of Heidelberg, was born at Hamburg on March 28, 1837. He pursued his studies at Göttingen, Jena, Berlin, Paris, and Vienna, under such masters as Virchow, Claude Bernard, and Du Bois-Reymond, and in 1856 obtained his Doctorate of Philosophy. In 1862 he became Dr. Med. Hon., and in 1861 was appointed chemical assistant in the Pathological Institute at Berlin. In 1868 he became Professor of Physiology at Amsterdam, and in 1871 Professor of Physiology at Heidelberg, and Director of the Physiological Institute there. His directorship has been a long and illustrious one, his labours and discoveries at the Institute having long since placed him in the front rank of European physiologists. He was elected a foreign member of the Royal Society in 1892, and in August 1898, on the occasion of the meeting of the Zoological Congress at Cambridge, was one of the distinguished foreign recipients of the hon. LL.D. degree. He has contributed many weighty papers to the learned journals, such as Müller's and Virchow's Archives, on nerves, &c., and has published "Myologische Untersuchungen," 1860; "Ueber die peripherischen Endorgane der motorischen Nerven," 1862; "Untersuchungen über das Protoplasma und die Contractilität," 1864; and "Lehrbuch der physiologischen Chemie," 1866-68. Address: Heidelberg.

LEGROS, Alphonse, painter and etcher, was born at Dijon on May 8, 1837, of poor parents, who put him apprentice to a house-painter. He subsequently studied art under Cambon in Paris, entered the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, and first made his mark by pictures exhibited at the Salon between 1859 and 1863. Coming to London in the last-named year he was cordially received by Rossetti, G. F. Watts, and their circle, and in 1876 was appointed Slade Professor of Fine Arts in University College, London. He taught there for seventeen years, painting from the model in the presence of his pupils. His pictures are the country scenes of France, painted with an simplicity which have no rival among the artist's, rather than the public. Among his principal works to be mentioned: "Portrait of a Lady" (Salon, 1857); "The Atonement" ("Ex Voto," 1861; "Mass," 1863; "Stoning of St. Stephen" exhibited at the Royal Academy and at the Salon in 1868 awarded the gold medal of Honor, "Honorable," which gained the Salon; "Pilgrimage," "Dead Christ," &c. "Am is in the Luxembourg." Other pictures are in the galleries in France and England at Prayer," for instance Gallery. He is one of the revived the art of etching a master. He is a native man, and married a daughter of Hodgson, of Kendal, in 57 Brook Green, W.

MONCREIFF, Lord Moncreiff, is the eldest son of Lord Moncreiff of Tullibole, was born in Edinburgh in 1806. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and subsequently Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1826 (Law honours). He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1823; he was Advocate-Depute 1825-26, 1827 and 1880-81. He was appointed Sheriff of the counties of Edinburgh and Bute, which office he held till 1888, when he was appointed of the College of Justice. He is a Liberal Unionist. He is the author of a work "Criminal Cases," 1877. On April 3, 1866, Susan, daughter of Sir William Stirling-Maxwell, Bart., of Preston (1869); and secondly, on Millicent Julia, daughter of Mr. Fryer, of Moulton Paddocks. She died in 1881. NAQUET, Joseph A. born at Carpentras (Vaucluse) in 1834, and educated first at Montpellier, and finally in Paris, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1859. He then went into the chemical laboratory of the School of Medicine in Paris under M. Wurtz, and wrote many papers on pure chemistry. In 1863 he became Professor of Physics at Palermo, and while there wrote his work "Principes Chimie fondée sur les Théories," which has passed through five editions in France, and been translated into English, German, and Polish. In 1868 M. Naquet entered political life, and against him of conspiracy against the Empire having resulted in fifteen years' imprisonment and a subsequent exile into Spain, from which he returned in 1879; and having taken a prominent part in the events of Sept. 4, 1870, he was elected, at Tours, nominated by the Assembly as Secretary to the Defence Committee. He was, in 1879, elected Deputy for Vacluse, and at first supported Gambetta, but eventually broke with him. He then threw all his strength into the effort for legalising divorce, in which he succeeded in 1886. As he was a strong revisionist, and thought that that end might be attained through the success of General Boulanger, he became one of his warmest supporters; that end having failed, he now remains a member of the isolated Boulangist group, who are still in opposition to the Government. He is author of some political and scientific works. His book on "Divorce," 1877, and a translation of Liebig's "Calculus of Chemical Operations," may be cited.

NETHERSOLE, Olga, actress, was born in London on Jan. 18, 1870, and is the youngest daughter of the late Henry Nethersole. She was educated privately, and at the age of sixteen, having from her earliest years determined on a dramatic career, was presented with an opportunity of going on the stage, but did not actually appear for another two years, when she played in public for the first time. The play was Mr. Hamilton's "Harvest," which was being presented at the Brighton Theatre. She made her London debut at the Adelphi in "The Union Jack," and met with great success. Afterwards she appeared in the title-role of "The Dean's Daughter," brought out by Mr. Rutland Barrington at the St. James's, and then as the intriguing woman in "The Silver Falls." As the stage wicked woman she was even then thought to have found her own especial province. Mr. Hare invited her to the newly-built Garrick Theatre, where she made her mark in "The Profligate" as the betrayed Janet Preece. For some time after the run of this play she understudied Mrs. Bernard Beere, and at last finding that her talents were not given proper scope in England, determined by the advice of friends to visit Australia. She played in Mr. Haddon Chambers's "Idler" in the New Garrick Theatre, Sydney, six weeks before the play was given in London. After a triumphant ten months' tour in Australia she returned home, and was re-engaged by Mr. John Hare, appearing as Beatrice Selwyn in "The Fool's Paradise," and at the Criterion in "Agatha," where she made a lasting impression. In 1893, when the Bancrofts returned to the stage, she won her grand success in the revival of "Diplomacy," where she took the part of the Countess Zica, formerly played with great art by Lady Bancroft, and by Miss Nethersole spiritedly elaborated. In 1894 Miss Nethersole became lessee and manager of the Court Theatre, and in the autumn of 1898, as manager of Her Majesty's, she produced and took the title-role in Messrs. Parker and Carson's "Termagant." She has four times starred in the States at the head of her own company. Address: 5 Norfolk Street, Park Lane, W.

PARRATT, Sir Walter, Mus. Doc., was born on Feb. 10, 1841, at Huddersfield, and is the son of Thomas Parratt of that town. He was educated at home and at the Collegiate School, Huddersfield. After holding various church organistships, he was appointed to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he made his mark as a musician and teacher, and continued rising in public favour until appointed organist to St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor. As Court Organist he has conducted the music at most of the Royal funerals at the Castle. He is Private Organist to the Queen, Master of the Queen's Music, and has presided at the concerts given at the Albert Institute by the Windsor and Eton Madrigal and Orchestral Societies. He is also Past Grand Organist of the Freemasons, Professor at the Royal College of Music, and Examiner in Music at Oxford, Cambridge, and London Universities. He wrote much of the music for the "Tale of Troy" in 1883 (see WARR), and has written on this subject in Grove's "Dictionary," &c. Addresses: The Cloisters, Windsor; and Athenæum.

R YD, Sir Hugh Gilzean, Hon.
Aberd.), J.P., D.L., Fellow of the Institute of Journalists, was born in Aberdeenshire on Aug. 11, 1838, and educated at various schools, afterwards attending classes at Aberdeen and Edinburgh Universities. Intended originally for the ministry, he became a journalist at the age of eighteen, and was editor of papers at Peterhead and in Edinburgh. He has been among the founders or early promoters of newspapers in Aberdeenshire, Lancashire, Yorkshire, in which county the North-Eastern Daily Gazette is closely connected with his name, the Midlands, and London,

where the Echo was first founded by him.
The Institute of Journalists owes its origin to him. Established on March 9, 1889, by conversion of the National Association of Journalists, founded by provincial pressmen in 1884, it was incorporated by Royal Charter in March 1890. The objects of the Institute were embodied in thirteen clauses, which provide, among other things, for the holding of examinations in order to test
the knowledge and ability of candidates for the journalistic calling. For this laudable and important attempt to raise journalism to the dignity of one of the learned professions the subject of our memoir was knighted by the Queen in 1893. He presided over the first annual conference of the Incorporated Institute at Birmingham in 1890, on which occasion he was presented by Sir Algernon Borthwick, his successor-elect in the Presidency, with his portrait in oils on behalf of the members of the Institute and in recognition of his great services in the cause of journalism
during the last three years. In 1894 Sir Hugh Gilzean Reid was instrumental in promoting the International Press Congress. He has represented Aston Manor in the House of Commons, being first Liberal member for that constituency, was President of the Newspaper Society in 1898-99, and has been a pioneer in the movement for providing the working men of Edinburgh with model dwellings. His long residence in Belgium at one time rendered him familiar with the Congo Free State scheme, which he did much to promote and popularise. In 1897 he was created Officer of the Order of Leopold, and in May 1899 Knight Commander of the Order of the Crown, "as a recognition of voluntary and valuable help to the civilising agencies" in the Congo Free State. He has published, among other works, "Lowland Legends,"
"Social and Religious Life in Scotland," "Housing the People," "Talks with Men of Mark," &c. Lady Gil-zean Reid, who died in 1895, was an authoress, and ardent worker in the cause of her sex. Address: Dollis Hill, N.W., &c.
